By the testimonie of Iustinian: Although nothing is good which is too much, yet, &c. pag. 327. col. 1. I answer, that in the time of Iustinian, goods then giuen to the church, were the goods of the poore. Wherein was vsed faithfull distribution, voluntarie giuing, and necessarie charitie. But now in our popish churches, reuenues and lands giuen, neither are distributed to the poore: and yet are men compelled against their will to giue still. And againe, so little necessitie is now to giue to such, that the most wealth of realmes almost is in their hands and houses: insomuch that they flowing in such wealth, are now waxen so proud, that kings can scarse beare any rule for them, as was prooued before, pag. 320. col. 1. that the popes renenues heres in England, mounted to more then three times double the stint of the kings crowne. Wherefore by the counsell of Iustinian, it was so then, and then might stand, quòd Religio peperit diuitias: But now as the time is altered, so that counsell holdeth not, postquam nunc filia deuorauit matrem: That is, after that the daughter hath deuoured the mother. Finally concerning mens giuing to the church in these our popish daies, foure faults I note:

Pa. 361. col. 2.

Religio peperit diuitias: nunc filia deuorauit matrem.

4. Incommodities that come in giuing to the church.

First, that they giue superfluously more then sufficient is to necessitie of life.

Secondly, that they giue to such as abuse it wickedly.

Thirdly, that in giuing to them that need not, noble men in meane time defraud their poore neighbours, which need indeed, and yet doe not complaine.

Fourthly, because of this title of giuing, men haue vsed, and yet do vse to put great hope of saluation therin, contrary to the testament of God in Christs death, wherof examples are before.

Pag. 327. col. 2. Abel offered of the best to the Lord, and was blessed of God. Ergo, euery great man, that would be blessed of God, must offer of the best hee hath vnto the church. Answere: This argument as it is farre fet: so it is soone answered, wherein three notes are to be obserued.

Pa. 327. col. 2.

3. Things to be noted, in offering to God, & to the church.

First, that he which offereth vnto the church of God, doth not therein offer vnto God immediatly as Abel did.

Secondly, neither is this to be granted, that he which offereth to all churchmen, offereth by and by to the church of God. For many times the churchmen are one; and the church of God is another. Laurence the martyr, shewing forth the church of God, brought out the poore of the parish, and not of the priests of the church. pag. 65. col. 1.

The third note is this: that if noble persons should offer vnto God (by the example of Abel) that which is the best and fattest of the flocke: then should they offer vnto the Lord, of their flocke only, and not of their lands. Yea, and to note the very truth, they are taught therby to offer to God, neither cattell nor lands, but that which is the very best, that is, their owne bodies bodies for a liuely sacrifice to God. Hee that offereth vp to God a proud heart, and killed it with the axe of humilitie, giueth vnto him the best and fattest bullocke he hath in all his flocke. With like reason also I answer the place of Num. 18. and of Paral. cap. vlt. that to offer vp, or to separate vnto the Lords treasurie, is not now to giue to priests and chaplaines of the church, which peraduenture haue more then they doe well occupie: but to giue liberally to the communion of Saints, which are needy, and are the true treasury of the church indeed, as Laurence the true treasurer said, supra, pag. 65. col. 1.

Rom. 12.

Pa. 327. col. 2.

Pag. 327. col. 2. By Gods commandement wee are bound of duty to honour our temporall fathers. Ergo, by the same dutie wee are bound much rather to honour our spirituall fathers, that is, priests and prelates. Answer. A father in common speech is diuersly taken, as by age, by nature, by office. And to all these we of dutie, are bound to yeeld honour, reuerence, obedience, submission, albeit not all after one sort, nor in like degree. For as we are bound to honour our fathers and mothers: so aged men and elders haue also their honour and name of fathers: So Magistrates and spirituall teachers in their kind, haue their honour and reuerence. And saint Paul saith, that such are worthie of double honour, qui benè præsunt; & qui laborant in sermone. But in this two things are to bee noted, wherein this honour consisteth, and how farre it extendeth: These spirituall fathers of the church, thinke they bee not honoured enough, vnlesse kings and emperours giue and surrender vnto them all the temporall rule and gouernement, to doe what they list, and none to controll them. And vnlesse noble men and subiects indue them with temporall lands and possessions, so much as they would haue. And this they call honour, which they define onely by giuing temporally: where indeed it rather consisteth in giuing spiritually, as to haue a reuerent opinion of their ministration, to yeeld a prompt obedience to their doctrine, to reuerence them as the ministers of God, and not to despise, defame, or molest their persons, whereof saint Paul also about the same place speaketh, writing to Timothie: Let no man despise thy youth, &c. Also to Titus, Let no man despise thee, &c. And this is to honour our spirituall fathers.

1. Tim. 5. Two things to be noted in giuing honour, wherein consisteth honour giuing to priests.

1. Tim. 5. Titus 2.

Qui benè præsunt.

Secondly, to consider how far this honour extendeth: as no man doth deny, but these pastours are worthie their double honour, which rule well; so if they administer not their office well, they are vnder the ouersight of the king, bearing the temporall sword, worthie of double punishment. And yet to consider this double honor in them that rule well, how farre it doth extend: if it bee compared to the honour due to our parents, case of necessitie will soone decide it. For be it, that our parents, on the one side, and pastor of the other, stand in extreame need of the sonnes supportation, wherein he can helpe but the one: nature, I suppose, will and ought sooner run, and the word of Christ wil sooner driue vs to our father, then to the priests Corban. Mark. 7. So that this distinction here may haue place: that as the one standeth vpon merite of vertue, so the other standeth vpon meere dutie of necessitie.

How farre honour giuen to priests extendeth.

Pag. 328. col. 1. These iurisdictions temporall and spirituall are compatible in one person. Answer. I grant pro ratione subiecti: That is, in the subiect it selfe there is no cause to the contrarie, but these vocations may bee exercised both of one person, as they haue bin of the pope, one after the other, (and so may contrary formes also) and yet the popes person hath been able to sustaine them both. But now heere is to be considered, not what the nature of the subiect is able to beare by Logicke, but what order is taken herein by the wil of God, whose order is this: That they, which with Peter are called to the feeding of the flocke, should leaue their fishing nets, and fish for men: and that they which labour in the warfare of the Lord, should not intangle themselues with the businesse of this life, whereby they may bee more free to please him, whose souldiers they are: Tit. 2. &c.

Pag. 328. col. 1. The iurisdictions temporall and spirituall, are so distincted that they are not contrary, &c. Answer. And what let is there then, but our Queene, now, and other kings hereafter may haue the gouernment of both states, aswell Ecclesiasticall as temporall? Seeing both the formes being compatible, may concur both in one subiect: why not as well in the person of the king, within the realme, as in the person of the pope without the realme?

If he did it by the angels his ministers: whether is more like then that to make for the pope, or rather for kings and princes, whom the scripture thrice in one chapter calleth the ministers of God to execute punishment to him that doth euill, Rom. 13?

But if it be taken for the true God, not I, but their owne fruites, life and doctrine, and Esay also would deny their minor, and say, that this people draweth neere to mee with their lips, but their heart is farre from me.

Pag. 329. col. 2. You are a chosen generation, a royall priesthood, &c. Answer. This place of Peter was written not only to persons ecclesiasticall, but to the whole congregation of the Saints dispersed, as the words following may declare: Qui olim non populus, &c.

And thus much concerning French matters, which because they be Ecclesiasticall, and beare with them some vtilitie to the diligent Reader (such as list to search, note and obserue the acts of men, and course of religion) I thought therefore here to place and adioyne next after the other contention before proceeding betweene Philip the French king and pope Boniface. Albeit as touching the perfect keeping of peeres and time, I am not ignorant that this foresaid parliament thus summoned and commenced against the French prelats, falling in the yeere of our Lord 1329. was to bee referred rather to the raigne of king Edward the second. Of whom now remaineth (by the grace of Christ) in order of history to prosecute, declaring first the instructions and informations of his father giuen to him in the time of his departing. The yeere of our Lord 1307. and the last yeere of the king, the foresaid king Edward in his iourney marching toward Scotland, in the North fell sicke of the flire, which increased so fiercelie vpon him, that he despaired of life. Wherefore calling before him his earles and barons, he caused them to be sworne, that they should crowne his sonne Edward in such conuenient time after his death as they might, and keepe the land to his vse, till hee were crowned. That done, hee called before him his sonne Edward, informing and lessoning him with wholesome precepts, and charged him also with diuers points vpon his blessing: first that hee should bee curteous, gentle, vpright in iudgement, faire spoken to all men, constant in deede and word, familiar with the good: and especiallie to the miserable to bee mercifull. After this, hee gaue him also in charge, not to be too hastie in taking his crowne, before hee had reuenged his fathers iniuries stoutly against the Scots: but that hee should remaine remaine in those partes to take with him his fathers bones, being wel boiled from the flesh, and so inclosed in some fit vessel, should carrie them with him till he conquered all the Scots: saying, that so long as he had his fathers bones with him, none should ouercome him. Moreouer, he willed and required him, to loue his brother Thomas, and Edmund: also to cherish and tender his mother Margaret the Quéene. Duer and besides, he straitlie charged him vpon his blessing (as he would auoide his curse) that he should in no case call to him againe, or send for Peter Gauestон: which Peter Gauestон the king before had banished the realme, for his naughtie and wicked familiaritie with his sonne Edward, and for his seducing of him with sinister counsell. For the which cause, hee banished both Peter Gauestон vtterly out of the realme, and also put the said Edward his sonne in prison. And therefore so straitlie charged his sonne, in no wise to send for this Gauestон, or to haue him in any case about him. And finallie, because hee had conceiued in himselfe a vow to haue returned in his owne person to the holy land (which for his manifold warres with the Scots he could not performe) therfore hee had prepared 32000 pounds of siluer, for the sending of certaine souldiers with his heart vnto the holy land. Which thing he required of his son to sée accomplished. So that the foresaid monie, vnder his curse and malediction, be not employed to other vses. But these iniunctions and precepts, the disobedient sonne did nothing obserue or kéepe after the decease of his father. Who forsaking and leauing off the warre with the Scots, with al spéed hasted him to his coronation. Also, contrarie to the mind of his nobles, and against the precept of his father, hee sent for the foresaid Peter Gauestон, and prodigallie bestowed vpon him all that treasure which his father had bequeathed to the holy land. He was moreouer a proud despiser of his péeres and nobles: and therefore raigned infortunately, as by the sequell of the storie héere following, by the grace of Christ shall be declared. Thus king Edward first of that name, leauing behind him three sonnes, Thomas and Edmund by his third wife, and Edward by his first wife, whom he had sufficiently thus with precepts instructed, departed this mortall life, An. 1307. after hee had raigned néere 35. yéeres. Of whom this Epitaph was written:

The eytaph of king Edward.

Dum viguit rex, & valuit tua magna potestas,
Fraus latuit, pax magna fuit, regnauit honestas.

In the time and raigne of this king, many other things happened, which here I omit to speake of, as the long discord and strife betweene the prior of Canturburie, and the prior of Douer, which continued aboue foure yéeres together; with much wrangling and vnquietnesse betweene them. Likewise an other like contention growing betweéne John Romain, archbishop of Yorke, and the archbishop of Canturburie vpon the occasion, that when John archbishop of Yorke after his consecration returned from the pope, and comming to Douer, contrary to the inhibition of Canturbury, passed through the middle of Kent, with his crosse borne vp: although the story reporteth, that he had the kings consent thereunto: An. 1286.

Item, betweene Thomas bishop of Hereford, and John Pecham archbi. of Cant. fell another wrangling matter, in the time of this king. Which bishop of Hereford appealing from the archb. to the pope, went vp to Rome, & in his iournie died. Who with lesse cost might haue taried at home: 1282.

King Edward the second.

EDward the second of that name, and sonne of Edward the first, borne, as is aforesaid, at Carnaruan in Wales, after the departure of his father, entred the gouernment of the land, An. 1307. But was crowned not before the yéere next following, An. 1308. by reason of the absence of Rob. Winchelseie, who was banished by king Edward the first. Whereupon the king this present yéere writeth to the pope for the restitution of the said archb. for that by an ancient law of the realme, the coronation of the king could not otherwise proceed without the archb. of Cant. Which Edward as he was personable in bodie and outward shape, so in conditions and euill disposition much deformed: As vnstedfast of word, and light to disclose secrets of great counsell: Also refusing the companie of his lords and men of honour; hee much haunted among villains and vile personages: Giuen moreouer, to ouermuch drinking, and such vices as thereupon bee wont to ensue. And as of his owne nature hée was to the said vices disposed, so was he much worse by the counsell and familiaritie of certaine euill disposed persons, as first of Peter or Pierse Gauestон before touched. Then after him, of the two Spensers and other, whose wanton counsell he following, gaue himselfe to the appetite and pleasure of his bodie: nothing ordering his common weale by sadnesse, discretion and iustice: which thing caused first great variance betweene him and his nobles, so that shortlie he became to them odible, and in the end was depriued of his kingdom. In the first yéere, he toke to wife Isabell daughter of Philip king of France: with whom (the yéere after) hee was crowned at Westminster, by the bishop of Winchester: for that, Robert Winchelsey archbi. of Canturburie was yet in exile not returned home. Notwithstanding, the barons and lords made first their request to the king to put Peter Gauestон from him, or else they would not consent to his coronation. Whereupon he was enforced to grant them at the nert parliament, to haue their requests accomplished, and so was crowned. In the meane season, the foresaid Peter or Pierse bearing himselfe of the kings fauour bold; continued triumphing and setting at light all other states and nobles of the realme, so that hee ruled both the king and the realme, and all things went as hee would. Neither had the king any delight els, or kept companie with any, but with him: with him onlie he brake all his mind, and conferred all his counsels. This as it seemed strange vnto the lords and earles, so it inflamed their indignation so much against this Peter, that through the exciting of the nobles, the bishops of the land did proceed in excommunication against the said Gauestон, vnlesse he departed the land. Vpon the occasion whereof, the king the same first yéere of his raigne, being grieued with the bishops, writeth to the pope, complaining that they had proceeded to excommunication of the said Peter, vnlesse he departed the realme within a time certaine. The which letter of the king, what answer againe the king had from the pope, I find not set downe in storie. Duer and besides, it befell in the said first yéere of the king, that the bishopricke of Yorke being vacant, the king gaue the office of the treasure to one of his owne clerks: whereof the pope hauing intelligence writeth to the king, commanding him to call back the same gift, and withall citeth vp to Rome the said clerke, there to answer the matter to a nephew of one of his cardinals, vpon whom he had bestowed the said dignitie: whereunto the king maketh answere: Quòd citationes huiusmodi, & illarum executio, &c. i. That if such citations and the execution of the same should proceéde to the impeachment of our kinglie iurisdiction, and to the preiudice of our lawfull inheritance and the honour of our crowne (especiallie of the deciding of such matters which principallie concerne our estate, should be prosecuted in any other place then within this our realme by any manner of wales, &c.) Certes, although wee our selues would wincke thereat, or through sufferance permit matters so to passe our hands: yet the states and nobles of our kingdome, who vpon allegeance are obliged and sworne to the protection and defence of the dignitie of the crowne of England, will in no wise suffer our right and the lawes of the land so to be violated.

Peter Gauestон or Gauerston a wicked doer about the king.

Besides this, the foresaid pope wrote to the king, complaining that by certaine counsellors of king Edward his father lying sicke, vtterlie ignorant thereof; a certaine restraint was giuen out, charging his nuncios and legats (whom hee had sent for the gathering of the first fruits of the benefices vacant within the realme) not hereafter to entermeddle therewith, &c. Whereunto the king maketh answer: videlicet: Pater Sanctiſ. Datum fuit vobis intelligi, &c.

In English thus

Most holy Father, it hath been giuen you to vnderstand otherwise then the truth of the matter is: for most true it is indeed that the foresaid inhibition was ratified by good act of parliament holden at Karlin, vpon certaine causes concerning the execution of such collections (the said our father not onely being not ignorant, but also witting, willing, and of his owne meere knowledge agreeing to the same) in the presence not only of his owne earles, barons, and states, and commons of the realme, but also your legates and liegers being called thereunto.

Item, vpon other letters brought from the pope to the king, for the enstalling of one Peter de Subaudia his kinsman into the bishopricke of Worcester being then vacant, and withall requiring that if the said Peter would not accept thereof, the election should be referred to the prior and couent of the same place: The king therewith grieued, maketh answer by his letters to the pope and sundrie his cardinals: Quòd cum electiones de futuris prælatis in ecclesiis Cathedral. &c. That for so much as elections of prelats to bee placed in cathedrall churches within his kingdome, are not to be attempted without his licence first had and obtained, &c. Therefore hée could not abide that any such strange and vnaccustomed reseruations should or could take place in his realme without manifest preiudice of his kinglie estate, requiring further that hée would not cause any such nouelties to be brought in into his kingdome, contrary to that which his ancestors before him haue accustomed to doe.

Thus the time proceéded, and at length the parliament appointed came, An. 1310. which was the fourth of this kings raigne. The articles were drawne by the nobles to bee exhibited to the king, which articles were the same contained In magna charta, and de foresta aboue specified: with such other articles as his father had charged him with before: to wit, that he should remoue from him and his court, all aliens and peruerse counsellours. And that all the matters of the commonwealth should bee debated by common counsell of the lords both both temporall and spirituall: and that he should tarie no warre out of England in any other forren realme, without the common assent of the same, &c. The king perceiuing their intent to be, as it was indeed, to sunder Peter Gaueston from his company; and seeing no other remedie, but needs must yeeld and grant his consent, agreed that the said Gaueston should be banished into Ireland. And so the parliament breaking vp, the lords returned to their own, wel appeased: although of the other articles they could not speed, yet that they had driuen Peter Gauestion out of the realme, at this time, it did suffice them.

Peter Gaueston.

This Peter Gauestion was a certaine Gentlemans sonne of Gascoine: whom being yong, king Edward the first (for the good seruice his father had done him in his warres) receiued to his court, and placed him with his sonne Edward now raigning. Who, in processe of time growing vp with him, incensed and prouoked him to much outrage and wantonnesse. By whose occasion first he began in his fathers daies, to breake the parke of Walter bishop of Chester, then Chancellour of England, and after executor to the king. For the which so doing, the king (as is partly touched before) imprisoned his sonne, and condemned this Peter to perpetuall banishment. Notwithstanding the yong king after the death of his father (as ye haue heard) sent for this Gauestion againe. And withall, so persecuted this foresaid bishop, that he clapt him in the tower, and seised vpon all his goods. Moreouer, caused most strait inquisition to be made vpon him for guiding his office, wherein if the least crime might haue been found, it would haue cost him his life. And thus much of Peter Gauestion, and of his origine. Now to the matter.

The vnordinat affection of the king to Peter Gauestion.

The king thus separated from his old compeere, (that is, from the company of Peter Gauestion, now exiled into Ireland) continued in great mourning and pensiuenesse, seeking by all meanes possible, how to call him home againe, and conferring with such as were about him vpon the same. Who did insinuate to the king, that for so much as the earle of Glocester was a man well loued and fauoured in all the realme, if a mariage might be wrought betwixt his sister and Peter Gauestion; it might be a meane both for him to obtaine more friendship, and for the king to haue his desire. To make short, Peter Gauestion in all hast was sent for, and the mariage through the kings procuring, proceeded betweene the earles sister, and the foresaid Peter; albeit sore against the earles mind. Gauestion thus restored and dignified, was so surprised in pride and exaltation more then euer before; that he disdained and derided all other, whose rule and power more and more encreased. In so much, that he hauing the guiding of all the kings iewels and treasure, conueyed out of the kings iewell house at Westminster a table and a paire of trestels of gold, vnto certaine merchants beyond the sea, with other iewels more to his behoofe: to the great impouerishing both of the king and queene, and of the land. And ouer all that, brought the king (by meane of his wanton conditions) to manifold vices, as aduoutrie, and such other like. Wherefore, the lords seeing the mischiefe that daily increased by occasion of this vnhappie man; tooke their counsell together at Lincolne, and there concluded to auoid him againe out of England, so that shortly after he was exiled againe, and went into Flanders: for in France or his owne countrie he durst not appeare, for feare Philip the French king, to whom the queene of England his daughter had sent ouer great complaints of the said Gauestion: who had so impouerished her and the whole court, that she had not wherewith to maintaine her state. Vpon which complaint, the French king through all his dominions laid strait watch to apprehend the said Gauestion: but he not vnwarned thereof, secretly roaked into Flanders, from whence it was not long, but he was fet again by the king, as in further processe followeth; so much was the kings heart infatuated by this wicked person.

The greene complaineth to the French king her father of Peter Gauestion.

Gauestion again excluded out of the land.

About this yeere, or the next before came in first the Crowched friers. And also began first the knights of the order of saint John Baptist, otherwise called the knights of Rhodes: for that they, by manly knighthood put out the Turkes from the Isle of Rhodes.

The Crowched friers. The knights of S. Iohn called the knights of the Rhodes.

In the historie of king Edward this kings father before precedent, mention was made of pope Clement the fifth, who succeeded after Benedict: also of putting downe of the Templaries, which in this yeere hapned by the meanes of the French king: who as he caused to be burned in the citie of Paris this yeare fiftie foure Templaries, with the great master of the same order: so by his procurement, the foresaid pope Clement called a councell at Vienna, where the whole order and sect of Templaries being condemned, was shortly after by the consent of all christian kings deposed all in one day. After whom the French king thought to make his sonne king of Ierusalem, and to conuert to him all the lands of the said Templaries: But Clement the pope would thereto not agree, transferring all their lands to the order of Hospitulers, for the great summe of money giuen for the same. The cause why these impious Templaries were put downe, was so abominable and filthie, that for the reuerence of chast eares it were better not told, if it be true that some write.

Templaries burned at Paris, to the number of 54.

The order of the Templaries put downe.

Another matter worthie to be noted of like abomination, I thought here to insert touching a certaine Nunrie in France called Prouines, within the which at the cleansing and casting of a fishpond, were found many bones of yong children, and the bodies also of some infants as yet whole vnconsumed: vpon occasion whereof diuers of the nuns of the said Nunrie to the number of twentie seuen were had to Paris, and there imprisoned: what became of them afterward I find not in mine author. Arpontacus Burdegalensis.

The horrible sect of the Templaries.

In the same councel also was decreed by the said Clement, that all religious orders exempted, should be subiect vnder the common lawes as other were. But the Cistercian monks with money and great gifts redeemed their priuiledges and exemption of the pope, and so had them granted: Thom. Wall. These Cistercians sped better herein, then did the Minorits of Franciscans in their suite. Of the which Franciscans, when certaine of them had offered vnto the said pope Clement forty thousand florences of gold, besides other siluer, that the pope would dispence with them to haue lands and possessions against their rule: the pope asked them where was that money. They answered, in the merchant mens hands. So the space of three dates being giuen them to bring forth these merchants: the pope absolued the merchants of their bond made to the friers, and commanded all that money to be employed and restored to his vse. Declaring to the friers, that hee would not infringe or violate the rule of Saint Francis lately canonized, neither ought he to do it for any money. And thus the beggerly rich friers lost both their money and their indulgence. Ex eodem autore.

One thiefe beguileth another.

Concerning this pope Clement the fifth, Sabellicus writeth that he excommunicated the Venetians, for aiding and preferring of Azoda, vnto the state of Ferrarie: and wrote his letters throughout all Europe, condemning them as enemies of the church, and giuing their goods as a lawfull prey vnto all men; which caused them to sustaine great harme. But Francis Dandulus a noble man of Venice, being ambassadour from the Venetians to the said Clement, for the obtaining of their absolution and safegard of their citie and countrie, and for the pacifying of the popes furie toward them, was faine so to humble himselfe before this proud tyrannicall prelat, that he suffred a chaine of iron to be tied about his necke, and he to lie downe flat before his table, and so to catch the bones and fragments that fell from his table, as it had been a dog, till the popes furie was towards them allwaged: So that after that, he in reproch (because he so humbled himselfe for the behalfe and helping of his countrie) was of some called a dog. But the citie of Venice shewed themselues not vnkind againe to Dandulus for his gentle good will declared to his countrie. For as he had abased himselfe before in the vile and ignominious condition of a dog for his countries sake: so they extolled him with as much glorie againe being returned home, decking and adorning him after the best array, with the chiefe princely ornaments of the citie, to make him amends for his former reproch receiued. Concerning the constitutions of this pope Clement, and of his decretals and Clementines: and how Henricus the emperour in his daies was poisoned in receiuing of the Sacrament, yee haue heard before. About this time Robert Winchelsey archbishop of Canturburie (whom this kings father had banished before) was released and returned home from Rome.

Robert Winchelsey returned home from banishment. } Anno 1311

These things thus declared, let vs proceed (by the Lords grace) to the next yeare, which is of the Lord 1311. and the fifth yeare of this kings raigne. In the which yeare, counting the yeare from Michaelmasse, to the same feast againe, as then the vsage of the realme was: Peter Gauestion, who had wandred the countries about, and could find no safe resting place (notwithstanding hee was vtterly banished, vpon forfeiting life and goods, out of the realme, yet trusting vpon the kings fauor, and the good will of the earle of Glocester, whose sister he had married) secretly returning into England with a certaine companie of strangers; presented himselfe to the kings sight. At the beholding of whom, the king for ioy ran to him, and imbracing him, did not only retaine him: but also for his sake vndid all such acts as had been in the parliament before enacted. The queene and the whole court seeing this doating of the king, made an heauie Christmas. After this returne of Gauestion was noised among the commons, the peeres and nobles of the realme were not a little stirred, casting with themselues, what way were best to take. If hee were suffered still, they saw not only themselues reiected, but also that the queene could not enioy the loue of the king, neither could there be any quietnesse in the realme. Againe, to stirre vp war in the land, it were not the best: to vexe or disquiet the king, also they were afraid. But for as much as they could not abide, all the nobilitie so to be thrust out and vilepended for the loue of one stranger; and also the realme so to be spoiled and impouerished by the same: this way they tooke, that Thomas earle of Lancaster, should be elected among them the chieftaine, and chiefe doer in that businesse: to whom all other earles and barons, and prelats also did concordly condescend and consent, except only Walter bishop of Couentrie, whom Robert the archbishop therfore afterward did excommunicat. Which Thomas of Lancaster by the publike assent of the rest, sent to the king (lying then at Yorke) humble petitions, in the name as well of the whole nobilitie, as of the commons: Desiring his grace to giue the foresaid Gaueston vnto them, or else according to the ordinance of the realme, that the land might be auoided of him. But the tyrannous king, who set more by the amour of one stranger then by his whole realme beside; neither would hearken to their counsell, nor giue place to their supplications: But in all hastie furie remoued from Yorke to Newcastle, where he remained almost till midsummer.

In the meane season, the barons had gathered an host of sufficient and able souldiers, comming toward Newcastle: not intending any molestation against the king, but only the execution of the lawes vpon the wicked Gaueston. The king not hauing wherewith to resist their power; remoueth in all speedie manner to Thinmouth where the queene lay. And hearing there that Newcastle was taken; taketh shipping and saileth from thence (notwithstanding the queene there being great with child, with weeping teares and all instance, desireth him to tarie with her, as safely he might) but he nothing relenting to her, tooke Peter his compeere with him, and coasted ouer to the castle of Scarbrough, where he leauing Peter Gaueston to the safe keeping of his men, himselfe iourneyeth toward the coast beside Warwicke. The lords hearing where Peter was, bend thither all their power: so that at length Gaueston seeing no remedie but he must needs come into their hands, yeeldeth and submitteth himselfe: requiring none other condition, but only that he might talke but a few words with the king in his presence. Thus Gaueston being apprehended, the king hearing thereof, sendeth vnto the lords, requiring his life to be spared: and that he might be brought to his speech; and so promised, that in so doing he would satisfie their minds and requests, whatsoeuer. About this aduisement was taken: but then the earle of Penbroke hearing the kings promise, perswaded the barons to grant vnto his petition: promising himselfe, vpon losing all his lands, to take the charge vpon him, to be brought vnto the kings speech, and so to be recommitted to them againe. Which when he had obtained, he taketh Peter Gaueston with him, to bring him where the king lay. And so comming to Dedington, not far from Warwicke, leaueth him in the keeping of his souldiers, while he that night went to his wife, being from thence not far off.

Guy of Warwicke.

The same night it chanced, Guido the earle of Warwicke to come to the same place where Gaueston was left: who taking him out of the hands of his keepers, carieth him to the castle of Warwicke, where incontinent they would haue put him to death: but doubting and fearing the kings displeasure, a little they stayed. At what time one of the companie (a man of sage and wise counsell, as mine author writeth) standing vp among them, with his graue Oration declareth the nature of the man, the wickednesse of his owne condition, the realme, by him so greatly endamaged, the nobles despised and reiected, the pride and ambition of the man intollerable, the ruine of things like to ensue by him, and the great charges and expences they had been at in so long pursuing and getting of him. And now being gotten and in their hands, hee exhorteth them so to vse and take the occasion now present; that hereafter being out of their hands, they afterward might seeke, and should not find it.

Peter Gaueston againe apprehended by Guy of Warwicke.

Briefly, in such sort he perswaded the hearers, that forthwith he was brought out, and by common agreement beheaded in a place called Blakelow; which place in other stories I find to be called Gauelhead; but that name (as I thinke) was deriued vpon this occasion, afterward. And thus he, that before had called the earle of Warwicke the blacke dog of Ardeine, was thus by the said dog worried, as ye haue heard, &c. His carcase, the Dominicke friers of Oxford had in their monasterie interred the space of two yeares: but after that, the king caused the said carcase to be taken vp and buried within his own Mannour of Langley.

Peter Gaueston beheaded.

After this, great disturbance began to rise betweene the king and the lords: who hauing their power lying about Dunstable, sent stout message vnto the king at London, to haue their former acts confirmed. Gilbert earle of Glocester the kings nephew (who neither did hold against the king, nor yet against the nobles) with the bishops and prelats of the realme; went betweene both parties with great diligence, to make vnitie. At which time also came two cardinals from Rome, with letters sent vnto them from the pope. The nobles answered to the message of the cardinals, lying then at Saint Albans: that as touching themselues, they should be at all times welcome to them: but as touching their letters (for as much as they were men vnlettered, and only brought vp in warre and feates of armes) therefore they cared not for seeing the same. Then message was sent againe, that they would grant at least but to speake with the popes legats, which purposely came for the intent to set quiet and vnitie in the realme. They answered againe, that they had bishops both godly and learned, by whose counsell they would be led only, and not by any strangers, who knew not the true cause of their commotion. And therefore they said precisely, that they would no forreners or aliens to be doers in their businesse and affaires pertaining to the realme. Yet notwithstanding, through the mediation of the archbishop, and of the earle of Glocester; the matter at length was so taken vp, that the barons should restore to the king, or his attourney of Saint Albans, all the treasure, horses, and iewels of the foresaid Gaueston taken at Newcastle, and so their requests should be granted. And so was the matter at that time composed.

The nobles of England cared not for the popes letters.

The popes legats not admitted of the nobles of England.

Shortly vpon the same, Isabel the queene was deliuered of a faire child at Windsore, whom Lewes the French kings sonne (the queenes brother, with other Frenchmen there present) would to be called by the name of the French king: but the English lords were contrarie, willing him to be called by the name of Edward his father. At the birth of which Edward great reioycing was through all the land, and especially the king his father so much ioyed thereat; that he began daily more and more to forget the sorrow and remembrance of Gauestons death, and was after that more agreeable to the will of his nobles.

Anno 1312. The king ruled by forren counsell. Makebates about the king.

Thus peace and concord betweene them began to be in a good towardnesse: which more and more might haue been confirmed in wearing out of time, had not Satan the author and sower of discord, stirred vp his instruments (certaine Frenchmen, Titiuillars and make-bates about the king) which ceased not in carping and depraying the nobles, to inflame the kings hatred and grudge against them. By the exciting of whom, the old quarrels being renued afresh, the king in his parliament, called vpon the same, began to charge the foresaid barons and nobles with sedition and rebellion, and for slaying Peter Gaueston. Neither were the nobles lesse stout againe in defending their cause, declaring that they in so doing had deserued rather thanke and fauour with the king then any displeasure, in vanquishing such a publike enemie of the realme, who not only had spoiled and wasted the kings substance, but also raised much disturbance in the realme. And for as much as they had begun with the matter to their so great labours and expences; they would proceed further, they said, not ceasing till they saw an end thereof. To be short, great threats there were on both parts, and a foule matter like to haue followed. But againe through the diligent mediation of the queene, the prelats, and the foresaid earle of Glocester; the matter was taken vp and brought to reconcilement vpon these conditions; that the lords and barons openly in Westminster hall should humble themselues before the king, and aske pardon there of their doings, and euerie man there to receiue a letter of the kings pardon for their indemnitie, and assurance. And so passed ouer that yeare, within the which yeare died Ro. Winchelsey archbishop of Canturburie. In whose roome, Thomas Cobham was elected by the king and church of Canturburie to succeed: but the pope, casting the election, placed Walter Reinald bishop of Worcester.

Mediation for making peace.

The king reconciled againe with his nobles.

In the meane time, the Scots hearing this ciuill discord in the realme, began to be busie, and to rebell of new through the meanes of Robert Bruis: who being chased out of Scotland by king Edward the first, as is aboue premised, into Norway, was now returned againe into Scotland: where hee demeaned him in such sort to the lords there, that in short processe hee was againe made king of the realme; and warred so strongly vpon them that tooke the kings part, that hee wan from them manie castles and strong holds, and inuaded the borders of England. The king hearing this, assembleth a great power, and by water entreth the realme of Scotland. Against whom incountred Robert de Bruis with his Scots at Estriuelin, where was fought a strong battell: in the end whereof, the Englishmen were discomfited, and so eagerly pursued by the Scots, that many of the noblemen were slaine, as the earle of Glocester, sir Robert Clifford, sir Edmund Maule with other lords to the number of 42. and knights and barons 227. besides men of name, which were taken prisoners; of common souldiers ten thousand, or after the Scotish storie fiftie thousand slaine. After which time, sir Robert Bruis raigned as king of Scotland.

Anno 1313. What discord doth in a common weale. The Scots rebell against the realme of England.

Englishmen ouercome by the Scots.

About which time, and in which yeare, died pope Clement, who keeping in the realme of France, neuer came to the see of Rome: after whose death the papacie stood void two yeares.

Pope Clement neuer sate in the see of Rome.

The Scots after this exalted with pride and fiercenesse inuaded the realme of England, so sore killing and destroying man, woman, and child; that they came winning and wasting the North parts as farre as to Yorke. Besides this, such dearth of victuals, and penurie of all things so oppressed the whole land, such moraine of sheepe and oxen; as men were faine to eat horse flesh, dogs, cats, mise, and what else they could get. Moreouer, such a price of corne followed withall, that the king hardly had bread for the sustentation of his owne household. Moreouer, some there were that did steale children and eate them, and many for lacke of victuall died. And yet all this amended not the king of his euill liuing.

Anno 1314. Miserable dearth and famine in England.

The cause and origen of this great dearth, was, partly the warres and dissension betweene them and the Scots: whereby a great part of the land was wasted. But the chiefest cause was, the vntemperat season of the yeare, which contrarie to the common course, was so moist with abundance of raine, that the graine laid in the earth could haue no ripening by heat of the Sunne, nor grow to any nourishment. Whereby they that had to eat, could not be satisfied with saturity, but eftsones were were as hungrie againe. They that had nothing, were driuen to steale and rob: the rich were constrained to auoid and diminish their households: the poore for famine died. And not so much the want of victuall, which could not be gotten, as the vnwholesomnesse of the same when it was taken, so consumed the people, that the quicke were not sufficient to burie the dead. For the corruption of the meats, by reason of the vnseasonablenes of the ground, was so infectious, that many died of the flix, manie of hot feuers, diuers of the pestilence. And not only the bodies of men thereby were infected, but also the beasts by the putrifaction of the herbs and grasse fell into as great a mortaine: so farre forth, as the eating of flesh was suspect and thought contagious. A quarter of corne and salt, from the moneth of June to September grew from thirtie shillings vnto fortie shillings. The flesh of horses was then precious to the poore. Many were driuen to steale fat dogs and to eat them: some were said in secret corners to eat their owne children. Some would steale other mens children to kill them and eat them priuily. The prisoners and theeues that were in bands, such as were newlie brought in vnto them, for hunger fell vpon them, and tearing them in pieces did eat them halfe aliue. Briefly, this extreame penurie had extincted and consumed (as it was thought) the greatest part of the people of the land, had not the king by the statute of the Londoners giuen forth commandement through all his land, that no corne should at that time be turned to the making of drinke. Such a Lord is God, thus able to do where he is disposed to strike. And yet we miserable creatures, in our wealth and abundance will not surcease daily to prouoke his terrible Maiestie.

Ex Chron. Tho. Walsi. in vita Edwardi 2.

But let vs returne to the order againe of our storie. After the Scots had thus plagued miserablie (as ye haue heard) the realme of England; they inuaded also Ireland, where they kept and continued warre the space of foure yeares. But in fine, the Irishmen (by aid sent to them from England) quit themselues so well, that they vanquished the Scots, and slew Edward Bruis, and many of the nobles of Scotland with many other, and droue the residue out of the countrie.

Anno 1317

The king about the twelfth yeare of his raigne, assembled a new host and went into Scotland, where he laid siege to Barwicke. But in the meane time, the Scots by another way, inuaded the merchants of Yorkeshire, robbing and harrying the countrie, that they slew much people. Wherefore, the archbishop of Yorke, and other abbats, priors, clerkes, with husbandmen, assembled a great companie, and gaue them battell at a place called Mitton, where the Englishmen were discomfited and many of them slaine: but the archbishop, and the abbat of Selbie, and diuers others there escaped. But because there were so many spirituall men there slaine, it was called therefore the white battell. By reason whereof, the king hearing of this, and partly because winter did approch, was constrained to breake vp his siege, and so returned not without great danger.

The white battell of the spirituall men in Yorkeshire.

At this time the two Spensers (Sir Hugh Spenser the father, and Hugh Spenser the sonne) were of great power in England, and by the fauour of the king practised such crueltie, and bare themselues so haughtily and proud; that no lord of this land might gain-say them in any thing that they thought good, whereby they were in great hatred and indignation both with the nobles, and the commons, no lesse then Peter Gaueston was before.

The two Spensers.

Soone vpon this, came two Legats from Rome, sent by pope John the 22. vnder pretence to set agreement betweene England and Scotland: who for their charges and expences, required of euerie spirituall person foure pence in euerie marke. But all their labour nothing auailed: For the Legats as they were in the North parts (about Derlinghton) with their whole familie and traine, were robbed and dispoiled of their horses, treasure, apparell, and what else they had. And with an euill fauoured handling, retired backe againe to Durelme, where they staid a while waiting for an answere from the Scots. But when neither the popes legacie nor his curse would take any place with the Scots, they returned againe to London, where they first excommunicated and cursed as blacke as sot, all those arrogant and presumptuous robbers of Northumberland. Secondly, for supplying of the losses receiued, they exacted of the clergie to be giuen and paid vnto them eight pence in euery marke. But the clergie thereunto would not agree, seeing it was their owne couetousnesse (as they said) that made them venture farther then they needed. Only they were contented to relieue them after foure pence in a marke, as they promised before, further they would not grant. Whereof the king being aduertised, and taking part with his clergie, directeth his letters to the said legats in forme as followeth: Rex magistro Rigando, &c.

Two legats sent from Rome.
The popes pillage.
The popes legats spoiled of all their ill gotten treasure.

REx Magistro Rigando de Asserio, canonico Aurelian. Salutem. &c. In English thus.

A prohibition against strange taxes and impositions.

The king to maister Rigand of Asserio, canon of Aurelia, greeting. We haue taken notice of the clamours and lamentable petitions of the subiects of our realme, perceiuing by the same that you practise many and sundrie inconueniences verie strange, neuer heretofore accustomed nor heard of in this our realme, aswell against the clergie and ecclesiasticall persons, as against the laytie, euen to the vtter oppression and empouerishing of many our liege people; which if it should be winked at (as God forbid) may in processe of time be occasion of greater perils to ensue: whereat we are (not without cause) moued, and not a little grieued. We forbid you therefore, that from henceforth you practise not, ne presume in any case to attempt any thing within this our realme, either against our clergie or laitie, that may any maner of way tend to the preiudice of our roiall person or of our crowne and dignitie regall. Witnesse the king at Windsour the sixth day of Februarie in the eleuenth yeare of his raigne. Per Concilium.

Likewise in the same yeare the said king writeth to the same effect to the archbishop of Canturburie, as followeth: Rex venerabili in Christo Patri, W. eadem gratia Archiepiscopo Cant. In English thus.

The king to the reuerend father in God, Wil. by the same grace archbishop of Canturburie 1. primate of England, greeting. We are credible informed by many our subiects, that certaine strange impositions neuer heard of before within any our dominions vpon lands and tenements, goods and cattels, concerning the testaments and cases of matrimonie, are brought into our realme to be executed vpon our subiects by you or some others, which if it should proceed to execution, would manifestly tend to the disherison of our crowne, impeachment of our crowne and dignitie regall, and the intollerable damage of the subiects of our realme (and to the due preseruation of the which you are bound by solemne oth of alleageance.) We therefore command and straitly charge you, that you proceed not in any case to the execution of any such letters, either in your owne person or by any other, nor yet presume by colour of the same to attempt any thing that may be preiudiciall or hurtfull to our crowne or dignitie regall. And if you or any other in your name haue done or attempted any thing by colour of the same, that ye call backe and reuoke the same forthwith without delay. Witnesse the king at Shene the 17. of Februarie the 11. yeare of his raigne.

Per ipsum Regem.

The like letters in effect were directed to the archbishop of Yorke, and to euerie other bishop through England. By force of which letters the greedie legats being restrained of their rauening purpose, taking what they could get, and setting a peace (such as it was) betweene the king and the earle of Lancaster, were faine to packe.

Besides the restraint aboue mentioned for strange impositions, there followed moreouer the same yeare the kings prohibition for the gathering of Peter pence directed to the foresaid legat, the tenour whereof followeth.

A prohibition of Peter pence.

Rex magistro Rigando, &c. In English thus.

A prohibition for paying the popes Peter pence.

The king to maister Rigand of Asserio Canon of Aurelia, greeting. We are giuen to vnderstand that you do demand and purpose to leuie the Peter penie within our realme, otherwise then the said Peter penie hath been heretofore accustomed to be leuied in the time of any our progenitours, exercising herein grieuous censures ecclesiasticall to the great annoiance and damnifying of the subiects of our realme: for present remedie whereof our louing subiects haue made their humble supplication vnto vs. And for as much as the said Peter penie hath been hitherto accustomed to be gathered and leuied vpon lands and tenements within our realme after a due manner and forme: we not willing that any such vnaccustomed impositions shall in any wise be made vpon the lands and tenements of any our subiects within our dominions; prohibite you, vpon grieuous paine straitly charging that in no wise you presume to exact, gather or leuie the said Peter penie in any other forme or manner then hath been heretofore accustomed to be gathered and leuied in the time of our progenitours, or since the beginning of our raigne: vntill further order to be taken in our high court of parliament by the aduice of the nobles and peeres of our realme, such as may well be taken without preiudice of our crowne and damage of subiects. Witnes the king at Westminster the first day of March.

To the same effect letters were directed to the archbishops, deanes, archdeacons and the rest of the clergie.

Touching the first originall of which Peter pence, though mention be made before in the life of king Offa and others: yet to make a briefe recapitulation of the same according to the rolles as they come to our hands, thus it followeth: De Denarijs beati Petri sic scriptum, &c. Concerning which Peter pence, it is touched in the lawes of king Edward the Saint chap. 10. when, where, of whom, vnder what paine this Peter pence must be gathered, being but the kings meere almes, as is aforesaid. And thus much touching Peter pence. Now for other letters written by the king to the pope, the same yeare, for other matters, as craving the popes helpe in compounding the variance betwixt the two archbishops of Canturburie and Yorke, for bearing the crosse from the one prouince to the other, thus it followeth: that the king grieuously complaineth, quòd tantæ dissensiones. 1. that such hurly burly and vproare arose thereof, that they could not meet together in one place through the great multitude of armed men assistants on both parts in the verie bearing of the crosse, to the great disturbance of the people.

Now after this long digression to turne to our English matters againe: mention was made before of the variance betweene the king and the earle of Lancaster, and of a peace concluded betweene them. But this peace did not long endure: which the king by his owne default did breake, sending to the Scots a priuie messenger (which was taken in the way) to haue the foresaid earle of Lancaster by their meanes, made away.

The pride of the Spensers.

In the meane time, the lords and nobles of England detesting the outragious pride of the Spensers, whereby they wrought daily both great dishonor to the king and hinderance to the common weale: in such wise conspired against them, that gathering their power together, they made a request to the king, that he should remoue the Spensers from his person. For the which, there was a parliament called at London, and the barons came together with a great companie. At the which parliament both the Spensers were banished the land for terme of their liues: and they tooke shipping at Douer, and so voided the land. But it was not long after, but the king (contrarie to that ordinance made in the parliament) sent for the Spensers againe, and set them in high authoritie, and ruled all things after their sensuall appetites, nothing regarding iustice nor the commonwealth. Wherefore, the barons intending againe to reforme this mischiefe, assembled their powers: but the king (making so hastie speed, and gathering his people so soone) was stronger then they, and pursued them so in diuers places; that the barons not fully ioyned together (some flying, and some departing to the king, some slaine by the way) in the end were chased so eagerly; that in short space, the foresaid Thomas earle of Lancaster was taken and put to death with the rest of the nobilitie, to the number of two and twentie of the greatest men, and chiefest captaines of this realme. Of whom only Thomas earle of Lancaster for the nobilitie of his blood, was beheaded: All the other lords and barons, were hanged, drawne and quartered, &c. Which bloodie vnmercifulnesse of the king toward his naturall subiects, not only to him procured great dishonor within the realme, but also turned afterward to his much more greater harme and hinderance, in his forren warres against the Scots: and finally wrought his vtter confusion and ouerthrow of his seat royall, as in the sequele of his end appeared, and worthilie.

Anno 1321

That Thomas earle of Lancaster came of Edmund, yonger son of king Henry the third.

Twentie two of the greatest nobilitie of the realme put to death by the king.

After the ruine of these noble personages; the king, as though he had gotten a great conquest (who then indeed began first to be ouercome and conquered himselfe, when he so oppressed and cut off the strength and sinewes of his chiualrie) began to triumph not a little with the Spensers: And to count himselfe sure as though he were in heauen, to exercise more sharpe seueritie vpon his subiects, trusting and committing all to the counsell only of the foresaid Spensers: in so much that both the queene and the residue of the other nobles could little be regarded. Who as they grew euer in more contempt with the king: so they increased in more hatred against the Spensers: but strength and abilitie lacked, to worke their will.

The cruell reioycing of the king.

The next yeere, the king being at Yorke, after he had made sir Hugh Spenser earle, and sir Iohn Baldocke a man of euill fame, to be Chancellour of England: he then areared a mightie host against the Scots. But for lacke of skilfull guiding, expert captaines, and for want specially of due prouision of victuals necessarie for such an armie: the great multitude, to the number reckoned of an hundred thousand (wandring through Scotland, from whence the Scots had conueyed all their goods and cattell into mountaines, and marshes) were so pinched and starued with famine, that a great part of the armie, there presently perished: and they that returned home, as soone as they talked of meats, escaped not. The king neither hauing resistance of his enemies, and seeing such a destruction of his subiects: was forced without any act done to retire. But in his retiring, Sir James Duglas and the Scots hauing knowledge thereof, pursued him in such wise; that they slew many English men, and had well neere taken the king himselfe. After which distresse, the king thus beaten and wearied with the Scots, would faine haue ioyned in truce with the Scots: but because they stood excommunicat by the pope, he standing in feare thereof, desireth licence to entreat with them of peace, the said excommunication notwithstanding: which licence being obtained, a treatie was appointed by commissioners on both parts at Newcastle at the feast of Saint Nicolas next ensuing; and so truce was taken for 12. yeares. Whereupon this is to be noted by the way (gentle reader) not vnworthie of obseruation, that whereas in former times, and especially of the late king Edward the first, so long as the Scots were vnder the popes blessing, and we in displeasure with his holinesse for dealing with them, so long we preuailed mightily against them, euen to the vtter subuersion in manner of their whole estate. But now so soone as the pope tooke our part, and the Scots were vnder his curse and excommunication: then gate they greater victories against vs, then any time either before or thence, in so much as being before not able to defend themselues against vs, they now pursued vs vnto the bowels of our owne countrie.

The king distressed againe in Scotland.

The king purposing to erect a house of friers Augustines, within the towne of Boston in Lincolnshire, first prayed the popes licence in that behalfe.

Polydorus Virgilius among other histories of our English nation which he intermedleth withall, prosecuting also the acts and life of this present king, and comming to write of the queenes going ouer into France: inferreth much varietie and diuersitie of authors and story-writers, concerning the cause thereof. Otherwise, he giueth himselfe no true certaintie of that matter, neither yet toucheth he that which was the cause indeed. By reason partly, that he being an Italian and a forrener, could not vnderstand our English tongue. And partly againe being but one man, neither could he alone come to the sight of all our Latine authors: One I am sure came not to his perusing, an old ancient Latine historie faire written in parchment (but without name) belonging to the librarie of William Cary citizen of London. In which storie, the truth of this matter without all ambiguitie, is there fully and with all circumstances expressed, as heere briefly is excerpted.

Polydorus Virgilius, an Italian writer of our English stories.

The king of England had been diuers and sundrie times cited vp to the Court of France, to do homage to the French king, for the dukedome of Aquitane, and other lands which the king then held of France. Which homage, because the king of England refused to tender: the French king began to enter all such possessions as the king then did hold in France: whereupon, great contention and conflicts there were on both sides. At length, in this yeare now present, a parliament was called at London. Where (after much altercation) at last it was determined; that certaine should be sent ouer, to wit, the bishops of Winchester, and Norwich, and the earle of Richmond, to make agreement betwixt the two kings. For the better helpe and fortification of which agreement, it was thought good afterward; that queene Isabel, sister to Charles then the French king, should be sent ouer. Where is to be noted first, that the queenes lands, possessions and castles a little before vpon the breach betweene the French king and the king of England, were seised into the kings hands, and the queene put vnto her pension, &c. Thus the queene being sent ouer with a few, to attend vpon her, onely Sir Iohn Cromwell baron, and foure knights, take their passage into France: by whose mediation, it was there concluded, that the king of England (if he would not himselfe come to do his homage) he should giue to his sonne Edward the dukedome of of Aquitaine, and the earledome of Pontine, and so hee to come to make his homage to the king, and to possesse the same. This being in France concluded, was sent ouer by message to the king of England, with the kings letters patents adioyned for the safe conduct of him or of his sonne. Upon this, deliberation was taken in the councell of England. But the two Spensers fearing to take the seas either with the king, or else without the king to remaine behind for feare of the nobles; so appointed, that prince Edward the kings sonne was sent, which hapned after to their vtter desolation, as it followed. For all things being quieted and ordered according to the agreement in France, king Edward of England sone after Michelmasse, sendeth for his wife and his sonne againe out of France. But shee sending home most part of her familie, refuseth her selfe to returne. For what cause it is not fully certaine, whether for indignation that her possessions and lands were seized to the king, as is before premised: or whether for feare and hatred of the Spensers, as is likely: or else for loue and familiaritie of Sir Roger Mortimer. For heere is to be noted, that the said sir Roger Mortimer, with diuers other of the barons part, which had broken prison in England, were fled before into France, and now resorted vnto the queene. The king seeing this, giueth forth in proclamation, and limiteth a certaine day to the queene and his sonne to returne: or else to be proclamed trayters to the king and to the realme. Notwithstanding, the queene persisting in her purpose, denieth to returne, vnlesse the other nobles which were fled, might be permitted safely also to returne with her. Whereupon, the king immediatly caused them both to be proclamed trayters, and all them that tooke their parts.

Prince Edward made duke of Aquitaine and earle of Pontine.

The queene and the prince refuse to returne into England.

The queene and the prince proclamed trayters in England.

Heere then began great hatred betweene king and king, betweene the king and the queene, much preparation of warre, great spoiling on the sea, much sending betweene the pope and them; but that would not serue. Then the king (by the counsell of the Spensers) sendeth priuily to procure the death of the queene and of his sonne: which should be wrought by the execution of the earle of Richmond, the queenes familiar. But as the Lord would, that imagination was preuented and vtterly frustrate. Albeit, the queene yet notwithstanding, whether misdoubting what corruption of money might do in the court of France: or whether the French king being threatned by the king of England, and by the pope, durst not detaine her: she remoued from thence, and was receiued with Edward her sonne ioyoustie and honorablie, in the court or countrie of the earle of Henawde. Where by meanes of such as were about her, a marriage was concluded betweene the said Edward her sonne being of the age of fourteene yeares, and Philip the foresaid earles daughter. When this was noised in England, diuers men of honor and name came ouer to the queene. And sone after the earle of Haynawde prepared a crew of fiue hundred men of armes to set ouer the yong prince with his mother into England. Of this, the fame sprang shortly through the realme. Wherefore the king in all defensable waies made prouision to haue the hauens and ports of his land surely kept, for to resist the landing of his enemies. On the contrarie side, the queene with no lesse preparation prouideth all things to her expedition necessarie. Who when shee saw her time, speeding her selfe to the sea coast with prince Edward her sonne, lord Edmund earle of Kent the kings brother, Sir Roger Mortimer, the lord Wygmore and other exiles of England, accompanied also with the foresaid Hainawders, of whom Sir John Henawde the earles brother was captaine, of Englishmen and strangers hauing with her, the number of 2757. souldiers: shee tooke shipping in thole parts, and had the winde so fauourable, that they landed in England at a port called Dwell beside Harwich in Suffolke, in the dominion of the earle Marshall the moneth of September. To whom after her landing resorted earle Marshall, the earle of Leicester, with other barons, knights, and bishops also: namely of Lincolne, Hereford, Duresme, and Elie: The archbishop of Canturburie though he came not himselfe, yet sent his aid and money. Thus the queene well furnished with plentie both of men and victuall, setteth forward toward London: so that the further shee came the more her number daily increased, and the kings power contrarie, decreased, in so much that, as mine author affirmeth, not one almost in all the realme could be hired with any wages to fight on the kings behalfe against the queene. Neither did the queenes armie hurt any man or child, either in goods or any other thing, by the way.

The king conspired priuily the death of the queene and of his sonne.

The king destitute of helpe and souldiers.

At the arriuing of the queene, the king was then in London, which first would not beleeue it to be true. Afterward (seeing and perceiuing how it was) hee asketh helpe of the Londoners. Who after mature daulement, rendred this answere to the king againe: that as touching the king, the queene, and their sonne (the lawfull heire of the kingdome) they were readie with all dutie and seruice to honor and obey. As for straungers and trayters to the realme, they would receiue none such within their citie gates. Furthermore, to go out of the citie to fight, that they said they would not, vnlesse it were so, that according to the liberties of their citie, they might returne home againe before sunne set. The king hearing this answere (which liked him not well) fortifieth the tower of London with men and victuall: committing the custodie thereof to John Eltham his yonger sonne, and to the wife of Hugh Spenser his neece. And leauing Walter Stapleton bishop of Exeter behind him to haue the rule of the citie of London: hee himselfe hearing dailie the great recourse of the people that drew to the queene: for more safegard to himselfe, fled with a small companie westward toward Wales. But before his departing from London, he caused a proclamation to be made: wherein all and singuler persons were charged vpon forfeit of life and goods; euerie man with all his power to rise and inuade the rebels and destroy them all, only the life of the queene, his sonne, and his brother reserued. Also, that no man vpon paine prefixate, should helpe, rescue, or relieue the said rebels, with goods, victuals, or otherwise. Item, it was also proclamed, that whosoeuer would bring to the king the head and bodie either dead or aliue of sir Roger Mortimer, should haue out of the kings coffers, a thousand pound.

The queenes letter.

Isabell by the grace of God, Queene of England, ladie of Ireland, and Countesse of Pountif: And we Edward the first sonne of the king of England, Duke of Guyan, earle of Chester, of Pontif, and of Mounstrell, to the Maior and all the comminaltie of London, send greeting. For as much as we haue before this time sent to you by our letters, and how wee come into this land in good array and good manner, for the profit of holy church and of our right deare lord and king, and all the realme, with all our might and strength, to keepe and maintaine the realme as all good people ought for to doe: Vpon that we pray you and desire you that ye would be helping to vs for the health and profit of the realme; and we haue had none answere of you, nor know not your will in that part. Wherefore we send to you againe and pray you, and charge you, that ye beare you so against vs, that ye haue nor make no cause vs to grieue, but that ye be to vs helping in all the waies that you may. And weet ye well in certaine, that we and also those that come with vs into this realme, nothing for to done, but that shall be pleasing to God, and common profit to all the realme. Not else, but for to destroy the Spensers, enemies to the realme, as ye well know. Wherefore we pray and charge you in the faith that ye owe to our lord the king, to the crowne and to vs, and vpon all that ye may forfeit, that if Hugh Spenser, both the father and the sonne our enemies come within your power, that yee do them hastilie to be take, and safely kept, till we haue ordained for them our will: and as ye desire profit and honour of vs, and of the realme. Vnderstanding wel if it be so that ye do our desire and prayer, we shall the more be beholden to you: And also we shall do you profit and worship if that you send vs hastily word againe of our will. Giuen at Baldocke the sixth day of October.

These foresaid letters being published and perused, the bishop of Exeter, to whom (as ye heard) was committed the rule of the citie: sent to the Maior for their keyes of the gates, willing so sharpe words in the kings name, that variance began to kindle betweene him and the citizens; so farre forth that the commons in their rage tooke the foresaid bishop and beheaded him and two of his houshold at the Standard in Cheape. Then the king went to Bristow, and obtained Sir Hugh Spenser the father there to keepe the castle and the towne: and the king with Hugh Spenser the sonne, and Sir Robert Baldock chancellour, and the earle of Arundell went into Wales. And the queene so pursued them, that first they tooke the towne yeelded vp to her: Then they tooke sir Hugh Spenser the father, whom being drawne and torne, they at last hanged vp at Bristow in chaines of iron. As the king was thus flying, the queene caused to be proclamed through her armie, that the king should come and appeare, and so to receiue his kingdome againe if he would be conformable to his liege subiects. Who when he did not appeare, prince Edward his sonne was proclamed high keeper of the realme.

and sent him to the castle of Kenelworth: And tooke Hugh Spenser the sonne, and Sir Robert Baldocke Chancellour, and Sir John earle of Arundell, and brought them all to the towne of Hereford. And anon after, Hugh Spenser the sonne was drawne and hanged on a gallowes fiftie foote high, and after beheaded and quartered, whose quarters were sent into foure quarters of the Realme. Sir John of Arundell was beheaded, Sir Robert Baldocke was put in Newgate at London, where shortly after hee pined away and died among the thieues. This done, a parliament was assembled at London, from whence message was sent to the king, that if hee would resigne vp his crowne, his sonne should haue it after him: If not, another should take it to whom the lot would giue it. Wherupon the king being constrained to yeeld vp his crowne to his sonne, was kept in prison, and after had to Barkley: where hee is said to take great repentance. After this message being sent, and the king halfe condescending thereunto (the parliament notwithstanding prosecuting and going forward) there was a bill exhibited and put vp, containing certaine articles against the said king, then in prison in the castle of Barkley, touching his misbehauiour and imprudent gouerning of the realme: which bill, openly before all the lords and commons by the speaker of the parliament house was read. After long consultation thereof amongst themselues touching those articles and also for the better and more circumspect gouernment of the realme from that time forth: it was consulted and agreed vpon by the lords spirituall and temporall, and commons there assembled; that the said Edward was a man not meet to bee their king, nor from that time forth any more to beare the crowne royall or title of a king. But that Edward his eldest sonne, who there in the same court of high parliament was present, as he was rightfull heire and inheritour thereunto: so should he be crowned king thereof in his fathers stead, with these conditions thereunto annexed: That he should take wise, sage, and true counsellers vnto him. That the realme might be better and more circumspectly gouerned, then before in the time of Edward his father it was: That the old king his father should be honorablie prouided for and kept, so long as he liued, according as vnto his estate it appertained, &c. These and other things thus finished and ended, the parliament breaketh vp, and all things necessarie to the coronation of a prince appertaining were in speedie wise prepared, whereof more hereafter (Christ willing) shall be specified.

In the meane time as touching the king which was yet in prison, it is thought by some writers, that the next yeare following by the meanes of sir Roger Mortimer he was miserablie slaine, with a Spit (as is said) being thrust vp into his bodie, and was buried at Gloucester, after he had raigned nineteene yeares.

In the time and raigne of this king, the Colledge of Cambridge called Michael house, was founded and builded by Sir Henrie Stanton knight, to the vse and increase of learning: a thing in a common wealth verie profitable and necessarie to be had, the want and need wherof, many sundrie times, is sooner felt in this realme of ours, and other realmes abroad, then is the discommoditie thereof, of most men commonly vnderstood.

In the tractation of this kings historie, before was declared what grudge did kindle in the hearts of the barons against the king, for reuoking such acts and customes, as had been before in the parliament established, both for Peter Gaueston, and for the two Spensers. Also what seuere punishment the king did execute vpon them for the same, in such cruell and rigorous sort, that as hee spared none of them, whom hee could there find: so hee neuer ceased all his life after to enquire out and to bee reuenged of all such, as had been in anie part, or consenting to that matter. For the which his extreame and implacable tyrannie, hee was in such hatred of all the people; that as hee said, hee could not find one of all the Commons to take his part, when need required. Among all other which were for that matter troubled, was one Adam bishop of Hereford: who being impeached of treason with other moe, was at length arrested in the parliament, to appeare and answere to that should bee to him obiected. Manie things there were laid against him, for taking part with them that rose against the king, with matters moe and haynous rebukes, &c. Whereunto the bishop a great while answered nothing.

Ex Tho. Walsing.

At length the bishop claiming the liberties and priuiledges of the church, answered to the king in this forme. The due reuerence of your princely Maiestie euer saued, Ego Sanctæ ecclesiæ Dei minister humilis, membrum eius, & Episcopus consecratus, licèt indignus, ad tam ardua nequeo respondere nec debeo, absque D. Cant. Archiepiscopi post summum pontificem mei directi iudicis, cuius etiam sum suffraganeus, autoritate, & aliorum parium meorum Episcoporum consensu. That is, I an humble Minister and member of the holy church of God, and bishop consecrate (albeit vnworthie) cannot, neither ought to answere to these so high matters without the authoritie of the archbishop of Canturburie my direct iudge, nert vnder the high bishop of Rome, whose suffragan also I am, and the consent likewise of the other my fellow bishops. After which words by him pronounced, the archbishop and other bishops with him were readie to make humble intercession for him to the king, and did. But when the king would not be won nor turned with any supplication; the said bishops together with the archbishop and the clergie, conuning with their crosses; tooke him away, challenging him for the church, without any more answere making: charging moreouer, vnder the censures of the church and excommunication, none to presume to lay any further hands vpon him. The king moued with this boldnesse and stoutnesse of the clergie; commandeth notwithstanding to proceed in iudgement, and the iurie of twelue men to go vpon the enquirie of his cause: who finding and pronouncing the bishop to be guiltie, the king caused immediatly all his goods and possessions to be confiscate vnto himselfe: moreouer, made his plate and all his houshold prouision to be throwne out of his house into the streete but yet he remained so still vnder the protection and defence of the archbishop, &c.

The bishop rescued by the clergie.

The king proceedeth in iudgement against the bishop, the priuiledges of the church notwithstanding to the contrarie.

This archbishop was Walter Winchelsey, after whom succeeded Simon Mepham in the same see of Canturburie, an. 1327. Ex Tho. Walsingham.

Simon Mepham archbishop of Canturburie.

After pope Clement the fifth, by whose decease the Romish see stood vacant (as ye haue heard) two yeares and three moneths, nert was elected pope John the two and twentith a Cistercian monke, who sate in that papacie eightéene yeares. He was stout and inflexible, giuen so much to the heaping of riches, that he proclaimed them heretikes, which taught that Christ and his apostles had no possessions of their owne in this world. At this time was emperor Ludouicus Bauarus, a worthie man: who with this pope and other that followed him, had no lesse contention, then had Fredericus before mentioned in the time of king Henrie the third. In so much that this contention and variance continued the space of foure and twentie yeares. The cause and first origine of this tragicall conflict, rose vpon the constitution of Clement the fifth predecessour to this pope, by whom it was ordained, as is afore mentioned, that emperors by the Germaine princes elected, might be called kings of the Romans, but might not enioy the title or right of the empire to be nominated emperour, without their confirmation giuen by the pope. Wherefore, this foresaid emperour because hee vsed the emperiall dignitie in Italie, before he was authorised by the pope: the said pope therefore excommunicated the emperour. And notwithstanding the emperour oftentimes did proffer himselfe to make intreaty of peace and concord, yet the pope inflexible would not bend. The writings of both parts yet bee extant, wherein the said bishop doth make his auaunt, that hee had full power to create and depose kings and emperours at his pleasure. In the same time were diuers learned men, which seeing the matter, did greatly disallow the bishop of Romes doings, among whom was Guillerme Ocham, whose tractations were afterward condemned by the pope, for writing against the temporall iurisdiction of their see. And another named Marsilius Patauinus, which wrote the booke intituled Defensor pacis, giuen vp to the hands of the said emperour, wherein the controuersie of the popes vnlawfull iurisdiction in things temporall is largely disputed, and the vsurped authoritie of that see set forth to the vttermost. It is found in some writers, that a great cause of this variance first began, for that one of the emperours secretaries, vnknowing to the emperour; in certaine of his letters, had likened the papall see to the beast rising out of the sea in the Apocalypse. At length, when the emperour after much suite made to the pope at Auinion, could not obtaine his coronation; comming to Rome, was there receiued with great honor, where he with his wife were both crowned by the full consent of all the lords and cardinals there; and moreouer, another pope there set vp, called Nicolas the fifth. After which things done, the pope not long after departed at Auinion in France, after whom succeeded then Benedictus the twelfth a monke of Benedicts order, and raigned seuen yeares. Who by the counsell of Philip the French king, confirmed and prosecuted the censures and cursings that John his predecessour had published against Lewes the emperour: Moreouer, depriued him of his emperiall crowne, and also of his dukedome of Bauaria. The emperour vpon this commeth to Germanie, and assembling the princes electors, dukes, bishops, nobles, and the learned in a councell at Franckford: there declared before them out of the ancient lawes and customes of the empire, how it standeth only in the princes Electours, and in none other to elect the kings or the emperours of the Romanes (for in both these names was no difference) so that the same Electours in chusing the king of the Romanes, did also elect and chuse the emperour. Which emperour so by them constitute had lawfull right, without anie information of the apostolicall see, to exercise the administration of the empire. And if hee were lawfullie elect, ought to bee annointed of the Romane bishop: which if hee doe refuse, then might hee bee annointed and declared emperour and Augustus by anie other Catholike bishop thereunto vnto appointed (as by the old maner and cuſtome hath been) eſpecially ſeeing theſe iniunctions are but certaine ſolemnities added and inuented by the biſhops, onely for a token of vnitie betweene the church and empire, to gouerne and defend the faith together. Wherefore in that the emperour ſweareth to the biſhop of Rome; in that is to be vnderſtood no homage or fealtie made to the biſhop, but onelie is a Sacrament and a promiſe giuen to defend the faith. The which oth or ſacrament ſo giuen, giueth no maioritie to the pope in any temporall rule, but onely bindeth the emperor to be preſt and readie to defend the faith and church of Chriſt, when need ſhall require obedience. Wherefore, whereas the pope leaneth only to the electors authoritie, to make the king of Romans, and taketh vpon himſelfe alone to make the emperour, that as it is newly brought in and deuiſed a late by pope Clement the 5. ſo is it contrarie both to all ancient order, and alſo derogatorie to the libertie and maieſtie of the ſacred empire. Again, neither is that alſo leſſe abſurd and contrarie to all right and reaſon; that the pope in time of the imperiall ſeate being vacant, taketh vpon him to haue the whole and full doings of the empire, as lawfull emperour for time. Which prerogatiue and function, by ancient orders of our fore-elders, ſhould properlie and onely appertaine to the Palatine of Rhene, the Conſtitution Clementine of the foreſaid pope Clement to the contrarie notwithſtanding. Then in the end for his owne excuſe, hee in the preſence of them all reciteth the publike confeſſion of his faith, to anſwere and purge himſelfe of thoſe obiections laid to him by the pope. This did the meeke emperour Ludouicke in that councell: Yet all this notwithſtanding, the ſaid emperour remained ſtill excommunicate, till time variance fell betweene this pope Benedict and Philip the French king. Wherefore to make his partie good, at leaſt to haue ſome friends to flee to; he began to pretend fauour and abſolution, rather for neceſſitie, then for any good will to the emperor. But not long after, this pope died: of whom this Epitaph was made.

Pope Clement the ſixth.

After whom followed pope Clement the ſixth, a man moſt furious and cruell. Who renuing againe the former excommunications of his former predeceſſors, cauſed his letters to be ſet vp on church doores, wherein he threatned and denounced moſt terrible thunderbolts againſt the ſaid Lewes the emperour, vnleſſe within three daies hee ſhould ſatiſfie to God and the church, and renounce the imperial poſſeſſion of the crowne. The Emperour vpon this, commeth to Franckford, and there readie to ſtand in all things to the ordinance of the pope: ſendeth his Oratours to the court of Rome, to intreat the pope of his fauour and good will towards him. To the which meſſengers the pope anſwered againe, that he would neuer pardon the emperour, before he gaue ouer and confeſſed his errors and hereſies, and reſigning vp his empire to his hands, would ſubmit himſelfe, his children, and all his goods to the will and pleaſure of the biſhop, promiſing that he ſhould not receiue againe any part of the ſame, but vpon his good grace, as his will ſhould be to reſtore them.

The trouble of Ludouicke the emperour.

Hereſie of the popes making obiected againſt the emperour.

The hereſie here mentioned, which was to this emperor obiected by the pope was this: becauſe (as is aboue touched) hee vſed and executed the imperiall dignitie after his election, before he was of the pope confirmed. Ouer and beſides, the pope ſendeth to the emperour by the ſaid Oratours, a certaine forme of a bill contained in writing with certaine conditions, which he commanded to be giuen to the hands of the emperour. Heere if the emperour Lewes had had as much mind to ſet vpon the pope with dint of ſword, as hee lacked neither occaſion nor power ſo to doe: what bloud might heere haue been ſpilt? But the good emperour ſparing the effuſion of bloud, receiueth gentlie the bill: and not onely with his ſeale doth confirme it, but alſo ſweareth to obſerue all the conditions thereof. Which the pope hearing of, doth greatly marueil. But yet all this would nothing helpe to mollifie the moſt heart of this Pharao.

The proud hart of the pope.

The princes and electors ſeeing the bill of the articles and conditions, whereof ſome ſounded to the malicious deſacing and deſtruction of the empire, abhorring the wickednes therof: deſired the emperour to ſtand to the defence of the imperiall dominion, as hee had begun: promiſing that their aſſiſtance and aide, to the vttermoſt thereunto ſhould not lacke. Upon that other Orators were ſent to pope Clement from the princes, deſiring him to abſtaine from ſuch manner of articles conceiued againſt the ſtate and maieſtie of the empire. The pope furniſhing all this to ſpring from Lewes the Emperour, to the vtter ſubuerſion of him and all his poſſeritie: on maundie Thurſday buſſereth out moſt blacke curſes againſt him, alſo renewing all the former proceſſes of his predeceſſour againſt him, as againſt both an heretike and a ſchiſmatike: commanding moreouer the princes electors to proceed in chuſing a new emperour. The archb. of Mentz ſeeing the innocencie of the emperor, would not conſent to the violating of his Maieſtie, wherefore was depriued by the pope of all his dignities.

Lewis the emperour accuſed by the pope for an heretike.

A good and faithfull archbiſhop of Mentz.

The other biſhops electors, as the archbiſhop of Colen, which toke eight thouſand marks, with the duke of Saxonie, which toke two thouſand markes, being corrupted with monie by John king of Boheme; elected Charles the ſonne of the ſaid John, whom pope Clement eſtſones in his conſiſtorie did approoue. Who ſeeth not here what matter was miniſtred by the pope of warre and bloudſhed betweene theſe two emperours, if the patience of Ludouicke had not been more prudent to quench the fire, then the pope was to kindle it? Charles then the new emperour elect, ſped him to Aquiſgraue, according to the cuſtome, there to be crowned. But by the Citizens there, and the empreſſe (Ludouicus wife keeping thereabout) was repelled. All this happened in the time and raigne of Edward the third, king of England, with whom the ſaid Charles, with the French king, and king of Boheme, ſet on by the pope, encountred in warre, where the king of England had againſt them a noble victorie, and ſlue a great number of the Frenchmen and Almaines, and put Charles the new emperour to flight. In the meane time, among the princes and cities of Germanie what ſorrow and what complaints were againſt pope Clement and thoſe electors, it cannot bee expreſſed. For as they were al together at Spires congregated in a generall aſſemblie, ſo there was none among them all, that allowed the election of Charles, or that cared for the popes proceſſe, promiſing all to adhere and continue faithfull ſubiects to Ludouicke their lawfull emperour. But Ludouicke remembring his oth made before to the popes bill, voluntarilie and willinglie gaue ouer his imperiall dignitie, and went to Burgrauia, where ſhortlie after, through the procured practiſe of pope Clement (as Hieronymus Marius doth write) poiſon was giuen him to drinke. After the which being drunke, when he would haue vomited out and could not; toke his horſe and went to hunt the beare, thereby through the chaſing and heat of his bodie to expell the venim. And there the good and gentle emperour wickedly perſecuted and murdered of the pope fell downe dead, whom I may well recount among the innocent and bleſſed martyrs of Chriſt. For if the cauſe being righteous doth make a martyr, what papiſt can iuſtlie diſproue his cauſe or faith? If perſecution ioyned thereunto cauſeth martyrdome, what martyr could be more perſecuted then hee? who hauing three popes like three band-dogges vpon him, at length was deuoured by the ſame. The princes then hearing of his death, aſſembled themſelues to a new election: who refuſing Charles aforeſaid, elected another for emperour, named Gunterus de Monte Nigro. Who ſhortlie after falling ſicke at Franckford through his phyſitions ſeruant was likewiſe poiſoned, whom the foreſaid Charles had hired with mony to worke that feate. Gunterus talking of the poiſon, although hee did partlie caſt it vp againe, yet ſo much remained within him, as made him vnable afterward to ſerue that place. Wherefore for concords ſake being counſelled thereto by the Germaines, gaue ouer his empire to Charles. Forelſe, great bloudſhed was like to enſue. This Charles thus ambitiouſlie aſpiring to the emperiall ſeate contrarie to the minds of the ſtates, and peeres of the empire, as hee did wickedly and vnlawfullie come by it: ſo was he by his ambitious guiding, the firſt and principall meane of the vtter ruine of that Monarchie. For that hee to haue his ſonne ſet vp emperour after him, couented and granted to the princes electours of Germany, all the publicke tares and tributes of the empire. Which couenant being once made betweene the Emperour and them, they afterward held ſo faſt, that they cauſed the emperour to ſweare neuer to reuoke or call backe againe the ſame. By reaſon whereof, the tribute of the countries of Germanie, which then belonged onelie to the emperour, for the ſuſtentation of his warres; euer ſince to this day is diſperſed diuerſlie into the hands of the princes, and free cities within the ſaid monarchie. So that both the empire being diſfurniſhed and left deſolate, and the emperours weakened thereby; haue neither been able ſufficientlie ſince to defend themſelues, nor yet to reſiſt the Turke, or other forraine enemies. Whereof a great part, as yee haue heard, may bee imputed vnto the popes, &c. Hieronymus Marius.

Ex bulla Clementis.

This Clement (as mine author affirmeth) tooke vpon him so prodigallie in his popedome, that he gaue to his Cardinals of Rome, bishoprickes and benefices, which then were vacant in England: and began to giue them new titles for the same liuings he gaue them in England. Wherewith the king (as good cause he had) was offended, and vndid all the prouisions of the pope within his realme: Commanding vnder paine of imprisonment and life, no man to be so hardie, as to induce and bring in any such prouisions of the pope, any more within his land. And vnder the same punishment charged the two Cardinals to auoid the realme: An. 1343. In the same yeere all the tenthes as well of the templaries as of other spirituall men, were giuen and paid to the king through the whole realm: An. 1343. And thus much concerning good Ludouicke emperor and martyr, and pope Clement the firth his enemy. Wherin, because wee haue a little exceeded the course of yeeres, whereat we left, let vs returne somewhat backe againe, and take such things in order as belong to the Church of England and Scotland, setting forth the raigne of king Edward the third, and the doings of the Church, which in his time haue happened, as the grace of Christ our Lord will assist and able vs thereunto.

Oriall colledge and S. Mary hall in Oxford builded by king Edward 2.

This foresaid king Edward the second, in his time builded two houses in Oxford for good letters: to wit, Oriall colledge and S. Marie hall.

A stone of the commotion betweene the towne and Abbey of Bury.

Here I omit also by the way, the furious outrage and conflict which happened in the time of this king, a little before his death, anno. 1326. betweene the townesmen and the abbie of Burie, wherein the townesmen gathering themselues together in a great multitude (for what cause or old grudge betweene them, the register doth not declare) inuaded and sackt the monasterie. And after they had imprisoned the monks, they rifled the goods and treasure of the whole house, spoiling and carrying away their plate, monie, copes, vestiments, censers, crosses, chalices, basens, iewels, cups, masers, bookes, with other ornaments and implements of the house, to the value vnestimable. In the which conflict, certaine also on both sides were slaine. Such was the madnesse then of that people, that when they had gathered vnto them a great concourse of seruants and light persons of that countrie to the number of 20. thousand, to whom they promised libertie and freedome: by vertue of such writs which they had out of that house; first they got into their hands all their euidences, copies and instruments, that they could find: then they tooke off the lead, that done, setting fire to the Abbie gates, they burnt vp neere the whole house. After that they proceeded further to the farmes and granges belonging to the said Abbie, whereof they wasted, spoiled and burnt to the number of 22. manor places in one weeke: transporting away the corne, horses, cattell, and other moueables belonging to the same, the price whereof is registred to come to 922. li. 5. s. 11. d. besides the valuation of other riches and treasure within the Abbey, which cannot bee esteemed.

Ex Latino quodam Registro.

The Abbat all this space was at London in the parliament, by whose procurement at length such rescue was sent downe, that 24. of the chiefe of the towne (submitting themselues) were committed to ward: 30. carts full of the townesmen were carried to Norwich, of whom 19. were there hanged, diuers were put to comun prison. The whole townelship was condemned in seuen score thousand pound, to bee paid for damages of the house. Iohn Berton aldermen, Wil. Yerling, with 32. priests, 13. women, and 138. other of the said towne were outlawed. Of whom diuers, after grudging at the abbat for breaking promise with them at London, did confederate themselues together, and priuilie in the night comming to the manor of Chenington, where the Abbat did lie; brast open the gates, who then entring in, first bound all his familie, and after they had robbed him of all his plate, iewels and monie, they tooke the abbat and shaued him, and secretly with them conueied him away to London, where they remouing him from street to street vnknowne, from thence had him ouer Thames into Kent, at length ouer the sea they ferried ouer to Dist in Brabant: where they a sufficient time kept him in much penurie, miserie and thraldome, till at length the matter being searched out, they were all excommunicate, first by the archbishop of Canturburie, then by the pope. And at last being known where he was by his friends, was deliuered and rescued out of the theeues hands, and finally brought home with procession, and restored to his house againe. And thus was that abbey with the Abbat of the same (for what demerits I know not) thus vexed and afflicted about this time, as more largelie I haue seene in their Latine register. But thus much briefly, touching the rest I omit here, about the latter end of this Edward the 2. ceaseth the history of Nic. Triuet, and of Flor. hist. passing euer to the raigne of the next king.

King Edward the third.

Concerning the acts and storie of king Edward the 2. his deposing, and cruel death, wrought by the false & counterfeit letter of sir Roger Mortimer, sent in the kings name to the keepers (for the which he was after charged, drawn, & quartered,) I haue written sufficiently before, and more peraduenture then the profession of this ecclesiasticall historie will well admit. Notwithstanding for certaine respects, and causes, I thought somewhat to extend my limits herein the more, whereby both kings and such as clime to be about them may take the better example by the same, the one to haue the loue of his subiects; the other to learne to flee ambition, and not to beare themselues too brag of their fortune and state, how high soeuer it be: Considering with themselues nothing to be in this world so firme and sure, that may promise it selfe any certaine continuance, and is not in perpetuall danger of mutation vnlesse it bee fastened by God his protection.

King Edward the third.

After the suppression of this king, as is aboue expressed, Edward his sonne was crowned king of England, being about the yeere of 15. and raigned the space of 50. yeeres, who was a prince of much and great temperance. In feates of armes very expert, and no lesse fortunate and luckie in all his warres, as his father was infortunate before him. In liberalitie also and clemencie worthilie commended, briefly in all princely vertues, famous and excellent. Concerning the memorable acts of which prince, done both in warres and peace, as how he subdued the Scots, had great victories by the sea, how he conquered France, An. 1332. won Calice, an. 1348. and translated the staple thither, tooke the French king prisoner, and how the French armes first by him were brought in, and conioyned with the English armes; also how the order of the Garter first by the said king was inuented and ordained, an. 1356. also an. 1357. How the king in his parliament at Nottingham, decreed, that all such in Flanders or other where, that had skill in making cloth, should peaceablie inhabite the land and be welcome. For three yeeres before that, it was enacted, that no woll should be transported ouer the sea. Which was to bridle the pride of the Flemmings, who then loued better the sacks of wool, then the nation of Englishmen. All these with other noble acts of this worthie prince, although in other chronicles they be fullie intreated of: yet according to that order I haue begun (saying somewhat of each kings raigne, although not pertinent to our ecclesiasticall historie) I haue here inserted the same, making hast to other matters, shortlie and compendiouslie abridging them out of diuers and sundry authors together compacted, mentioned in this wise.

Anno 1327

The coronation and solemnitie of king Edward the third, and all the pomp thereof was no sooner ended: but Robert of Bruce king of Scotland, vnderstanding the state and gouernment of the realme to bee (as it was indeed) in the queene, the young king, the earle of Kent, and sir Roger Mortimer: And that the lords and barons, as hee was informed, did scarslie well agree amongst themselues (although he grew now in age, and was troubled with the falling disease) yet thought he this a meet time for his purpose, to make inuasion: Hoping for as good successe and like victorie now, as but lately before he had at the castle of Eskriuelin. Whereupon, about the feast of Easter he sent his embassadours with heralds and letters of defiance to the young king Edward the third, the queene and the counsell; declaring that his purpose was with fire and sword to enter and inuade the realme of England, &c. The king, queene, and counsell hearing this bold defiance, commanded in all speedie preparation musters to bee made throughout all the realme: appointing to euery band captains conuenient, and at the citie of Yorke by a day assigned them, commanding euery man to be with all their necessarie furniture readie and throughly prouided. They directed their letters also with all speed to sir Iohn of Heinault, requiring him with such souldiers and men at armes as hee might conueniently prouide in Flanders, Heinault, and Brabant, to meet the king and queene vpon the Ascension day next ensuing at their citie of Yorke.

The defiance of the king of Scots.

The king and queene at Yorke, with an army of 60000 men readie to meete the king of Scots entring the realme.

The king and queene made speedie preparation for this expedition: the noble men prouided themselues of all things necessarie thereunto: the English captaines and souldiers (their bands throughly furnished) were readie at their appointed time and place: sir Iohn of Heinault, lord Beamount mustering his men as fast, was readie to take shipping: where at Wlysant (in English Bothoms there lying for him readie) hee went aboord, and with a merrie wind landed at Douer, trauelling from thence by small iournies dailie, till he came within three daies after the feast of Pentecost to the citie of Yorke: where the king and queene with a great power of 60000. men (within and about the citie of Yorke) expected his comming: Before whom, in curteous wise he presented himselfe, and mustred his troope, wherein he had to the number of 500. good men at armes well appointed and mounted. His comming and furniture was well liked both of the king king and quéene, and was by the Harbinger, appointed to be lodged with his houshold retinue in the abbie of white monks. To be briefe, such grudge and variance fell betweene some of the kings souldiers and his, within the suburbes of the towne being together lodged; that from the little to the more, whilest the king and quéene with diuers other of the nobles, (strangers and others) were at dinner; the said fray so greatlie increased, that the whole armie so many as were in the towne then lodged, stood to their fence; so that there were slaine of the English archers in short space by the strangers to the number of 300. men. Whereupon grew (after the fray was with much difficultie both of the king and quéene ended) such heartburning betweene the parties; as that the number of 6000. conspired together against them: thinking to haue burnt them in their lodgings, had they not been by the great grace of God and discreet handling, otherwise preuented and let. Whereupon the Heynolders were faine to take and keepe the field, vsing as diligent watch and ward, as though they had been among their hostile enemies. After this, the king set forward his armie toward Durham, and encamped himselfe neere about the same: who also sent the lord Mowbrey and the lord Mounbry to Carlil with a sufficient companie to keepe that entrance: and also the lord marshall of England to keepe the towne of Newcastle with a sufficient companie to defend the same, and the countrie adioyning. For well knew the king, that by one of these two entries, the Scots must passe into England, standing both of them vpon the riuer of Tine, 24. miles distant.

The great fray in Yorke.

Carlile and new Castle then the keies of England. Northward kept with garisons.

But the Scots priuilie with their armie passed the riuer betwixt the two townes into England, few vnderstanding thereof, till that the great fires which the Scots had kindled and made in England bewraied them: who came burning and destroying the countrie all about as farre as Stanop parke. This thing being declared to the king, hée commandeth his host with all spéed to march towards them, which so long trauelled that they came in sight ech of other. The king also commanded the passages of the riuer to be so straitly and narrowly garded, that by no meanes the Scots could retire and haue escaped backe againe into Scotland, without battell giuen them of the king. But the Scots vnderstanding the great power the king was of, kept alwaies the aduantage of the hils, retiring in the nights from one to another: that without great ods and aduantage in the one side and hazard to the other, the king could not set vpon them.

The Scots priuilie passe ouer the riuer of Tine, burning and spoiling the countrie all about.

The kings armie and the Scots are so neere, that ech feeth other.

Thus in the day time the Scots keeping the aduantage of the hilles, and in the night times retiring to the aduantage of such other like, came neere against that riuer where they first passed ouer, where they made a shew to offer battell to the king vpon the morrow. Whereupon the king being busied in putting his men and battels in a readinesse to fight the next morning, being almost forewearied in pursuing the Scots from place to place: the Scots in the meane season gat ouer the riuer and escaped the danger of the king. Which thing as it could not bee done, without great treason of some neere about the king, so sir Roger Mortimer was grieuously suspected thereof, and after was laid vnto his charge. But to be short, by this meanes the Scots escaped the riuer, after whom it should haue pauailed the king very little to haue made pursute, as the wilie Scots knew full well. For the ioy whereof, the lord William Douglas one of the Scots Generals, with 200. horses gaue alarum in the kings campe: and came so neere, that he cut certaine of the lines of the kings tent in sunder with his sword, and retired to his companie without great losse of any of his men. Then on the morrow the king perceiuing the Scots to be gone, came to the place where ouer night they lodged, where were found 500. great oxen and kine readie killed: fiue hundred Cauldrons made of beasts skinnes full of flesh, ouer the fire séething: a thousand spits full of flesh ready to bee rosted, and more then 10000. shooes of raw leather (the haire still vpon the same) which the Scots had left behind them: and fiue poore English prisoners tied to trées and their legs broken. All which the king séeing returned with his army (and left any further pursuing the Scots) to Durham: where hee dismissed his armie, and came againe to London, sending with sir John of Heinault two hundred men at armes for their better safegard against the English archers (with whom at Yorke, as you haue heard, they fraied) till they had taken shipping, and so returned home.

The king returneth to London.

The king then being at London, confirmed the liberties of the Citizens, and ordained that the Maior should sit in all places as chiefe Iustice within the liberties of the same. And that what alderman soeuer had been Maior before, should be a Iustice of peace within his owne ward.

Then the king, the quéene, and the counsell sent ouer to the Earle of Heynault certaine embassadours, touching the solemnization of the matriage betweene the king and the ladie Philip his daughter: who in such sort sped their message, that she was some after conueied ouer to England very honourable, and at Douer arriued. And from thence came to London (some chronicles affirme to Yorke) where vpon the day of the conuersion of S. Paul, the yéere aboue specified, the marriage and coronation of the quéene was with much triumph during the space of three weekes solemnized.

The marriage of king Edward solemnized.

After which coronation and marriage, the king let sommon his parliament to be kept at Northhampton: whereat by the meanes of sir Roger Mortimer and the old quéene, a peace was purchased for the Scots (who had for that purpose sent their embassadours) for foure yéeres to indure. Also the king (then being within age) granted to release the Scots of all their homage and fealtie which vnto the realme of England by their charter ensealed they were bound: as also their indenture, which was called the Ragman Role, wherein was specified the foresaid homage and fealtie to the king and crowne of England, by the said king of Scots, nobles, and prelates to be made: hauing all their seales annexed to the same. Also there was then deliuered vnto them, the blacke crosse of Scotland, which king Edward before for a rich Jewell and relique had conquered and brought from Scone Abbey: with all such rights and titles as any the barons else had enioyed in the said realme of Scotland, with many other things more, to the great preiudice both of the realme and discontentation of all the nobles and barons for the most part, more then the old quéene, sir Roger Mortimer, and the bishop of Elie. Who in such sort ruled the rost, that all the rest of the nobles and barons, cast with themselues how best they might redresse and remedie the great inconueniences, that vnto the realme by meanes of them grew and happened. Whereupon the king and quéene and sir Roger Mortimer, caused another parliament to be called at Salisbury, where the said sir Roger Mortimer was made earle of March, against all the barons wils, to preuent and disappoint the foresaid purpose of them; but the Earle Henrie of Lancaster with others, would not bee at the same: wherefore it was laid vnto their charges, that they went about to conspire the kings death.

And further, for that the king was as well vnder the gouernment of the earle of Kent his vncle, as the quéene his mother, and the earle of March: and for that they could not doe in all things as they liked for the said earle the kings vncle, who loued the king and the realme: enuie began to rise betweene the earle Mortimer and him, and by Isabell the quéenes practise, he found the meanes to perswade the king: that the earle of Kent (to inioy the crowne, as next heire vnto the king) went about to poison him. Whereunto the king giuing light credit, caused his said vncle to bee apprehended: and without answer making to his accusation and accusers, to be beheaded at Winchester, the third of October, and third yéere of his raigne. But the iust iudgement of God not permitting such odious crimes in him to be vnpunished nor vndetected, so in fine fell forth, that Isabell the old queene the kings mother, was found and vnderstood to be with child by the said Mortimer. Complaint hereof was made to the king, as also of the killing of king Edward his father, and of the conspiracy of him against the earle of Kent the kings vncle before put to death: Whereupon, diuers other articles laid against him and manifestly read in the court, he was attraigned and indited, and by verdit found guiltie: hauing his iudgement as in cases of high treason, and suffered death accordinglie at London: where, vpon London bridge next vnto Spensers, his head obtained a place. The quéene his mother also (by good aduise of his counsell) was restrained of her libertie, and within a certaine castle not permitted once to come abroad: Vnto whom the king her sonne, once or twice a yéere would resort, and visit.

After this, the king prepared another armie into Scotland in the yéere prefixed. But first hée summoned king Dauid of Scotland, who had (in the last truce, foure yéeres to continue as you heard, his father then liuing) married the ladie Jane, sister to the king (termed Jane make peace) to do his homage to the king; but that he refused. Whereupon, not forgetting therewithall the scoffing rymes, which daily from that time of truce the Scots had in their mouthes; he did so much, that with an armie well furnished, hee entred Scotland by the riuer of Twede, for the Scots had then the possession of the towne of Barwicke: the Scotish gigges and rymes were these: Long beards heartlesse, Painted hoods witlesse, Gay coats graceslesse, Makes England thriftlesse. To be short, the king wasted the land, burnt, destroyed, and toke townes and castles with small resistance or none: and the space of fiue moneths together did in that land what him liked without any battell offered to him. For the king of Scots was but a child and not aboue the age of 15. yéeres, and wanted good captains that should haue defended the realme: insomuch that they were all faine, sauing those that kept in holds for their defence, to take the forrest of Godworth, and there kept to themselues so long as the king remained in Scotland. Who at length when he had sufficiently wasted, and spoiled, and burnt the same, returned toward Barwicke, about the which he bent his siege, dowing not to remoue the same, till he had gotten the towne.

assaults made, were contented vpon certaine conditions to haue deliuered vp the towne: But that the king refused, vnlesse that all conditions set apart, they would with bagge and baggage depart. Wherupon they condescended to the king, that if by a certaine time they were not by the king of Scots rescued, they would render vp the towne, and with bagge and baggage depart: and so the time expired, frustrate of all hope and rescue, at the day appointed they did. The king then entred the towne and tarried there the space of twelue daies: who after hee had appointed sir Edward Baillew captaine ouer the towne, and leauing also behind him other knights, squires, and souldiers, as well to keepe the same as other holds the king had conquered in Scotland and frontiers thereof; hee returned with his people towards London, permitting euery man to depart and goe what way them liked.

The king entreth the towne of Barwicke and appointeth the captaine therof.

Then sir Robert de Artois, a noble man of France, and which descended of the bloud royall, being in England with the king, ceased not oftentimes to aduertise the king, and put him in memorie of his good and right title to the inheritance of the crowne of France. This sir Robert for a certaine displeasure that Philip the French king tooke against him for a certaine plea which by him was moued before the king; was fain for the safegard of his life to flee the realme of France, and so come to the kings court. King Edward was not vnwilling at all to heare thereof, but tooke delight oftentimes to reason and debate that matter with him concerning his right, title, and inheritance to the crowne of France. But yet notwithstanding, hee thought it not good to make any attempt thereunto without aduised and circumspect counsell, for that it contained matter of no small, but most difficult importance: neither yet hee tooke it to deserue the fame either of wisdome or prowesse to let so good a title die, or so fit opportunitie to passe. Wherefore hee calling together certaine of his counsell, vsed their deliberate aduices touching the seriousnesse of this matter. In fine, it was by them thought good, that the king should send certaine embassadours ouer to the earle of Heinault, whose daughter hee had married, as well to heare his aduice and counsell herein: as also of what friends and aid, by him and his meanes, in this so great an expedition to bee begun in the empire, to him might be procured. The king hereunto condescendeth, and appointeth for this embassage the bishop of Lincolne with two other Barenets, and two doctors: who in such speedie wise made their voyage, that in short space they returned againe to the king with this answer: That not onely the earle his counsell and aduice, should be herein prest to the king of England their master, but also the whole countrie of Heinault. And further, for that to such an expedition as appertained, hee said, the prouince of Heinault was but a small matter to make account of; hee would procure for the king greater aid and friendship in the empire, as the duke of Brabant his cosin germane, and a puissant prince, the duke of Guerles, the archbishop of Coloyne, the Marques of Juliers, &c. which are all good men of warre, and able to make ten thousand fighting men, saith he. Which answer well liked the king, and made him ioyous thereof. But this counsell of the king as secret as it was, came to Philip the French kings eares: whereupon hee stated the voiage of the Croisie which then hee had in hand, sending forth countermands to stay the same, till hee knew farther the purpose of the king of England.

Rir Robert de Artois a noble man of France inciteth the king to prosecute his title in France.

The king deliberateth with his counsell concerning the title of France.

Embassadours are sent to the Earle of Heinault concerning the title.

The Embassadors returne with answere from the earle that pleaseth the king.

King Philip of France heareth of the kings purpose, and stayeth his voiage of the Croisie.

The king hereupon himself taketh shipping accompanied as to a king appertained: and when hee had consulted with all the foresaid lords of the empire in this matter and vnderstood their fidelitie; hee made his repaire to the emperour, at whose hands he was well intertained and honorablie receiued, whom the emperor appointed to be his lieutenant generall, hauing thereby more authoritie both to will and command such as for this his expedition hee trusted vnto, and had made conuention with. This hearing Philip, prepared his armie and rigged his naule, that so soone as the king should enter into the dominion of France, they also might enter into England, requiting like for like.

King Edward assigned lieutenant generall of the empire.

The king of England, after the feast of S. John Baptist, according to his purpose, prepared all things readie to such an expedition, conducting his armie and gathering a greater strength in the empire, as before to him was promised, vsing the emperours authoritie therein, as his lieutenant generall, howbeit at the charge altogether of the king of England. The French king as soone as king Edward had landed his armie at Mackline in Flanders, and hearing of the defiance, which the king and other noble men of the empire had sent vnto him; sent certaine ships lying readie thereunto, and waiting for such opportunity vpon ꝑ coast of England, did so much, that vpon a sunday, whilest the townes men were at the church little looking for any such matter, entred the hauen of Southhampton, tooke the towne and spoiled the same, defloured maidens, enforced wiues, burnt, kild, tooke captiues, and carried away rich spoiles and great booties to their ships, and so againe departed into France. Further, as the king of England had allied himselfe with the noble men of the empire, and had the friendly fauour of the emperour also thereunto: so the French king made the like league and alliance with Dauid the king of Scots, whom the king had so hardlie dealt withall in Scotland (as partly before you heard) and kept the most part of Scotland vnder his subiection: Binding the said Dauid as well by writing as oth and pledge, that without his consent hee should make no peace nor conclude any truce with the king of England. Who againe assured him of aid, and rescue, and helpe, and to recouer his kingdome and dominion to his vse: and forthwith sent certaine garisons and bands into Scotland to keepe play with the Englishmen, and there to fortifie diuers places till further opportunitie serued. He also fortified with men, mony, victuall, and munition, the towne of Cambrey: which hee suspected would be besieged, lying so neere vpon the empire as indeed it came to passe. For, king Edward departing from Macheline, set forward his host towards Heinault, and by the way assembled such power, as in the empire hee looked for, marching forward still till that they came to Cambrey, and it besieged with 40000. men: while that with another companie, the Flemings, Brabanters, and Hollanders, went to S. Quintin. But in effect, neither there, nor at Cambrey nor elsewhere, any thing notorious was atchieued. But the summer being well spent and little preuailing in the siege of Cambrey, being of situation strong and well defenced therewithall with men and munition; brake vp the siege, and marched further into the heart of France towards Mutterell. Which thing the French king hauing vnderstanding of, prepared himselfe to giue battell to the king of England, who with another great armie came to Vromfolle, where daies were appointed to meete in battell: but in the end, nothing was done nor attempted betweene the princes. And the king of England (without any battell either giuing or taking) returned with his army from thence to Gaunt. Concerning the cause of the sudden remouing of the king out of France, seemeth most specially to rise of the pope: which at the same time sent downe his legats, for the order of a peace to be taken betweene the kings. At Gaunt were gathered by the kings appointment all the nobles as well of England, as of the empire in counsell together what was best to be done. Where plaine answere was made to the king of England, that vnlesse hee would take vpon him the claime and title of France, it as his lawfull inheritance and as king thereof prosecute his warres; it might not bee lawfull for them any further, to aide the king of England, or to fight with him against the French king: for that the pope had bound them in two millions of Florences of gold, and vnder paine of excommunication, that they should not fight against the lawfull king of France. Whereupon, the king thought good therefore presently to make open challenge to the realme and crowne of France: and further, to quarter and intermingle the armes of France, with the armes of England in one Scutchen. Whereupon eftsones king Edward made answere vnto the pope againe, directing vnto him his letters, wherein hee declareth at large his right and title vnto the crowne of France, purging thereby himselfe and his cause vnto the bishop. The copie and tenour of which letter, because it is too long to expresse, it is to be found in the storie of Thom. Walsingham remaining in the librarie of I. Stephenson citizen of London, who so hath list or leisure to peruse the same. Besides this letter to the pope he directed another to the peeres and prelats of France (he remaining yet at Gaunt) in tenour as followeth.

The letter of king Edward to the nobles and commons of France.

King Edward to the nobles and commons of France.

EDward by the grace of God king of France and of England, lord of Ireland. Vnto all prelats and the ecclesiastical persons, to the peeres, dukes, earles, barons, and to the commons of France, greeting. The high lord and king aboue, to whom although his will be in his owne power, yet would that power should be subiect vnto law: commanding euery thing to be giuen vnto him which is his, declaring thereby that iustice and iudgemẽt ought to be the preparation of the kings seat. Wherfore seeing the kingdome of France through the prouidence of God by the death of Charles last king of France of famous memorie, brother germane to our ladie mother, is fallen vnto vs by plaine and manifest law: And forsomuch that lord Philip de Valois, being the sonne of the vncle of the foresaid king, and so being farre from the crowne by a farther degree of consanguinitie; through force and vsurpation hath intruded himselfe in the foresaid kingdome (whilest wee were yet in our minoritie) and so contrarie both to God and to iustice doth detaine and occupie the same: And lest wee should seeme to neglect our owne right and the gift giuen vs of God, or not to submit our will to Gods ordinance: We haue thought good to acknowledge the title of France, and by supportation of the almightie king haue taken vpon vs the defence and regiment of the said kingdome: Firmely purposing with our selues (as euery good man ought to doe) graciously to minister iustice to euery one, according to the rites and laudable custome of the foresaid kingdome. Also to renew the good lawes and customes which haue been in the time of Ludouicke our progenitour, adding to moreouer, that which shall seeme expedient according according to the condition and qualitie of the time. As by any change of coine or any other inordinate exactions, wee intend not to seeke our profits by your detriments: when as (the Almightie be praised therefore) we abound and haue enough. And as concerning the affaires of the realme, our purpose is not to proceed rashly or by our owne will, but by the discreet aduice and counsell of the peeres, prelats, nobles, and other our faithfull subiects of the kingdome, so farre foorth as shall make for the honour of God, the defence and aduancement of the church (which in all fulnesse of deuotion wee doe reuerence) and to the profit both publike and priuate of all the subiects thereof, with full execution of iustice by the grace of God to bee executed vpon all and singuler persons, being earnestlie carefull for the honour, profit, and tranquillitie of you all. For as the Lord knoweth, nothing shall be more gratefull to vs, then that by our carefull solicitude, peace may bee engendred, specially betwixt vs and vniuersallie among all christian men: so that by our concord, the force and strength of all Christian princes may be ioyned together for the recouerie of the holy land: which our Sauiour and redeemer hath dedicated with his owne proper bloud, whereunto we will indeuor our selues through the grace of the holy Ghost. And for asmuch as wee haue offered to the foresaid lord Philip diuers friendly and reasonable conditions of peace, whereunto hee would neither condescend, neither agree to any conformation; yea rather mooueth against vs vniust warre, to the vttersubuersion of our state: we are inforced of necessitie to the vttermost of our power (for the defence both of vs, and recouery of our right) to defend our selues by force of battell: not seeking any slaughter of good and humble subiects, but desiring their safegard and profit.

Note the grossenes of this time when the bloud of Christ was thought but onlie dedicated to the holy land.

For the which cause, all and singuler such subiects of the kingdome of France, which shall submit themselues to vs as the true king of France, within the feast of Easter next ensuing: professing vnto vs their fealtie, and doing to vs as to the king of France, by dutie appertaineth, so as our beloued subiects of Flanders haue done alreadie, or be readie to offer themselues so to doe: all such we willingly admit and receiue to our peace and grace vnder our protection to bee defended, them to maintaine as is conuenient from all molestation and vnquietnesse whatsoeuer, in person or goods hereafter to bee inforced either by vs or by our officers, vpon whatsoeuer occasion of rebellion afore passed. And forasmuch as the premises cannot easily bee intimated to all and singuler persons: wee haue prouided the same to bee fixed vpon church doores and other publike places, whereby the manifest notice thereof may come to all men, to the comfort of you that be to vs deuout, and to the true information of them, which through sinister surmises of our enemies are otherwise informed of vs. Dated at Gaunt the 8. day of Februarie, the yeere of our kingdome of France the first, of England the 14.

This done, for that the winter then drew on, neither was there any hope as the time serued, of farther doing good: the king thought best for a season to returne againe to England with his company, giuing ouer the warres vntill the next spring; and so did, taking shipping, and so arriued at Douer. When he came to London, it was declared vnto him, of the great spoile the Frenchmen had made at Southhampton: who answered againe, that within one yeere, hee doubted not the same to be well paid for and recompenced. And according to the same purpose of his, he lingred no time, but calling a parliament at Westminster, with much grudge and euill will of his subiects, was for the maintenance of his warres granted to him a great subsidie, which was the 5. of euery mans goods, and also the customes of his wools 2. yeeres before hand, and the 9. sheafe of euery mans corne. At the spring the king againe prepared his armie and rigged his nauie purposing to land in Flanders. But the archbi. of Cant. then lord Chancellor, hauing vnderstanding of the French power vpon the sea lying for the king, gaue him aduertisement thereof, willing him more stronglie to go, or else not to venture. But the king not crediting the archbishop, and being angrie with him therefore, said that hee would goe forward: whereupon the bishop resigned the chancellorship, and remoued himselfe from his councell: then the king consulting hereupon farther with the lord Morley his Admirall, and others (hearing also the same of them) furnished himselfe with stronger power, and committed him to his ship: and did so much, that a few daies before midsummer, he was vpon the sea with a great fleet. Before the towne of Sluse, the French king to stop his passage, had laid readie a great nauie, well neere to the number of 200. saile: and had made the Christopher of England (which before the Frenchmen took at Southhampton) their Admirall: betwixt which two nauies was a long and terrible fight. But in the end, the victorie by Gods grace fell to the king of England, in which fight he himselfe was personallie. So that of the number of thirtie thousand Frenchmen, few or none were left and escaped aliue, and two hundred saile of ships taken: in one of the which, were found 400. dead bodies.

Southhampton burnt and spoiled by the Frenchmen.

Battell vpon the sea betweene king Edward and Frenchmen.

The Frenchmen beaten vpon the sea.

After this great slaughter of the Frenchmen (of whom manie for feare of the sword lept into the sea) when no man durst bring tidings thereof to the French king: they which were neere about the king, did suborne his foole, to insinuate the vnderstanding thereof by subtiltie of couert words, which was thus: As the foresaid foole being in the kings presence, and was talking of many things; among other talke, hee suddenly brast out (being prompt by others) into a vehement railing of the Englishmen, calling them cowards and dastards, with many such opprobrious words tending to that effect. The king not knowing whereunto the words of the foole did appertain; asked the foole, why he called the Englishmen such weaklings and cowards, &c. Why, saith the foole? Because the fearefull and cowardlie Englishmen had not the hearts to leape into the sea so lustilie, as our Normans, and gentlemen of France had. Whereby the French king began to vnderstand the victorie of his part to bee lost, and the English men to bee victorers.

The words of the foole to the French king.

This victorie atchieued, the fame thereof spreading abroad in England, first was not beleeued till letters thereof came from the king to prince Edward his son, being then at Walsham, directed to the bishops and prelats of the realme: the effect of which letters here followeth vnder written.

The letters of king Edward to the bishops of England.

THe bountifull benignitie of Gods great clemencie powred vpon vs of late, for your true certification, and reioycing wee thought good to intimat vnto you. It is not vnknown (we suppose) to you, and to other our faithfull subiects, which also haue been partakers with vs of the same, with what stormes of boysterous warres of late we haue been tossed and shaken, as in the great Ocean. But although the rising surges of the sea be maruellous, yet more maruellous is the Lord aboue: who turning the tempest into a calme, in so great dangers, so mercifully hath respected vs. For whereas we of late did ordaine our passage vpon vrgent causes, into Flanders: the lord Philip de Valoys our bitter enemie vnderstanding therof, laid against vs a mightie nauie of ships, intending thereby either to take vs, or at least to stop our voyage. Which voyage if it had been staid, it had been the cutting off of all the great enterprises by vs intended and taken in hand, and moreouer wee our selues brought to a great confusion. But the God of mercies seeing vs so distressed in such perils and dangers, hath graciously and beyond mans expectation sent to vs great succour and strength of fighting souldiers, and a prosperous wind after our owne desires. By the meanes and helpe whereof, wee set out of the hauen into the seas, where wee eftsoones perceiued our enemies well appointed and prepared with a maine multitude to set vpon vs, vpon midsummer day last past. Against whom notwithstanding, Christ our Lord and Sauiour hath rendred to vs the victorie, through a strong and vehement conflict. In the which conflict, a mightie number of our enemies were destroyed, and well neere all their whole Nauie was taken: with some losse also of our part, but nothing like in comparison to theirs. By reason whereof, we doubt not but our passage by the seas hereafter shall be more quiet and safe for our subiects, and also many other commodities shall ensue thereof, as wee haue good cause to hope well of the same. For which cause we deuoutly considering the heauenly grace so mercifullie wrought vpon vs, do render most humble thanks and praise to Christ our Lord and Sauiour. Beseeching him, that as he hath been and alwaies is readie to preuet our necessities in time of opportunitie, so he will continue his helping hand euer towards vs, and so to direct vs here temporally, that wee may raigne and ioy with him in heauen eternally. And in like sort we require your charitie that you also with vs rising vp to the praise of God alone, who hath begun so fauourablie to work with vs to our goodnesse, in your prayers and diuine seruice doe instantlie recommend vs vnto the Lord, trauelling here in these forren countries, and studying to recouer not onely our right here in France: but also to aduance the whole catholicke Church of Christ and to rule our people in iustice. And that also yee call vpon the clergie and people, euery one through his diocesse to doe the same, inuocating the name of our Sauiour, that of his mercie hee will giue to vs his humble seruant a docible heart, so to iudge and rule hereupon rightly, doing that which hee hath commanded: that at length wee may attaine to that which he hath promised, &c. Which letter was written to the bishops and prelats, an. 1340.

After this foresaid victorie vpon the sea, and newes thereof, with due thanks to our Sauiour, sent into England: the king striking into Flanders, came to Gaunt in Brabant where hee had left the queene, who ioyfully receiued him, being a little before purified or churched, as wee terme it, of her fourth sonne, whose name was John, and commonly called John of Gaunt, and was earle of Richmond, and duke of Lancaster. At Willenorth the king assembled his councell, whereat the noblemen of Flanders, Brabant and Heynalt conioyning together in most firme league the one to helpe and defend the other, with the king of England, against the French king, purposing and determining from thence to march toward Turney and it to besiege. But the French king vnderstanding their counsell, fortified and victualled the same before their comming thither. Furthermore the said French king the same time to stop the siege of king Edward, sent with king Dauid of of Scotland a great power, to that intent to make inuasion in England, thereby the sooner to cause the king to remoue his siege. In the meane time while king Edward wrote his letters to Philip de Valoys, making vnto him certaine requests, as in the same his letters here following is to bee seene: who for that he wrote not vnto him as king of France, but by the name of Philip de Valous, refused to answer him touching the same, as by their letters here placed may be seene.

The letter of the king of England, to Philip de Valois, the French king, going to the siege of Turnie.

The letter of king Edward to the French king.

PHilip de Valois, of long time we haue gently requested you by our embassadors (by al the reasonable meanes we might) to that intent you should haue rendred vnto vs our lawfull right and inheritance to the crowne of France, which from vs a long time you haue by great wrong and force detained. And for that we well perceiue you meane to perseuere in the same your purpose and iniurious detinue, without making any reasonable answere to our demand: Wee let you vnderstand, that we are entred into the countrie of Flanders, as the soueraigne lord of the same, and so passe through the countrie. And further signifie vnto you, how that by the helpe of our Sauiour Iesus Christ and our righteous cause therein, and with the power of the said countrie, our people, and allies; we purpose to recouer the right which wee haue to that inheritance you detaine from vs by your iniurious force, and therefore approch we towards you to make a short end of this our rightfull challenge, if you also will doe the like. And for that so great an host assembled which wee bring with vs on our part (supposing you also on the other part to doe the like) cannot long remaine together without great destruction both to our people and countrie, which thing euery good Christian ought to eschew: especially Princes and others which haue the gouernment of the same, auoiding by as short an end as may be, the mortalitie of Christian men, according as the quarrell is apparant betweene you and me: For the which causes heere touched, let the challenge (if you thinke meet) betweene our owne persons and bodies be discussed, that the great nobility and prowesse of each other, may of euery one be seene. And if you refuse this way, then let there (to finish this challenge) be an hundred of the best souldiours you can chuse out of your part, matched with so many of our liege subiects to try the same. And if of these two waies you refuse both the one and the other, then that you wil assigne vnto vs a certaine day before the towne of Turney, to fight with vs power against power, which may be within ten daies next ensuing after the date of these our letters: offering the said conditions vnto you aboue specified (as we would all the world to know and vnderstand) not vpon any orgoile, presumption or pride wee take therein, but for the causes before alleaged, and to the end that (the will of our Sauiour Iesus Christ betwixt vs two herein declared and shewed) rest and peace might grow amongst Christian men: the power and force of Gods enemies abated: and in fine, the limites of Christianitie enlarged and enfranchised. And therefore hereupon consider with your selfe what way you will take concerning our foresaid offers, and by the bearers of these our letters send vnto vs herein quicke and speedie answere. Giuen vnder our great seale at Chyn in the plaine of Lécre the 27. day of this present month of July.

The answer of the lord Philip de Valois vnto the letter aforesaid.

The answere of the French king to king Edward.

PHilip by the grace of God, king of France, to Edward king of England. We haue seene the letters which you haue sent vnto our court to Philip de Valois, wherein are contained certaine requests which you make to the said Philip de Valois. But for that the said letters come not as directed vnto vs, neither yet the said requests seeme to bee made vnto vs (which thing clearely by the tenour of the said letters appeareth) wee therefore write vnto you no answere touching the same. Notwithstanding, this sufficeth, that we vnderstand by the said letters of yours, as also otherwaies, that you are entred into our realme of France, to the great damage both vnto vs, our realme and people (more proceeding of will, then reason) and not regarding that which a liegeman ought to doe vnto his lord. For you are entred into our homage by you lieged vnto vs, acknowledging your selfe, as reason is, a liege man vnto the king of France: and haue promised vnto vs such obeisance as men are wont to doe vnto their liege lords (as more plainely by your letters patents appeareth, ensealed with your great seale, the which wee haue with vs:) for the which thing wee will you to vnderstand; that our purpose is (when it shall seeme good vnto vs) to driue you out of our realme, to the honour both of vs and our kingdome, and to the profit and commoditie of our people. And this thing to doe wee haue firme and assured hope in Iesus Christ, from whom we haue al our power and strength. For, by your vnreasonable demand more wilfull then reasonable, hath been hindred and staied the holy voiage to those parts of beyond the seas, where a great number of Christian men haue been slaine: the diuine seruice diminished, and the seruice of the Church lesse reuerenced. And as touching that where you say, Ye intend to haue the obeisance of the Flemmings, wee thinke and beleeue that the good people and commons of that countrie will behaue themselues in such sort toward our cosin the Countesse of Flanders their Ladie, as it be not to their reproch; and to vs their soueraigne lord, they will respect their honour and loyaltie. And that thing wherein they haue done otherwise then well hitherto, hath bin by the euill counsell of such people, as neither regard the weale publike, nor honour of their countrie, but their owne onelie gaine and commoditie. Giuen in the field neere adioyning to the priorie of S. Andrew, vnder our priuie seale, in absence of our great seale, the 30. day of Iulie, Anno 1340.

The Scots inuade England.

Mention was made a little before of Dauid king of Scots, whom the French king had supported and stirred vp against the king and realme of England: which Dauid (with the aid of the Scots and Frenchmen) did so much preuaile, that they recouered almost againe all Scotland, which before hee had lost, and was constrained to line in the forrest of Gedworth many yeeres before. Then inuaded they England, and came with their armie, wasting and burning the countrie before them, till they came as far as Durham, and then returned againe into Scotland, where they recouered all their holds againe, saiuing the towne of Barwike. Edenborough they tooke by a stratagem or subtill deuice practised by Douglas and certaine other: who apparelling themselues in poore mens habits, as victuallers with corne, and prouender, and other things, demanded the porter earlie in the morning what need they had thereof. Who nothing mistrusting opened the outward gate, where they should tarrie till the captaine rose: and perceiuing the porter to haue the keies of the inward gate, threw downe their sackes in the outward gate, that it might not bee shut againe, and slew the porter, taking from him the keies of the towne. Then they blew their horne as a warning to the bands, which priuilie they had laid not farre off: who in hastie wise comming, and finding the gates readie opened entred vpon the sudden and killed as many as them resisted, and so obtained againe the citie of Edenborough.

Edenborough recouered from the Englishmen by the Scots.

The Scots thus being busie in England, the French king in the meane season gathered together a puissant power, purposing to remoue the siege from Turney: and among other, sent for the king of Scots, who came to him with great force, besides diuers other noble men of France: insomuch that the French king had a great armie, and thought himselfe able enough to raise the siege, and thither bent his host. But the French king for al this his forelaid huge power and force, durst not yet so neere approch the king, as either to giue him battel, or else remoue his siege: but kept himselfe with his armie aloofe, in a sure place for his better defence. And notwithstanding the king of England wasted, burnt, spoiled and destroyed the countrie, twentie miles in manner compasse about Tourney, and tooke diuers and sundrie strong townes and holds, as Dotois, Arses, Greney, Archies, Odint, S. Amand, and the towne of Lille, where he slew aboue three hundred men of armes, and about S. Omers, he slew and kild of noble men, the lord of Waskine, of Wauriselou, of Velie, of Chastillion, of Pellie, of Fenis, of Hamelar, of Mountfaucon, and other barons, to the number of fourteene, and also slew and killed aboue 130. knights, being all men of great possessions and prowesse, and tooke other small cities and townes to the number of three hundred: yet for all this, Philip de Valois the French king durst neither rescue his townes, nor relieue his owne men: but of his great armie he lost (which is to be maruelled at, being in the midst of his owne countrie) by famine and other inconueniences, and for want of water, more then twentie thousand men without any battell by him giuen. Whereupon at the treatie of the said Philip by his embassadors to the king sent, and by the mediation of the ladie Jane, sister to the said Philip, and mother to the earle of Henault, whose daughter king Edward, as you heard, had maried: a truce containing the number of fifteene articles for one yeere was concluded, the king of England being very vnwilling and loath thereunto. Yet notwithstanding, partlie by the instance of the foresaid ladie, but speciallie for that the king was greatly disappointed, through the negligence of his officers in England, which sent him not ouer such monie as hee needed for the continuance of his warres and paiment of his souldiers wages (the articles being somewhat reasonable) hee agreeth to the truce thereof: the conditions of which truce there concluded, here follow vnder written.

1 First, that during the said truce, no tales or mistrust of either part shall bee a detriment or cause of breach of the same.

2 Item, that during the said respite or truce, either of the princes, their helpers, coadiutors and allies whatsoeuer, shall remaine and bee in the quiet possession of all such possessions, holds, territories and lands, as at this present day, they keepe and enioy within the realme and Dominion of France, in what manner soeuer they haue atchieued the same, during the said truce.

3 Item, that the said princes, their aiders, coadiutors, and allies allies whatsoeuer; shall passe safely from one countrie to an other, and all merchants with their merchandise, as well by sea as by land, as accustomable they haue been wont: except such banished men as haue been banished out of the said realmes, or any of them for other causes, then the warres betweene the said princes.

4 Item, that the said two princes shall not procure either by themselues or any other, any practise or other molestation to be made the one to the other, by the bishop of Rome or any other belonging to the holy church whatsoeuer: either for the warres begun, or any other cause, nor for the seruice of any of their allies, coadiutors, and aiders, or any of them. 7 Item, if by any the said princes, their allies, people or coadiutours, any siege beee laid in Gascoyne, or the Duchy of Guyen or any other illes of the sea Gierneseye or Gersey, or any other: that the same sieges be raised so soone as they shall heare of this truce.

10 Item, that all such prisoners as haue been taken during these wars, shall be released out of prison and sent home vpon their faith and oth to returne, if they bee not ransomed during the said truce. And if any shall refuse so to doe, that then the Lord vnder whom hee is, shall constraine him to returne againe to prison.

11 Item, that all the bands whatsoeuer they be, which be made before this said truce in the time of war (whether they be of goods spirituall or temporall) be released without restitution, during the said truce.

12 Also, that these conditions of truce immediatly may take effect betweene the English and Scots, their lords, aiders, and allies: and the same to endure vntill the natiuitie of saint John Baptist. And that certaine persons bee appointed by a certaine day to be at the marshes of England and Scotland to confirme the said truce, vnder such conditions as haue been accustomed in those parts. And if the said Scots refuse so to doe, that then they to haue no aid out of France, during the said truce.

13 Item, that this said truce bee proclaimed in England, and in Scotland, within 26 daies after the date thereof.

14 Item, it is accorded that within this truce be contained Espaynels, Chatellon, Geneuous, the bishop and the towne of Cambrey, and castles of the same, &c.

In witnesse whereof, we John by the grace of God king of Bohemia, and earle of Luxemburge, Adolph bishop of Liege, Raoule duke of Lozeine, Aymes earle of Sauoy, and John earle of Darminacke on the one partie: And B. duke of Brabant, C. duke of Gelre, D. marques of Juliers, sir John of Henault, and sir Beawmount on the other partie, betwixt the high and puissant princes of France and England; haue sealed this instrument of truce and peace, and deliuered the same accordingly in the church of Esploteline, on monday the 25 day of September, the yeare of grace 1340.

R. Edward returneth from Tourney.

The king deceiued by his officers.

No bishop must be imprisoned by the popes law.

Couetous officers.

This truce thus finished, king Edward brake vp his camp, remouing his siege from Tourney, and came againe to Gant. From whence (very early in the morning) hee with a small companie tooke shipping, and by long seas came to the tower of London, very few or none hauing vnderstanding thereof. And being greatly displeased with diuers of his counsell and high officers (for that through their default hee was constrained against his will, not hauing money to maintaine his wars, to condescend vnto the forsaid truce) he commanded to be apprehended and brought vnto him to the tower, the L. John Stonhore chiefe iustice of England, and sir John Poultney with diuers others. And the next morning, hee sent for the lord R. bishop of Chichester and the lord Wake, the lord treasurer and diuers other such that were in authoritie and office, and commanded them all to be kept as prisoners in the said tower, only the said bishop excepted: whom for feare of the constitution of pope Clement, which commanded that no bishop should bee by the king imprisoned, hee set at libertie and suffered him to goe his way, and in his place substituted sir Roger Bourcher knight, lord chancellor of England.

The historie intreating of this matter, reporteth thus: that the king had at this time vnder him euill substitutes, and couetous officers: who attending more to their own gaine then to the publike honour and commoditie of the realme, left the king destitute & naked of mony. With which crime also John Stratford archbishop then of Canturburie, was vehemently noted and suspected, whether of his true deseruing, or by the setting on of other, hereafter shall more appeare. Insomuch that the king ardently incensed against him, charged him with great falshood vsed against his person, as by these his letters written and directed to the deane and chapter of Pauls against the said archbishop manifestly appeareth; the tenor of which letter here followeth vnder written.

Jhon Stratford archbishop of Cant.

Edward by the grace of God king of England and France, and lord of Ireland: To his welbeloued in Christ the deane and chapter of the church of S. Paul in London, greeting in the Lord.

The kings letter to the deane and chapter of Pauls.

IT is manifest by ancient histories, but more plainely appeareth by those which daily are practised amongst vs; that many men abusing (through pride) the fauour of princes, and honour bestowed vpon them, haue maliciously gone about to depraue the laudable endeuour of kings. And now that the words which we speake may be more manifest vnto our subiects; wee suppose that neither you nor they haue forgotten, that wee being established in our kingly throne in yonger yeares, and coueting euen then to guide this our regall charge taken vpon vs with wholesome counsels, haue called vnto vs Iohn the bishop of Winchester, now archbishop of Canturbuie, whom we supposed for his fidelitie and discretion to exceed others: whose counsell in matters appertaining vnto the health of our soule, as in matters also respecting the augmenting & conseruation of our kingdome both spiritually and temporally we vsed: he was receiued of vs into all familiaritie. We found in him also such humanitie, that he was saluted by the name of father, and of all next vnto the king had in honor. Now afterwards, when by right of succession the kingdome of France should haue descended vnto vs, and was by violent iniurie by the lord Philip of Valois holden from vs: the said archbishop by his importune instancy perswaded vs to enter league of amity with the princes of Almaine, against the said Philip, and to commit our selfe and ours vnto the hazard of warres, promising and affirming that he would bring to passe, that the reuenewes of our lands and other helpes by him deuised, should suffice abundantly for the maintenance of our said warres. Adding moreouer that our onely care should bee for the furniture of strong and able souldiers, such as were fit for the purpose, and expert in warfare: for the rest, he himselfe would effectually procure, for money conuenient to suffice our necessitie, and the charges thereof. Whereupon (intending great exploits) wee conueied our army beyond the seas, and with maruellous great charges (as behoued) we set forward: wee became also bound in great summes of money, making sure account of the aide aforesaid promised vnto vs. But alasse, vnhappie is that man that reposeth confidence in mans deceitfull staffe of brittle reed: whereunto (as saith the prophet) if a man leane, it breaketh and pearceth the hand. Thus being defrauded of our long looked for subsidie, for very necessitie sake, wee were constrained to take vpon vs importable charges of debts by grieuous vsurie. And so, our expedition being stayed, we were compelled to retire into England, desisting from our enterprises so valiantly begun. Now when we were returned into England, we laid before our archbishop our manifold calamities and misfortunes before rehearsed, and thereupon called a parliament: wherein the prelats, noble men and other the faithfull subiects of our dominions, granted vnto vs a new subsidie of corne, lambe, woll, &c: besides the tenth granted by the clergie: which subidie (if it had been faithfullie collected and obtained in due time) had greatly auailed for the expedition of our said warres, the paiment of our debts, and confusion of our enemies. Our said archbishop promised diligently to doe his endeuour, as well in collecting the same, as also in procuring other necessaries to serue to our purpose. Whereupon trusting vnto these faire promises, hauing all things in a readinesse, both men and furnished ships, we made saile toward Flanders, and by the way vpon the dangerous seas buckled with our enemies (sworn to the destruction of our English nation) of whom we triumphed and were victors, not by our merits (their multitude farre exceeding ours) but by the mercifull clemencie of him that ruleth both wind and sea. Which being done, wee passed from thence with a mightie power for the recouerie of our right, and pitched our tents neere vnto the puissant citie of Tourney: where being detained for a time in the siege thereof, wearied with continuall toile, our charges still encreasing, awaiting with silence our promised aid; day by day wee hoped from our archbishop to receiue succour in these our so great necessities. At length being frustrate of all conceiued hope, we signified vnto our said Archbishop, and other his adherents, by diuers messengers and sundrie letters, our great necessity and perils which we were in for lacke of the said subsidy granted vnto vs. We added also the vtilitie and honour, which we saw might bee atchieued if we had receiued money in time. All this notwithstanding, we receiued from them no succour at all, for that, preferring their priuat businesse and proper commodities, they cloaked their sloth, or rather (as I may call it, their fraud and malice with vaine excuſes, and painted gloſing words, like vnto the deceitfull, which (as ſaith Eſay) vſe to deride with theſe words: Manda remanda, &c.

By meanes whereof (alaſſe for ſorrow) it came to paſſe, that whiles good hope of ſubduing our enemies graciouſlie ſmiled vpon vs, we were conſtrained (penurie preuailing againſt vs) to take truce to our ſhame, the hinderance of our expedition, and no ſmall reioycing of our euill willers: and ſo we returned into Flanders all voide of money, oppreſſed with infinite debts, neither had we in our treaſuries wherewith to diſcharge our neceſſities, nor yet to pay our ſouldiers wages: inſomuch, that we were compelled to enter into the deuouring gulfe of vſurie, and to ſuſtaine on our ſhoulders great burthens of debts, heape vpon heape. This being done, our faithfull friends, companions in wars, and partakers of our tribulations came vnto vs, with whom wee conſulted diligently by what meanes wee might beſt deliuer our ſelues from this dangerous ſtorme of euill fortune. They all agreed, affirming certainely, that the protracting of our warres, and cauſe of our manifold neceſſitie happened vnto vs through the fault and negligence (or rather the malice) of the ſaid archbiſhop (vpon whoſe diſcretion the diſpoſition of the whole kingdome ſeemed to depend) and other officers whom wee had adioyned in counſell with him touching the affaires of our kingdome: vehemently ſwearing and murmuring amonſt themſelues (for that we had left ſo long vncorrected the inſolencie of the biſhops and other officers) that if remedie in theſe caſes were not had with ſpeed; they would withdraw themſelues from our allegiance, and the couenant which they had ſworne vnto: to the vtter ſubuerſion of our kingdome, our perpetuall ignominie, and the euerlaſting ſhame of our Engliſh nation (which God our moſt mercifull father forbid ſhould come to paſſe in our daies, in whom is fixed immoueablie the anchor of our hope.) Whereupon intending the due correction of our officers, wee remoued from offices (as ſeemed good to our wiſedome) diuers perſons, whom we ſuſpected in cauſes euident of euill adminiſtration of iuſtice, of ſubuerſion, and oppreſſion of our ſubiects, of corruption, of bribes, and other hainous offences. Others alſo of inferiour degree offending in the premiſſes, wee cauſed to bee deteined in ſafe cuſtodie, leſt by their libertie, iuſtice might be troden vnder foote, and the inquiſition of the truth concerning the premiſſes not to come to light. Foraſmuch therfore as the knowledge of the truth in theſe caſes might of none more certainely bee knowne, then from the ſecret breſt of our ſaid archbiſhop, for that nothing pertaining to our information ought to lie hid from him, vnto whom of ſo long a time had beene committed the adminiſtration of our whole common-weale, and ſumme of our buſineſſe: We ſent vnto him our faithfull ſubiect Nicolas de Cantilupe with ſpeciall commandements from vs (all delaies ſet apart) that he ſhould forthwith make his perſonall appearance before vs at our citie of London. But he (as one alwaies timorous as well in proſperitie as in aduerſitie, and fearing where no feare was) vntruely alleageth that ſome of our aſſiſtants had threatned him, and laid waite for his life, if at any time he departed from the church of Cant. which (God wee take to witneſſe and a pure conſcience) wee neuer meant nor any of our aſſiſtants.

Archbishop of Cant. falſe to the king.

Euill officers displaced by the king.

We ſuppoſe he touched thereby our coſin, although to all other as well of the clergie as comminaltie through his malicious miſdemeanours he was become odious.

Archbishop of Cant. odious to all the clergie.

Wherefore, intending the ſafegard of our ſubiects by letters or otherwiſe called before vs, we appointed our truſtie and welbeloued Ralfe Stafford our harbinger, to offer vnto him ſafe conduct: and moreouer to preſent vnto him our letters patents vnder our ſeale, willing and commanding him thereby againe perſonallie to come before vs, that we might bee informed what of ſo long a time he had done touching the affaires of the kingdome. Wherunto, contemning our commandement and gentle requeſt, he anſwereth, that neither he would in perſon appeare, neither yet in any matter conferre with vs, except it were in a full parliament, which for diuers reaſonable cauſes could not then be called. Thus may you ſee this archb. (whom our royall benignitie had amplified with large honours, admitted into all familiaritie, receiued into the bond of vnanimitie and friendſhip, vpon whom as on a father our whole hope did conſiſt; who, ſo long as wee accompliſhed his will in all things, pretended towards vs a face of counterfeit loue cloaked with diſſembling beneuolence, euen as though hee had been a louing father;) how cruelly againſt reaſon he hath now forſaken vs, requiting benefits with ingratitude, oppreſſing his benefactour with the arrogancie of feare: and finally (according to the vulgar prouerbe) rewarded vs as a horſe in a ſatchell, a ſnake in a mans boſome, and fire cheriſhed next the skinne, rewardeth their receiuers. When we were firſt exalted vnto the throne of our kingdome, deſcended vnto vs by right of inheritance (Gods diuine prouidence ſo working) wee thought, and alwaies thinke it, a deteſtable thing to abuſe ſo high authoritie, but rather deſire to gouerne with clemencie, lenitie, and moderation of iuſtice, that peace, of all men deſired, might firmely take place.

The archb. of Cant. denieth to come to the king.

The archb. charged with diſſembling, and ingratitude.

Neuertheleſſe, our ſaid archbiſhop hath gone about to defame our innocencie, and the fidelitie and diligence of our faithfull counſellers proſecutours of true iuſtice: openly declaring in his letters patents, and publiſhing abrode in diuers places, that he was oppreſſed by the kings power contrarie to iuſtice, the clergie and comminaltie confounded, and the church ouercharged with diuers grieuous taxes and exactions. He ſubtillie vſurped the name of a good paſtor, when indeed hee was nothing leſſe, but rather (as it ſhould ſeeme by his owne confeſſion, & the common opinion had of him) a very hireling. He cloaked his craftie ſubtilneſſe with the zeale of defending the church, although he himſelfe in verie deed was the onely cauſe by his euill counſell and craftie deuiſes, of the tribulation of the ſame. He alſo fained that not long agoe, certaine writings were brought vnto him to be ſealed, containing in effect the defence and excuſation of all ſuch ingenerall that were violaters of the liberties of the church: hoping thereby to defame the opinion had of vs and our faithfull counſellors, to ſtirre vp ſedition amongſt the people, and finally to withdraw from vs the hearts of our nobilitie. Hee gaue commandement by his letters, that theſe things ſhould bee proclaimed in all places of great reſort by diuers ſpeciall articles contrarie to his former order in his prouinciall councell. Wherefore, reſpecting the integritie of our fame, intending to preuent the malice of the ſaid archbiſhop, and alſo to decline from vs the ſnares prepared for vs and ours: we haue thought good at this preſent (ouer and beſides thoſe which before are rehearſed) amongſt ſo many which wee omit, to declare vnto you ſome of his peruerſe and wicked acts. When in our minoritie wee were conſtituted ouer our dominions, hee cauſed vs through his vnaduiſed counſell and raſh perſuaſion (thereby to winne exceſſiue fauour) to giue away ſo many waſtfull gifts, and ſo many vnlawfull alienations, that now by meanes thereof our treaſurie is cleane conſumed, the reuenewes of our exchequer without all order diminiſhed, and he corrupted with bribes innumerable. Oftentimes alſo without cauſe why, when neither neceſſitie nor vtilitie ſo required, onely through his perſuaſion, wee forgaue diuers men great ſummes of money due vnto vs, yea and the rents and reuenewes which ought to haue beene conſerued for our neceſſitie and profit, wee applied to the vſe of his friends, largely beſtowing vpon ſuch as euill deſerued it. Moreouer (accepting as well perſons as money) contrarie to our mind, and his oth of fidelitie made vnto vs; hee admitted vnto publique offices throughout our dominions, perſons vnworthie, neglecting thoſe that had well deſerued. Many other things he raſhly tooke in hand, to the detriment of our ſtate, the hurt of our dignitie royall, and no ſmall damage of our ſubiects, by abuſing his authoritie and office committed vnto him. But if hee perſiſt in his proud obſtinacie and ſtout rebellion, wee ſhall hereafter in conuenient time and place, cauſe it to be more openly knowen: willing and commanding you to publiſh and cauſe to be publiſhed, all and ſinguler the premiſſes openly and diſtinctly in places where you ſhall thinke it expedient, and to ſet forth (as ſhall ſeeme beſt to your godly wiſedomes) our good intent for the ſuppreſſing of incommodities, and furthering of the commodities of our ſubiects, that wee may worthilie commend your circumſpect care herein.

The archb. defamer of the king.

The archb. abuſeth his office.

Teſte me ipſo apud Weſtm. 16. die Februa. Anno regni noſtri Angliæ 15. Regni verò Franciæ ſecundo.

By theſe foreſaid obiections and accuſations of the king premiſed, and laid againſt the archbiſhop of Canturburie; what is to be thought of the doings of the ſaid archbiſhop, I leaue it to thy iudgement, gentle reader (as I ſaid before) to be conſected: Forſomuch as our hiſtories ſomewhat bearing with the ſaid archbiſhop, ſeeme either to bee vncertaine of the truth of the matter, or elſe couertly to diſſemble ſome part of that they knew. And eſpecially of Polydor Virgil, I marueil, who hauing ſo good occaſion to touch the matter, doth ſo ſleightly paſſe it ouer without any word of mention. In which matter if probable coniecture (beſide hiſtorie) might here be heard, it is not vnlike but that ſome old practiſe of prelats hath herein been put in vre, through ſome craftie conſpiracie betweene the pope and the archbiſhop. And the rather to bee gathered, for that as the pope was enemie vnto the king in this his challenge to the crowne of France: ſo the archbiſhop againſt his prince (as for the moſt part alwaies they haue been) was a friend, as no man needs to doubt thereof, vnto the pope. Which thing alſo more probablie may be ſuppoſed, becauſe of the comming downe of the two cardinals the ſame time, from the pope to the king of England, about the matter of further truce: whereof (Chriſt willing) more hereafter ſhall follow. Albeit, the archbiſhop (this yet notwithſtanding) ſubtilly and feately excuſeth himſelfe to the king of the foreſaid obiections, and cunningly handleth the matter in words by his letter directed to the king as followeth.

The letter of the archbiſhop of Canturburie to the king.

The letter of the archb. to the king.

REdoubted Sir, may it pleaſe your maieſtie to vnderſtand, that the moſt chiefe and ſpeciall thing that keepeth kings and princes in the fauour of God, and beſt preſerueth them in their eſtate; is ſage, wiſe, and deliberate counſell. And therfore faith saith the wise man, concerning counsell in this wise: Good men haue thereby their safetie. And it is written in the booke of kings, how Salomon, which was the wisest prince that euer was, tooke vnto him the most ancient and sage men of his realme to be his counsellours: by whose aduisement and discretion, hee alwaies kept the land of Israel in quiet, and in peace, and besides that had all other kings and princes that bordered vpon him at his will and commandement. After whose death reigned Roboham his sonne, who neglecting the good counsell of his father, and good aduice of his sage and discreet counsellours; hearkened to such counsell as lighter and yonger men persuaded him vnto, that sought rather how to please and flatter him, then the quiet state of his realme: whereby he lost all the whole land of Israel, the 12. part only excepted. In like maner haue many kings of Israel and other kingdomes beside, by rash and euill counsell come to great ruine and mischiefe. And Sir (sauing your princely patience) you may call to remembrance your owne time; for by the wicked and sinister counsell to our late soueraigne lord your father giuen (whom God forgiue) which hee tooke and followed, both against the law of his land, and grand chapter of the peeres and other his people of the land: some hee put to shamefull death, from other some he tooke their goods, and such as fled, hee put vnto their ransome, and what enemies hee purchased thereby, your grace well vnderstandeth. And after this Sir, you know, (euen in your owne time) how by following and beleeuing ouer light counsell; you your selfe lost the hearts of many of your subiects, from the which God deliuer you, if it be his will. And after that time againe vntill now, by the good aduisements of your prelats, peeres and sage counsellours of your land, your graces businesse and affaires haue beene so demained and ordered; that you haue had the hearts againe of all your subiects, as well spirituall as temporall, as much or rather more, then any of your graces predecessours, kings of England haue had. So that by meanes of the said good counsell, the good will and aid of your people, and speciall grace of God; you haue had the victorie of all your enemies, as wel in Scotland as in France, and all other places besides: that vnto this day (Gods name be blessed therefore) your grace hath beene esteemed as one of the most noble princes in all christendome. And now your grace (by the euill and peruerse counsell of some such within the realme, which are not so wise as they might bee, and such also as consider and respect rather their owne priuate commoditie, then your graces honor and safetie of your realm) beginneth to apprehend diuers clerkes, peeres, and other people of the land, and to direct processe against them, not beseeming, but contrarie to the law of the land, which to keepe and maintaine you are bound by the oth you tooke at your coronation; and contrarie to the grand charter, whereof all the realme are witnesses, and all the prelates of the same, and contrarie to the sentence confirmed by the Bul of our holy father the pope, which wee haue to shew. All which things, as they are to the great perill and danger of your soule: so are they also to the vtter debasing of your regall state and honour. And Sir, although such as bee your graces gouernours and counsellors (being a calling aboue their degree) doe giue your grace to vnderstand that their enterprises and yours doe please and content your subiects and commons: yet your grace shall know for certeine, and proue it your owne selfe to be farre otherwise, then that they beare you in hand. And that vnlesse God doe remedie the same, if you prosecute your purpose begun in this order, you will leese the hearts of all your subiects, as also your good and rightfull enterprise; and shall see such discord about the same, that you shall not be able to performe that you haue begun, but rather enforce your enemies to seeke your destruction, to lose your noble and renowmed fame, and in the end your kingdome it selfe, which God forbid. Wherefore soueraigne lord and king, I beseech you, that for the safegard of your honour and realme, and enterprise begun, that you will take vnto you the most discreet and wisest men within your realme, and worke by their aduice and counsell, as before this time you haue beene accustomed: without the aide and counsell of whom you can neither maintaine your enterprise, nor gouerne your realme. And for that some such as are about your grace falsely deuise against vs, treason and such like troubles (and therefore are of vs excommunicate, and as persons excommunicate doe so esteeme of them) as your spirituall pastour, wee also desire you so to esteeme and thinke of them, which also make like report of other that haue beene with your grace beyond the seas, that they haue naughtilie and falslie serued you, whereby you haue lost the towne of Tourney and much honour else, which you might haue won and gotten there. May it please your grace to call before you, the prelats and peeres of your realme in some conuenient place, where we and other moe, may safely come and resort, and there also to make search and inquirie, in whose hands after the beginning of your warres, the money and what things else so euer which was granted vnto you in aide of the same your warres, vntill this present day, doth remaine and is not laid out againe, as also by whose default you were so enforced to leaue the said siege of Tourney: and those which shall be found in any point faultie and guiltie therein against you, as a good iusticer, your grace will cause to be punished according to the law: and insomuch as appertaineth vnto vs therein, wee aske iudgement of our peeres (the state alwaies of holy church, of vs, and of our order reserued inuiolate) according as wee haue written vnto you herein. And for Gods sake sir, beleeue not either of vs or any other your true subiects else, more then that you shall vnderstand the veritie of; for if men should bee punished without making answere to that, which is obiected against them, there should be then no difference in iudgement betwixt the good doer and the bad.

Good counsellers necessary about a king.

And sir, may it please you well to consider, of the great enterprise you haue in hand, the great good will which you haue neede of for this cause, and of your great enemies the Scots, and the great ieopardie of your realme besides. For, if your prelats, your nobles, and all the wisemen of your realme, were of one mind and will (without any discord or diuision amongst them) to dispose and set in order those things which are needfull in so great affaires and busines: they should haue all enough to beate their heads about, for the maintenance of your great enterprise begun, the honour of you, and safegarde of your realme. And sir, may it please your grace, not to be displeased that so rudely and grosslie we declare vnto you the veritie: for why, the great loue and affection which wee beare vnto you, and alwaies haue done the same; the preseruation of your honour and safegard of your realme; as also for that wee are (although vnworthie) the primate of the whole realme of England, which thing appertaining vnto vs by our office, and being your spirituall father, doth incite vs the rather both to say and command that which may turne to the benefit of your soule and profit of your realme and kingly estate. Thus the holy spirit saue you both body and soule, and giue your grace both to heare and beleeue good counsell, and further giue you victorie ouer all your enemies. Written at Cant. the 1. day of Ianuarie. By your graces chaplen the archbishop of the same.

And thus stood the case betweene the king and the archbishop of Canturburie, who comming thus (as is said) in secret wise into England, from the siege of Turney, his armie in the meane while by ships was conueied to little Britaine. Of whom a great number, through vnseasonable and inconuenient meats and drinks, was there consumed. To whom also no lesse danger happened by the seas comming out of Britaine into England by tempest, thunder and lightening stirred vp, as is thought, by the Necromancers of the French king.

The returne of the kings armie from Toutney.

About which season, approching to the yeare of our Lord 1341. were sent from the pope two other cardinals to entreate with king Edward for three yeeres truce to be concluded more with the French king, beside the former truce taken before for one yeare, and all by the popes meanes. For here is to bee vnderstood, that as it was not for the popes purpose to haue the king of England to reigne ouer so many countries, so his priuie supportation lacked not by all meanes possible, both by the archbishops and cardinals, and also by the emperor to maintaine the state of the French king, and to stablish him in his possessions. Ex Tho. Walsing. ex chron. Albanens.

Truce taken for three yeares betweene king Edward and the French K.

In the said histories where these things bee mentioned, it is also noted, that the same yeare such plentie there was here in the realme of victuals, that a quarter of wheate was sold for ii.s. a fat ore for a noble, and as some say, a sheepe for iiij.d. And thus far endureth the historie of Ranulphus Cestrensis called Polychronicon.

The next yeare following, which was 1342. Ludouicus Bauarus the emperor, who before had shewed great courtesie to king Edward, as in his first voyage ouer, insomuch that he made him his vicar or Vicegerent generall, and offered him also aide against the French king: now (either turned by inconstancie, or seduced by the pope) writeth to him contrarie letters, wherein he reuoketh againe the Vicegerentship granted to him, and seeketh all meanes in the fauor of the French king, against king Edward: as by his letters here vnder written may better appeare.

The letter of the emperor vnto the king of England.

LVdouicus by the grace of God emperour of the Romans alwaies Augustus, &c. To Edward king of England his beloued brother, greeting and vnfained loue. Although great and vrgent busines of our owne do oppresse vs, and about the same our waightie affaires are daily incumbred, yet with the discord and variance betweene your kingly dignity and the renowmed Philip the king of France our cosin, for your sake we are not a little troubled. And the rather, the great charges which may hereafter grow both to you and to your kingdome thereby considered, both of men and money, vnlesse the same bee taken vp; doth more earnestly prouoke vs to giue our selfe to the carefull studie of your affaires. Wherefore we giue you to vnderstand, that the foresaid Philip (at our request) hath giuen vnto vs by his letters, authoritie and power to intreat and conclude a peace betweene you, touching the variance begun: which peace (all the state diligently considered both of your selfe, your kingdome and subiects) we take and beleeue to bee right expedient for you: mouing therewithal your charity, and earnestly desiring you, that to this also you will giue your consent; whereby we may bring you both to concord and vnitie, and establish betweene you a firme peace to endure, wherunto with willing mind we would applie our selfe and bestow our paineful labour in prosecuting of the same. And herein if you will condescend and agree vnto our counsell, as wee trust you will; it may please you by your letters to giue vnto vs the like authoritie as is aboue said, to entreate peace or ordering of a truce for one yeare or two at least to continue. Neither let it moue you, that betweene vs and the said Philip of France a truce is taken. For seeing that you without our consent tooke truce with him: we by the aduice of our princes which know the bonds, deeds, and couenants betwixt vs, who also thought no lesse, but that sauing your honour we might doe the same; haue also made a league with the said Philip king of France: and for certaine causes doe reuoke and call backe the Lieutenantship which we assigned vnto you by our letters. Neuertheless giuing you for a certaine to vnderstand, that in our said treaties and peace concluded, we haue so brotherly considered you, that if you will agree and condescend vnto our counsell; your cause (by our meane and helpe) shall bee brought to good passe and effect. About which things further to conferre with your brotherhood herein, we haue sent a deuout and religious man Eliarhardus, reader and brother of the Heremites of saint Augustine, and chapleine of our court: whom about the premisses, we desire with speedie expedition to bee sent vnto vs againe. Dated at Franckford the 14. day of Iune in the 24. yeare of our reigne, and 14. of our empire.

The answere of the king of England, to the emperour.

TO the high and mightie prince lord Ludouike, by the grace of God, emperour of the Romans, alwaies Augustus, Edward by the same grace king of France, and England, and lord of Ireland: salutation and prosperous successe.

We haue reuerentlie receiued your highnes letters, amongst other things containing, that the noble Philip de Valois (to the intent a peace and concord betweene vs and him might bee concluded) hath giuen vnto you by his letters full power and authoritie thereunto at your highnesse request: And that if the same might content vs to do in like sort, your highnesse would trauell to bring the concord to passe: And that it would not moue vs any whit at all, that your highnesse and the said Philip are in league together. For insomuch as wee without your assent and consent (you say) tooke truce with the said Philip, you haue also done the like with him (which thing you might well doe sauing your honour, by the counsell of all your nobles and princes:) and for certaine causes reuoke againe the Lieutenantship which you committed vnto vs. Doubtlesse, the zeale and good will you haue to make this concord and agreement, wee much commend; letting you to vnderstand, that we alwaies haue beene desirous, and still are, to haue a reasonable peace with the said Philip; which peace, as much as to vs (our honour saued) appertained, wee haue in iustice and by law prosecuted: and in very deed, it should bee to vs acceptable, and as we would wish, if by such a Mediator as your celsitude is, it might bee brought to passe. But forasmuch as wee vnderstand the same our right and title to the kingdome of France, to be manifest and cleere enough; wee purpose not to cõmit the same by any of our letters to doubtfull arbitrement. But while we well consider and reuolue with our selues, how your highnesse vpon circumspect consideration (manifestly beholding our iust and rightfull doing, and the strait dealing and obstinate purpose and iniurie of the said Philip) with vs and in our behalfe against the said Philip, your graces highnesse made a speciall league, adopting vs of your great and bountifull loue towards our person to be one of your sonnes: wherefore thus againe to alter and breake the same, we cannot sufficiently maruell. Seeing your inuincible highnes being instituted of God to the laud and commendation of good men, and reuenge of euill and wicked doers, hath made a league against vs with the said Philip de Valois our notorious and iniurious enemie. And as touching that which you say, without your assignement and consent wee tooke a truce or daies of respit with the said Philip, which wee ought not to haue done: if your grace well consider the circumstance of the matter, we haue done but as we might therein. For when wee laid our siege to Tourney, it was requisite wee followed their aduice, whose aid and societie therein we had. Besides the sudden and imminent necessitie which we there stood in, and the distance of the place betwixt your highnes and vs furthermore was such, as that by no meanes we might attaine the same, nor vse your assent therein. Yea and further, if your grace well remember your selfe, your grant vnto vs was such; that whensoeuer opportunitie thereunto should serue, wee might intreate of any peace, and grant what time we thought meet thereunto, without your consent therein: So that to conclude any finall peace with the said Philip de Valois, without either your consent or otherwise making your highnesse priuie thereunto, it might not bee lawfull for vs; which thing without your said counsell, consent and aduice, we neuer minded or purposed to do: but haue in all our doings done that which vs beseemed, so farre as by any meanes our power would stretch: hoping likewise, that your brotherlie beneuolence for a time would haue more louingly supported vs. It is thought also by some, that the reuoking backe againe, or restraint of your foresaid Lieutenantship, was prematurate or done all out of time: when as according to your promise made to vs herein by your letters imperial, you ought not so to haue done before the realme and kingdome of France (or at the least the greatest part thereof) were of vs obtained & quietly in peaceable wise enioyed. These premised therefore we desire you, according to your nobilitie duly to consider, & hereafter to do that which shall be thought both meet and conuenient, because that (God willing) wee meane to recompence and gratifie both you and yours, according to the measure of your beneuolence bestowed vpon vs. The almightie grant vnto your celsitude so much felicitie as your heart desireth. Dated at London the 18. day of Iulie in the 2. yeare of the reigne of our kingdome of France, and of England 15.

In this meane time died pope Benedict the 12. mentioned a little before: after whom succeeded in that roome pope Clement the 6. Of whom it is reported in stories, that he was very liberall and bountifull to his cardinals of Rome, enriching and heaping them with goods and possessions, not of his owne, but with the ecclesiasticall dignities and preferments of the churches of England. For so recordeth the author, that he bestowed vpon his cardinals the liuings and promotions, such as were or should be vacant in the churches of England, and went about to set vp new titles for his cardinals, heere within this realme. But the king being offended therewith, made void and fruitrat al those foresaid prouisions of the pope, charging moreouer and commanding no person whatsoeuer, to busie himselfe with any such prouisions, vnder paine of presentment and losing his life. Which law was made the next yeare following, which was Anno 1344.

Pope Clement 6.

Ex Chron. Albanens.

The king disanulleth the popes prouisions.

It followed then, that the said pope Clement, againe began to make new prouisions for two of his cardinals of benefices and churches that should be next vacant, beside bishoprickes and abbathships, to the extent of two thousand Marks. Whereupon the procurators of the said cardinals were sent downe for the same. But the king and nobilitie of the realme not suffering that, vnder paine of imprisonment caused the said procurators forthwith to depart the realme; whereupon the nobles and commons shortly after writeth a fruitfull epistle to the pope, for the liberties and maintenance of the English church. Whereunto, as saith the author, the pope and the cardinals were not able to answere. The argument and tenor of which letter out of French, we haue caused to be translated into English, as ensueth.

The popes procurators driuen out of England.

The letter of the king of England and nobles of the same, to the pope, against the reseruations and prouisions which he had in England.

TO the most holy father in God, lord Clement, by the grace of God of the holy church of Rome, and of the vniuersall church, chiefe and high bishop: his humble and deuout children, the princes, dukes, earles, barons, knights, citizens, burgeses, and all the communaltie of the realme of England, assembled at the parliament holden at Westminster the 15. day of May last past: Deuout kissings of his holy feet, with all humble reuerence and humilitie. Most holy father, the holy discretion, gouernment and equitie which appeareth to be in you and ought of dutie so to be (being so high and holy a prelate, and head of the holie church) by whom the holie vniuersall church and people of God ought to bee, as by the sun beames, enlightened, giueth vs good hope and likelihood, that the iust petitions (to the honour of Iesus Christ and holie church, and your holinesse also) by vs declared, shall bee of you graciouslie heard and considered: And that all errours and other iniquities quite taken away and remoued; in stead therof, fruitfull exploits and necessarie remedies (by the grace of the holy spirit which you in so high an estate haue receiued) may bee by you likewise graciouslie ordained & disposed. Wherefore, most holy father, all we (vpon great deliberation and common assent) come vnto your holines; shewing and declaring, that the noble kings of England our progenitors, our ancitors, and wee (according to the grace of the holie spirit to them and vs giuen, euerie one according to his deuotion) haue established, founded, & endowed within the realme of England, churches, cathedrals, colledges, abbeies, priories, and other diuers houses of religion in the same ordained: and to the prelates and gouernors of the same places, haue giuen lands, possessions, patrimonies, franchesies, aduowsons, and patronages of dignities, reuenues, offices, churches, with many and diuers other benefices vnto them giuen: whereby the seruice of God and faith of Christ might haue beene honored and had in reuerence, that the hospitals and almes houses that are made, with all the churches and edifices, might bee honestly kept and maintained, and that deuout praiers might in those places bee made for the founders, and the poore parishioners aided & comforted. And such only ought ought to haue the cure thereof, as are able to heare confessions, and in their owne naturall tongue, otherwise meet to informe and teach their parishioners. And forsomuch as (most holy father) that you cannot well come to the notice of diuers such errours and defaults, neither yet vnderstand the condition of the places being so farre off, vnlesse your holinesse bee informed and aduertised: Wee hauing the perfect intelligence and vnderstanding of the said errours and defaults of the places aboue said, within the said realme, haue thought meet to signifie the same vnto your holinesse: That diuers reseruations, prouisions and collations by your predecessours apostolike of Rome, and by you most holy father in youre time haue beene granted (and that more largely then they haue beene accustomed to be) vnto diuers persons, as wel strangers and of sundry nations, as vnto some such as are our enemies, hauing no vnderstanding at all of the tongue and conditions of them, of whom they haue the gouernment and cure. Whereby a great number of soules are in perill, a great many of their parishioners in danger, the seruice of God destroyed, the almes and deuotion of all men diminished, the hospitals perished, the churches with their appurtenances decayed, charitie withdrawne, the good and honest persons of our realme vnaduanced, the charge and gouernment of soules not regarded, the deuotion of the people restrained, many poore scholars vnpreferred, and the treasure of the realme carried out against the minds and intents of the founders. All which errours, defaults and slanders, most holy father, wee neither can nor ought to suffer nor endure. We therefore most humblie require your holinesse, that the slanders, errours and defaults, which wee haue declared vnto you, may bee through your great discretion considered: and that it may please you that such reseruations, prouisions, and collations may bee vtterly repelled, that from henceforth the same be no more amongst vs vsed. But to take such order and remedie therein, that the said benefices, edifices, rights, with their appertenants, may be to the honour of God by our owne countrimen cured, defended and gouerned. And that it may further please your holinesse, by your letters to signifie vnto vs without delay and other detract of time, what your pleasure is touching this our lawfull request and demand, and that wee may doe our endeauour with diligence herein for the remedy, correction, and amendment of those enormities aboue specified. In witnesse whereof, vnto these letters patents wee haue set our seales. Giuen in the full parliament at Westminster the 18. day of May. Anno 1343.

Decay of the church of England by the pope.

After these things thus passed ouer, the king shortly after sent ouer his Procurators, earle of Lancaster and Darbie, Huge Spencer, lord Raph Stafford, with the bishop of Exceter and diuers other, to the popes court to discusse and pleade about the right of his title, before the pope. Vnto whom the said pope Clement the 6. not long after sent downe this message: how that Ludouike duke of Bauarie the emperour, whom the pope had before deposed, had submitted himselfe to him in all things; and therefore deserued at his hands the benefit of absolution: and how the pope therefore had conferred and restored vnto him iustly and graciously the empire, which hee before vniustly did hold, &c. Which message when the king did heare, being therewith moued to anger, answered againe saying: That if he did agree & compound also with the French king, he was readie to fight with them both, &c. The kings answere to the popes message.

Within the time of this yeare, pence, halfe pence, and farthings began to bee coyned in the tower. And the next yeare following, which was An. 1344. the castle of Windsor (where the king was borne) began to bee repaired: and in the same, the house called the round table was situate, the diameter whereof from the one side to the other, contained 200. fet, to the expenses of which house weekely was allowed an hundred pound, for the maintaining of the kings chiualrie, till at length by the occasion of the French warres, it came downe to nine pounds a weeke. By the example wherof, the French king being prouoked, began also the like round table in France, for the maintaining of the knighthod. At which time the said French king moreouer gaue free liberty through his realme to fell downe trees for making of ships and maintaining of his nauie, whereby the realme of England was not a little damnified.

During the same yeare, the clergie of England granted to the king tenths for three yeares: for the which the king in recompence againe granted to them his charter containing these priuiledges: That no archbishop nor bishop should be arreigned before his iustices, siue ad sectam suam, siue partis, if the said clerke do submit and claime his clergie, professing himselfe to be a member of holy church; who so doing, shall not be bound to come to his answere before the Iustices. And if it shall bee laid vnto them to haue married two wiues, or to haue married a widow; the Iustices shall haue no power to proceed against them, to inquire for the matter: So that the cause shall be reserued to the spirituall court, &c.

2. kings. Albeit it is likely to be thought that the French king gaue many attempts to infringe the same. Whereupon Henrie earle of Lancaster, with 600. men at armes, and as many archers, was sent ouer to Gascoine, the yeare after, 1345. who there so valiantly (is said to behaue himselfe, that hee subdued 55. townships vnto the king, 23. noblemen he tooke prisoners, encountring with the Frenchmen at Allebroke. So courteouslie and liberally hee dealt with his souldiers, that it was a ioy to them and a preferment to fight vnderneath him. His maner was in winning any towne, little or nothing to reserue to himselfe, but to sparse the whole spoile to his souldiers. One example in the author (whom I follow) is touched; how the foresaid earle at the winning of the towne of Bzters, where he had granted to euery souldier, for his bootie, the house with all the implements therein, which he by victorie should obtaine: among other his souldiers to one named Reb. fell a certaine house with the implements thereof, wherein was conteined the mint and money coyned for that countrey, to the value of a great substance: which when the souldier had found, in breaking vp a house where first the grosse mettall was not yet perfectly wrought, he came to the earle declaring to him the treasure, to know what was his pleasure therein. To whom the earle answered, that the house was his, & whatsoeuer he found therein. Afterward the souldier finding a whole mint of pure siluer readie coyned, signified the same to the earle, forsomuch as he thought such treasure to bee too great for his portion: to whom the said earle againe answering, declared that hee had once giuen him the whole house, and that he had once giuen he would not call backe againe, as children vse to play. And therfore bad him enioy that which was granted to him: and if the money were thrice as much, it should bee his owne: Ex chron Albanens. Which storie whether it was true or otherwise in those daies, I haue not to affirme. But certes, if in these our couetous wretched daies now present, any author should report the like act to be practised, I would hardly beleeue it to be true.

The liberall heart and constant voice of a worthie captaine.

As the earle of Lancaster was thus occupied in Gascoine, the Scots were as busie here in England, walking and spoyling without mercie: Which were thought (and not vnlike) to be set on by the French king. And therfore was iudged both by that, and by other diuers waies to haue broken the couenants of truce betweene him and the king of England.

The Scots partly a meane of breaking truce.

Wherfore the next yeare ensuing, An. 1346. king Edward first sending his letters to the court of Rome, and therein complaining to the pope of Philip de Valois, how hee had transgressed and broken the truce betweene them made, which by euident probations he there made manifest: about the moneth of July made his voyage into Normandie in such secret wise, that no man well knew whither he intended. Where first hee entred the towne of Hogs, from thence proceeded vnto Cardone. Where, about the 27. of July, by the riuer of Cardone he had a strong battell with the Normans and other French men, which to stop his passage defended the bridge. At the which battell were taken of the lords of France, the earle of Ewe, the earle of Tankeruile. And of knights with other men of armes, to the number of one hundred, of footemen fiue hundred, and the towne and suburbs beaten downe to the hard wals. And all that could be borne away transported to the ships.

A little before mention was made how the French king began first to infringe the truce taken, and how the earle of Lancaster, vpon the same was sent vnto Gascoine. Now for the more euidence of the matter concerning the falling of the French king from the league, and other his wrongs and vntrue dealing; it shall better in the kings letter appeare: who hearing word that the lord Philip de Valois (contrarie to the forme of truce taken at Danes) had apprehended certaine of his nobles of England, and had brought them to Paris to bee imprisoned and put to death: beside other slaughters and spoilings made in Britaine, Gascoine, and other places moe. Hee therfore seeing the truce to be broken of the French kings part, and being thereto of necessitie compelled; in the yeare aboue prefixed, the 14 of the moneth of June, did publish and send abrode his letters of defiance, containing this effect.

The kings letters of defiance against the Frech king.

The kings letters of defiance against the French king.

TO all and singuler, to whom these presents shall come, publike greeting. We thinke it is not vnknowne vnto you all, that after the decease of Charles late king of France of famous memorie, brother to our redoubted lady mother Queene Isabell, Queene of England: That the crowne of France, by iust inheritance hath fallen vnto vs, as to the next heire male now liuing after the said king. Now Philip de Valois, being sonne but onely to the vncle of the foresaid king Charles; and therefore by degree of consanguinitie being further off remoued from the same (we being in the time of our minoritie) hath violently by force and power contrarie to God and iustice vsurped, occupied, and yet doth occupie the same, inuading further and spoiling our lands in the dukedome of Aquitania, and ioyning himselfe with our rebellious enemies the Scots, seeking our subuersion both by land and by sea, to the vttermost of his endeauour. And although we to preuent the damages which might rise by war, haue offered to the said Philip diuers friendly waies of peace; to the intent we might better intend our purposed voiage against Christs enemies the Turkes: yet could nothing preuaile with him in obtaining any peaceable way of reformation, driuing vs off by craftie dissimulation, through false pretensed words, but performing nothing with heart and deed. Whereupon, weenot neglecting the grace and gift of God, to defend the right of our inheritance, and to repulse the iniuries of our enemie, haue not refused by force of armes comming downe to Britanie to encounter with him in open field. And so we being occupied in our warres, there repaired vnto vs the reuerend father bishop of Preuest, and of Tusculane Cardinals, and legats from pope Clement 6. to entreat some reformation of peace betweene vs. At whose request we consented, agreeing to such formes and conditions of peace as then were taken betwene vs, sending moreouer our embassadours to the court of Rome, specially to entreate of the same matter. And thus while some hope of truce seemed betweene vs to appeare; newes suddenly came vnto vs, which not a little astonied our mind, of the death of certaine of our nobles and adherents, whom the said Philip vniustly and cruelly at Paris, commanded to be executed. Beside the wasting and spoiling our lands and subiects in Britanie, Gascony, and other places: with innumerable wrongs and iniuries deceitfully intended against vs both by sea and land. By reason whereof, the truce on his part being notoriously broken, it is most manifest to haue beene lawfull for vs, forthwith to haue set vpon him with open warre. Yet notwithstanding to auoide those incommodities that come by warre, we thought first to proue, if by any gentle meanes some reformation might be had touching the premisses. And therefore sundrie times, haue sent embassadors to the popes presence for the treatie of a peace, and reformation to be had in those aforesaid excesses: requiring also for the tractation thereof, certaine termes of times to be appointed, alwaies reseruing to our selues notwithstanding free libertie to resume warre at our pleasure, according as the doings of the said Philip shall constraine vs thereunto. And now forsomuch as the foresaid termes be already expired, and yet no reasonable offer of peace appeareth, neither wil the said Philip come to any conformitie, being required and monished notwithstanding by the popes letter thereunto (as the pope by his letters hath written vnto vs) but alwaies hath multiplied his conspiracie and obligations, vsing extremities against vs: and to omit here to speake of the excessiue enormitie of the popes legate, who being sent by the bishop of Rome for the keeping of truce, and whose part had beene rather to haue quenched and stayed the discord; hath stirred vp our enemie more eagerly against vs. In the which doing, neither hath the bishop of Rome (sauing his reuerence) as yet prouided any remedie, albeit he hath beene diuers times required of vs so to do. Which things being so, we ought to bee excused both before God and man, if for the defect of other remedie to be had, we shall be constrained our selues to find remedy against such wrongs and iniuries: the case of iustice and necessitie constraining vs to giue out these our letters of defiance against the violator of the truce, and the vniust inuader of our kingdome. Protesting that this we doe, not vpon any displeasure to the bishop of Rome, or to the apostolike see, but only for the moderation of equitie, standing vpon the defence of our owne right and lawfull inheritance, intending alwaies rather to haue peace, if by any reasonable way it might be had. And thus much for the stopping of slanderous fame and the mouthes of backbiters, We thought good to signifie, first to the high bishop of Rome, and the foresaid cardinals; that by them as persons indifferent, and mediators, the same may be insinuated to the contrarie part; and also vnto your whole Vniuersitie in generall: recommending vnto you all the innocencie of my cause and the communitie of iustice. Dated at Westminster the 14. of Iune, the 19. yeare of our reigne in England, and of France the sixth.

The popes legate stirreth vp warre.

And thus much for the kings letters. Now let vs againe returne to his passage, from whence a little we haue digressed. Concerning the which passage of the king, with the order of his acts atchieued in the same, from the winning of Cadane or Cordoine, vnto the towne of Pusiake, is sufficiently described by one of the kings chaplaines and his confessor, who being a Dominicke Frier and accompanying the king through all his iourney, writeth thereof as followeth.

A letter of the kings confessor touching his acts doing at Cordoine.

Benedicere debemus Deum Cæli, &c. Great cause we haue to praise and laud the God of heauen, and most worthilie to confesse his holy name, who hath wrought so his mercie to vs. For after the conflict had at Cadane, in the which many were slaine, and the citie taken and sackt euen to the bare wals, the citie of Baia immediately yeelded it selfe of his owne accord, fearing lest their counsels had been bewrayed. After this the lord our king directed his progresse toward Roane: Who being at the towne of Lexon, there came certaine cardinals to him, greatly exhorting him to peace. Which cardinals being curteously entertained of the king for the reuerence of the popes see, it was thus answered to them againe: That the king being much desirous of peace, had assaied by all waies and meanes reasonable how to maintaine the same: and therefore hath offered conditions and manifold waies of peace, to be had to the no small preiudice of his owne cause. And yet is ready to admit any reasonable offer of peace, if by any meanes it may be sought, &c. With this answere the cardinals going to the French king, the kings aduersary, to perswade with him in like maner, returned to king Edward againe, offering to him in the French kings name, the dukedome of Aquitania, in as full assurance as his father before him euer had it: besides further hope also of obtaining more, if intreatie of peace might be obtained. But forsomuch as that contented not enough the kings mind, neither did the cardinals find the French king so tractable and propense to the studie of peace as they looked for, the cardinals returned, leauing the matter as they found it. And so the king speeding forward, by the way as his iourney did lie, hee subdued the countrie and the great townes without any resistance of the inhabitants, who did all flee and runne away. Such feare God strooke into them, that it seemed they had lost their hearts. In the same voiage, as the king had gotten many townes and villages, so also hee subdued castles and munitions, very strong, and that with little stresse. His enemy being at the same time at Roane had reared a great armie, who notwithstanding being well manned, yet euer kept on the other side of the riuer Seane, breaking downe all the bridges that we should not come ouer to him. And although the countrey round about continually was spoiled, sackt, and with fire consumed by the circuit of twentie miles round about: yet the French king being distant scarce the space of one mile from vs, either would not or else durst not (when hee might easilie haue passed ouer the riuer) make any resistance for the defence of his countrie and people. And so our king iourneying forward came to Pusiake or Poisy, where the French king had likewise broken downe the bridge, and keeping on the other side of the riuer would rest in no place.

The kings answere to the Cardinals.

The French king sheweth no carefull study of peace.

The king comming to Pusiake.

After whose comming to Poisse, the foresaid chaplaine and confessor to the king, named Michael Northburgh, describing the kings voiage and the acts of the Englishmen from the towne of Poisse, to his comming to Calis, in his letters writeth in this wise.

A letter of William Northburgh the kings confessor, describing the kings voiage into France.

SAlutations premised, we giue you to vnderstand, that our soueraigne lord the king came to the towne of Poisye, the day before the assumption of our Ladie, where was a certaine bridge ouer the water of Seane broken downe of the enemy, but the king tarried there so long till that the bridge was made againe. And whiles the bridge was in repairing there came a great number of men at armes and other souldiers were armed, to hinder the same. But the earle of Northhampton issued out against them and slue of them more then one thousand; the rest fled away, thankes be to God. And at an other time our men passed the water, although with much trauell, and slue a great number of the common souldiers of France, about the citie of Paris, and countrie adioyning, being part of the French kings armie, and thorowly well appointed: so that our people haue now made other good bridges vpon our enemies, God be thanked, without any great losse and damage to vs. And on the morrow after the assumption of our Ladie, the king passed the water of Seane, and marched toward Poisye, which is a towne of great defence and strongly immured, and a maruellous strong castle within the same, which our enemies kept. And when our vandguard was passed the towne, our rereguard gaue an assault thereunto and tooke the same: where were slaine more then three hundred men at armes of our enemies part. And the next day following, the earle of Suffolke and sir Hugh Spenser marched forth vpon the commons of the countrie assembled and well armed, and in fine discomfited them, and slue of them more then two hundred, and tooke 60. gentlemen prisoners beside others. And after that, the king marched toward graund Villers, and while he was there encamped, the kings vandgard was descried by the men of armes by the king Bename: whereupon, our men issued out in great haste and ioyned battel with them, but were inforced to retire. Notwithstanding, thanks be vnto God, the earle of Northhampton issued out and rescued the horsmen with other souldiers; so that few or none of them were either taken or slaine, sauing onely Thomas Talbot, but had againe the enemie in chase within two leagues of Amians: of whom we tooke 8. and slue 12. of their best men at armes, the rest being well horsed, tooke the towne of Amians. After this, the king of England marched toward Pountise vpon Bartholomew day, and came vnto the water of Som, where the French king had laid 500. men at armes, and three thousand footmen, purposing to haue kept and stopped our passage: but thankes be to God, the king of England and his hoast entered the same water of Som, where neuer man passed before, without the losse of any of our men: and after that encountred with the enemie, and slue of them more then two thousand, the rest fled to Abeuyle, in which chase were taken many knights, squires, and men at armes. The same day Sir Hugh Spencer tooke the town of Croylay, where hee and his souldiers slew foure hundred men at armes, and kept the towne, where they found great store of victuals. The same night encamped the king of England in the forrest of Cressy vpon the same water, for that the French kings host came on the other side of the towne neer vnto our passage: but hee would not take the water of vs, and so marched toward Abeuyle. And vpon the friday next following, the king being still incamped in the sad forrest, our Scuriers descried the French king, which marched toward vs in foure great battels. And hauing then vnderstanding of our enemies (as Gods will was) a little before the euening tide we drew vnto the plaine field, and set our battels in array; and immediatly the fight began, which was sore and cruell, and indured long, for our enemies behaued themselues right nobly. But thanks bee giuen to God, the victory fell on our side, and the king our aduersary was discomfited with all his host, and put to flight: where also was slaine the king of Bename, the duke of Loreine, the earle of Dabeson, the earle of Flanders, the earle of Blois, the earle of Arcot, with his two sonnes, the earle of Damerley, the earle of Nauers, and his brother, the lord of Tronard, the archbishop of Meymes, the archbishop of Saundes, the high prior of France, the earle of Sauoy, the lord of Morles, the Lord de Guis, Segniour de S. Nouant, Seigniour de Rosingburgh, with six earles of Almaine, and diuers other earles, barons, knights, and squires, whose names are vnknowne. And Philip de Valois himselfe, with another Marquesse, which was called lord Electour among the Romans, escaped from the battell. The number of the men at armes which were found dead in the field, beside the common souldiers and footmen, were one thousand, fiue hundred, forty, and two. And all that night the king of England with his host abode armed in the field where the battell was fought. On the next morrow before the Sunne rose, there marched toward vs another great host, mightie and strong, of the Frenchmen. But the earle of Northhampton, and the earle of Northfolk issued out against them in three battels; and after long and terrible fight, them in like wise they discomfited by Gods great helpe & grace (for otherwise it could neuer haue been) where they tooke of knights and squires a great number, and slew aboue two thousand, pursuing the chase three leagues from the place where the battell was fought. The same night also the king encamped himselfe againe in the forrest of Cressy, & on the morrow marched toward Boleine, and by the way he tooke the towne of Staples; and from thence he marched toward Calis, where he intendeth to plant his siege and lay his battery to the same. And therefore our soueraigne lord the king willeth and commandeth you in all that euer you may, to send to the said siege victuals conuenient. For after the time of our departing from Chaam, we haue trauelled through the country with great perill and danger of our people, but yet alwaies had of victuall plenty, thanks be to God therefore. But now as the case standeth, we partly need your helpe to be refreshed with victuals. Thus fare you well. Written at the siege before the towne of Calis the 14. day of September.

Anno 1346. Siege of Calis.

After the siege and winning of Poitie, the third day of September anno 1346. the king through the midst of France directed his passage vnto Calis, as by the tenour of this letter you heare, and besieged the same. Which siege he continued from the third of September aforesaid, till the third day of August the yeere next ensuing, vpon the which day it was rendered vp vnto the said king Edward the third, and subdued vnto the crowne of England: as after, the Lord willing, shall more appeare.

Dauid king of Scots inuadeth England.

In the meane time, during the siege of Calis, Dauid the Scotish king, at the request of the French king, with a great army hasted into the North parts of England; and first besieging the towne of Liuel, within sir daies obtained the greatest part of the towne, and there taking all that hee could finde, with Sir Walter Salby a valiant knight, which was the keeper of the hold, caused him vncourteously to bee put to the sword: and so from thence proceeded further into England; till at length being met withall by William Surch archbishoppe of Yorke, and the lord Percie, and the lord Neuel, with other nobles of those parts (calling and gathering their men together) in the plaine neere to Durham, the seuentéenth day of October in the yeere aboue said, through the gracious hand of Christ, there were subdued and conquered. In the which conflict, the earles of Murrife, and Stratheron, with the flower of all the chiualry and principall warriors of Scotland were slaine. Also the foresaid king Dauid, with the earles of Mentiffe and Fiffes, and other lords, and William Douglasse Malklime, Fleming, and William Douglasse, and other many moniest of armes were taken prisoners: and so the mischiefe which they intended to other, fell vpon their owne heads.

The Scots ouerthrowne.

Dauid the Scotish king taken prisoner.

During moreouer the said siege of Calis, the foresaid pope Clement the 6. writing to the king of England, went about vnder the pretence of peace, to stop his proceedings: whose letters follow here vnder written.

The letter of the pope to the king of England, in the behalfe of the Frenchmen.

CLement the bishop, seruant of Gods seruants: To his welbeloued sonne in Christ, Edward the puissant king of England; salutation and apostolicall blessing. If you diligently consider deare son, (as ought a catholike prince to doe) the slaughter of such an innumerable sort, bought with the precious bloud of Christ our redeemer: the losse of their substance and soules, and the lamentable perils which the dissensions and warres stirred vp betweene you and our welbeloued sonne Philip, the noble king of France, haue brought vpon vs, and yet daily doe without intermission: and also the bewailing of so many poore people, crying out of orphans and pupils, lamentation of widowes, and other miserable people which be robbed and spoiled, and almost famished: what exclamation they make with teares running downe their cheekes, yelling and crying vnto God for help; as also the destruction of churches, monasteries, and holy places, holy vessels, and other ornaments vnto Gods seruice dedicated; the sacrilegious robberies, sackings, & imprisonings; the spoiling of holy churches & religious persons; with many other such innumerable, detestable, execrable mischiefes; offending the eies of the diuine maiesty: all which, if your princely heart would consider and well remember; with this also, that catholike faith (especially in the East parts) and the christians there abiding by meanes of the same dissensions and wars, destitute of the helps of such catholike men as are in the West parts, are so afflicted of the infidels, seeing the other parts of Christendom so troubled with cruell persecutions, yea and more cruell then euer it hath bin (although in these times to amplifie this our faith in the said East parts is cruell persecution shewed, more then hath bin of many yeares past) doubtlesse we belieue it would pity your heart. And to the end that such and so great euils should no further proceed, nor yet that so great good as might be done by dilating of our foresaid faith in these times should be let and hindered; we desire you that ye would apply your mind to make some agreement and peace with the foresaid king. For if (my welbeloued sonne) God hath giuen vnto you prosperous successe and fortune, ye ought rather to humble then to extoll your selfe; and so much the more readier to incline to his peace, & to indeuor your selfe to please God, which loueth peace, and delighteth in peaceable men; and to eschew the foresaid euils, which without doubt do grieuously offend him. Furthermore, we maruell greatly, that vnto our reuerend brother Anibaldus bishop of Tusculane, and our beloued son Stephan, of the title of S. Iohn, and Paul, priest and cardinall of the apostolicall see, being sent as legats by vs and the same see apostolicall to intreat a peace, who diligently and faithfully laboring for the same, as louers of verity, iustice, and equity, and therewithall regarders of your honor; could not be suffered touching the intreaty of the same peace, to come vnto your graces presence.

Wherefore we desire your kingly highnesse more earnestly, and for the mercy of God with more vehemence require the same; that you taking vp the foresaid horrible euils, and preuenting the sweetnesse of piety and compassion, may escape the vengeance of Gods indignation, which were to be feared, if you should perseuere in your former euils, as God forbid. And as touching the intreaty for peace, for which our foresaid cardinals were sent vnto you, (howbeit secretly, lest it should be any derogation to your honour) we desire you to condescend thereunto, and with all your affection you will incline your mind to the same, so pleasant vnto God, so desired of the world, as also to you, the foresaid king, and vnto the catholike faith profitable. And that the same peace by Gods helpe and grace established and made perfit, you might assay your puissant strength about Gods businesse in the foresaid East parts (so good occasiō seruing, as before is said, in these our times) being so apt aduancements of your honour, and happy increasing of your princely name: for feruently we haue heard of you reported to behaue your selfe in all your attempts. Thus we doubt not but that you will write vnto vs againe touching the premisses; and the purpose of your intention touching the same. Dated at Auinion the 18. of February, and 5. yeare of our Papacie.

The answere of the king of England, to the foresaid letter of the pope.

King Edward answereth to the pope.

MOst holy father, we vnderstand by the letters of the reuerend fathers in God, the bishop of Tusculan, and Stephan of the title of Saint Iohn Priest, Cardinals and Legats of the court of Rome, as also by the letters of your holinesse sent vnto vs, that yee maruell greatly for that your said legats were of purpose sent vnto vs, and commanded to intreat of a peace betweene our aduersary of France and vs, that wee would not suffer them secretly to talke with vs, for the safegard of our honour. The intention of your heart to make the foresaid peace, complaining and bewailing therein the death of Christian men, the losse of their goods, the perill of their soules, the lamentable wailings of the poore, of orphanes, the widowes, and destruction of other pitifull persons; the pillage and robberies robberies of churches, and other mischies innumerable, and namely, the diminishing of Christian faith in the East parts, which by the war betweene our aduersary of France and vs is sore decaied, as the said letters plainly doe import. And that forasmuch as God hath giuen you triumphant fortune, that so much the more we ought to abase and humble our heart, and to be the readier to make and incline to a peace. As touching these things, holy Father, we giue your holinesse to vnderstand, that as well vnto your foresaid legats, as other messengers sent from you vnto vs, we haue offered vnto euery of them reasonable waies of peace, and euery day declare the same, and that not secretly, but openly. For we doubt not to let our purpose be vnderstood; for he that is the high iudge both of him and vs, in whose disposition all things lieth, hath giuen vnto vs the crowne of France to our right and proper heritage. The which right, our foresaid aduersary hath by force of long time detained from vs, we seeking to obtaine the same in peaceable wise, and yet doe, if we might obtaine the same in any good manner, rather for the benefit of Christian men, and that the foresaid euils might cease, which by his wrongfull meanes onely haue increased and growen. Yet notwithstanding, as before this time you know we assented to a truce, with certaine articles contained in the same writing; all this hee hath infringed: Neither doth the wrong suffice him which hee offereth vs in our foresaid heritage, but he indeuoreth himselfe during the said truce, to inuade our realm of England & other our lands: and furthermore maintaineth the Scots, and aideth them to the vtter destruction of vs, our people and lands aforesaid; wherein we were inforced for the safegard of our people and lands, by such lawfull meanes as we may, to defend our selues & put him from his wicked purpose. And furthermore, for the same our quarrell being in the hands of God, haue wee come against him to conquer our inheritance of France; ouer whom God hath giuen vs diuers victories, as we haue trusted hee would by his right wise iudgement and power; which thing he hath shewed vpon vs, (all chance of fortune set apart) in respect of our rightfull title therein, and without our deserts: wherefore with all humility of heart we giue him thanks alwaies therefore, most deuoutly night & day praising his holy name; for we acknowledge the same commeth not by our strength & force. Wherefore most holy father, we desire your holinesse, and, so much as in vs lieth, require the same, that you that supply the place of the Sonne of God in earth, and haue the gouernment of the soules of all christian men, and ought to be vpright and equall towards all men, without exception of persons, that ye will receiue good information and true, of the obiections aboue said, and will put to your holy helping hand, as much as in you is, that our said aduersary of France may acknowledge his wrong which he hath done to vs herein, and may be by your aid redressed, and that he in this his wrong haue no maintenance and aid at your hand. For if it be so, we then appeale vnto the iudge of iudges, which suffereth for a time wrongs to be done for the sinfull default of man, but in the end redresseth the same, leauing no good deed vnrewarded, nor euill vnpunished: most humbly requiring him to be to vs a true and vpright iudge of all our controuersies, for his mercies sake, as in the meane time we repose our full trust and confidence in dim. The holy spirit of God, &c.

The king appealeth from the pope to God.

Moreouer, during yet the siege of Calis, the French king had sent certaine offers to the men of Flanders, that if they would relinquish the king of England, and adhere to him:

Offers made to the men of Flanders to forsake king Edward.

First, he would remit all their former transgressions.

Secondly, he would vnburden them of their interdict.

Thirdly, he would send vnto them such plenty of corne, that what was sold for twelue shillings with them, should be sold for foure shillings, and that for six yéeres.

Fourthly, he would store them with plenty of French woll to make cloth, for a small price; and that they might sell the said clothes both in Flanders & in France; and that the French men should vse the same cloth, forsomuch as all other maner of cloth should be forbidden in France, so long as any of that (made of French woll) might be found.

Fifthly, he would restore them to these three cities, Insylam, Rowocum, and Betonie.

Sixthly, he would defend them from all their aduersaries; and in pledge of the same, would send them mony beforehand.

Seuenthly, such as were able and forward men among them, he would retaine and promote them, &c.

But these offers séeming to proceed more of faire words to serue the present turne, then of any hearty truth, were not receiued. Then the lord John, prince and heire to the French king, during the foresaid siege of Calis aboue mentioned, comming with a mighty army of Frenchmen, set vpon the men of Flanders and Englishmen in the towne of Cassels. In the which conflict, during from morning to none, the Frenchmen were vanquished, and the young Dolphin driuen backe from whence he came. Of whose number diuers were slaine and taken prisoners. Where on the other side (through the Lords defence) not one is reported to bee greeuously wounded.

The Dolphin with the French discomfited at Cassels.

As this passed on, not long after about the seuenth day of June, an. 1347. king Edward continuing still his siege against Calis, Philip the French king came down with a mightie army, purposing to remoue the siege: where, not far off from the English host, he encamped himselfe. Which done, two cardinals, Ambaldus and Stephanus (procured for the same purpose) going betwéen the two kings, gaue to the king of England thus to vnderstand: That if he would condescend to any reasonable way of peace, the French king was ready to offer such honest proffers vnto him, as to reason & to his contentation should séeme agréeable. But in conclusion when it came to talke, the nobles could not agrée vpon the conditions. Wherefore the French king séeing no other remedy, did it to be signified to king Edward; that betwéene that present tuesday, and the next friday, if he would come forth into the field, he should haue battell giuen him. Thus the place being viewed of foure captaines of either host for the battell to bee fought; it so fell, that the French king on wednesday at night, before the battell should ioyne, secretly by night setting his pauilions on fire, returned backe with his army out of the sight of Englishmen.

The French king fleeth before the battell.

Upon the friday following, they which were besieged in the towne of Calis, séeing the king to be retired (vpon whose helpe they trusted, being also in great penury and famin for lacke of victuals, and otherwise in much misery vehemently distressed) surrendered the towne to the kings hands: who like a mercifull prince onely detaining certaine of the chiefe, the rest with the whole commons he let goe with bagge and baggage, diminishing no part of their goods, shewing therein more princely fauour to them, then they did of late in Quéene Maries daies vnto our men, in recouering the said towne of Calis againe.

The towne of Calis wonne.

After the winning thus of Calis, as hath béen premised, king Edward remaining in the said towne a certaine space, was in consultation concerning his voiage and proceeding farther into France. But by meanes of the foresaid cardinals, truce for a certaine time was taken, and instruments made (so prouided) that certaine noble men as well for the French king, as for the king of England, should come to the pope there to debate vpon the articles. Unto the which king Edward, for peace sake, was not greatly disagréeing. Which was an. 1347. Ex Tho. Walsingh.

Truce concluded betweene England and France.

The next yéere following, which was an. 1348. fell a sore plague, which they call the first generall pestilence in the realme of England. This plague (as they say) first springing from the East, and so spreading Westward, did so mightily preuail here in this land, beginning first at Dorcester, and the countries thereabout, that euery day lightly twenty, some daies fortie, some sixtie, and mo dead corpses were brought & laid together in one pit. This beginning the first day of August, by the first of Nouember it came to London. Where the vehement rage thereof was so hot, and did increase so much, that from the first day of February, till about the beginning of May, in a churchyard then newly made by Smithfield, about two hundred dead corpses euery day were buried, besides them which in other churchyards of the citie were laid also. At length by the grace of Christ ceasing there, it proceeded from thence to the north parts. Where also the next yéere after, anno 1349. it swaged.

Now called the Charterhouse churchyard.

After this, in the next yéere ensuing, an. 1350. the towne of Calis was by treason of the keeper of the castell, almost betraied and wonne from the Englishmen. Within the compasse of which yéere, died Philip the French king. After whom king John his sonne succéeded in the crowne. Who the next yéere after, vnder false pretence of friendship, caused the Constable of France earle of Eiwe, to be beheaded; who being taken prisoner before in war by Englishmen, and long detained in prison in England, was licenced by king Edward to visit his country of France. In the same yéere the towne of Gwines was taken by Englishmen, while the keepers of the hold were negligent and a sléepe.

The yéere next following, the marshall of France with a great army was put to flight by sir Roger Bentele knight, and captaine in Britaine, hauing but only 600. souldiers with him. In this battell were taken nine knights, esquires and gentlemen one hundred and forty. The Frenchmen and Britaines by this victory were exceedingly discouraged, and their pride cut downe.

In the yéere after, was Henry first made duke of Lancaster, which before was earle of Darbie and Lancaster. Also diuers good ordinances were appointed in the parliament at Westminster. Which after by auarice and partiall fauor of the head men, were againe vndone.

First duke of Lancaster.

Concord and agréement about the yéere 1354. began to come well forward, and instruments were drawne vpon the same betweene the two kings. But that the matter being brought vp to pope Innocent 6. partly by the quarrelling of the Frenchmen, partly by the winking of the pope, which euer held with the French side, the conditions were repealed, which were these: That to the king of England, all the dukedome of Aquitanie with other lands there, should be to him restored, without homage to the French king. And that king Edward againe should surrender to him all his right and title, which he hee had in Fraunce: whereupon rose the occasion of great warre and tumult, which followed after betweene the two realmes.

It followed after this, the yéere of our Lord 1355. that king Edward hearing of the death of Philip the French king, and that king John his sonne had granted the dukedome of Aquitaine to Charles his eldest sonne and Dolphin of Vienna; sent ouer prince Edward with the earle of Warwicke, of Salisbury, of Orford, and with them a sufficient number of able souldiers into Aquitania. Where hee being willingly receiued of diuers, the rest hee subdued; partly by force of sword, partly receiued, submitting themselues to his protection.

Not long after this, in the same yéere, word being brought to king Edward, that John the French king was ready to méet him at S. Omers, there to giue him battell, he gathered his power, & set ouer to Calis with his two sons, Leonel earle of Ulston, and John of Gaunt earle of Richmond, and with Henry duke of Lancaster, &c. Who being come to Saint Omers, the French king with a mighty army of his Frenchlings, hearing of his comming, the néerer hee approched to them, the further they retired backe; wasting and destroying behind them, to the intent that the English army in pursuing them, should finde no victuals. By reason whereof, king Edward following him by the space of nine or ten daies vnto Hadem, (when neither he could finde his enemy to fight, nor victuals for forage for his army) he returned vnto Calis: where war againe being offered in the name of the king vpon vnstable conditions, and yet the same not performed, king Edward séeing the shrinking of his enemy, from Calis crossed the seas into England, where hee recouered againe the towne of Barwicke, which the Scots before by subtill traine had gotten. At which time was granted vnto the king in parliament, 50. s. for euery sacke or packe of woll that should be carried ouer, for the space of six yéeres together. By the which grant, the king might dispend euery day by estimation, aboue 100. marks sterling. And for as much as euery yéere 100000. sacks of woll were thought to be exported out of the realme; the sum thereof for six yéers space was estéemed to mount to 1500000. pound sterling.

Fiftie shillings for euery sacke of woll caried out of England.

The custome of woll for six yeers 1500000. pounds sterling to king Edward.

The same yéere, when king Edward had recouered Barwicke, and subdued Scotland, prince Edward being in Gascoinie, made toward the French king. Who, notwithstanding by the way all bridges were cast downe, and great resistance made; yet the victorious prince making way with his sword, after much slaughter of the Frenchmen, and many prisoners taken, at length ioyning with the French king at Poytiers, scarse with 2000. gaue the ouerthrow to the French king with 7000. men of armes and mo. In which conflict, the French king himselfe, and Philip his sonne, with lord Iames of Bourbon, the archbishop of Senon, 11. earles, 22. lords were taken. Of other warriers and men of armes 2000. Some affirme, in this conflict were slaine two dukes, of lords and noblemen 24. of men of armes 2002. of other souldiers about 8000. The common report is, that mo Frenchmen were there taken prisoners, then were the number of them which tooke them. This noble victory gotten by the grace of God, brought no little admiration to all men.

The French king taken prisoner by prince Edward.

It were too long, and little pertaining to the purpose of this history, to comprehend in order all the doings of this king, with the circumstances of his victories, of the bringing in of the French king into England, of his abode there, of the ransome leuied on him, and of Dauid the Scotish king; of which, the one was rated at three millions of Scutes, the other at 100000. marks, to be paid in ten yéeres, how the staple was after translated to Calis, with such like. I referre them that would sée more, to the chronicle of Tho. Walsing. of S. Albans, of Iohn Froysard, Adam Merimouth, who discourse all this at large.

Euery Scute valuing six shillings eight pence.

Thus hauing discoursed at large all such martiall affaires and warlike exploits, incident in the raigne of this king betwixt him and the realmes of France and Scotland: Now to returne againe to our matters ecclesiasticall, followeth in order to recapitulate and notifie the troubles and contentions growing betweene the same king and the pope, and other ecclesiasticall persons in matters touching the church, in order of yéeres remaining in the tower, taken out of the records, as followeth. As where first in the fourth yéere of his raigne, the king wrote to the archbishop of Canturbury to this effect: That whereas king Edward the first his grandfather did giue to a clerke of his owne, being his chaplaine, the dignitie of treasurer of Yorke, the archbishoprick of Yorke being then vacant and in the kings hands, in the quiet possession whereof, the said clerke continued vntill the pope misliking therewith, would haue displaced him, and promoted to the same dignitie a cardinal of Rome, to the manifest preiudice of the crowne of England: the king therefore straitly chargeth the archbishop of Yorke, not to suffer any matter to passe, that may be preiudiciall to the donation of his grandfather, but that his owne clerke should inioy the said dignitie accordingly, vpon paine of his highnesse displeasure.

The like precepts were also directed to these bishops following, videl. to the bishop of Lincolne, bishop of Worcester, bishop of Sar, Maister Garmion, archdeacon of Richmond, archdeacon of Lincolne, the prior of Lewen, the prior of Lenton, to maister Rich of Wentworth, to maister Iherico de Concore, to the popes Nuncio, to maister Guido of Calma. And withall, wrote his letters vnto the pope, as touching the same matter consisting in three parts. First, in the declaration and defence of his right and title to the donation and gift of all manner of temporalties, of offices, prebends, benefices and dignities ecclesiasticall, holden of him in capite, as in the right of his crowne of England. Secondly, in expostulating with the pope for intruding himselfe into the ancient right of the crowne of England, intermedling with such collations, contrary to right and reason, and the example of all his predecessours, which were popes before. Thirdly, intreating him that he would henceforth abstaine and desist from molesting the realme with such nouelties and strange vsurpations; and so much the more, for that in the publike parliament lately holden at Westminster, it was generally agréed vpon by the vniuersall assent of all the estates of the realme, that the king should stand to the defence of all such rights and iurisdictions as to his regall dignitie and crowne any way appertained.

After this, in the ninth yéere of the raigne of this king, pope Benedict the twelfth, sendeth downe letters touching his new creation, with certaine other matters and requests to the king: whereunto the king answering again, declareth how glad he is of that his preferment; adding moreouer, that his purpose was to haue sent vnto him certaine ambassadors for congratulation of the same. But being otherwise occupied by reason of wars, could not attend his holinesse requests: notwithstanding he minded to call a parliament about the feast of Ascention next, where vpon the assembly of his clergy and other estates, hee would take order for the same, and so direct his ambassadors to his holinesse accordingly.

The next yéere after, which was the tenth yéere of his raigne, the king writeth another letter to the pope; that forasmuch as his clergy had granted him one yéeres tenth for the supportation of his warres, and for that the pope also had the same time to take vp the paiment of six yéeres tenth granted him by the clergy a little before, therfore the pope would vouchsafe at his request, to forbeare the exaction of that mony for one yéere, till that his tenth for the necessities of his wars were dispatched.

The same yéere hee wrote also to the pope to this effect: That whereas the prior and chapter of Norwich did nominat a clerke to be bishop of Norwich, and sent him to Rome for his inuestiture, without the kings knowledge; therefore the pope would withdraw his consent, and not intermeddle in the matter appertaining to the kings peculiar iurisdiction and prerogatiue.

After this, in the sixteenth yéere of this king, it happened that the pope sent ouer certaine legats to heare and determin matters appertaining to the right of patronages of benefices: which the king perceiuing to tend to the no small derogation of his right, and the liberties of his subiects, writeth vnto the said legats, admonishing and requiring them, not to proceed therein, nor attempt any thing vnaduisedly, otherwise then might stand with the lawfull ordinances and customes of the lawes of his realme, and the freedome and liberty of his subiects.

Writing moreouer the same yéere to other legats being sent ouer by the pope to treat of peace betweene the king and the French king, with request that they would first make their repaire to the French king, who had so often times broken with him, and proue what conformitie the French king would offer: which if he found reasonable, they should come accord with him: otherwise hee exhorted them not to enter into the land, nor to proceed any further in that behalfe.

The yéere following, which was the seuentéenth of his raigne, ensueth another letter to the pope against his prouisions and reseruations of benefices, worthy here to bee placed and specified, but that the sum thereof is before set downe to be found in the pag. 355.

The yéere following, another letter likewise was sent by the king to the pope, vpon occasion taken of the church of Norwich, requiring him to surcease his reseruations and prouisions of the bishoprickes within the realme, and to leaue the elections thereof free to the chapters of such cathedrall churches, according to the ancient grants and ordinances of his noble progenitors.

Proceeding now to the nineteenth yéere of this kings raigne, there came to the presence of the king certaine legats from Rome, complaining of certaine statutes past in his parliament tending to the preiudice of the church of Rome, and the popes primacie; viz. that if abbats, priors, or any other ecclesiasticall patrons of benefices, should not present to the said benefices within a certaine time, the lapse of the same should come to the ordinary or chapter thereof; or if they did not present, then to the archbishop: if the archbishop likewise did faile to present, then the gift to pertaine not vnto the lord pope, but vnto the king and his heires. Another complaint also was was this, that if archbishops should bee slacke in giuing such benefices as properly pertained to their owne patronage in due time, then the collation thereof likewise should appertaine to the foresaid king and his heires. Another complaint was, that if the pope should make void any elections in the Church of England for any defect found therein, and so had placed some honest and discréet persons in the same, that then the king and his heires was not bound to render the temporalties vnto the parties placed by the popes prouision. Whereupon the pope being not a little agréeued, the king writeth vnto him, certifying that he was misinformed, denying that there was any such statute made in that parliament. And further, as touching all other things, he would conferre with his prelats and nobles, and thereof would returne answere by his legats.

In the 20. yéere of his raigne, another letter was written to the pope by the king, the effect whereof in few words to expresse, was this; to certifie him that in respect of his great charges sustained in his wars, he hath by the counsell of his nobles, taken into his owne hands the fruits and profits of all his benefices here in England.

To proceede in the order of yéres, in the twentie six yéere of this king, one Nicolas Heath clerke, a busie headed body, and a troubler of the realme, had procured diuers bishops, and others of the kings counsell to bee cited vp to the court of Rome, there to answere such complaints as hee had made against them. Whereupon commandement was giuen by the king to all the ports of the realme for the restraint of all passengers out, and for searching and arresting all persons bringing in any buls or other processe from Rome, tending to the derogation of the dignitie of the crowne, or molestation of the subiects: concerning which Nicolas Heath, the king also writeth to the pope his letters, complaining of the said Heath, and desiring him to giue no eare to his leaud complaints.

The same yéere the king writeth also to the popes legat resident in England, requiring him to surcease from exacting diuers sums of mony of the clergy, in the name of first fruits of benefices.

The 31. yéere of this kings raigne, the king by his letters complaineth to the pope of a troublesome fellow named Nicolas Stanway, remaining in Rome, which by his slanderous complaints procured diuers citations to bee sent into the realme, to the great disturbance of diuers and sundry honest men. Whereupon he praieth and adviseth the pope to stay himselfe, and not to send ouer such hastie citations vpon euery light occasion.

To passe further to the 38. yéere of the same king, thus we finde in the rolles: That the king the same yéere tooke order by two of his clergy, to wit, John a Stocke and John of Moreton to take into their hands all the temporalties of all deaneries, prebends, dignities, and benefices being then vacant in England, and to answere the profits of the same to the kings vse.

The same yéere an ordinance was made by the king and his counsell, and to the same proclaimed in all port townes within the realme, that good and diligent search should bee made, that no person whatsoeuer, comming from the court of Rome, &c. doe bring into the realme with him any bull, instrument, letters patents, or other processe, that may be preiudiciall to the king, or any of his subiects: nor that any person passing out of this realme toward the court of Rome, doe carrie with him any instrument or processe that may redound to the preiudice of the king or his subiects: and that all persons passing to the said court of Rome, &c. with the kings speciall licence, doe notwithstanding promise and finde suretie to the lord chancellor, that they shall not in any wise attempt or pursue any matter to the preiudice of the king or his subiects, vnder paine to be put out of the kings protection, and to forfeit his body, goods, and chattels, according to the statute thereof made, Anno 27.

And thus much concerning the letters and writings of the king, with such other domesticall matters, perturbations, and troubles passing betweene him and the pope, taken out of the publike records of the realme, whereby I thought to giue the Reader to vnderstand the horrible abuses, the intollerable pride, and the vnsatiable auarice of that bishop, more like a proud Lucifer, then a pastor of the church of Christ, in abusing the king, and oppressing his subiects with exactions vnmeasurable: not only exercising his tyrannie in this realme, but raging also against other princes both far and neere, amongst whom neither spared he the emperor himselfe. In the story and acts of which emperor Ludouicus, mentioned a little before, pag. 343. whom the pope did most arrogantly excommunicat vpon Maundy thursday, and the selfe same day placing another emperour in his rome: relation was made of certaine learned men which tooke the emperors part against the pope. In number of whom was Marsilius Patauinus, Gulielmus Ockam, Ioannes Gandauensis, Luitpoldus, Andreas Landensis, Vlricus Hangenor treasurer to the emperor, Dantes, Aligerius, &c. Of whom Marsilius Patauinus compiled and exhibited vnto the emperor Ludouike, a worthy worke intituled Defensor pacis: written in the emperours behalfe against the pope. Wherein (both godly and learnedly disputing against the pope) hee proueth all bishops and priests to be equall, and that the pope hath no superioritie aboue other bishops; much lesse aboue the emperor. That the word of God ought to be onely the chiefe iudge in deciding and determining causes ecclesiasticall: that not onely spirituall persons, but lay men also being godly and learned, ought to bee admitted vnto generall councels: That the clergy and the pope ought to be subiect vnto magistrates: That the church is the vniuersitie of the faithfull, and that the foundation and head of the church is Christ, and that hee neuer appointed any vicar or pope ouer his vniuersall church: That bishoppes ought to bee chosen euery one by their owne church and clergie: That the marriage of priests may lawfully bee permitted: That Saint Peter was neuer at Rome: That the clergy and synagogue of the pope is a denne of théeues: That the doctrine of the pope is not to be followed, because it leadeth to destruction: And that the corrupt manners of the Christians doe spring and flow out of the wickednesse of the spiritualty, &c. He disputeth moreouer in another worke of free iustification by grace: And extenuated merits, saying that they are no causes efficient of our saluation, but onely sine qua non, that is to say, that works bee no cause of our iustification, but yet our iustification goeth not without them. For the which his doctrine most sound and catholike, hee was condemned by the pope, anno 1324. by the popes decrée extrauagant, cap. Licet intra doctrinam. Concerning the which man and his doctrine, I thought good thus much to commit to history, to the intent men may sée, that they which charge this doctrine now taught in the church, with the note of nouelty or newnesse, how ignorant and vnskilfull they be in the histories and order of times forepast.

In the same part of condemnation at the same time, also was Ioannes de Gunduno, anno 1330. and contained also in the foresaid Extrauagant, with Marsilius Patauinus, Which Ioannes wrote much vpon Aristotle and Auerrois, and are yet remaining. And no doubt but hee wrote also of diuinitie, but not vnlike that these workes haue been abolished.

Ioannes Gandencis condemned by the pope.

In the same number and catalogue commeth also Guillermus Ockam, who was in the yéere of our Lord 1326. as is afore mentioned, pag. 342. and wrote likewise in defence of Ludouicus the emperor against the pope: and also in defence of Michael, Generall of Gray friers, whom the pope had excommunicated and cursed for an heretike. Diuers treatises were by the said Ockam set forth, whereof some are extant and in print, as his questions and distinctions: some are extinct and suppressed (as Ascentius reporteth) quòd essent aliquando asperiora. Some againe be published vnder no name of the author, being of his doing; as the dialogue betweene the souldier and the clerke: wherein it is to be conjectured, what bookes and works this Ockam had collected against the pope. Of this Ockam John Sleidane in his history inferreth mention, to his great commendation, whose words bee these: William Ockam in time of Ludouicus the fourth emperor did flourish, about the yéere of our Lord 1326. who among other things wrote of the authoritie of the bishop of Rome. In the which booke hee handleth these eight questions very copiously: whether both the administrations of the bishops office, and of the emperors, may be in one man: secondly, whether the emperor taketh his power and authoritie onely of God, or else of the pope: thirdly, whether the pope and church of Rome haue power by Christ, to set and place kings and emperors, and to commit to them their iurisdiction to be exercised: fourthly, whether the emperor being elected, hath full authoritie vpon the said his election, to administer his empire: fifthly, whether other kings besides the emperor and king of Romans, in that they are consecrated of priests, receiue of them any part of their power: sixthly, whether the said kings in any case bee subiect to their consecrators: seuenthly, whether if the said kings should admit any new sacrifice, or should take to themselues the diademe without any further consecration, they should thereby lose their kingly right and title: eightly, whether the seuen princes electors giue as much to the election of the emperour, as succession rightfully giueth to other kings. Vpon these questions hee disputeth and argueth with sundrie arguments and sundrie reasons on both sides, at length hee decideth the matter on the part of the ciuill magistrate: and by occasion thereof, entreth into the mention of the Popes decrees Extrauagant; declaring how little force or regard is to bee giuen thereunto.

Tritheminus maketh mention of one Gregorius Arimenensis, a learned and a famous and right godly man: who not much differing from the age of this Ockam, about the yéere of our Lord 1350. disputed in the same doctrine of grace and frée will, as wee doe now, and dissented therein from the Papistes and Sophisters, counting them worse then Pelagians.

Eudo duke of Burgundy against the popes decrees about 200 yeeres since. Ex Carolo Molineo.

And what should I speake of the duke of Burgundy, named Eudo, who at the same time, an. 1350. dissuaded the French king not to receiue in his land the new found constitutions, decretall and Extrauagant, within his realme: whose sage counsell then giuen, yet remaineth among the French kings records, as witnesseth Carol. Molinæus?

Dantes an Italian writer, against the pope.

Dantes an Italian writer, a Florentine, liued in the time of Ludouicus the emperor, about the yere of our Lord 1300. and toke his part with Marsilius Patauinus, against three sorts of men, which he said were enemies to the truth: That is, the pope: Secondly, the order of religious men, which count themselues the children of the church, when they are the children of the diuell their father: Thirdly, the doctors of decrees and decretals. Certaine of his writings bee extant abroad, wherein he proueth the pope not to be aboue the emperor, nor to haue any right or iurisdiction in the empire. Hee confuteth the donation of Constantine to be a forged and a fained thing, as which neither did stand with any law or right. For the which he was taken of many for an heretike. He complaineth moreouer very much, the preaching of Gods word to be omitted; and in stead thereof, the vaine fables of monks and friers to be preached and beleeued of the people, and so the flocke of Christ to be fed not with the food of the Gospell, but with wind. The pope, saith hee, of a pastor is made a wolfe, to waste the church of Christ, and to procure with his clergy not the word of God to bee preached, but his owne decrees. In his canticle of Purgatory, he declareth the pope to be the whore of Babylon. And to her ministers, to some hee applieth two homes, to some foure. As to the Patriarchs, whom hee noteth to bee the totter of the said whore Babylonicall. Ex libris Dantes Italicè.

Ex lib. Iornandi. Pope, antichrist.

Hereunto may be added the saying out of the booke of Iornandus imprinted, with the foresaid Dantes: that forsomuch as antichrist commeth not before the destruction of the empire, therefore such as goe about to haue the empire extinct, are forerunners and messengers in so doing of antichrist. Therefore let the Romans (saith hee) and their bishoppes beware, lest their sinnes and wickednesse so deseruing by the iust iudgement of God, the priesthood be taken from them. Furthermore, let all the prelats and princes of Germany take heed, &c.

Taulerus of Germany, a preacher against the popes proceedings.

And because our aduersaries, which obiect vnto vs the newnesse of our doctrine, shall see and perceiue the course and forme of this religion now receiued, not to haue been either such a new thing now, or a thing so strange in times past: I will adde to these aboue recited, master Taulerus a Preacher of Argentine in Germany, anno 1350. Who contrary to the popes procéedings, taught openly against all mens merits, and against inuocation of Saints, and preached sincerely of our free iustification by grace, referring all mans trust onely to the mercy of God, and was an enemy to all superstition.

Franciscus Petrarcha. Vide 20. epistolam Francisci Petrarchæ.

With whom also may be adioined Franciscus Petrarcha, a writer of the same age, who in his works and his Italian meeter speaking of Rome, calleth it the whore of Babylon, the schole & mother of error, the temple of heresie, the nest of treachery, growing and increasing by the oppressing of others: and saith further, that she, (meaning the popes court) extolleth her selfe against her founders; that is, the emperors, who first set her vp, and did so inrich her: and séemeth plainly to affirme, that the pope was antichrist, declaring that no greater euill could happen to any man, then to be made pope. This Franciscus was about the yéere of our lord 1350.

Rome the mother and schoole of error.

And if time would serue vs to séeke out old histories, wee should finde plenty of faithfull witnesses of old and ancient time, to giue witnesse with vs against the pope, beside the other aboue rehearsed: as Ioannes de rupe scissa, an. 1340. Who for rebuking the spiritualty for their great enormities, and neglecting their office and duty, was cast into prison.

Ioannes de rupe scissa. Iohn cast into prison.

Illyricus a writer in our daies, testifieth that he found and read in an old pamphlet, that the said Ioannes should call the church of Rome, the whore of Babylon; and the pope to be the minister of antichrist; and the cardinals to bee the false prophets. Being in prison, hee wrote a booke of prophecies, bearing the title; Vade mecum in tribulationem: in which booke (which also I haue séene) hee prophecied and admonished, affliction and tribulation to hang ouer the spiritualtie. And pronounceth plainely, that God will purge his clergy, and will haue priests that shall be pure, godly, and that shall faithfully feed the Lords flocke: Moreouer, that the goods of the church shall returne againe to the lay men. Hee prophecied also the same time, that the French king and his army should haue an ouerthrow. Which came likewise to passe during the time of his imprisonment. Of this Ioannes de rupe, writeth Froyssard in his time, and also Wicklike: of whose prophecies, much more may bee said at more leasure (Christ willing) hereafter.

About the same yéere of our Lord 1346. in the citie of Heresipoli, was one named master Conradus Hager. Who (as appeareth by the old bulls and registers of Otho bishoppe of the said citie) is there recorded, to haue maintained and taught the space of twenty foure yéeres together, the masse to bee no manner of sacrifice: neither that it profiteth any man either quicke or dead, and that the money giuen of the dead for masses, bee very robberies and sacrileges of priests, which they wickedly doe intercept and take away from the poore. And said moreouer, that if hee had a skoue full of gold and siluer, hee would not giue one farthing for any masse. For the same his doctrine, this good preacher was condemned and inclosed in prison: what afterward became vpon him we doe not finde.

Ex bullis Iudæi Othonis Episc. Herbipoli.

There is among other old and ancient records of antiquitie belonging to this present time, a certaine monument in verses poetically compiled, but not without a certaine morall, intituled Pœnitentiarius Asini, the asses confessor; bearing the date and yéere of our Lord in this number, Completus An. 1343. In this treatise are brought forth the wolfe, the fox, and the asse, comming to shrift and doing penance. First, the wolfe confesseth him to the fox, who easily doth absolue him from all his faults, and also excuseth him in the same. In like maner the wolfe hearing the fores shrift, sheweth to him the like fauor againe. After this, commeth the asse to confession, whose fault was this; that hee being hungry, toke a straw out from the sheafe of one that went in peregrination vnto Rome. The asse, although repenting of this fact, yet because he thought it not so hainous as the faults of the other, the more he hope dfor his absolution. But what followed? After the silly asse had vttered his crime in auricular confession, immediatly the discipline of the law was executed vpon him with seuerity: neither was hee iudged worthy of any absolution, but was apprehended vpon the same, slaine, and deuoured. Whosoeuer was the author of this fabulous tale, had a mysticall vnderstanding in the same; for by the wolfe no doubt was meant the pope. But the fox was resembled to the prelats, curtisans, priests, and the rest of the spiritualtie. Of the spiritualty, the lord pope is some absolued; as contrary, the pope some doth absolue them in like manner. By the asse is meant the poore laitie, vpon whose backe the strait censure of the law is sharply executed, especially when the German emperors come vnder the popes inquisition, to be examined by his discipline, there is no absolution nor pardon to be found, but in all haste he must be deposed, as in these stories may partly appeare before. And though the matter bee not the weight of a straw, yet what saith the holy father the wolfe, if it please him to make any matter of it?

And thus they aggerating and exaggerating the fault to the vttermost, flie vpon the poore asse and deuoure him. By the which apologie, the tyrannicall and fraudulent practises of these spirituall Romanists are liuely described.

Not long after these aboue rehearsed, about the yéere of our Lord 1350. Gerhardus Ridder wrote also against the monks and friers a booke intituled, Lacryma Ecclesiæ: wherein he disputeth against the foresaid religious orders, namely against the begging friers: proouing that kind of life to be farre from christian perfection, for that it is against charitie to liue vpon other, when a man may liue by his owne labors. And affirmeth them to be hypocrits, filthy liuers, and such as for mans fauor, and for lucre sake, doe mix with true diuinitie, fables, Apocryphaes, and dreams of vanitie. Also, that they vnder pretence of long prayer, deuoure widowes houses, and with their confessions, sermons, and burials, doe trouble the church of Christ manifold waies. And therefore perswaded the prelats to bridle and keepe short the inordinat licence and abuses of these monasticall persons, &c.

Yet I haue made no mention of Michael Cesenas, prouinciall of the gray Friers, nor Petrus de Corbaria, of whom writeth Antoninus, in quarta parte summæ, and saith they were condemned in the extrauagant of pope John, with one Ioannes de Polueo. Their opinions saith Antoninus were these; That Peter the Apostle was no more the head of the church, then the other Apostles: And that Christ left no vicar behinde him or head in his church: And that the pope hath no such authority to correct and punish, to institute or depose the emperour. Item, that all priests, of what degree soeuer, are of equall authority, power and iurisdiction by the institution of Christ

Christ: but by the institution of the emperor, the pope to be superior, which by the same emperor also may bee revoked againe. Item, that neither the pope nor yet the church may punish any man, punitione coactiua; That is, by externe coaction; unlesse they receiue licence of the emperor. This foresaid Michael, generall of the gray friers, wrote against the tyranny, pride, and primacie of the pope, accusing him to be antichrist, and the church of Rome to be the whore of Babylon, drunke with the bloud of saints. He said there were two churches, one of the wicked flocking, wherein raigned the pope: the other of the godly afflicted. Item, that the verttie was almost vtterly extinct. And for this cause he was depriued of his dignitie, and condemned of the pope. Notwithstanding, hee stood constant in his assertions. This Michael was about the yeere of our Lord 1322. And left behind him many fautors and followers of his doctrine, of whom a great part were slaine by the pope: some were condemned, as William Ockam; some were burned, as Ioannes de Castilione, and Franciscus de Arcatara. In extrauag. Ioan. 23.

With him also was condemned in the said Extrauagant, Ioannes de Poliaco aboue touched, whose assertions were these: That the pope could not giue licence to heare confessions to whom hee would, but that euery pastor in his owne church ought to suffice. Item, that pastors and bishoppes had their authority immediatly from Christ and his Apostles, and not from the pope. Item, that the constitution of pope Benedict 11. wherein he granteth larger priuiledges to the friers aboue other pastors, was no declaration of the law, but a subuersion. And for this he was by the said friers oppressed, about the yeere of our Lord, 1322.

After Simon Mepham archbishop of Canturbury before mentioned, who liued not long, succeeded John Stratford. After whom came John Offord, who liued but ten moneths. In whose roome succeeded Thomas, and remained but one yeere, an. 1350. And after him Simon Islyp was made archbishop of Canturbury, by pope Clement the 6. who sate 17. yeers, and builded Canturbury colledge in Oxford. Which Simon Islyp succeeded the bishop of Ely, named Simon Langham, who within two yeeres was made cardinall. In whose stead pope Urban the 5. ordained William Wittlesey bishop of Worcester to be archbishop of Canturbry, an. 1366. In which yeere, William bishop of Winchester, elected and founded the new colledge in Oxford.

Againe, in the order of the popes, next vnto pope Clement the 6. before mentioned, about the same time, an. 1353. succeeded pope Innocent the 6. In the first yeere of which pope, two friers minors or Franciscans were burned at Auinion: Pro opinionibus (as mine author saith) erroneis, prout D. papæ & eius cardinalibus videbatur. 1. For certaine opinions, as seemed to the pope and his cardinals, erroneous. Ex chron. Walf. Of the which two friers, I finde in the Chronicles De actis Rom. pontificum, and in the history of Præmonstratensis, that the one was Ioannes Rochtaylada. Or rather, as I finde in Catal. testium cited out of the chronicle of Henricus de Herfordia, his name to be Hayabalus. Who being (as he recordeth) a Frier Minorite, began first in the time of pope Clement the 6. an. 1345. to preach and affirme openly, that he was by Gods reuelation charged and commanded to preach; that the church of Rome was the whore of Babylon, and the pope with his cardinals to be very antichrist. And that pope Benedict, and the other before him his predecessors were damned; with other such like words tending much against the popes tyrannicall maiestie. And that the foresaid Hayabalus being brought before the popes face, constantly did stand in the same, saying: that he was commanded by Gods reuelation so to say, and also that he would preach the same if he might. To whom it was then obiected, that he had some hereticall bookes, and so was committed to prison in Auinion. In the time of his accusation it happened, that a certaine priest comming before the pope, cast the popes bull downe before his feete, saying: Loe here, take your bull vnto you, for it doth me no good at all. I haue labored now these three yeeres withall, and yet notwithstanding for all this your bull, I cannot bee restored to my right. The pope hearing this, commanded the poore priest to be scourged, and after to be laid in prison with the foresaid frier. What became of them afterward, the foresaid writer Henricus de Herfordia maketh no mention. But I may probably coniecture this priest and this frier Rochtaylada, or rather Hayabalus, were the two, whom mine author Thom. Walf. writeth to be burned at this time in Auinion, about the first beginning of this pope Innocentius the 6. Of this Rochtaylada, I thought good here to inserre the testimony and mention of John Froyfard, written of him in his first volume, chapter 211. in these words:

Pope Innocent 6.

Two Franciscans burned at Auinion.

Ioannes Rochetaylada martyr. Ex Chron. Henrici de Herfordia.

The church of Rome declared to be the whore of Babylon by Gods reuelation.

Rochetaylada with another frier, martyrs.

A priest for casting the popes bull before the popes feete, scourged, cast in prison, and after burned at Auinion.

There was (saith Froyfard) a frier minor, full of great clergy in the citie of Auinion, called Frier John of Rochetaylada, the which frier pope Innocent the first held in prison in the castell of Baignour, for shewing of many maruailes after to come; principally hee shewed many things to fall vnto the prelats of the church for the great superfluitie and pride, that was then vsed among them. And also hee spake many things to fall of the realme of France, and of the great lords of Christendome, for the oppressions that they did to the poore common people. This Frier, said hee, would proue all his saying by the authority of the Apocalyps, and by other bookes of holy Saints and Prophets, the which were opened to him by the grace of the holy Ghost: hee shewed many things hard to beleeue, and many things fell after as hee said. Hee said them not as a Prophet, but hee shewed them by authority of ancient Scriptures, and by the grace of the holy Ghost, who gaue him vnderstanding to declare the ancient Prophets, and to shew to all christian people the yeeres and times when such things should fall. He made diuers bookes founded on great sciences and clergy, whereof one was made the yeere of our Lord 1346, wherein was written such maruels, that it were hard to beleeue them; howbeit many things according thereto fell out after. And when hee was demanded of the warres of France, hee said that all that had been seene, was not like that should bee seene after. For hee said that the warres in France should not bee ended, till the realme were vtterly wasted and exiled in euery part. The which saying was well seene after, for the noble realme of France was sore wasted and exiled, and specially in the terme that the said frier had set. The which was in the yeeres of our Lord 1356. 57, 58. and 59. Hee said in those yeeres, the princes and gentlemen of the Realme should not for feare shew themselues against the people of low estate, assembled of all countries without head or Captaine, and they should doe as they list in the realme of France; the which fell after, as ye haue heard, how the companions assembled them together, and by reason of their robbery and pillage waxed rich, and became great Captaines.

Ex Ioanne Froisardo volu. 1. cap. 211.

About the same time happened in France a certaine contention betweene the French prelats, and the friers of Paris, testified and recorded by Godfridus de Fontanis; the briefe effect of which story is this: The prelats of France conuenting and assembling together in the citie of Paris, after a long deliberation among themselues, caused by the Bedles to bee called together all the students, maisters, and bachelers of euery facultie, with the chiefe heads also of all the religious houses and friers in the Vniuersitie of Paris. Who being all there congregated together in the bishop of Paris his house, where there were present foure archbishops, and twentie bishops: first, stood vp the bishop of Biturecense, who there making his sermon, tooke for his theame the place of Saint Paul to the Ephesians: Fratres vt sciatis quæ sit longitudo, latitudo, altitudo, & profunditas charitatis, &c: and concluded thereupon, first that true charitie would compell them to see and prouide for their flockes. Secondly, that the vigor of charitie would arme them to withstand errors. Thirdly, hee concluded, that by dutie of charitie they were bound to giue their liues for the soules of their flocke committed to their charge. Fourthly, that by the same charitie euery man to hold himselfe content with that which was his owne, and not to intermeddle or busie himselfe further then to him appertained, or belonged to his office. For there (saith hee) all order ecclesiasticall is dissolued, whereas men not containing themselues in their owne precincts, presume in other mens charges where they haue nothing to doe. But this charitie (saith hee) now adaies waxeth cold, and all ecclesiasticall order is confounded and vtterly out of order. For many there bee, which now adaies presume to thrust in themselues where they haue nothing to doe; so that now the church may seeme a monster. For as in a naturall body appeareth a monster, where one member doth the office of another; so in the spirituall body, which is the Church, may bee thought likewise. As when our learned and prudent brethren, to wit, the Friers maiors and minors, doe take vpon them to vsurpe and occupy the office to vs specially appertaining: namely, where as the Scripture warneth vs all, none to take vpon him any office, except hee be called thereunto of the Lord, as Aron was. Wherefore wee haue heretofore oftentimes caused the said Friers, both by the king himselfe in his owne person, and also by other nobles to be spoken to and desired, to surceasse from doing and intermedling in our office, and yet they would not, but haue preached against our wils through all our dioceses, and haue heard confessions, saying, that they haue the popes priuiledge to beare them out therein. For the which cause we come to you, and not we here present only, but also wee haue the handwriting, and the ful consent of all other our fellow bishops throughout the kingdome of France, to complaine to you of this so great insolencie and presumption of the friers. For that as we are, you shall be. Neither doe I thinke to be any of vs prelats here now, which haue not sometime been taken out of this Vniuersitie of yours. Wee haue desired moreouer, and caused to be desired the foresaid friers, to send their priuiledges to the apostolike sea, to be interpreted and expounded more plainly by the lord pope: which they refused also to doe. Wherefore to the intent you may the better vnderstand and see what their priuiledges be, and how farre they doe extend, we haue appointed the said priuiledges here openly to bee read vnto you.

Ex scripto God. fri. de Fontanis.

A contention in France betweene the prelats and the friers there.

A sermon of the bishop of Byters to the students of Paris against the friers.

That is, the Dominicke friers, and the Franciscan friers.

Then stood vp another in the publike place, and there read the priuiledges of both the orders: and afterward read also the constitution constitution of pope Innocent 3. written in the 5. of the decretals, and beginneth: Omnis vtriusque sexus, &c. Which constitution was repugnant and contrary to the foresaid priuiledges, as he there manifestly proued, declaring how both the said priuiledges were derogatorie to that constitution.

The friers priuiledges proued contrary to the popes constitution.

This done, then rose vp the bishop Ambianensis, a great lawyer, who discoursing from article to article, there proued by good law, that the said constitution stood in his full force and vigor, and ought not to be infringed by the friers priuiledges in no part. And therefore by the vertue of that constitution, that the friers ought not so misorderly to intrude themselues in hearing confessions, in inioyning of penance, and in preaching in churches and dioceses, without speciall licence of the bishop of the diocese, and curate of the parish: vnto whose words neuer a frier at that time replied againe. And so the bishop proceeding to his conclusion, desired the Vniuersitie to assist them in that case, wherein they were all determined (saith he) to stand firmely to the shedding of their blood, in resisting that misorder and iniuries of the friers. This happened the 6. day of December, which they dedicate to saint Nicolas.

The bishop Ambianensis. Friers ought not to preach in churches without speciall licence of them to whom the church belongeth.

The next day being sunday, one of the order of the minorites or Franciscans, went to the church of the maiorites or preaching friers: where he made a sermon (which was neuer seene before, the one order to come and resort with the other) beginning in the foresaid matter to replie, and to expound in order through euery article as well as he could: adding moreouer and saying, that they went not so far in their priuiledges, as they lawfully might. And said moreouer, that what time the said priuiledges were in obtaining in Rome; the bishop Ambianensis was there present himselfe, resisting the same with all his power; yea all the prelats also of France sent and wrote vp to the court against the same, and yet did not preuaile. For when the friers there presently declared and opened to the pope in what maner and how far they had vsed priuiledges; the pope the same time said, Placet: That is, agreed vnto the same. And now (saith hee) the prelats require and demand of vs to send vp our priuiledges to the court; which were great follie in vs: For in so doing, what should wee else but giue place and occasion, to reuoke againe the authoritie which is giuen in our hands alreadie? Furthermore, our Warden and maister is now lately dead, and the maister here of the Dominicke friers, is not now present. Wherefore we dare not determine in such a weightie cause (touching the priuiledges of our order) without the presence of them. And therefore wee desire you of the Vniuersitie to hold vs therein excused, and not to bee so lightly stirred against vs, for we are not the worst and vilest part of the Vniuersitie, &c.

The friers replie against the prelats.

The next day being the 8. day of the same moneth, which is also dedicate to the conception of our ladie, vpon which day it was determined likewise, that one of the Dominicke friers should preach in the church of the Franciscan or gray friers, and so he did: tending to the same end, as the other frier in the other church had done before. Whereby it may seeme the prouerbe well answered vnto, whereof we reade in the Gospell: Facti sunt amici Herodes & Pilatus in ipsa die.

Herod and Pilate were made friends in crucifying of Christ.

It was not long after, that the feast of S. Thomas the apostle followed, in whose vigil all the heads of the Vniuersitie againe, were warned the third day after to congregate together in the church of saint Bernard at the sermon time. Which being done, and the assemblie meeting together, an other sermon was made by a diuine of the Vniuersity, whose theame was: Prope est Dominus omnibus inuocantibus eum in veritate, &c. Wherein he with many words and great authorities argued against them that would not bee obedient vnto their prelats, &c. The sermon being ended, then rose vp againe the bishop Ambianensis, who prosecutiug the rest of the theame, and comming to the word in veritate, diuided it into three parts, according to the common glosse of the decretals:

Another sermon against the friers.

Bishop Ambianensis. In veritate, &c.

Est verum vitæ, doctrinæ, iustitiæque;
Primum semper habe, duo propter scandala linque.

Verity in three parts consisteth.

Shewing and declaring by many authorities both of canonicall Scriptures and out of the law, and by euident demonstration of experience; that the friers first had no veritie of life, because they were full of hypocrisie: neither had they veritie of doctrine, because in their heart they bare gall, and in their tongue hony: neither verity of iustice, because they vsurped other mens offices. And thus concluding with the same, caused againe to be read the said priuiledges, with the constitution aboue specified. And so expounding place by place, did argue and proue that the said constitution, in no part was euacuate or infringed by the priuiledges aforesaid. Which thing being declared, he added moreouer, that whereas the friers say (saith he) that I should be present in ỳ obtaining of the priuiledges, I grant it to be true, and when word came to me thrice therof, I went to the pope reclaiming and requiring the said priuiledges to be reuoked: but the next day after, it so pleased the pope to send me out abrode vpon weightie affaires, so that then the matter had no end. After that, we sent also other messengers with our letters, for the same cause vnto the court of Rome, whom the friers say not to haue preuailed, but they lie therein. For the said messengers againe brought vs letters, from the chiefe of the court of Rome, sealed with their seales: which letters wee haue diuers times presented to our king, and will shortly shew them vnto you all. In the which letters the lord pope hath promised the said priuiledges, either to be vtterly abrogate, or else to be mitigated with some more plaine interpretation, of the which we trust shortly to haue the publike bull or writ from the pope.

The friers priuiledges confuted in disputation at Paris.

At last, the said bishop required and desired of all there, of what diocesse, or countrie soeuer they were, that they would copie out the foresaid priuiledges, and send them abrode into their countries, that all men might see what they were, and how farre they did extend. In fine, the matter comming into open disputation, it was concluded by maister Giles one of the Austine friers (who was thought to be most reasonable of all the other friers, in this wise) that after his sentence, the prelats were in the truer part, &c. Hæc ex Godfrido de Fontanis.

Concerning this wrangling contention betweene the Vniuersitie and friers of France heretofore mentioned, whereof partly the originall cause there may be vnderstood by that which hath beene said, to rise vpon certaine priuiledges granted by popes to the friers, to intermeddle in matters of parish churches: As to heare confessions, to preach and teach, with power thereto annexed to gather for their labour, to bury within their houses, and to receiue imprpriations, &c: because it were too long here to describe the full circumstances thereof, also because the said contention did indure a long time not only in France, but also came ouer into England: the whole discourse thereof more amplie (Christ willing) shall be declared in the beginning of the next booke following, when we come to the story of Armachanus.

About what time and yeare, this brawle was in the Vniuersitie of Paris betweene the friers and prelats there, as hath beene declared: the like contention happened also in the Vniuersitie of Oxford in the yeare aboue prefixed, 1354. saue only that the strife among the maisters of Paris, as it rose vpon frierly ceremonies, so it went no further, then brawling words and matter of excommunication: but this tumult rising of a drunken cause, proceeded further vnto bloodie stripes. The first originall whereof began in a tauerne, betweene a scholar and the good man of the house. Who falling together in altercation, grew to such heate of words, that the student (contra ius hospitij) poured the wine vpon the head of the host and brake his head with the quart pot. Vpon this occasion giuen, eftsoones parts began to be taken betweene the townes men and the scholars. Insomuch that a grieuous sedition and conflict followed vpon the same: wherein many of the townesmen were wounded, and to the number of twentie slaine. Diuers also of the scholars grieuously hurt. The space of two daies this hurly burlie continued. Upon the second day certaine religious and deuout persons ordained a solemne procession generall, to pray for peace. Yet notwithstanding all that procession as holy as it was, it would not bring peace. In the which procession (the skirmish still waxing hote) one of the students being hardly pursued by the townesmen, for succour in his flight, came running to the priest or frier, which caried about (as the maner was) the pixe: thinking to find refuge at the presence of the transubstantiated God of the altar there caried and inbored. Notwithstanding, the God there not present, or else not seeing him, or else peraduenture being asléepe, the scholar found there small helpe. For the townsmen in the heate of the chase, forgetting belike the vertue of the popes transubstantiation, followed him so hard, that in the presence of the pixe they brake his head, and wounded him grieuously. This done, at length some peace or truce for that day was taken. The next morow following, other townsmen in the villages about, ioyning with the the townsmen of Oxford; confederated together in great force and power to set vpon the students there, and so did, hauing a blacke flag borne before them, and so inuaded the Vniuersitie men. Whereupon the scholars being ouermatched and compelled to flée into their halles and hostles, were so pursued by their enemies, that twentie of the doores of their halles & chambers were broke open, & many of them wounded, and (as it is said) slaine and throwne into priuies: their bookes with kniues and bils cut all in pieces, and much of their goods caried away. And thus the students of that Vniuersitie being conquered by the townsmen of Oxford, and of the countrie about, departed and left the Vniuersitie. So that for a time, the schooles there, and all schoole acts did vtterly cease from all exercise of studie, except onely Merton colledge hall, with a few other remaining behind.

A seditious commotion betweene the townes men and the scholars in the Vniuersitie of Oxford.

Procession for peace.

The holy procession would bring no peace.

Transubstantiation will not helpe in time of neede.

A conflict of the scholars of Oxford.

The Vniuersitie of Oxford dissolued for a time.

This being done the 12. day of February, the queene at the same time being at Woodstocke, was brought to bed, and purified on the first Sunday in Lent with great solemnitie of iusting. About which time the bishop of Lincolne their Diocesane hearing of this excessiue outrage, sendeth his inhibition to all parsons and priests, forbidding them throughout all Oxford, none to celebrate masse or any diuine seruice in the presence of any lay person within the said towne of Oxford, interdicting withall the whole towne. Which interdiction indured the space of a whole yeare and more.

The towne of Oxford interdicted.

The king also sent thither his iustices to examine & inquire of the matter. Before whom diuers lay men and of the clergie were indicted, and foure of the chiefe burgesses of the said towne were indicted, and by the kings commandement sent to the tower of London, were there imprisoned. At length through much labour of the nobles, the king so tooke vp the matter, that sending his writings vnto all sheriffes in England offered pardon, to all and singuler students of that Vniuersitie, (wheresoeuer dispersed) for that transgression: Whereby the Vniuersitie in short time was replenished againe as before. Moreouer was granted to the Vicechancellor or commissarie (as they terme him) of the towne and Vniuersitie of Oxford, to haue the assise of bread, ale, wine, and all other victuals, the maior of the said towne being excluded. Also was granted and decreed, that the commons of Oxford should giue to the Vniuersitie of Oxford 200. pound sterling, in part of satisfaction for their excesses: reserued notwithstanding to euery one of the students his seuerall action against any seuerall person of the townesmen, &c.

Granted to the commissarie of Oxford to haue the assise of bread and ale, and other priuiledges aboue the Maior of the towne.

About the yeare of our Lord 1354. the king with the consent of his counsell, reuoked home againe out of Flanders the staple of Wooll, with all things thereunto appertaining, and stablished the same in sundrie places within the realme, namely in Westminster, Canturbury, Chichester, Bristow, Lincolne, and in Hull. Which Staple after An. 1362. was translated ouer into Callis.

Of Simon Islip archbishop of Canturburie mentioned a little before, pag. 360. I reade in the said author aboue specified, that he by his letters patent directed to all parsons and vicars within his prouince: straitely charged them and their parishioners vnder paine of excommunication, not to abstaine from bodily labor, vpon certaine saints daies, which before were wont to be hallowed and consecrated to vnthriftie idlenesse. Item, that to priests should be giuen no more for their yearely stipend, but 3. pound 6. s. viij. d. which made diuers of them to rob and steale, &c. An. 1362. The next yeare following, which was 1363. the foresaid king Edward kept his parliament at London in the moneth of October: wherein was prohibited, no gold nor siluer to be worne in knines, girdles, brooches, rings, or in any other ornament belonging to the body, except the wearer might dispend 10. pound by yeare. Item, that none should weare either silks or costly furres, except such as might dispend 100. pound by yeare. Also that Merchant venturers should not export ouer any merchandise out of the realme, or seeke for wines in other countries: whereby other nations should be constrained rather to seeke to vs, &c. But none of this did take any great effect.

An wholesome decree of a good archbishop not to abstaine from bodily labour vpon certaine holy daies.

A parliament.

After this Simon Islip as is aboue recorded, followed Simon Langham, then William Wittelesey, after whom next in the place succeeded Simon Sudburie.

Simon Sudburie archb. of Canturbury.

Much about the same time, the Nuns of saint Bridgits order began first. About which time also was builded the queenes college in Oxford, by queene Philip of England, wife to king Edward the third: Circa annum domini 1360.

The nuns of saint Bridgits order.

Moreouer in the time of this pope Innocent, frier John Lyle bishop of Ely, moued with certaine iniuries (as hee thought) done to him by the lady Blanch, made his complaint to the pope. Who sending downe his curse to the bishop of Lincolne, and other prelats to bee executed vpon the aduersaries of the bishop of Ely: commanded them, that if they did know any of the said aduersaries dead and buried (that notwithstanding) they should cause the same to be taken vp: which also they performed accordingly, of whom some had beene of the kings counsell. Wherefore the king being displeased, and not vnworthilie, did trouble and molest againe the said prelats. This comming to the popes hearing, certaine were directed downe from the court of Rome, in the behalfe of the foresaid bishop of Ely: who meeting with the bishop of Rochester the kings treasurer, deliuered vnto him being armed, letters from the bishop of Rome, the tenour whereof was not knowen. Which done, they incontinent auoided away. But certaine of the kings seruants pursuing, did ouertake them: of whom some they imprisoned, some they brought to the Iustices, and so were condemned to be hanged. Wherein may appeare what reuerence the popes letters in this kings daies had in this Realme of England. Ex Chro. Walsing. This pope Innocent ordained the feast of the holy speare, and of the holie nailes.

This ladie Blanch was Dutchesse of Lancaster.

And here to make an end of this fourth booke, now remaineth after our order and custome before begunne, to prosecute the race of the archbishops of Canturburie, in this foresaid fourth booke contained, beginning where before wee left, pag. 154. at Lanfrancus.

34. Lanfrancus. 19.

Polydor Virg. lib. 9. numbereth this Lanfrancus to bee the thirtie three archbishop. But by the count of other authors (namely by the chronicle of the monke of Douer) seemeth to be deceiued, as hee was in the 28. yeares of Dunstan, which indeed did sit but nineteene or twentie at the most. This errour of Polydore seemeth to come by leauing out either Elsius, which was the 23. or by leauing out Elfricus, which was the 26. as in some authors I find.

Moreouer here is to bee noted, that although the said Elfricus were left out, yet Lanfrancus cannot be 33.

Note also, that in the table of the third booke before, after Stricius to put in Sanctus Aluredus. Which in the order of archbishops I left out in the end of the third booke, page 154.

This Lanfrancus was an Italian, and a stout champion of the pope. After his stubborne dissension with Thomas archbishop of Yorke, hee wrote against Berengarius, intituling his booke, Opus Scintillarum, pag. 157.

Also the same Lanfranke builded the new church at Canturburie, and pluckt downe the old. By him was builded the church of saint Gregorie. At length hee was expulsed by king William Rufus.

35. Anselmus. 26.

Of this Anselmus, and the strife betweene him and the king, looke in the pag. 168.

36. Radulphus. 8.

Vnder Rad. the order of Cisternians began.

37. Gulielmus Curboil. 13.

By this W. the new worke of the church of saint Martins at Douer was builded.

38. Theobaldus. 24.

By this Theobald, monks were first brought into the church of Douer. He was expulsed by K. Stephan. In his time the church of S. Gregory was burned at Canturbury.

39. Tho. Becket. 9.

Of the life and death of this Becket, see the pag. 186.

Ex Crickeladensi: Magnates in Anglia interdixerunt, ne quis martyrem Thomam nominaret, ne quis eius miracula prædicaret, interminantes minas mortis seu maximarum pœnarum omnibus confitentibus eum fuisse martyrem, & miracula eius prædicantibus, &c.

Ex histor. Cricke ladensi.

40. Richardus. 10.

This Richard was a monke: in his time Christs church at Canturburie was burned.

41. Baldwinus. 7.

Betweene this Baldwine and the monks was great discord. He suspended the prior from his priorship, and 22. monks from all seruice. He caused the Subprior with all his adherents to be excommunicate through all Kent.

42. Hubertus. 14.

In the time of this Hubert the chapell of Lambeth was pluckt downe. Also the church of Douer was burned.

43. Stephanus Langhton. 22.

This Stephan with the monks of Canturbury, were expulsed by king John.

This Stephan intending to giue orders in the chapell of Lambeth, was stopped by the monks of Canturburie, through their appeale and prohibition. Wherfore he required Eustace bishop of London, to minister the same orders in the church of S. Paul.

In his time fell great variance betweene the monks of Rochester and the monks of Canturburie, for the election of their bishop, which election the monks of Canturburie would would not admit, before the Rochester monkes had presented the bishoppes staffe in the church of Canturburie, so that both the churches sent their messengers to the court of Rome.

44. Richardus Magnus. 4. At the consecration of this Richard, contention rose betweene the Bishop of Rochester & bishop of Bathe, who should consecrate him.

Item, betweene the said Richard and the monks of Canturburie fell a grieuous discord, about certaine liberties belonging to the Archbishop.

The said archbishop for certaine quarrels against the king, went vp to Rome, who died in Tuscia.

After this Richard, the election of three archbishops was callate at Rome: of Radulphus de noua villa, of John Prior of Canturburie, of John Blund.

45. Edmund of Abenden. 7. This Edmund was called saint Edmund, at whose election the prior of Douer thinking to bee present, as at ỳ mariage of his mother, was not permitted by the monkes of Canturburie. For the which iniurie hee appealed and went to Rome to complaine, not against the elect, but against the election: where hee obtained of the pope for all the priors and successors of Douer, to haue full interest in the election of the archbishops, besides other priuiledges which hee obtained, percase not without some good store of money. Afterward the monks of Canturburie, accused him to the archbishop, as though hee stood against the person of the elect, and so obtained of the archbishop being angry with him, to haue brought him vnder the chapter of Canturburie, there to bee punished. Whereupon the prior seeing him so destitute of all helpe of lawyers, was constrained in the foresaid chapter to crie peccaui. Then being suspended from his priorship, was at length sent home to Douer, being compelled first to set his hand to a certaine composition betweene him and the foresaid monks.

The said Edmund archbishop, also hauing some quarrell against the king, went vp to Rome, and died before his comming home.

46. Bonifacius. 25. In the time of this Boniface, pope Gregorie wickedly granted to king Henrie the third (for the getting of the kingdome of Sicile, which belonged not to him to giue, nor to the other to take,) tenths of goods temporall and spirituall, for fiue yeares. Item, all the first yeares fruites of churches that should bee vacant for fiue yeares. Item, halfe of all the goods of beneficed men not resident at their benefices. Item, all Legacies not distinctly giuen. And yet the kingdome of Sicile neuer came to his hands, which belonged to Manfredus, sonne of Fredericke the emperor. Strife betweene this Boniface, and the prior of Canturburie. Item, betweene him and bish. of Roff. Item, betweene him and the chapter of Lincolne: all which was after agréed: Chro. Douerens. fol. 20. pag. 2.

Strife in Winchester, about chusing the bishop after the death of Aymarus the kings brother.

Strife in the Conuocation which Boniface did hold at Lambeth. In the which councell were recited the statutes of Octobonus, and other new statutes made: against which John Hemelingford the kings chaplen with other moe, and prince Edward on the kings behalfe, did appeale. Chro. Douer. fol. 21.

Vnder this Boniface archbish. Tunbridge and Hadlo first came vnder the custodie of the archb. of Canturbury.

Walter John of Exeter bought the bishoprick of Winchester for 6000. marks, which being knowne hee was faine to pay the same summe againe to the pope, and so was sent home.

Boniface the archbishop being in the parts of Sebaudia, An. 1262. fell an other alteration betweene the prior and chapter of Canturburie on the one part, and the prior and chapter of Douer on the other part. Which two houses almost were neuer in quiet, and all about certaine liberties and priuiledges: as for making the subprior, for receiuing in of monkes, and for visitations of the Church of Douer.

Anno 1268. Boniface archbishop interdicted the city of London, because in the same citie the archbishop of Yorke did hold vp his crosse, the archbishop of Canturbury being there present, the king holding then his parliament at Westminster.

This archbishop died in the parts of Sebaudia.

John prior of Canturburie was elected by the monks against the kings mind, but by the pope refused.

Adam Chilinden was elect, but he resigned his election to ỳ pope.

47. Robert Kilwarbie. Frier. 6. In the time of this Robert Kilwarby, appeale was taken against the chapter of Canturbury by the bishop of Winchester, of Worcester, and Exeter: for the which cause the said bishops went vp to Rome to prosecute the appeale. The matter was, because they did not their obedience to the monks of Canturburie, the see beeing emptie.

Walter Gifkard archbishop of Yorke, going toward the generall councell, bare vp his crosse through the middle of Kent, in the time of this Robert archbishop of Canturburie, An. 1272.

By pope Gregorie 10. in the generall councell at Lions, all the orders of friers were put downe, 4. orders only except, that is, Dominicks, Franciscans, Carmelites, and Augustines.

This Robert Kilwarby by the commandement of pope Nicolas was made cardinall of Rome, bishop of Portuensis.

Where is to be noted an vntruth in Polydore Virgil, which saith that he was made cardinall by pope Gregorie, which could not be. An vntruth in Polyd. Virgil.

48. Iohn Peckham. 13. Robert Burnell bishop of Bathe was elected, but by the pope refused: For whom John Peckham a gray frier, was placed by pope Nicolas.

In the first yeare of this frier Peckham, Wil. Wikewane archb. of Yorke comming from his consecration at Rome to Douer, bare vp his crosse through the midst of Kent, whereat was no little adoe.

Robert Gernemine archdeacon of Canturbury went to law at Rome for the liberties and possessions of his archdeaconship 2. yeares, and there died.

In his time also an other wrangling fell betweene the monks of Canturbury, & the monks of Douer, in the time of this John Peckham, for admitting certaine nouices of Douer into orders. Ex chr. Monach. Douer. fol. 42.

This Peckham holding a councell at Lambeth ordeined diuers statutes, and caused the ordinances of the councell of Lions, and of Boniface archbishop of Canturburie, and his predecessor to be obserued.

Great strife and hatred was betweene this Peckham and Thomas bishop of Hereford: who being excommunicated by Peckham, appealed to Rome, and went to the pope.

The prior and couent of Cant. made their appeale, against this archb. Peckham, that he should not consecrate Walter le Schamel new elect bishop of Salisburie, in any other place, except only in the church of Canturbury, but by their leaue and licence first obtained. Notwithstanding the archbishop nothing regarding their appeale, proceeded in the consecration of the said bishop nere to the towne of Reading, whereupon the prior and couent ceased not to prosecute their appeale against the archbishop.

Betweene Richard Ferrings archdeacon of Cant. of the one partie, and the barons of Douer of the other partie, the same yeare fell out an other like wrangling, for that the archdeacon claimed to visit the church of Douer: contrarie the barons affirmed, that none had nor should haue to do there to order or dispose in spirituall matters but onely the archbishop, and the prior and couent of saint Martin. Ex eod. chron. fol. 46.

After the death of William Whichwane archbishop of Yorke, John de Roma succéded after him, and comming from his consecration at Rome to Douer, bare his crosse through the middle of Kent, contrary to the inhibition of John Peckham.

49. Robert. Winchelsey. 19.

This Robert which was archb. in the latter time of king Edward the 1. for certaine displeasure of the king conceiued against him, departed the realme, and in his banishment remained two or three yeares. And about the beginning of the reigne of king Edward the second was restored againe: Anno 1309. Ex chro. Rich. 2. Thus few archbishops of Cant. wee find, with whom kings haue not had some quarrel or other. The cause betweene the king and him (saith mine author) was this: that the king accused him to pope Clement to disturbe his realme, and to take part with rebels, &c. Ex chro. S. Albani.

This Robert also excommunicated Walter, bishop of Couent. for holding with the king and Peter Gaueston against the ordinances of the barons; wherefore the said bishop appealed to the pope, against whom the archbishop sent Adam Merimouth.

This Adam Merimouth was compiler of the storie of K. Edward.

In the time of this Robert archbishop, the order of Templaries were abolished by pope Clement 5. in the councell of Vienna with this sentence diffinitiue: Quanquam de iure non possumus, tamen ad plenitudinem potestatis dictum ordinem reprobamus.

50. Gualter Reynald. 15.

After the decease of Rob. Winchelsey, who departed Anno 1312. Thomas Cobham a learned man was elected by full consent of the Monks: who came to Auinion, to haue his election confirmed. But the pope reseruing the vacant seate to his owne hands put in Walter Reynald B. of Worcester Chancellor of England, who gouerned the seate 15. yeares.

The chronicler of S. Albans, recordeth also how in the daies of this archb. An. 1319. certaine lepers conspiring with the Turks and Iewes went about to impotionate, and infect all christendome, by inuenoming their fountaines, lakes, pits, barrels, and such other places. Of the which crime diuers of them being conuict, were worthilie burned in France. About the which yeare, the said author maketh also relation, how in the realme of England much murren fell among the beasts: insomuch, that the dogges eating vpon their flesh (infected belike by the waters and fountaines) fel downe dead incontinent. Neither durst men for that cause almost taste of any beefe: An. 1318. 1319. Ex Chron. Alban.

This Walter archb. taking part with the queene Isabell against king Edward her husband, died the same yeer in which he was deposed: An. 1237. Ex Chro. S. Albani.

After Walter the archb. as affirmeth the chron. of S. Alban, succéded Simon Mepham. Of whom I maruell that Polydore maketh no word or mention: belike hee sate not long: after followed John Stratford.

51. John Stratford. 29.

In the story of Adam Merimouth is recorded that this J. Stratford intending to visit the diocelle of Northfolke, was not receiued by the bishop, the chapter and clergie there, alledging that he obserued not the ordinary canon therein. To whom the archbishop said againe, he had the popes letters, and shewed the same. But the other answered, that those letters were fallie obtained and tended to the suppression of the clergie, and therfore they would not obey: wherefore the archbishop excommunicated the bishop, and suspended the prior, and interdicted the couent: An. 1343.

52. Ioh. Offord. 10. moneths.

Maister John Offord chancellor of England was elected and confirmed archb. of Canturbury, but not consecrated, and sat but 10. months, about the yeare of our Lord, 1350. Pestilentia in Anglia.

53. Tho. Braidwarden. 1.

This Thomas Braidwarden following after John Stratford sate not long but died within 10 moneths of the plague, as they say. Which was called then the first great plague in England, raging so sore in all quarters, that it was thought scarce the tenth part of men to bee left aliue.

The first great plague in England.

54. Simon Islepe. 17.

In the time of Simon Islepe which followed after Bradwarden; king Edw. An. 1362. is reported after the blind superstition of those daies, to offer in the church of Westminster the vestiments wherin saint Peter did celebrate masse. Which belike were well kept from mothes, to last so long. Ex Chron. Alban.

The vestiments wherin S. Peter said masse, or else the papists doe lie.

The same Simon Islepe, among other constitutions ordeined through all churches and chapels vnder paine of excommunication; that no man should abstaine from bodily labors vpon certaine saints daies, as is before touched: which fact of his is not a little noted in our monkish histories.

This Simon builded Canturburie colledge in Oxford.

The conclusion of this fourth Booke.

The conclusion of this booke. Antichrist in his pride.

For asmuch as Satan being chained vp all this while, for the space of a thousand yeares, beginneth about this time to bee loosed and to come abrode, according to the forewarning of saint Iohns Reuelation: Therfore to conclude the fourth Booke, wherin sufficiently hath beene described the excessiue pride and pompe of Antichrist, flourishing in his ruffe, and securitie, from the time of William Conquerour hitherto: now (Christ willing and assisting vs thereunto) wee minde in these latter Bookes hereafter following, in order of history to expresse the latter persecutions and horrible troubles of the church, raised vp by Satanas in his minister Antichrist, with the resistance againe of Christs church against him. And so to prosecute (by the mercifull grace of Christ) the proceeding and course of times, till we come at length to the fall and ruine of the said Antichrist. To the intent that if any be in such error to thinke that Antichrist is yet to come, let him consider and ponder wel the tragicall rages, the miserable and most sorrowfull persecutions, murthers, and vexations of these latter 300. yeares now following, and I doubt not but he will be put out of all doubt to know, that not only Antichrist is already come, but also to know where hee sitteth and how he is now falling apace (the Lord Christ be thanked for euer) to his decay and confusion.

The Fifth Booke containing the last three hundred yeares from the loosing out of Satan.

The fifth booke.

THus hauing discoursed in these former bookes, the order and course of yeares, from the first tying vp of Satan vnto the yeer of our Lord 1360. I haue a little ouerpassed the stint of time in the Scripture appointed, for the losing out of him againe. For so it is written by S. John Apoc. 20. that after a thousand yeares, Satanas the old Dragon shall bee let loose againe for a season, &c.

The yeares and time of loosing out Satan examined.

For the better explanation of the which mystery, let vs first consider the contert of the Scripture: afterward let vs examine by history and course of times, the meaning of the same: and first to recite the words of the Apocalypse, the text of the prophesie is this, chap. 20.

Apoc. 20.

And I saw an angell descending from heauen, hauing a key of the bottomlesse pit, and a great chaine in his hand. And he tooke the Dragon the old serpent, which is the diuell and Satanas, and bound him for a thousand yeares, and put him in the bottomlesse dungeon & shut him vp, and signed him with his seale, that he should no more seduce the Gentils, till a thousand yeares were expired. And after that he must bee loosed againe for a little space of time. And I saw seates, and they sat vpon them, and iudgement was giuen vnto them; and the soules I saw of them which were beheaded for the testimonie of Iesus, &c.

By these words of the Reuelation here recited, three speciall times are to be noted.

First, the being abrode of Satan to deceiue the world.

Secondly, the binding vp of him.

Thirdly, the loosing out of him againe, after a thousand yeares consummate, for a time.

The place of the Apoc. 20. expounded, for the loosing out of Satan.

Concerning the interpretation of which times, I see the common opinion of many to be deceiued by ignorance of histories, and state of things done in the church: supposing that the chaining vp of Satan for a thousand yeares, spoken of in the Reuelation, was ment from the birth of Christ our Lord. Wherein I grant that spiritually the strength and dominion of Satan in accusing and condemning vs for sinne, was cast downe at the passion and by the passion of Christ our Sauior, and locked vp not only for a thousand yeares, but for euer and euer. Albeit as touching the malicious hatred and furie of that serpent, against the outward bodies of Christs poore saints (which is the heele of Christ) to afflict and torment the church outwardly: That I iudge to bee ment in the Reuelation of saint John, not to be restrained till the ceasing of those terrible persecutions of the primitiue church. At what time it pleased God to pitie the sorrowfull affliction of his poore flocke, being so long vnder persecution, the space of three hundred yeares, and so to asswage their griefes and torments. Which is ment by binding vp of Satan, worker of all those mischiefes: vnderstanding thereby, that forsomuch as the diuell prince of this world, had now by the death of Christ the sonne of God lost al his power and interest against the soule of man, should turne his furious rage and malice (which he had to Christ, against the people of Christ (which is ment by the heele of the seed, Genesis 3.) in tormenting their outward bodies. Which yet should not be for euer, but for a determinate time, when as it should please the Lord to bridle the malice, and shackle the power of the old serpent, and giue rest vnto his church for the tearme of a thousand yeares. Which time being expired, the said serpent should be suffred loose againe for a certaine or a small time, Apoc. 20

What the loosing of Satan doth meane in Scripture.

Three reasons.

The first reason.

And thus to expound this prophetical place of Scripture I am led by three reasons.

The first is, for that the binding vp of Satan, and closing him in the bottomlesse pit by the angell, importeth as much that he was at libertie, raging and doing mischiefe before. And certes those so terrible and so horrible persecutions of the primitiue time vniuersally through the whole world, during the space of three hundred yeares of the church, doe declare no lesse. Wherein it is to be thought and supposed, that Satan all that time, was not fastened and closed vp.

The 2. reason.

The second reason mouing me to thinke that the closing vp of Satan was after the ten persecutions of the primitiue church, is taken out of the twelfth chapter of the Apocalypse. Where we reade, that after the woman (meaning the church) had trauelled forth her man child, the old Dragon the diuell, the same time being cast downe from heauen, drawing the third part of the starres with him; stood before the woman with great anger, and persecuted her (that is, the church of God) with a whole flood of water (that is, with abundance of all kinds of torments) and from thence went moreouer to fight against the residue of her seede, and stood vpon the sands of the sea, whereby it appeareth that he was not as yet locked vp.

The 3. reason.

Apoc. cap. 13.

The third reason I collect out of the Apocalyps thirteenth chapter; where is written of the beast, signifying the emperiall Monarchie of Rome: that he had power to make warre forty and two moneths. By the which moneths is meant no doubt, the time that the Dragon, and the persecuting emperours, should haue in afflicting the saints of the primitiue church. The computation of which forty two moneths (counting euery moneth for a Sabbath of yeares, that is, for seuen yeares, after the order of Scripture) riseth to the summe (counting from the passion of the Lord Christ) three hundred yeares lacking fiue, at what time Parentius the last persecutor in Rome fighting against Constantinus, was drowned with his souldiers, like as Pharao was drowned persecuting the children of Israel in the red sea. Vnto the which xlij. moneths, or Sabbaths of yeares, if yee adde the other fiue yeares wherein Licinius persecuted in the East; yee shall find iust three hundred yeares, as is specified before in the first booke of this volume, pag. 79.

xlij. moneths in the Apoc. cap. 13. examined.

What time Satan was tied vp.

After the which forty and two moneths being expired, manifest it is that the furie of Satan, that is, his violent malice and power ouer the saints of Christ, was diminished and restrained vniuersally through the whole world.

Thus then the matter standing euident, that Satan after 300. yeares, counting from the passion of Christ, began to be chained vp, at what time the persecution of the primitiue church began to cease: now let vs see, how long this binding vp of Satan should continue, which was promised in the booke of the Reuelation to be a thousand yeares. Which thousand yeers, if ye adde to the xlij. moneths of yeares, that is, to 294. yeers: they make 1294. yeares after the passion of the Lord. To these moreouer adde the 30. yeares of the age of Christ, and it commeth to the yeare of our Lord 1324. which was the yeare of the letting out of Satan, according to the prophesie of the Apocalyps.

About what time and yeare Satan was let out by the count of the Apocalyps.

¶ A Table containing the time of the persecution both of the primitiue, and of the latter church; with the count of yeares from the first binding vp of Satan, to his loosing againe, after the mind of the Apocalyps.

The first persecution of the primitiue church, beginning at the 30. yeares of Christ, was prophesied to continue 42. moneths, that is,	294. An.
The ceasing of the last persecution of the primitiue church by the death of Licinius the last persecutor, began Anno 324. from the nativitie of Christ, which was from the 30. yeare of his age.	294.	The ceasing of persecution in the primitiue church.

The time of loosing of Satan.

About which yeare pope Boniface the eighth was pope, and made the sixth booke of the decretals: confirmed the orders of friers, and priuiledged them with great freedomes, as appeareth by his constitution: Super cathedram, An. } 1294.

The time of Antichrist, examined.

Unto the which count of yeares both not much disagree that I found in a certaine old chronicle prophesied and written in the latter end of a booke, which booke was written as it seemeth, by a monke of Douer, and remaineth yet in the custody of William Carie, a citizen of London: alledging the prophesie of one Haymcardus a gray frier, grounded vpon the authoritie of Joachim the abbat, prophesying that Antichrist should bee borne the yeare from the nativitie of Christ 1260. Which is, counting after the Lords passion, the very same yeare and time when the orders of friers both Dominickes and Franciscans began first to bee set vp by pope Honorius the third, and by pope Gregorius the 9. which was the yeare of our Lord, counting after his passion, } 1226.

And counting after the nativitie of the Lord, was the yeare, } 1260.

Whereof these verses in the author were written.

Verses prophesying of the comming of Antichrist.

Cum fuerint anni completi mille ducenti,
Et decies seni post partum virginis almæ:
Tunc Antichristus nascetur dæmone plenus.

And these verses were written, as appeareth by the said author, An. 1285.

These things thus premised for the loosing out of Satan, according to the prophesie of the Apocalyps, now let vs enter (Christ willing) to the declaration of these latter times, which followed after the letting out of Satan into the world. Describing the wondrous perturbations and cruell tyrannie stirred vp by him against Christs church: also the valiant resistance of the church of Christ against him and Antichrist, as in these our bookes here vnder following may appeare.

The argument of the bookes after following.

The argument of which booke consisteth in two parts: first to entreate of the raging furie of Satan now losed, and of Antichrist; against the saints of Christ fighting and trauelling for the maintenance of the truth, and reformation of the church. Secondly, to declare the decay and ruine of the said Antichrist, through the power of the word of God, being at length, either (in a great part of the world) ouerthrowne, or at least vniuersally in the whole world detected.

A briefe rehearsall of faithfull learned men, which withstood the proceedings of the pope.

Thus then to begin with the yéer of our Lord, 1360. wherein I haue a little, as is afore said, transgressed the stint of the first loosing out of Satan: wee are come now to the time wherein the Lord, after long darkenesse, beginneth some reformation of his church, by the diligent industrie of sundrie his faithfull and learned seruants: of whom diuers alreadie wee haue foretouched in the former booke before, as namely Guliel. de Sancto Amore, Marcilius Patauinus, Ockam, Robertus Gallus, Robertus Grosthed, Petrus de Cugnerijs, Ioannes Rupescissanus, Conradus Hager, Ioannes de Poliaco, Cesenas, with other moe: which withstood the corrupt errours, and intollerable enormities of the bishop of Rome, beside them which about these times were put to death by the said bishop of Rome, as Chastilion, and Franciscus de Arcatara in the booke before recorded: also the two Franciscans, martyrs, which were burned at Auinion, mentioned, pag. 360.

Now to these (the Lord willing) wee will adde such other holy martyrs and confessors, who following after in the course of yeares with like zeale and strength of Gods word, and also with like danger of their liues, gaue the like resistance against the enemie of Christs religion, and suffered at his hands the like persecutions. First beginning with that godly man, whosoeuer he was the author of the booke (his name I haue not) intituled the praier and complaint of the Ploughman: written as it appeareth, about this present time.

The author of the ploughmans prayer not knowne.

Which booke as it was faithfully set forth by William Tindall, so I haue as truely distributed the same abrode to the readers hands: neither changing any thing of the matter, neither altering many words of the phrase thereof. Although the oldnesse and age of his speech and tearmes be almost growne now out of vse: yet I thought it so best, both for the bilitie of the booke to reserue it from oblition, as also in his owne language to let it goe abrode, for the more credit and testimonie of the true antiquitie of the same. Adding withall in the margent for the better vnderstanding of the Reader, some interpretation of certaine difficult tearmes and speeches, as otherwise might perhaps hinder or stay the Reader. The matter of this complaining praier of the ploughman thus procéedeth.

An old ancient writing intituled, The praier and complaint of the Ploughman.

An old booke intituled, the ploughmans prayer, written as it seemeth about Wickliffes time. The complaint of Esay applied to these times.

JEsu Christ that was ybore of the maide Marie, haue on thy poore seruants mercy and pitie, and helpe them in their great neede to fight against sinne, and against the diuell that is author of sinne, and more neednes there neuer to crie to Christ for helpe, then it is right now. For it is fulfilled that God said by Isay the prophet: ye riseth vp earlich to follow drunkennesse, and to drinke till it be euen, the harpe and other minstrelsies beeth in your feasts and wine. But the worke of God yee ne beholdeth not, ne taketh no keepe to the workes of his hands: And therefore my people is take prisoner, for they ne had no cunning. And the noblemen of my people deyeden for hunger, and the multitude of my people weren drie for thirst, and therefore hell hath drawne abrode their soule, and hath yopened his mouth without any end. And eftsoones saith Isay the prophet: The word is floten away, and the highnes of the people is ymade sicke, and the earth is infect of his wonnyers, for they haue broken my lawes, and ychanged my right, and han destroyed mine euerlasting bond and [a] forward betweene them and me. And therefore cursing shall deuour the earth, and they that wonneth on the earthly shallen done sinne. And therefore the earth tilyars shullen waxe wood, and few men shullen ben yleft vpon the earth. And yet saith Isay the prophet, this saith God, forasmuch as this people nigheth me with their mouth, and glorifieth me with their lips, and their heart is farre from me. And they han ydrad more mens commandement, then mine, and more draw to their doctrines, then mine. Therefore will I make a great wondring vnto this people, wisedome shall perish away from wise men, and vnderstanding of readie men shall bee yhid. And so it seemeth that another saying of Isay is fulfilled, there as God bad him goe teach the people, and said, goe forth and say to this people: eares haue ye, and vnderstand ye not, and eyes yee haue and sight ne know ye not, Make blind the heart of this people, and make their eares heauie, and close their eyen, lest he see with his eyne, and yheare with his eares, and vnderstand with his heart, and be yturned, and ych heale him of his sickenesse. And Isay said to God: how long Lord shall this be? And God said, For to that the cities ben desolate withouten a wonnier, and an house withouten a man.

[a] Forward, that is, couenant.

Here is mychel nede for to make sorrow, and to crie to our Lord Iesu Christ hertilich for helpe and for succour, that hee wole forgiue vs our sinnes, and giue vs grace and conning to seruen him better hereafter. And God of his endlesse mercy giue vs grace and conning trulich to tellen which is Christs law in helping of mens soules, for we beth lewd men, and sinfull men, and vncunning, and if he woll be our helpe and our succour, we shullen well performe our purpose. And blessed be our Lord God that hideth his wisedome from wise men, and fro readie mens and teacheth it to small children, as Christ teacheth in the gospell.

The law of Christ standeth on two parts.

Christen men haue a law to keepe, the which law beth twe parties. Beleue in Christ that is God, and is the foundment of their law, and vpon this foundment, as he said to Peter, and the gospell beareth witnes, he wol byelden his church, and this is the first partie of Christs law. The second partie of this law beth Christs commandements that beth written in the gospell, and more verilich in christen mens hearts.

And as touching the beleue, we beleuen that Christ is God, and that there ne is no God but he. We beleuen neuertheless that in the godhead there bene three persons, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy ghost, and all these three persons ben one God, and not many gods, and al they beth ylich mightie, ylich good, and ylich wise, and euer haue ben, and euer shullen ben. We beleuen this God made the world of nought, and man he made after his owne likenesse in Paradise that was a land of blisse, and gaue him that land for his heritage, and bad him that he should not eate of the tree of knowledge of good and euill, that was [b] a mid Paradise. Then the diuell that was fallen out of heauen for his pride, had enuie to man, and by a false suggestion he made man eate of this tree, and brake the commandement of God, and tho was man ouercome of the diuell, and so he lost his heritage, and was put out therof into the world that was a land of trauel, and of sorrow vnder the fiends thraldome, to be punished for his trespasse. There man followed wickednesse and sinne, and God for the sinne of man sent a floud into this world, and dround all mankind saue eight soules. And after this floud he let men multiplie in the world, and so he assayed whether man dread him or loued him, and among other he found a man, that hight Abraham: this man he proued whether he loued him and dread him, and bad him that he should offeren Isaac his son vpon an hil, and Abraham as a true seruant fulfilled the Lords commandement: and for his buxumnesse and truth, God sware vnto Abraham that he would multiply his seed as the grauell in the sea, and as the stars of heauen, and he behight to him and to his heires the land of behest for heritage for euer, gif they wolden ben his true seruants and keepe his hests. And God [c] held him forward for Isaac Abrahams son begat Iacob and Esau: and of Iacob that is yeloped Israel, comen Gods people that he chose to be his seruants, and to who he behight the land of behest. This people was in great thraldome in Egypt vnder Pharao that was king of Egypt: and they crieden to God that hee should deliueren them out of that thraldome, and so he did: for he sent to Pharao, Moses and his brother Aaron, and bad him deliuer his people to done him sacrifice: and tofore Pharao he made Moses done many wonders, or that Pharao would deliuer his people, and at the last by night he deliuered his people out of thraldome, and led them through a desert toward the land of beheest, and there he gaue them a law, that they shoulden lyuen after, when they comen into their country, and in their way thitherward, the ten commandements God wrote himselfe in two tables of stone: the remnant of the law he taught them by Moses his seruant, how they shoulden doe euerichone to other, and gif they trespassed againe the law, he ordained how they shoulden be punished. Also he taught them what maner sacrifices they should doe to him, and he chose him a people to ben his priests, that was Aaron and his children, to done sacrifices in the tabernacle, and afterward in the temple also. He chese him the remnant of the children of Leuy to ben seruants in the tabernacle to the priest, and he said: When ye come into the land of beheest, the children of Leuy they shullen haue none heritage amongst their brethren, for I would be their part, and their heritage, and they shullen serue me in the tabernacle by daies and by nights, and he ordained that priests should haue a part of the sacrifices that were offered in the tabernacle, and the first begotten beasts, both of men and beasts and other things, as the lawtelleth. And the other children of Leuy that serued in the tabernacle, should haue tithings of the people to their liuelode, of the which tithings they should geuen the priests the tenth party in forme of offering. The children of Leuy, both priests and other, should haue houses and crofts, and lesewes for their beasts in the land of beheest, and none other heritage: and so God gaue them their land of beheest, and bad them that they ne should worship no other God then him. Also he bad that they should keepe his commandements; and gif they did so, all their enemies about them should drede them, and be their seruants. And gif they worshipped false gods, and so forsaken his lawes, he behight them that he would bring them out of that land, and make them serue their enemies: but yet he said hee would not benemen his mercie away from them, if they would cry mercie and amend their defaults: and all this was done on Gods side.

Gods loue to man.

And here is much loue showed of God to man. And who so looketh the bible, he shall finde that man showed him little loue againward: for when they were come into their heritage, they forgatten their God, and worshipped false gods. And God sent to them the Prophets and his seruants [a] feile times to bid them withdrawen them from their sinnes, and other they haue slowen them, or they beaten them, or they led them in prison: and oft times God tooke vpon them great vengeance for their sinnes, and when they cried after helpen to God, he sent them helpe and succour. This is the generall processe of the old Testament, that God gaue to his people by Moses his seruant. And all this testament and this doing ne was but a shadow and a figure of a new Testament that was giuen by Christ. And it was byhoten by Ieremy the Prophet, as Saint Paul beareth witnes in the Epistle that he writeth to the Iewes. And Ieremy saith in this wise: Loe daies shall come, God saith, and I will make a new band to the house of Israel, and to the house of Iuda, not like the forward that I made with their fathers, in that day that I tooke their hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; the which forward they maden vein, and I had lordship ouer them. But this shall be the forward that I wold make with them after those daies: I will giue my lawes with them in their inwardnesse, and I will writen them in their hearts, and I will be their God, and they should be my people: and after that a man shall not teach his neighbour, ne his brother. For all (God saith) from the least to the most, should know me, for I will forgiuen them their sins, and will no more thinke on their sinnes.

[a] Feile times, that is, oft times.

This is the new testament, that Christ both God and man, borne of the maid Mary, he taught here in this world to bring man out of sinne, and out of the diuels thraldome and seruice, to heauen, that is land of blisse and heritage, to all tho that beleeuen on him, and keepen his commandements, and for his teaching he was done to the death. But the third day arose againe from death to life, and fet Adam and Eue, and many other folke out of hell, and afterward he came to his disciples, and comforted them. After, he stied vp to heauen to his father, and tho he sent the holy Ghost amonges his disciples: and in time comming, he will come and demen all mankind after their werkes, and after the words he spake vpon earth: some to blisse, within body and in soule euer withouten end; and some to paine withouten end, both in body and in soule.

This is our beleeue and all christen mens, and this beleeue is the first point of the new Testament, that ych christen man is hold stedfastly to beleeue, and rather to suffer the death, than forsaken this beleeue; and so this beleeue is the bread of spirituall life, in forsaking sinne, that Christ brought vs to life.

But for asmuch as mans liuing ne stondeth not all only ych by bread, he hath ygiuen vs a draught of water of life to drinke. And who that drinketh of that water, he ne shall neuer afterward ben a thurst. For this water is the cleare teaching of the gospell, that encloseth seuen commandements.

Speciall precepts or lessons of the gospell.

The first is this: Thou shalt loue thy God ouer all other things, and thy brother as thy selfe, both enemy and friend.

The second commandement is of meekenesse, in the which Christ chargeth vs to forsake lordship vpon our brethren, and other worldly worships, and so he did himselfe.

The third commandement, is in stondiug stedfastlich in truth, and forsaking all falsenesse.

The fourth commandement, is to suffer in this world diseases and wrongs, withouten ageinstondings.

The fifth commandement is mercy, to forgiuen our brethren their trespasse, as often time as they gilteth, without asking of vengeance.

The sixth commandement is poorenesse in spirit, but not to ben a beggar.

The seuenth commandement, is chastitie: that is, a forsaking of fleshlich likings displeasing to God. These commandements encloseu the ten commandements of the old, and somewhat more.

This water is a blessed drinke for christen men soule. But more harme is, much folke would drinke of this water, but they mowe not come thereto: for God saith by Ezekiel the Prophet; When iche geue to you the most cleane water to drinke, ye troubled that water with your feet, and that water is so defouled, ye geue my sheep to drinke. But the cleane water is yhid fro the sheep, and but gif God cleare this, it is dread lest the sheep dyen for thurst. And Christ that is the wisdome of the father of heauen, and well of this wisdome that come from heauen to earth to teach man this wisdome, through the which man should ouercome the sleights of the diuell, that is principall enemy of mankind: haue mercy and pitie of his people, and shew if it be his will how this water is troubled, and by whom: and [e] sith cleare this water that his sheep mowne drinken hereof, and kele the thirst of their souls. Blessed mote our Lord ben, for he hath ytaught vs in the gospell, that ere then hee would come to the vniuersall dome, then should come many in his name, & sayen, that they weren Christ; and they shoulden done many wonders, and begilen many men: and many false Prophets shoulden arisen and begilen much folke.

Christs sheep stopped from cleane water, and compelled to drinke puddle.

[e] Sith, that is, afterward.

A Lord, yblessed mote thou ben of euerich creature: which ben they that haue ysaid that they weren in Christ, and haue thus begiled thus thy people? Trulich Lord I trow; thilke that sayen that they ben in thy sted, and [f] binemen thy worship, and maken thy people worshippen them as God, and haue hid thy lawes from the people. Lord, who durst sit in thy steed, and benemen thee thy worship and thy sacrifice, and durst maken the people worshippen them as Gods? The Sauter telles, that God ne wole not in the day of dome, demen men for bodelich sacrifices and Holocaustes: but God saith; Yeld to me sacrifice of herying, and yeld to God thine auowes, and clepe me in the day of tribulation, and ych wil defend thee, and thou shalt worship me.

[f] Bynemen, that is, take away.

The [g] herying of God standeth in three things. In louing God ouer all other things: in dreading God ouer all other things: in trusting in God ouer all other things.

[g] Herying, that is, worshipping.

These three points Christ teacheth in the gospel. But I trow men louen him but a little. For who so loueth Christ, he wole kepen his words. But men holden his words for hereste and follie, and keepeth mens words. Also men dreden more men and mens lawes and their cursings, then Christ and his lawes and his cursings. Also men hopen more in men and mens helps, than they do in Christ and in his helpe. And thus hath he that setteth in Gods stede, bynomen God these three heryings, and maketh men louen him and his lawes, more then Christ & Christs lawe, and dreaden him also. And there as the people shulden yeeld to God their vowes, he saith he hath power to assoylen them of their auowes, and so this sacrifice hee [h] nemeth away from God. And there as the people should cry to God in the day of tribulation, he letteth them of their crying to God, and bynemeth God that worship. This day of tribulation is whan man is fallen through sinne, into the diuels seruice, and than we shulden cry to God after helpe, and axen forgeuenesse of our sinne, and make great sorrow for our sinne, and ben in full will to doe so no more, ne none other sinne; and that our Lord God wole forgeuen vs our sinne, and maken our soule clene. For his mercy is endlesse.

The honouring of God standeth in three things.

[h] Nemeth, that is, taketh.

But Lord, here men haue benomen thee much worshippe: for men seyn that thou ne might not cleane assoylen vs of our sinne. But if we knowlegen our sinnes to priests, and taken of them a penance for our sinne, gif we mowen speake with them.

Against auricular confession.

A Lord, thou forgaue sometime Peter his sinnes, and also Mary Magdaleine, and many other sinfull men without shriuing to priests, and taking penance of priests for their sins. And Lord thou art as mighty now as thou were that time, but gif any man haue bynomen thee thy might. And we lewd men beleuen, that there nis no man of so great power, and gif any man maketh himselfe of so great power, he [i] heighteth himselfe aboue God. And S. Paul speaketh of one that sitteth in the temple of God, and heighten him aboue God; and gif any such be, he is a false Christ.

Sins forgiuen without shrift.

[i] Heighteth, that is, exalteth.

But hereto seyn priests, that when Christ made clean leprous men, he bade them goe and shew them to priests. And therefore fore they seyn that it is a commandement of Christ, that a man shouldshewen his sinne to priests. For as they seyn, lepre in the old law betokeneth sinne in this new law. A Lord God, whether thine apostles knew not thy meaning as well as men done now? And gif they hadden yknow that thou haddest commanded men to shriuen them to priests, and they ne taught not that commandement to the people; me thinketh they hadden ben to blame. But I trow they knewen well that it was none of thy commandements, ne needfull to heale of mans soule. And as me thinketh, the law of lepre is nothing to the purpose of shriuing: for priests in the old law, hadden certaine points and tokens to know whether a man were leprous or not: and gif they were leprous, they hadden power to putten them away from other cleane men, for to that they weren cleane, and then they hadden power to receiuen him among his brethren, and offeren for him a sacrifice to God.

This nis nothing to the purpose of shriuing. For there nis but one priest, that is Christ, that may know in certaine the lepre of the soule. Ne no priest may make the soule cleane of her sinne, but Christ that is priest after Melchisedekes order: ne no priest here beneath may ywit for certaine whether a man be cleane of his sinne, or cleane assoyled, but gif God tell it him by reuelation. Ne God ordained not that his priests should set men a penance for their sinne, after the quantity of the sinne, but this is mans ordinance, and it may well be that there commeth good thereof. But I wote well that God is much vnworshiped thereby. For men trust more in his absolutions, and in his yeeres of grace, then in Christs absolutions, and thereby is the people much appaired. For now, the sorrow a man should make for his sinne, is put away by this shrift: and a man is more bold to doe sinne for trust of this shrift, and of this bodilich penance.

Penance for sin, is mans ordinance, and not Gods.

Another mischiefe is, that the people is ybrought into this beliefe, that one priest hath a great power to assoylen a man of his sinne and clennere, then another priest hath.

Another mischiefe is this, that some priest may assoylen them both of sinne and paine: and in this they taken them a power that Christ granted no man in earth, ne he ne vsed it dought on earth himselfe.

Another mischiefe is, that these priests sellen forgiuenesse of mens sinnes and absolutions for mony; and this is an heresie accursed that is ycleped simony: and all thilke priests that axeth price for graunting of spirituall grace, [a] beth by holy lawes depriued of their priesthood, and thilke that assenteth to this heresie. And be they ware, for Helyse the Prophet toke no money of Naaman, when he was made cleane of his lepre, but Giesi his seruant: and therefore the lepre of Naaman abode with him and with his heires euermore after.

Here is much matter of sorrow, to see the people thus far ylad away from God and worshupen a false God in earth, that by might and by strength hath ydone away the great sacrifice of God out of his temple: of which mischiefe and discomfort, Daniel maketh mention, and Christ beareth thereof witnesse in the gospell. Who that readeth it, vnderstand it. Thus we haue ytold apertly, how he that saith he sitteth in Christs stede [b] bineme th Christ his worship, and his sacrifice of his people, and maketh the people worshepen him as a god on earth.

Cry we to God, and knowledge we our sinnes euerichone to other, as S. Iames teacheth, and pray we hartilich to God euerichone one for other, and then we shulen hopen forgiuenes of our sins. For God that is endlesse in mercy saith, that he ne will not a sinfull mans death, but that he be turned from his sin and liuen. And therefore, when he came downe to saue mankind, he gaue vs a law of loue and of mercy: and bade, gif a man doe a trespasse, amend him priuilich, and gif he leue not his sin, amend him before witnesse: and gif he ne amendeth not, men should tell to the church; and gif he ne amendeth not than, men should shone his company as a publican, or a man that is misbeleeued: and this law was yfigured in the law of lepre, who that readeth it, he may see the sooth.

But Lord God, he that sitteth in thy stede, hath vndoe thy law of mercy and loue; Lord, thou biddest louen enemies as our selfe; and thou shewest in the gospell, there as the Samaritan had mercy on the Iew. And thou biddest vs also prayen for them that cursen vs, and that defamen vs, and pursuen vs to death. And so Lord thou diddest, and thine apostles also. But hee that clepeth himselfe thy vicar on earth, and head of thy church, he hath vndone thy law of loue and mercy. For gif we speaken of louing our enemies, hee teacheth vs to fight with our enemies, that Christ hath forboden. He curseth and desireth vengeance to them that so doth to him. Gif any man pursueth him, he curseth him, that it is a sorrow a christen man to hearen the cursings that they maken, and blasphemies in such cursing. Of what thing that I know, I may beare true witnesse.

The pope breaketh the law of loue and mercy.

But gif we speake of louing of our brethren, this is vndone by him that saith he is Gods vicar in earth. For Christ in the gospell biddeth vs, that we shoulden clepen vs no father vpon earth: but clepen God our father. to maken vs loue perfitlich together. And he clepeth himselfe father of fathers, and maketh many religions, & to euerich a father. But whether is loue and charity encreased by these fathers and by their religions, or elles ymade lesse? For a frier ne loueth not a monke, ne a seculat man neither, nor yet one frier another that is not of the order, and it is againward.

The pope would be a father, but he beareth no loue.

A Lord, me thinketh that there is little perfection in these religions. For Lord, what charity hauen such men of religion, that known how they mown againstand sin, & fleen away fro their brethren that ben more vncunning then they ben, and suffren them to trauelen in the world withouten their counsell as beasts? Trulich Lord, me thinketh that there is but little charitie, & then is there little perfection. Lord God, when thou were on earth, thou were among sinfull men to drawen them from sin, and thy disciples also. And Lord, I trow thou ne granteste not one man more cunning then another al for himselfe: and I wote well that lewd men that ben laborers, ne trauell not alonlich for himselfe. Lord our beliefe is, that thou ne were not of the world, ne thy teaching neither, ne thy seruants that liueden after thy teaching. But all they forsaken the world, and so euery christen man must. But Lord, whether thou taughteste men forsake their brethrens company and trauell of the world, to liuen in ease and in rest, and out of trouble and anger of the world, by their brethrens trauell, and so forsaken the world?

To forsake the world, is not to liue in ease from company.

A Lord, thou ne taughteste not a man to forsaken a poore estate and trauell, to ben afterward a lord of his brethren, or ben a lords fellow, & dwelling with lords, as doth men of these new religions. Lord thou ne taughteste not men of thy religion thus to forsake the world, to liuen in perfection by themselfe in ease, and by other mens trauel. But Lord they sayen they ben ybound to thy seruice, and seruen thee both night and day in singing their praiers, both for themselfe and for other men, that done them good both quick and dead, and some of them gone about to teach thy people when they hauen leisure.

A Lord, gif they ben thy seruants; whose seruants ben we that cannot preien as they done? And when thou were here on earth, for our need thou taughteste thy seruants to preien thy father priuilich and shortlich: and gif there had ben a better maner of preying, I trow thou wouldest haue taught it in help of thy people. And Lord thou reproueste hypocrits that preyen in long praier, and in open places, to ben yholden holy men. And thou seyst in the Gospell; Wo to you Pharisies hypocrites. And Lord thou ne chargedst not thy seruants with such manner seruice: but thou seyst in the gospell, that the Pharisies worshopen thee with their lips, and their heart is farre from thee. For they [c] chargen more mens traditions than thy commandement.

[c] Chargen, that is, they care for.

And Lord, we lewed men han a beliefe, that thy goodnesse is endlesse: and gif we keepen thine hestes, than ben we thy true seruants. And though we preyen thee but a little and shortlich, thou wilt thinken on vs, and granten vs that vs nedeth, for so thou [d] behited vs sometime. And Lord I trow, that pray a man neuer so many quaint praiers, gif he ne keep not thine hests, he is not thy good seruant. But gif he keep thine hestes, then he is thy good seruant, and so me thinketh. Lord that praying of long praiers ne is not the seruice that thou desireste, but keeping of thine hests: and then a lewd man may serue God as well as a man of religion: though that the ploughman ne may not haue so much siluer for his praier, as men of religion. For they [e] kunnen not so well preisen their praiers as these other chapmen: but Lord our hope is, that our praiers bee neuer the worse, though it be not so well sold as other mens praiers.

[d] Behited, that is, promised. True seruice of God standeth not in long praiers, but in keeping Gods commandements.

[e] Kunnen, that is, they can.

Lord, Ezechiel the Prophet saith, that when he spake to the people thy words, they turned thy wordes into songs and into tales. And so Lord men done now: they singin merilich thy words, & that singing they clepen thy seruice. But Lord I trow that the best singers he herieth thee not most: but he that fulfilleth thy words, he [f] herieth thee full well, though he weep more then sing: and I trow that weeping for breaking of thy comandements, be more pleasing seruice to thee, than the singing of thy words. And would God that men would serue him in sorrow for their sinnes, and that they shoulden afterward seruen thee in mirth. For Christ saith; yblessed ben they that maken sorrow, for they shoulden ben yconforted. And wo to them that ben merry, and haue their comfort in this world. And Christ said, that the world should ioyen, and his seruants shulden bee sory, but their sorrow should be turned into ioy.

Singing in churches, falsly called Gods seruice.

[f] Herieth, that is, worshippeth. Weeping for sins, better seruice then singing in church.

A Lord, he that clepeth himselfe thy vicar vpon earth, hath yordained an order of priests to doe thy seruice in church to fore thy lewd people in singing mattens, euensong and masse. And therefore hee chargeth lewd men in paine of cursing, to bring to his priests tithings and offerings to finden his priests, and hee clepeth that Gods part, and due to priests that seruen him in church.

But Lord, in the old law the tithings of the lewd people ne were not due to priests, but to that other childer of Leuie that serueden thee in the temple, and the priest hadden their part of sacrifices, and the first bygeten beasts and other things as the law telleth. And Lord, Saint Paul thy seruant saith, that the order of the priesthood of Aaron ceased in Christs comming and the law of that priesthood. For Christ was end of sacrifices yoffered vpon the crosse to the father of heauen, to bring man out of sinne, and become himselfe a priest of Melchisedecks order. For he was both king and priest, without beginning and end, and both the priesthood of Aaron and also the law of that priesthood, priesthood, ben ychanged in the comming of Christ. And S. Paul saith it is reproued, for it brought no man to perfection. For bloud of goats, ne of other beasts ne might done away sin, for to that Christ shad his bloud.

The order of priests, not made to offer Christs body.

A Lord Iesu, whether thou ordenest an order of priests to offren in the auter thy flesh and thy bloud to bringen men out of sinne, and also out of peine? And whether thou geue them aloneliche a power to eat thy flesh & thy bloud, & whether none other man may eat thy flesh and thy bloud withouten leue of priests? Lord, we beleuen, that thy flesh is very meat, and thy bloud very drinke; and who eateth thy flesh, and drinketh thy bloud, dwelleth in thee, and thou in him; and who that eateth this bread, shall liue without end. But Lord thine disciples said; this is an hard word: but thou answerest them and seidest: when ye seeth mans soone stiuen vp there he was rather, the spirit is that maketh you liue, the words that ych haue spoken to you ben spirit and life. Lord, yblessed mote thou be, for in this word thou teachest vs that he, that keepeth thy words, and doth after them, eateth thy flesh, and drinketh thy bloud, and hath an euerlasting life in thee. And for wee shoulden haue minde of this liuing, thou gauelst vs the sacrament of thy flesh and bloud, in forme of bread and wine at thy supper, before that thou shuldest suffer thy death, and tooke bread in thine hand, and saidest: Take ye this, & eat it, for it is my body: and thou tookest wine, and blessedst it, and said: This is the bloud of a new and an euerlasting Testament, that shall bee shed for many men in forgiuenesse of sinnes: as oft as ye done this, doe ye this in mind of me.

The sacrament of the body of the Lord abused.

a Fullen, that is, baptise.

A Lord, thou ne bede not thine disciples maken this a sacrifice, to bring men out of peines, gif a priest offred thy body in the altar: but thou bed them go, and a fullen all the folke in the name of the father, and the sonne, and the holy ghost, in forgiuenesse of their sins: and teach ye them to keep those things that ych haue commanded you. And Lord, thine disciples ne ordained not priests principallich to make thy body in sacrament, but for to teach the people, and good husbandmen that well gouerne their housholds, both wiues and children, and their meiny, they ordeined to be priests to teachen other men the law of Christ, both in word, in dede, and they liuedein as true christian men, euery day they eaten Christs body, and drinken his bloud, to the sustenance of liuing of their soules, and otherwhiles they tooken the sacrament of his body in form of bread and wine, in mind of our Lord Iesu Christ.

Priests principally sent to preach, not to say masse, or to make the Lords body.

But all this is turned vpse downe: for now who so wil liuen as thou taughtest, he shall ben holden a foole. And gif he speak thy teaching, he shal ben holden an heretike, & accursed. Lord, yhaue no lenger wonder hereof, for so they seiden to thee when thou were here sometime. And therefore we moten take in patience their words of blasphemy as thou diddest thy selfe, or elsewe weren to blame. And trulich Lord I trow, that if thou were now in the world, and taughtest as thou diddest sometime, thou shouldest ben done to death. For thy teaching is damned for heresie of wise men of the world, and then moten they nedes ben heretikes that teachen thy lore, and all they also that traueilen to liue thereafter.

He that speaketh Gods teaching, is holden an heretike.

And therefore Lord, gif it be thy will, help thine vnkunning and lewd seruants, that wolen by their power and their kunning, helpe to destroy sinne. Leue Lord, sith thou madest woman in help of man, and in a more fraile degree then man is, to be gouerned by mans reason: What perfection of charitie is in these priests and in men of religion, that haue forsaken spousbod that thou ordeinedst in Paradise betwixt man and woman, for perfection to forsaken traueile, and liuen in ease by other mens traueile? For they mow not doe bodilich works for defouling of their hands, with whom they touchen thy precious body in the altar.

Leue Lord, gif good men forsaken the company of woman, and needs they moten haue the gouernaile of man, then moten they ben ycoupled with shrewes, and therefore thy spousehod that thou madest in cleannes from sinne, it is now ychanged into liking of the flesh. And Lord, this is a great mischiefe vnto thy people. And young priests and men of religion, for default of wiues, maken many women horen, and drawn through their ensample many other men to sinne, and the ease that they liuen in, and their welfare, is a great cause of this mischief. And Lord me thinketh, that these ben quaint orders of religion, and none of thy sect that wolen taken horen, whilke God forfends, and forsaken wiues that God ne forfendeth not: and forsaken traual that God commands, and geuen their selfe to idlenes, that is the mother of all noughtinesse.

What inconuenience by the vnmarried liues of priests.

He complaineth of the idlenesse of priests.

And Lord, Mary thy blessed mother & Ioseph, touched oftentimes thy body, and wroughten with their hands, and liueden in as much cleannes of soule, as our priests done now, and touched thy body, and thou touchedest them in their souls. And Lord our hope is, that thou goen not out of a poore mans soule that traueileth for his liuelode with his hands. For Lord, our beliefe is, that thine house is mans soule, that thou madest after thine owne likenesse.

What is the true church of Christ.

b To fore, that is, before.

But Lord God, men maketh now great stonen houses full of glasen windowes, and clepeth thilke thine houses and churches. And they setten in these houses Mawmets of stocks and stones, b to fore them they knelen priuilich and apert, and maken their praiers; and all this they sayen is thy worship, and a great c herying to thee. A Lord, thou forbiddest sometime to make such mawmets, and who that had yworshipped such, had be worthy to be dead.

c Herying, that is, worshipping.

Lord in the gospell thou sayst, that true d heriers of God ne herieth him not in that hill beside Samaria, ne in Hierusalem neither, but true heriers of God herieth him in spirit & in truth. And Lord God, what herying is it to bilden thee a church of dead stones, and robben thy quicke churches of their bodilich liuelood? Lord God, what herying is it, to cloth mawmets of stocks and of stones in siluer and in gold, and in other good colours? And Lord I see thine image gone in cold and in hete in clothes all to broken, without shone and hosen, an hungred and a thrust. Lord what herying is it to teende tapers and torches before blinde mawmets that mowen not I seyen: And hide thee that art our light and our lanterne toward heauen, and put thee vnder a bushell, that for darknesse wee ne may not seene our way toward blisse? Lord what herying is it to kneele tofore mawmets that mow not yheren, and worshepen them with preyers, and maken thine quicke images kneele before them, and asken of them absolutions and blessings, and worshepen them as gods, and putten thy quicke images in thraldome and in traueile euermore as beasts, in cold and in heate, and in feeble fare to finden them in liken of the world? Lord what herying is it to fetch deed mens bones out of the ground, there as they shoulden kindelich rotten, and shrinen them in gold and siluer; and suffren the quicke bones of thine images to rot in prison for default of clothings? And suffren also thy quicke images to perish for default of sustenance, and rooten in the hoorchouse in abominable lechery? Some become theeues and robbers, and manquellers, that mighten ben yholpen with the gold and siluer that hongeth about deed mens bones, and other blinde mawmets of stockes and stones.

d Heriers, worshippers.

He commaineth of images in churches.

Lord, here ben great abominations that thou shewdist to Ezechiel thy Prophet, that priests done in thy temple, and yet they clepen that thine herying. But leue Lord, me thinketh that they louen thee little that thus defoulen thy quicke images, and worshippen blinde mawmets.

And Lord, another great mischief there is now in the world, an hunger that Amos thy Prophet speaketh of; that there shall comen an hunger in the earth, not of bread, ne thrust of drinke, but of hearing of Gods word. And thy sheepe woulden be refreshed, but their shepheards taken of thy sheep their liuelode, as tythings, &c. and liuen themselfe thereby where them liketh.

He complaineth of false pastors that liue by their flocke, but feed not them.

Of such shepheards thou speaketh by Ezechiel thy Prophet, and seyest; Wo to the shepheards of Israel that feden themselfe, for the flocks of sheep shoulden be yfed of their shepheards: but ye eaten the milk, and clothen you with their wolle, and the fat sheep ye slow, and my flocke ye ne fede not, the sicke sheep ye ne healed not, thilke that weren to broken ye ne knit not together, thilke that perished ye ne brought not againe: but yee ratled them with sternship and with power. And so the sheepe be sprad abroad in deuouring of all the beasts of the field. And Ieremy the Prophet saith: Woe to the shepheards that dispearseth abroad and teareth the flocke of my e lesewe.

e Lesew, that is, pasture.

A Lord, thou were a good shepheard, for thou putteest thy soule for thy sheep. But Lord, thou teldest that thilke that comen not in by the dore, ben night theeues and day theeues, and a these as thou seest, commeth not but for to steale, to slein, and to destroy. And Zachary the Prophet saith, that thou wouldest reren vp a shepheard vnkunning, that ne wol not hele thy sheep that f beth sicke, ne seeke thilke that beth lost. Vpon his arme is a swerd, and vpon his right eye: his arme shall wax dry, and his right eye shall lese his light. O Lord, helpe, for thy sheep beth at great mischiefe in the shepheards defaut.

f Beth, that is, bee.

But Lord, there commeth hired men, and they ne feden not thy sheepe in thy plenteous lesew, but feden thy sheepe with g sweuens, and false miracles and tales. But at thy truth they ne comen not: for Lord, I trow thou sendest them neuer. For haue they hire of thy sheep, they ne careth but little of the feding and the keping of thy sheepe. Lord, of these hired men speaketh Ieremy the Prophet, and thou seyst that word by him: I ne send them not, and they ronne h bliue; I ne speak vnto them, and they propheciden. For if they hadden stonden in my counsell, and they had made my words knowne to the puple, ech would haue turned them away from their yuill way, and from their wicked thoughts. For Lord, thou seyst that thy words ben as fire, and as an hammer breaking stones. And Lord, thou seyst: Lo I to these Prophets meeting sweuens of lesing, that haue ytold her sweuens, and haue begiled my puple in their lesing, and in their false miracles, when I neither sent, ne bed them. And these haue profitet nothing to my puple. And as Ieremy saith: From the least to the i mest all they studien couetice, and from the prophet to the priest, all they done gile.

Against hirelings.

g Sweuens, that is, dreams.

h Bliue, quickly.

i Mest, most.

A Lord, here is much mischiefe and matere of sorow, and yet there is more. For gif a lewd man would teach thy people truth of thy words, as he is yhold by thy commandement of charity, he shall be forboden and put in prison gif he doe it. And so Lord, thilke that haue the key of conning, haue ylockt the truth of thy teaching vnder many wardes, and yhid it from thy children children. But Lord, sith thy teaching is ycome from heauen aboue, our hope is, that with thy grace it shall breaken these wards, and shew him to thy puple, to kele both the hunger and the thrust of the soule. And then shall no shepheard, ner no false hiridman begile thy puple no more. For by thy law I write, as thou ihightest sometime, that from the least to the mest, al they shullen knowen thy will, and [b] weten how they shullen please thee euermore in certaine.

[a] Ihighten, promised. [b] Weten, know.

And leue lord, gif it be thy will help at this need, for there is none helpe but in thee. Thus Lord, by him that maketh himselfe thy viker in earth, is thy commandement of loue to thee and our brethren ybroken, both to him & to thy puple. But Lord God, mercy and patience that beth [c] tweine of thy commandements, beth destroied, and thy puple hath forsake mercy. For Lord, Dauid in the Sauter saith: Blessed beth they that done dome and rightfulnes in euerich time.

[c] Tweine, that is, two.

O Lord, thou hast itaught vs as rightfulnes of heauen, & hast ybeden vs forgeuen our brethren as oft as they trespassen against vs. And Lord, thine old law of iustice was, that such harme as a man did his brother, such he should suffer by the law, as eye for an eye, and tooth for a tooth. But Christ made an end of this law, that one brother should not desire wracke of another: but not that he would that sinne should ben vnpunished, for thereto hath he ordained kings and dukes, and other lewd officers vnder them, whilke as S. Paul saith, ne carien not the swerd in vaine, for they ben the ministers of God, and wrakers to wrath, to them that euill done. And thus hath Christ ymade an end of this old law, ý one brother may not sueu another himselfe, [d] for that to wreken without sinne, for breaking of charity. But this charity Lord hath thy vicar ybroke, and says that we sinnen, but gif we sue for our right. And we see I wot, that thou taughtest vs sometime to giue our mantel also, euer that we shoulden sue for our coat. And so Lord beleuen we, that we ben ybounden to done by thy law, that is all charity, and officers duty is to defenden vs from thilke theuery, though we complainen not. But Lord, thy law is turned vpsedowne.

[d] For, that is, but.

He complaineth for punishing little faults, and to let great faults escape.

A Lord, what dome is to slean a theefe that take a mans cattell away from him, and sufferen a spouse-breaker to liue, and a lecherour that killeth a womans soule? And yet thy law stoned the spouse-breakers and leacherous, and let the theeues liuen and haue other punishment.

A Lord, what dome is it to slean a theef for stealing of a horse, and to let him liue vnpunished, & to maintain him that robbeth thy poore people of their liuelode, and the soule of his food?

If he be an heretike that breaketh mans law, what is the pope that breaketh Gods law?

Lord, it was neuer thy dome to sayen, that a man is an heretike, and cursed for breaking of mans law, and demen him for a good man for breaking thy hests.

Lord, what dome is it to curse a lewd man if he smite a priest, and not curse a priest that smiteth a lewd man, and leeseth his charity?

A lewd man, that is, a lay man.

Lord, what dome is it to curse the lewd people for tithings, and not curse the parson that robbeth the people of tithings, and teacheth them not Gods law, but feedeth them with painting of stone walles, and songs of Latine, that the people knowen not?

Lord, what dome is it to punish the poore man for his trespasse, and suffer the rich to continue in his sinne for a quantitie of money?

Lord, what dome is it to slean an vncunning lewd man for his sin, and suffer a priest, other a clerke that doth the same sin, scape aliue? Lord the sin of the priest or of the clerke is greater trespasse then it is of a lewd vncunning man, and greater ensample of wickednes to the common people.

Against the canon law.

Lord, what maner people be we, that neither keep thy domes and thy rightfulnes of the old testamẽt, that was a law of dread, nor thy domes & thy rightfulnes of thy new testament, that is a law of loue and of mercy: but haue another law, and taken out of both thy lawes, that is liking to vs, and remnant of heathen mens lawes? and Lord this is a great mischiefe.

The popes law against Gods law, in causing men to accuse themselues.

O Lord, thou saiest in thy law, deme ye not and ye should not be demed: for the same mesure that ye meten to other men, men shal meten to you againward: and Lord thou saiest that by their worke we should know them: and by what we know that thou commanded vs not to demen mens thoughts, nor their works, that were not against thy law expresly. And yet Lord hee that saith he is thy vicar, will demen our thoughts, and aske vs what we thinke: not of the Lord, of thy hests, for they caren little for them, but of him and of his, whilke they sate aboue thine, and maken vs accusen our selfe, or else they willen accursen vs, for our accusers mowen we not knowne. And Lord, thou saiest in thine old law, that vnder two witnes at the least, or three, should stand euery matter: and that the witnes shoulden euer be the first that shoulden helpe to kill them.

[e] Mowen, that is, may.

And when the Scribes and the Pharises sometimes brought before thee a woman that was ytake in spouse breaking, and exeden of the a dome, thou didst write on the earth, and then thou gaue this dome: He that is without sin, throw first at her a stone, and Lord they went forth away from thee and the woman: and thou forgaue the woman her trespasse, and bad her go forth, and sinne no more.

Tooke keepe, that is, tooke heed.

Sweet Lord, if the priests tooke keepe to thy dome, they would be agast to demen men as they done. O Lord, if one of them breake a commandement of thy law, he will aske mercy of thee, and not a peine that is due for the sinne, for peyne of death were too little. O Lord, how daren they demen any man to the death for breaking of their lawes, other assent to such law? for breaking of thy law, they will set penance, or pardon them, and maintaine them as often as they trespassen. But Lord, if a man once breake their lawes, or speak against them, he may done penance but once, and after be burnt. Trulich Lord thou saiest, but if euery of vs forgiue not other his trespasse, thy father will not forgeuen vs our sins. And Lord when thou hong on the crosse, thou praiedst to thy father to haue mercy on thy enemies.

The breaking of the popes law more punished then the breaking of Gods law.

And yet they sein Lord, that they demen no man to the death, for they sain, they ne mowe by their law demen any man to the death. A leue Lord, euen so saiden their forefathers the Pharises, that it ne was not lawfull for them to kill any man: and yet they bidden Pilat to done thee to the death against his owne conscience, for he would gladly haue yquit thee, but for that they threatened him with the Emperor, and broughten against thee false witnes also: and he was an heathen man.

O Lord, how much truer dome was there in Pilat, that was an heathen iustice, then in our kings and iustices that woulden demen to the death, & berne in the fire him that the priest deliueren vnto them withouten witnes or prefe? For Pilat ne would not demen thee: for that the Pharises sayden that gif thou ne haddest not ben a misdoer, we ne would not deliuer him vnto thee: for to, they broughten in their false witnesse against thee. But Lord, as thou saidst sometime that it should ben lighter at domes day to Tyro and to Sydon and Gomorra, then to the cities where thou wrought wonders and miracles: so I dred, it shall be more light to Pilat in the dome, then to our kings and domes-men that so demen without witnes and prefe. For Lord, to demen thy folke for heretikes, is to holden thee an heretike; and to brennen them, is to brennen thee: for thou saidst to Paul when he persecuted thy people; Saul, Saul, wherefore persecutest thou me? and in the dome thou shalt say; that ye haue done to the least of mine, ye haue done to me.

For to, that is, therefore.

Pilat more commendeth then the pope.

Thus Lord, is thy mercy and iustice foredone by him that saith he is thy vicar in earth: for he neither keepeth it himselfe, nor nill, not suffer other to doe it.

The third commandement, that is, patience and sufferance, is also ibroken by this vicar. Lord thou biddest sufferen both wrongs and strokes withouten againstanding; and so thou diddest thy selfe to geuen vs ensample to sufferen of our brethren. For suffering nourisheth loue, and againstandeth debate. All thy lawes is loue, or else the thing that draweth to loue.

But Lord, men teachen, that men shoulden pleten for their right, and fighten also therefore; and else they seyn, men ben in perill: and thou bid in the old law men fight for their country. And thy selfe haddest two swords in thy company, when thou shouldest goe to thy passion; that as these clerks seyn, betokeneth a spirituall sword, and a temporall sword, that thou gaue to thy vicar to rule with, thy church.

The pope breaketh patience.

Lord, this is a sleight speech; but Lord we beleuen that thou art king of blisse, and that is thine heritage and mankinds country; and in this world wee ne ben but strangers and pilgrimes. For thou Lord ne art of this world, ne thy law neither, ne thy true seruants that kepen thy law. And Lord, thou were king of Iuda by inheritage, if thou wouldest haue ihad it; but thou forsooke it, and pletedest not therefore, ne fought not therefore.

But Lord, for thy kind heritage, and mankinds country, that is a land of blisse, thou foughtest mightilich. In battell thou ouercame thy enemy, and so thou won thine heritage. For thou that were a lord mightiest in battell, and also lord of vertues, are rightfullich king of blisse; as Dauid saith in the Psalter. But Lord, thine enemy smote thee despitefullich, and had power of thee, and hang thee vpon the crosse as thou hadst ben a theefe, and benomin thee all thy clothes, and sticked thee to the heart with a speare.

O Lord, this was an hard assault of a battell, and here thou ouercome by patience mightilich thine enemies; for thou ne wouldest not done against the wil of thy father. And thus Lord thou taughtest thy seruants to fight for their country. And Lord this fighting was in figure itaught in the old law. But Lord, men holden now the shadow of the old fighting & leuen the light of thy fighting, that thou taughtest openlich both in word and in deed.

Thilke vicar and his priests wost suffer nothing.

Lord, thou gaue vs a sword to fighten against our enemies for our country, that was thine holy teaching, and christen mens law. But Lord thy sword is put in a sheath, and in priests ward, that haue forsake the fighting that thou taughtest. For as they seyn, it is against their order to ben men of armes in thy battell, for it is vnseemelich, as they seyn, that thy vicar in earth, other his priests shulden suffer of other men. And therefore gif any man smite him, other any of his clerks, he ne taketh it not in patience, but anon he smiteth with his sword of cursing, and afterward with his bodelich sword, hee doth them to death. O Lord, me thinketh that this is a fighting against kind, and much against thy teaching.

O Lord, whether axedest thou after swerds in the time of thy passion to againstond thine enemies? nay forsooth thou Lord. For Peter that smote for great loue of thee, had no great great thanke of thee, for his smiting. And Lord, thou were mighty enough to haue againstond thine enemies, for through thy looking they fellen downe to the ground: Lord ybleſſed mote thou be. Here thou teacheſt vs that we ſhoulden ſuffren: for thou were mighty ynow to haue againſtand thine enemies, and thou haddeſt wepen; and thy men weren hearty to haue ſmitten.

O ſweet Lord, how may he for ſhame clepen himſelfe thy vicar and head of the church, that may not for ſhame ſuffer? Sith thou art a Lord, and ſufferedſt of thy ſubiects, to giuen vs enſample, and ſo did thy true ſeruants.

No temporall ſword giuen to Peter.

O Lord, whether geue thou to Peter a ſpirituall ſwerd to curſe, and a temporall ſwerd to ſle mens bodies? Lord, I trow not, for then Peter that loued thee ſo much, would haue ſmit with thy ſwerds. But Lord, he taughten vs to bleſſen them that curſen vs, and ſuffren and not smiten. And Lord, he ſed thy people as thou bed him, and therefore he ſuffred the death as thou didſt.

O Lord, why clepeth any man him Peters ſucceſſor, that hath forſaken patience, and feedeth thy people with curſing and with ſmiting? Lord thou ſaideſt in thy goſpell, when thy diſciples knewen well that thou were Chriſt, and that thou muſteſt goe to Ieruſalem, and ſufferen of the Scribes and Phariſes ſpittings, reproſes, and alſo the death. And Peter tooke thee aſide, and ſaid; God forbid that. And Lord, thou ſaideſt to Peter; Go behind me Sathanas, thou ſclaundereſt me in Iſrael. For thou ne ſauoreſt not thilke things that ben of God, but thilke that ben of men. Lord to mens wit it is vnreaſonable, that thou or thy vicar, gif thou madeſt any on earth, ſhoulden ſuffren of your ſuggets.

Thilke things, thoſe things.

A Lord, whether thou ordeineſt an order of fighters to turn men to the beliefe? Other ordeineſt that knights ſhoulden ſweare to fight for thy words?

Faith commeth not by outward force.

A Lord, whether bed thou, that gif a man turne to the faith that he ſhould geue his goods and cattell to the vicar that hath great lordſhips, and more then him needeth? Lord I wote well, that in the beginning of the churchmen that weren conuerted, threwen adown their goods afore the apoſtles feet. For all they weren in charity, and none of them ſaid this is mine, ne Peter made himſelfe no lord of theſe goods.

Pope breaketh the rule of charity, of mercy, and of patience.

But Lord, now he that clepeth himſelf thy vicar vpon earth, and ſucceſſor to Peter, hath ybroke thy commandement of charity, for he is become a lord. And he hath alſo broken thy commandement of mercy, and alſo of patience. Thus Lord we be fallen into great miſchiefe and thraldom, for our chieftaine hath forſaken war and armes, and hath treated to haue peace with our enemies.

Or than, before that.

A Lord, gif it be thy will, draw out thy ſwerd out of his ſheth, that thy ſeruants may fight therewith againſt their enemies, and put cowardiſe out of our hearts: and comfort vs in battaile, or than thou come with thy ſwerd in thy mouth, to take vengeance on thine enemies. For gif we ben accorded with our enemies till that time come, it is dread leſt thou take vengeaunce both of them and of vs together. A Lord, there is no helpe now in this great miſchiefe but only in thee.

The pope breaketh the law of ſwearing.

Lord, thou geueſt vs a commandement of truth, in bidding vs ſay yea, yea, nay, nay, and ſweare for nothing. Thou geue vs alſo a maundement of meeknes, and another of poorenes; but Lord, he that clepeth himſelfe thy vicar on earth, hath both ybroken theſe commandements; for he maketh a law to compell men to ſweare, and by his lawes he teacheth that a man to ſaue his life, may forſweare and lie. And ſo Lord, through comfort of him and his lawes, the people ne dreadeth not to ſweare and to lie, ne oft times to forſwearen them. Lord here is little truth.

O Lord, thou haſt ybrought vs to a liuing of ſouls that ſtands in beleeuing in thee, and keeping thy heſts, and when we breaken thy heſts, then we ſlen our ſouls: and leſſe harme it were to ſuffer bodilich death.

Lord, king Saul brake thine heſts, and thou tooke his kingdome from his heires euermore after him, and gaue it to Dauid thy ſeruant, that kept thine heſts. And thou ſaidſt by Samuel thy Prophet to Saul the king, that it is a maner of worſhipping of falſe gods to breake thy heſts. For who that loueth thee ouer all things, and dreadeth thee alſo, he nole for nothing breake thine heſts.

Nole, that is, would not.

O Lord, gif breaking of thine heſts be herrying of falſe gods, I trow that he maketh the people breake thine heſts, and commandeth that his heſts ben kept of the people, maketh himſelfe a falſe god on earth; as Nabuchodonoſor did ſometime that was king of Babylon.

But Lord, we forſaken ſuch falſe gods; and beleuen that there ne ben no mo Gods then thou: and though thou ſuffer vs a while to ben in diſeaſe for knowledging of thee: we thanken thee with our hart, for it is a token that thou loueſt vs, to giuen vs in this world ſome penance for our treſpas.

Lord, in the old law, thy true ſeruants tooke the death, for they would not eaten ſwynes fleſh that thou haddeſt forbidde them to eat. O Lord, what truth is in vs to eaten vnclean mete of the ſoule, that thou haſt forbid? Lord thou ſaidſt, he that doth ſinne, is ſeruant of ſinne, and then he that lieth in forſwearing himſelfe, is ſeruant of leſing: and then he is ſeruant to the diuell, that is a lier and father of leſings. And Lord, thou ſayeſt, no man may ſerue two lords at once. O Lord then, euery liet for the time that he lieth, other forſweareth himſelfe, and forſaketh thy ſeruice for dread of his bodily death, becommeth the diuels ſeruant.

Seruant of ſeruants; the popes title abuſed.

O Lord, what truth is in him that clepeth himſelfe ſeruant of thy ſeruants, and in his doing hee maketh him a lord of thy ſeruants. Lord thou were both Lord and maſter, and ſo thou ſaid thy ſelfe; but yet in thy warks thou were as a ſeruant. Lord this was a great truth, and a great meeknes: but Lord, bid thou thy ſeruants that they ſhould not haue lordſhip ouer their brethren? Lord thou ſaydſt kings of the heathen men han lordſhip ouer their ſubiects, and they that vſe their power be cleped wel doers.

But Lord, thou ſaidſt it ſhould not be ſo amongeſt thy ſeruaunts. But he that were moſt, ſhould be as a ſeruaunt. Thou Lord, thou taughteſt thy diſciples to be meeke. Lord in the old law thy ſeruants durſt haue no lordſhip of their brethren, but if that thou bid them: and yet they ſhould not doe to their brethren as they did to thralles that ſerued them. But they ſhould doe to their brethren that were their ſeruaunts, as to their owne brethren: for all they were Abrahams children: and at a certaine time, they ſhould let their brethren paſſe from them in all freedome, but if they would wilfullich abiden ſtill in ſeruice.

Thralles, that is to ſay, bond men.

O Lord, thou gaue vs in thy comming a law of perfect loue, and in token of loue thou clepedſt thy ſelfe our brother. And to make vs perfect in loue, thou bid that we ſhould clepe to vs no father vpon earth, but thy father of heauen we ſhould clepe our father. Alas Lord, how violently our brethren and thy children ben now put in bodily thraldome, and in deſpite as beaſts euermore in greeuous trauell to finde proud men in eaſe. But Lord, if we take this defoule and this diſeaſe in patience, and in meeknes, and keep thine heſts, we hope to be free. And Lord geue our brethren grace to come out of thraldome of ſinne, that they fall in through the deſiring & vſage of lordſhip vpon their brethren. And Lord, thy prieſts in the old law had no lordſhips among their brethren, but houſes and paſtures for their beaſts: but Lord our prieſts now haue great lordſhips, and put their brethren in greater thraldome then lewd men that bee lords. Thus is meeknes forſaken.

Pride of prieſts.

Lord, thou biddeſt in the goſpell, that when a man is bid to the feaſt, he ſhould ſit in the loweſt place, and then hee may be ſet hyer with worſhip, when the lord of the feaſt beholdeth how his gueſts ſitteth. Lord it is drede that they that ſit now in the higheſt place, ſhould be bid in time comming ſit beneath; and that will be ſhame and vilenie for them. And it is thy ſaying, thoſe that hyeth himſelfe ſhould be lowed, and thoſe that loweth themſelues ſhould bee an heyghed. O Lord, thou biddeſt in thy goſpell to beware of the Phariſies, for it is a point of pride contrary to meekties. And Lord, thou ſayſt that they loue the firſt ſittings at ſupper, and alſo the principall chaires in churches, and greetings in cheeping, and to be cleped maſters of men. And Lord, thou ſayſt, be ye not cleped maſters, for one is your maſter, and that is Chriſt, and all ye be brethren: and clepe ye to you no father vpon earth, for one is your father that is in heauen. O Lord, this is a bleſſed leſſon to teach men to be meke.

But Lord, he that clepeth himſelfe thy vicar on earth, he clepeth himſelfe father of fathers againſt thy forbidding. And all thoſe worſhips thou haſt forbad. He approueth them, and maketh them maſters to many, that teach thy people their owne teaching, and leue thy teaching that is nedefull, and hiden it by quaint gloſes from thy lewd people, and feed thy people with ſweuens that they mete, and tales that doth little profite, but much harme to the people. But Lord, theſe gloſers obiect, that they deſire not the ſtate of maſtry to be worſhipped therby, but to profit the more to thy people, when they preach thy word. For as they ſuggen the people will beleeue more the preaching of a maſter that hath taken a ſtate of ſchole, then the preaching of another man that hath not taken the ſtate of maſtry.

Meeknes commended in Miniſters. Vicar in earth, not tollerable in the pope. Sweuens, that is, dreams.

Lord, whether it be any need that maſters beren witneſſe to thy teaching, that it is true and good? O Lord, whether may any maſter now by his eſtate of maſterie, that thou haſt forboden, draw any man from his ſinne, rather then another man that is not a maſter, ne wole be none; for it is forbodden him in thy Goſpell? Lord thou ſendeſt to maſters to preach thy people; and thou knowledgiſt in the Goſpel to thy father, that hee hath hid his wiſdome from wiſe men and redy men, and ſhewed it to litle children. And Lord, maſters of the law hylden thy teaching folly, and ſaiden that thou wouldeſt deſtroy the people with thy teaching. Trulich Lord, ſo theſe maſters feggeth now: for they haue written many bookes againſt thy teaching, that is truth; and ſo the prophecie of Ieremy is fulfilled when he ſaith: Trulich the falſe points of the maſters of the law hath wrought leaſing. And now is the time come that S. Paul ſpeaketh of, where he ſaith: Time ſhall come when men ſhall not ſuſteine wholſome teaching. But they ſhullen gather to hepe maſters with hutcing eares, and from truth they ſhullen turnen away their hearing, and turnen them to tales, that maſters haue maked to ſhowne their maiſtry and their wiſdome.

Maſterſhip and lordſhip in preachers.

And Lord, a man ſhall beleue more a mans works then his words.

words, and the dede sheweth wel of these masters, that they desiren more maistry for their owne worship, then for profit of the people. For when they be masters, they ne preachen not so oft as they did before. And gif they preachen, commonlich it is before rich men, there as they mowen beare worship and also profit of their preaching. But before poore men they preachen but seldem, when they ben masters: and so by their works we may seene that they ben false glosers.

And Lord, me thinketh that who so wole keepen thine hests, him needeth no glose: but thilke that clepen themselfe christen men, and liuen against thy teaching and thine hests, needelich they mote glose thine hests, after their liuing, other elfe men shulden openlich yknow their hypocrisie and their falshod.

False glosers.

But Lord, thou sayst that there is nothing yhid that shall not be shewed sometime. And Lord, yblessed mote thou be: For somewhat thou shewest vs now of our mischiefes that we ben fallen in through the wisdomes of masters, that haue by sleights ylad vs away from thee and thy teaching, that thou that were the master of heauen, taught vs for loue, when thou were here sometime to heale of our soules, withouten error or heresie. But masters of worlds wisdome and their founder, haue ydamned it for heresie and for error.

O Lord, me thinketh it is a great pride thus to reproue thy wisdome & thy teaching. And Lord, me thinketh that this Nabugodonosor king of Babylon, that thus hath reproued thy teaching and thine hests, and commandeth on all wise to kepen his hests; maketh thy people hearen him as a God on earth, and maketh them his thrales and his seruants.

But Lord, we lewd men knowen no God but thee; and we with thine helpe and thy grace, forsaken Nabugodonosor and his lawes. For hee in his proud estate wole haue all men vnder him, and he nele be vnder no man. He ondoth thy lawes that thou ordainest to ben kept, and maketh his owne lawes as him liketh: and so he maketh him king aboue all other kings of the earth, and maketh men to worshippen him as a God, and thy great sacrifice he hath ydone away.

Nele, that is, will not.

O Lord, here is thy commandement of meeknes, mischislich to broke: and thy blessed commandement of poorenes is also to broken, and yhid from thy people. Lord, Zachary thy Prophet saith, that thou that shouldest be our king, shouldest ben a poore man, and so thou were: for thou saidest thy selfe; Foxes haue dens, and birds of heauen nests, and mans sonne hath not where to legge his head on. And thou saydest, yblessed ben poore men in spirit, for thy kingdome of heauen is therein: and woe to rich men, for they han their comfort in this world. And thou bad thy disciples to ben ware of all couetise, for thou saidest, in the abundance of a mans hauing, ne is not his lifelode. And so thou teachest that thilke that han more then them needeth to their liuing liuen in couetise. Also thou sayst, but gif a man forsake all things that he oweth, hee ne may not ben thy disciple. Lord, thou sayst also, that thy word that is sown in rich mens harts, bringeth forth no fruit: for riches and the busines of this world maken it withouten fruit.

Pouerty of Christ not followed.

Couetise.

O Lord, here ben many blessed teachings to teach men to ben poore, and loue poorenesse. But Lord harme is, poore men and poorenes ben yhated, and rich men ben yloued and honored: and gif a man be a poore man, men holden him a man without grace; and gif a man desireth poorenes, men holden him but a foole: and gif a man be a rich man, men clepen him a gratious man, and thilke that ben busie in getting of riches, ben yhold wise men and ready: but Lord, these rich men sayen, that it is both lefull and needfull to them to gather riches togither. For they ne gathereth it for themselfe, but for other men that ben needy, and Lord their works shewen the truth. For if a poore needy man would borowen of their riches, he nele lean him none of his good; but gif he mow be seker to haue it againe by a certaine day.

Pouerty counted folly.

Nele, that is, will not.

But Lord, thou bed that a man should lend, and not hoping yelding againe of him that he lendeth to: and thy father of heauen wole quite him his mede. And gif a poore man aske a rich man any good, the rich man will giue him but a little, and yet it shall be little worth. And Lord me thinketh that here is little loue and charity, both to God and to our brethren.

For Lord, thou teachest in thy gospell, that what men do to thy seruants, they done to thee. A Lord, gif a poore man axe good for thy loue, men giueth him a little of the wurst. For these rich men ordeinen both bread and ale for Gods men of the wurst that they haue. O Lord, sith all good that men hath, commeth of thee; how dare any man geue thee of the wurst, and kepe to himselfe the best? How may such men say that they gatheren riches for others need, as wel as himselfe, sith their works ben contrary to their words? and that is no great truth. And be ye seker these goods that rich men han, they ben Gods goods, ytake to your keeping, to looke how he wolen be setten them to the worshipping of God. And Lord, thou saiest in the gospell, that who so is true in little, hee is true in that thing that is more: and who that is false in a little thing, who wole taken him toward things of a greater value? And therefore be yee ware that han Gods goods to keepe. Spend ye thilke trulich to the worship of God, lest ye leesen the blisse of heauen, for the vntrue dispending of Gods goods in this world.

God is serued of the worst.

Alsen for them that haue goods, well to fyend them. Seggen, that is, doe say.

O Lord, these rich men seggen that they don much for thy loue. For many poore laborers ben yfound by them, that shulden fare febelich, ne were not they & their readinesse. For sooth me thinketh that poore laborers giueth to these rich men, more then they giuen them againward. For the poore men mote gone to his labor in cold and in heat, in wete and dry, and spend his flesh and his bloud in the rich mens works, vpon Gods ground, to finde the rich man in ease, and in liking, and in good fare of meat, of drinke, and of clothing. Here is a great gift of the poore man, for he giueth his owne body. But what giueth the rich man him againward? Certes feeble meat, and feeble drinke, and feeble clothing. What euer they seggen, such bee their works, and here is little loue. And whosoeuer looketh well about, all the world fareth as we seggen: and all men studieth on euery side, how they may wex rich men: and euerich man almost is ashamed to ben holden a poore man.

And Lord, I trow for thou were a poore man, men token little regard to thee, and to thy teaching. But Lord thou came to giue vs a new testament of loue; and therefore it was semelich that thou came in poorenes, to proue who would loue thee, and kepen thy hests. For gif thou haddest ycome in forme of a rich man and of a lord, men wold rather for thy dread then for thy loue, haue ykept thine hests. And so Lord, now thou might wel ysee which louen thee as they should in keeping thine hests. For who that loueth thee in thy poorenes and in thy lowenesse, needs he mote loue thee in thy lordship and highnesse.

The pouerty of Christ rightly considered.

But Lord, the world is turned vpse downe, and men loue poore men but a little, ne poorenesse neither. But men be ashamed of poorenes; and therefore Lord, I trow that thou art a poore king. And therefore I trow that he that clepeth himselfe thy vicar on earth, hath forsaken poorenesse, as he hath doe the remnant of thy law, and is become a rich man and a Lord, and maketh his treasure vpon the earth, that thou forbiddest in the gospell: and for his right and riches, he will plete, and fight, and curse. And yet Lord he will segge, that he forsaketh all things that he oweth, as thy true disciple mete done after thy teaching in the gospell.

A poore king, and a proud vicar, how loyne these two together?

But Lord, thou ne taughtest not a man to forsaken his goods, and plete for them, and fight, and curse. And Lord, he taketh on him power to assoile a man of all manner things, but if it be of debt. Truly Lord, me thinketh he knoweth little of charitie. For who that beth in charity, possesseth thy goods in common, and not in proper at his neighbors need. And then shall there none of them segge this is mine, but it is Gods that God granteth to vs to spenden it to his worship. And so if any of them boroweth a portion of those goods, and dispendeth them to Gods worship, God is apayed of this spending, and alloweth him this true doing. And if God is payed of that dispending, that is the principall lord of those goods, how dare any of his seruants axen thereof accounts, other challenge it for det? Serten, of one thing I am inceriteine, that these that charge so much det of worldly cattell, they know little of Christs law of charity. For if Ich am a baily of Gods goods in the world: If I see my brother in need; I am hold by charity to part with him of these goods to his nede: and if he spendeth them wel to the worship of God, I mote be well apaid, as though I my selfe had spended them to the worship of God. And if the principal Lord is well payed of my brothers doing, and the dispending of his goods, how may I segge for shame that my brother is dettour to me, of the goods that I tooke him to spend in Gods worship at his nede? And if my brother spendeth amisse the goods that I take him, I am discharged of my deliuerance of the goods, if I take him in charity thilke goods at his nede. And I am hold to be sory of his euill dispending, ne I may not axen the goods, that I tooke him to his nede in forme of det, for at his need they were his as well as mine. And thus is my brother yhold to done to me gif he see me in nede, and gif we ben in charitie, little should we chargen of det. And ne we should not axen so dets, as men that knowen not God: and than we be poore in forsaking all things that we own. For gif we ben in charitie, we wollen nother fight nor curse, ne plete for our goods with our brethren.

Christ a tenant vpon earth, the pope a lord.

The pope for his right and riches will plead, fight and curse.

Impiety of goods here, is not taken away, but charity is required to help the need of our neighbor.

O Lord, thus thou taughtest thy seruants to liuen: and so they liueden while they hadden good shepheards, that fedden thy sheep, and robbed them not of their lifelode, as Peter thy good shepheard and thy other apostles. But Lord, he that clepeth himselfe thy vicar vpon earth and successour to Peter, he robbeth thy puple of their bodilich lifelode, for he ordeineth proud shepheards to liuen in ease by the tenth party of poore mens trauell: and he giueth them leue to liuen where them liketh. And gif men no wolen wilfullich geuen the the tithings, they wolen han them against their will by maistery and by cursing, to maken them rich.

Lord, how may any man segge that such shepheards that louen more the wolle then the sheepe, and feden not thy sheep in body, ne in soule, ne ben such rauenors and theeues? And who may segge that the maintaynor of such shepheards, ne is not a mainteinour of theeues and robbers? How wole hee assoile shepheards of their robbing without restitution of their goods, that they robben thy sheepe of against their will? Lord of all shepheards, blessed mote thou be. For thou louedst more the sheepe then their wolle. For thou feedest thy sheepe both in body and soule. And for loue of thy sheepe, thou tooke thy death death to bring thy sheepe out of wolues mouthes. And the most charge that thou goue to Peter was to feed thy sheepe: And so he did truelich, and tooke the death for thee and for thy sheepe. For he came into the fold of sheepe by thee that were the dore. And so I trow a few other did as he did, though they clepen themselfe successors to Peter, for their workes showen what they ben. For they robben and sleene and destroyen: they robben thy sheepe of the tenth part of their trauell, and feden themselfe in ease. They sleene thy sheepe, for they pyenen them for hunger of their soule to the death. They destroyen the sheepe, for with might and with sternship they rulen thy sheepe: that for dred they ben dispearsed abroad in mountaines, and there the wilde beasts of the field destroieth them for default of a good shepheard.

Comparison betweene the popes shepheards and Christs.

¶ O Lord, gif it be thy will deliuer thy sheepe out of such shepheards ward that retcheth not of thy sheepe, they han their wolle to make themselfe rich. For thy sheepe ben in great mischiefe, and foule accombred with their shepheards.

a But for, that is, but because.

a ¶ But for thy shepheards wolden ben excused, they haue ygetten them hired men to feed thy people, and these comen in sheepes clothing. But dredlesse their workes showen that b within forth they ben but Wolfes. For han they their hire, they ne retcheth but a little how sorilich thy sheepe ben kept. For as they seggen themselfe, they ben but hired men that han no charge of thy sheepe. And when they shulden feden thy sheepe in the plenteous c lesew of thy teaching, they stonden betweene them and their lesewe, so that the sheepe ne han but a sight of thy lesew, but eaten they shall not thereof. But they feden them in a sorrie sowre lesew of lesings and of tales. And so thy sheepe fallen into grieuous sickneſſe through this euill lesew. And gif any sheepe breake ouer into thy lesew to tasten the sweetneſſe thereof, anon these hired men driue him out with hounds. And thus thy sheepe by these hired men, ben ykept out of their kindlich lesew, and ben yfed with sowre grasse and sorrie baren lesew. And yet they feden but seldome, and when they han sorilich fed them, they taken great hire, and gone away from thy sheepe and letten them a worth.

b Within forth, that is, inwardlie.

c Lesew, pasture.

And for dread least thy sheepe wolden in their absence go to thy sweet lesew, they han enclosed it all about so strongslich and so high, that there may no sheepe comen there within, but gif it be a d walisch leper of the mountaines that may with his long legges lepen ouer the wallys. For the hired men ben full certaine, that gif thy sheep had ones ytasted the sweetneſſe of thy lesew: They ne would no more bene yfed of these hired men in their sowre lesewes, and therefore these hired men kepen them out of that lesew. For haden the sheepe once ytasted well of that lesew, they woulden without a leder go thider to their mete, and then mote these hired men seechen them another labour to liue by than keeping of sheepe. And they ben fell and ware ynow thereof, and therefore they feden thy sheepe with sowre meat that naught is, and hiden from thy sheepe the sweetneſſe of thy lesew. And so though these hired men gone in sheepes clothing, in their workes they ben wolues, that much harme done to thy sheepe as we haue ytold.

d A Welch leaper.

Wolues in lambeskins described.

¶ O Lord, they comen as sheepe, for they seggen that they ben poore and haue forsaken the world to liuen perfetlich as thou taughtest in the Gospell. Lord this is sheeps clothing. But Lord thou ne taughtest not a man to forsaken the trauellous liuing in poorenes in the world, to liuen in ease with riches by other mens trauell, and haue lordship on their brethren. For Lord, this is more to forsaken thee and go to the world.

He complaineth against the valiant beggers the Friers.

¶ O Lord, thou ne taughtest not a man to forsake the world to liuen in pooreneſſe of begging by other mens traüel that ben as feble as they ben. Ne Lord thou ne taughtest not a man to liue in pooreneſſe of begging, that were strong inough to trauell for his lifelode. Ne Lord thou ne taughtest not a man to ben a begger to begge of men more then him needeth, to build great castles and make great feasts to thilke that han no need.

¶ O Lord thou ne taughtest not men this pooreneſſe, for it is out of charitie. But thy pooreneſſe that thou taughtest, norisheth charitie. Lord, sith Paul saith, that he that forsaketh the charge of thilke that ben e homelich with him, hath forsaken his faith and is worse then a misbeleeued man: How then now these men seggen that they beleeuen in Christ, that han forsake their poore feeble friends, and let them liue in trauell and in diseaſe, that trauelled full sore for them, when they weren yong and vnmightie to helpen themselfe? And they wolen liue in ease by other mens trauell euermore begging withouten shame.

e Homelich, that is, of his houshold.

¶ Lord thou ne taughtest not this manner pooreneſſe, for it is out of charitie. And all thy law is charitie and thing that norisheth charitie, and these shepheards send about to keepe thy sheepe and to feden them other whiles in bareine lesewes. Lord thou ne madest none such shepheards, ne keepers of the sheepe that feed sorilich thy sheep, and for so little trauell taken a great hire, and sithen all the yeare afterward, doe what them liketh, and let thy sheepe perish for defaut of keeping.

Wilfull powerfie abhorred.

But thy shepheards abiden still with their sheepe, and feeden them in thy plenteous lesew of thy teaching, and gone byfore thy sheepe, and teachen them the way into the plenteous and sweet lesew, and keepen thy flocke from rauening of the wilde beasts of the field.

The properties of good shepheards.

O Lord deliuer the sheepe out of the ward of these shepheards, and these hired men, that stonden more to keepe their riches that they robben of thy sheepe, than they stonden in keeping of thy sheepe.

O Lord when thou come to Ierusalem, sometime thou droue out of the temple, sellers of beasts and of other chaffre, and saidest: Mine house shoulden ben cleped an house of praiers, but they maden a den of theeues of it. O Lord thou art the temple in whom we shoulden prayen thy father of heauen. And Salomons temple that was ybelded at Ierusalem, was figure of this temple. But Lord, he that clepeth himselfe thy vicar vpon earth, and saith that he occupieth thy place heere on earth, is become a chapman in thy temple, and hath his chapman walking in diuers countries to sellen his chaffare, and to maken him rich. And he saith, thou gaue him so great a power abouen all other men, that what euer he bindeth other vnbindeth in earth, thou bindest other vnbindest the same in heauen. And so of great power hee selleth other men forgiueneſſe of their sinne. And for much money he will assoylen a man so cleane of his sinne, that he f behoteth men the blesse of heauen withouten any paine after that they be dead, that giuen him much money.

The pope is a chapman in Gods temple.

f Behoteth, that is, promiseth.

Bishoprickes and cherches, and such other chaffares he selleth also for money, and maketh himselfe rich. And thus he beguiled the puple.

Note good reader, if Christ be where two or thies be gathered in his name, what need is there of a lieftenant?

O Lord Iesu heere is much vntruth, and mischiefe, and matter of sorow. Lord thou saidest sometime, that thou wouldest be with thy seruants vnto the end of the world. And thou saidest also, there as tweine or three ben ygadred to gedder in thy name, that thou art in the midle of them. A Lord, then it was no need to thee to maken liefetenant, sith thou wolte be euermore amongst thy seruants.

Lord, thou axedst of thy Disciples, who they trowed that thou were. And Peter answered and said, that thou art Christ Gods sonne. And thou saidest to Peter: Thou art ybleſſed Simon Bariona, for flesh and blood ne showed not this to thee, but my father that is in heauen. And I say to thee that thou art Peter, and vpon this stone ych would bilde my Church, and the gates of hell he shullen not availen agens it.

The place of giuing to Peter the keyes, expounded.

And to thee ych wole geue the keyes of heauen, and what euer thou bindest vpon earth shall be bound in heauen, and what euer thou vnbindest on earth, shall be vnbounden in heauen. This power also was granten vnto the other disciples, as well as to Peter, as the Gospell openlich telleth. In this place men seggen that thou granted to Peters successours, the selue power that thou gaue to Peter. And therefore the bishop of Rome, that saith he is Peters succeſſour, taketh this power to him to binden and vnbinden in earth what him liketh. But Lord, ych haue much wonder how he may for shame clepen himselfe Peters succeſſour. For Peter knowledged that thou were Christ and God, and kept the hestes of thy law: but these han forsaken the hestes of thy law, and hath ymaked a law contrarie to thine hestes of thy law. And so he maked himselfe a false Christ and a false god in earth. And I trow thou gaue him no power to vndo thy law. And so in taking this power vpon him, maketh him a false christ and antichrist.

The pope pictured a false antichrist in earth.

For who may be more agens Christ, than he that in his words maketh himself Christes vicar in earth: And in his werks vndoth the ordinance of Christ, and maketh men beleeuen that it is needfull to the heale of mannes soules, to beleeuen that he is Christes vicar in earth? And what euer he bindeth in earth is ybounden in heauen, and vnder this colour he vndoth Christes law, and maketh men alwaies to keepen his law and hestes.

The popes abomination described.

And thus men may yseene that he is against Christ, and therefore he is antichrist that maketh men worshippen him as a god on earth, as the proud king Nabugodonosor did sometime, that was king of Babylon. And therefore we lewed men that knowen not God but thee Iesu Christ, beleeuen in thee that art our God, and our king, and our Christ, and thy lawes. And forsaken antichrist and Nabugodonosor that is a false God, and a false christ, and his lawes that ben contrarie to thy preaching.

And Lord strength thou vs against our enemies. For they ben about to maken vs forsaken thee and thy law, other else to putten vs to death.

O Lord, onlich in thee is our trust to helpe vs in this mischiefe, for thy great goodneſſe that is withouten end.

Lord thou ne taughtest not thy disciples to assoilen men of their sinne, and setten them a penance for their sinne, in fasting ne in praying, ne other almous deed: ne thy selfe, ne thy disciples, vseden no such power heere on earth. For Lord, thou forgeue men her sinnes, and bede him sinne no more. And thy disciples h fulleden men in thy name, in forgiueneſſe of her sinnes. Nor they tooke no such power vpon them as our priests dare now. And Lord, thou ne assoildest no man both of his sinne and of his peine, that was due for his sinne, ne thou grantedst no man such power heere on earth.

h Fulleden, that is, baptised.

Purgatorie.

And Lord me thinketh that gif there were a purgatorie, and anie earthlich man had power to deliueren sinfull men from the peines of purgatorie, he should, and he were in charitie, sauen euerich man that were in way of saluation from thilke peines, sith they make them greater then any bodilich peines of this world. Also gif the bishop of Rome had such a power, he himselfe should neuer comen in purgatorie ne in hel. And sith we see well that he ne hath no power to kepen himselfe ne other men nother out of these bodilich peines of the world, and he may go to hell for his sinne as another man may: Ine beleeue not, that he hath so great power to assoylen men of their sinne as he taketh vpon him abouen all other men. And I trow that in this he higheth himselfe aboue God.

Selling of bishoprickes and benefices.

As touching the selling of bishoprickes and parsonages, I trow it be a point of falsehed. For agenst Gods ordinance hee robbeth poore men of a portion of their sustenance, and selleth it, other giueth it, to find proud men in idlenesse that don the lewd puple little profit, but much harme, as we told before. Thus ben thy commandements of truth, of meekenesse, and of poorenesse, vndone by him that clepeth himselfe thy vicar here vpon earth.

Marriage.

A Lord thou gaue vs a commandement of chastice, that is, a forsaking of fleshlich lusts. For thou broughtest vs to a liuing of soule, that is, ygouerned by the word. For Lord, thou ordeinedist women more frele than man to ben ygouerned by mans rule, and his helpe to please thee and keepe thine hestes. Ne thou ne ordainedist that a man should desire the companie of a woman, and maken her his wife, to liuen with her in his lustis, as a swine doth or a horse. And his wife ne like him not to his lustes, Lord thou ne gaue not a man leaue to departen him from his wife, and taken him another.

But Lord, thy mariage is a common accord betweene man and woman, to liuen together to their liues end, and in thy seruice either the better for others helpe, and thilke that thus ben ycome together, ben ioyned by thee, and thilke that God ioyneth, may no man depart. But Lord, thou saiest that gif a man see a woman to coueten her, then he doth with the woman lecherie in his heart. And so Lord, gif a man desire his wife in couetise of such lusts, and not to flie from whoredome, his weddins is lecherie, ne thou ne ioynest them not together. Thus was Raguels daughter ywedded to seuen husbands that the diuel instrangled. But Tobie tooke her to liue with her in cleannesse, and bringing vp of her children in thy worship, and on him the diuell ne had no power. For the wedding was I maked in God, for God, and through God.

A lesson how to marrie.

A Lord, the people is farre ygo from this manner of wedding. For now men wedden their wiues for faireneſſe, other for riches, or some such other fleshlich lusts. And Lord, so it preueth by them for the most part. For a man shall not find two wedded in a land, where the husband loues the wife, and the wife is buxum to the man, as they shoulden after the law of mariage. But other the man loues not his wife, or the wife is not buxum to her man. And thus Lord is the rule of prefe, that neuer faileth no preue whether it bee done by thee or no. And Lord, all this mischiefe is common among thy people, for that they know not thy word, but their shepheards and hired men fedden them with their * sweuens and leasings. And Lord, where they shoulden gon before vs in the field, they seggen their order is to holy for thy marriage. And Lord, he that calleth himselfe thy vicar vpon earth, will not suffren priests to taken them wiues, for that is against his law: But Lord, he will dispensen with them to kepen horen for a certaine summe of money. And Lord, all whoredome is forfended in thy law. And Lord, thou neuer forfendedst priests their wiues, ner thy apostles neither. And well I wote in our land, priests hadden wiues vntil Anselmus daies in the yeare of our Lord God, a leuen hundred and twentie and nine, as Huntingdon writes. And Lord, this makes people for the most part beleuen, that lecherie is no sinne. Therefore we lewd men prayen thee that thou wolt send vs shepheards of thine owne that wolen feeden thy flocke in thy lesew, and gon before themselfe, and so written thy law in our hearts, that from the least to the most all they mayen knowen thee. And Lord, geue our king and his lords, heart to defenden thy true shepheards and thy sheep from out of the wolues mouthes, and grace to know thee that art the true Christ, the Sonne of thy heauenly father, from the antichrist, that is, the sonne of pride. And Lord, geue vs thy poore sheepe patience and strength to suffer for thy law, the cruelnes of the mischieuous wolues. And Lord, as thou hast promised, shorten these daies. Lord we axen this now, for more need was there neuer.

* Sweuens, that is, dreams.

Priests hav wiues to the time of Anselmus.

I doubt not gentle reader, but in reading this godly treatise aboue prefixed, the matter is manifest and plaine of it selfe without any further explication, what is to be thought and iudged of this vicar of Christ, and successour of Peter, whom we call the bishop of Rome: whose life heere thou seest not only to be disordered in all points, swarming from the steps and example of Christ the Prince and Bishop of our soules, but also whose lawes and doctrines are so repugnant and contrarie to the precepts and rule of the Gospell, that almost there is no conuenience betweene them: as in the perusing of this complaining prayer, thou maiest notoriously vnderstand. Wherefore hauing no need to stand in any further expressing of this matter, but leauing it to thine owne consideration, and discretion: I will speed my selfe (Christ willing) to proceed toward the time of Iohn Wickliffe, and his fellowes, taking by order of yeares as I go, such things by the way, as both happened before the said time of Wickliffe, and also may the better prepare the mind of the reader, to the entring of that storie. Where first I thinke it not inconuenient to inserre a prophetical parable, written about this time or not much before, which the author morally applieth vnto the bishop of Rome. To what author this prophecie or morall is to be ascribed, I haue not certainly to affirme. Some say, that Rupescissanus (of whom mention is made before, pag. 359) was the author thereof, and alleage it out of Froyſard; but in Froyſard as yet I haue not found it. In the meane season, as I haue found it in Latine expressed, because it painteth out the pope so rightly in his feathers and colours, as I thought the thing not to be omitted, so I toke this present place, as most fit (although peraduenture missing the order of yeares a little) to insert the same. The effect of which parable followeth heere vnder written.

In the time of pope Innocent the sixt aboue specified, this Ioannes de Rupescissa, a frier, among other his prophecies marueilously forespake (as alleageth Froyſard, who both heard and saw him) of the taking of Iohn the French king prisoner, and brought forth many other notable collections concerning the perils, mutations & changings in the church to come. And at what time the pope kept him at Auinion in prison (where Froyſard is said to see him and to speake with him) the said Froyſard heard in the popes court this example and parable, recited by the foresaid frier Rupescissanus, to the two cardinals, to wit, cardinall Hostiensis, and cardinall Auxercensis. Which followeth in these words.

A parable prophesying the destruction of the pope.

When on a certaine time, a bird was brought into the world all bare and without feathers, the other birds hearing thereof, came to visit her: and for that they saw her to bee a maruellous faire and beautifull bird, they counselled together how they might best do her good, sith by no meanes without feathers, shee might either flie or liue commodiously. They all wished her to liue for her excellent forme and beauties sake, in so much that among them all there was not one, that would not grant some part of her owne feathers to decke this bird withall: yea, and the more trim they saw her to be, the more feathers still they gaue vnto her, so that by this meanes shee was passing well penned and feathered, and began to flie. The other birds that thus had adorned her with goodly feathers, beholding her to flie abroad, were marueilously delighted therewith. In the end, this bird seeing her selfe so gorgeously feathered, and of all the rest to be had in honor; began to waxe proud and hautie. In so much that she had no regard at all vnto them, by whom she was aduanced: yea she punged them with her beake, plucked them by the skin and feathers, and in all places hurted them. Whereupon the birds sitting in counsell againe, called the matter in question, demanding one of another what was best to be done touching this vnkind bird, whom they louingly with their owne feathers had decked and adorned: affirming that they gaue not their feathers to the intent that shee thereby puft vp with pride, should contemptuously despise them all. The Peacocke therefore answereth first: Truly, saith hee, for that shee is brauely set forth with my painted feathers, I will againe take them from her. Then saith the Faulcon, and I also will haue mine againe. This sentence at length toke place among them all, so that euery one plucked from her those feathers which before they had giuen, challenging to them their owne againe. Now this proud bird seeing her selfe thus to be dealt withall, began forthwith to abate her hautie stomacke, and humblie to submit her selfe openly, confessing and acknowledging that of her selfe shee did nothing: but that her feathers, her honor and other ornaments was their gift: shee came into the world all naked and bare, they clad her with comely feathers, and therefore of right may they receiue them againe. Wherefore in most humble wise shee desireth pardon, promising to amend all that is past, neither would shee at any time hereafter commit, whereby through pride shee might leese her feathers againe. The gentle birds that before had giuen their feathers, seeing her so humble and lowlie, being moued with pitie, restored againe the feathers, which lately they had taken away, adding withall this admonition: Wee will gladly, say they, behold thy flying among vs, so long as thou wilt vse thine office with humblenesse of mind, which is the chiefest comelinesse of all the rest. But this haue thou for certaintie, that if at any time hereafter thou extoll thy selfe in pride, we will straightwaies depriue thee of thy feathers, and reduce thee into thy former state wherein we found thee. Euen so, oh you cardinals (saith Ioannes Rupescissanus) shall it happen vnto you. For the emperors of Romans and Almaine, and other christian kings, potentates, and princes of the earth, haue bestowed vpon you goods, lands, and riches, that should serue God, but you haue powred it out and consumed it vpon pride, all kind of wickednesse, riot and wantonnesse.

Arma-

Armachanus.

The like and storie of Armachanus, archbishop and primat of Ireland.

IN the catalogue of these learned and zealous defenders of Christ against Antichrist aboue rehearsed, whom the Lord about this time began to raise vp for reformation of his church, being then farre out of frame, I cannot forget nor omit somewhat to write of the reuerend prelat, and famous clerke, Richard Armachanus, primate and archbishop of Ireland: A man for his life and learning so memorable, as the condition of those daies then serued, that the same daies then as they had but few good, so had none almost his better. His name was Richard Fitzraf, made primate and archbishop, as is said, of Ireland. First brought vp in the Vniuersitie of Oxford, in the studie of all liberall knowledge, wherein he did exceedingly profit vnder John Bakenthorpe his tutor and instructor. In this time the begging friers began greatly to multiplie and spread, vnto whom this Bakenthorpe was euer a great enemie. Whose steps the scholars also following, began to do the like. Such was the capacitie and dexteritie of this Fitzraf, that he being commended to king Edward the third, was promoted by him, first to be archdeacon of Lichfield, then to be the Commissarie of the Vniuersitie of Oxford: At length to be archbishop of Armach in Ireland. He being archbishop, vpon a time had cause to come vp to London: At what time heere in the said citie of London was contention betweene the friers and the clergie about preaching, and hearing confessions, &c. Whereupon, this Armachanus being requested to preach, made seuen or eight sermons. Wherein he propounded nine conclusions against the friers, for the which he was cited vp by the friers before this pope Innocent 6. to appeare: & so he did; who before the face of the pope valiantly defended, both in preaching and in writting the same conclusions, and therein stood constantly vnto the death, as the words of John Wickliffe in this Trialogo doe well testifie in this wise: Ab Anglorum episcopis conductus Armachanus, nouem in Auinione conclusiones coram Innocentio 6. & suorum cardinalium cœtu, contra fratrum mendicitatem, audacter publicauit, verbóque ac scriptis ad mortem vsque defendit. The like also testifieth of him Waldenus in fasciculo zizaniorum. Also Volateranus reporteth the same. Gulielmus Botonerus testifying of him in like manner, saith: that Armachanus first reproued begging friers for hearing the confessions of professed nuns, without licence of their superiors, and also of married women without knowledge of their husbands. What dangers and troubles he sustained by his persecutours, and how miraculously the Lord deliuered him from their hands: in so much, that they meeting him in the open streets and in cleare day light, yet had no power to see him, nor to apprehend him. In what perill of theeues and searchers he was in, and yet the Lord deliuered him, yea and caused his money being taken from him, to be restored again to him by portions, in time of his necessitie and famine. And from what dangers of the kings officers, which comming with the kings letters, laid all the hauens for him: yet how the Lord Iesus deliuered him, shewing him by what waies how to escape them. Moreouer, what appeales were laid against him, to the number of sixteene, and yet how the Lord gaue him to triumph ouer all his enemies. How the Lord also taught him and brought him out of the profound vanities of Aristotles subtiltie, to the studie of the Scriptures of God. All this with much more, hee himselfe expresseth in a certaine prayer or confession made to Christ Iesus our Lord, in which hee describeth almost the whole historie of his owne life. Which prayer I haue to shew in old written hand, and hereafter (Christ willing) intend, as time serueth, to publish the same. The beginning of the prayer in Latine is this.

The tronbles and persecutions of Armachanus.

Armachanus preserued manifold wates by the Lord.

The prayer of Armachanus.

Tibi laus, tibi gloria, tibi gratiarum actio, Iesu pijssime, Iesu potentissime, Iesu dulcissime: qui dixisti, Ego sum via, veritas & vita. Via sine deuio: veritas sine nubilo: & vita sine termino. Quod tute viam mihi ostendisti. Tute veritatem me docuisti. Et tute vitam mihi promisisti. Via eras mihi in exilio. Veritas eras in consilio. Et vita eris mihi in præmio. With the rest that followeth in the foresaid prayer.

Thus what were the troubles of this good man, and how he was cited vp by the friers to the pope, you haue partly heard. Now what were his reasons and arguments wherewith hee defended his cause in the popes presence, followeth to be declared. For the tractation whereof, first I must put the Reader in remembrance of the controuersie mentioned before in the storie of Gulielmus de sancto Amore, pag. 287. Also in the storie of the Vniuersitie of Paris contending against the friers, pag. 360. For so long did this controuersie continue in the church, from the yeare 1240. when the Oxford men began first to stand against the friers, to the time of this Armachanus, that is, to the yeare 1360. and after this time yet more increased. So it pleased the secret prouidence of God (for what cause hee best knoweth) to suffer his church to be entangled and exercised sometimes with matters and controuersies of no great importance: Either to keepe the vanitie of mens wits thus occupied from idlenesse, or else to prepare their minds by these smaller matters, to the consideration and searching out of other things more graue and waighty. Like as now in these our Queenes daies, wee see what tragedies be raised vp in England about formes and fashions of Ministers wearings, what troubles grow, what placing and displacing there is about the same: Euen so at this time hapned the like stir about the liberties and priuiledges of the friers, which not a little troubled and occupied all the churches and Diuines almost through Christendome. The which controuersie, to the intent it may better be vnderstood (all the circumstances thereof being explained) we will first begin from the originall and foundation of the matter, to declare by order and course of yeares, vpon what occasion this variance first rising, in continuance of time increased and multiplied in gathering more matter, and brast out at length to this tumultuous contention among learned men.

Concerning therefore this present matter, first it is to bee vnderstood, that in the yeare of our Lord 1215. vnder pope Innocent the third, was called a generall councell at Laterane, mentioned before, pag. 231. in the daies of king John. In the which councell among many other things, was constituted a certaine law or canon, beginning Omnis vtriusque sexus, &c. the tenor of which canon in English is thus.

Can. omnis vtriusque sexus, Sect. extide De pœn.

Be it decred, that euerie faithfull Christian, both man and woman comming to the yeares of discretion, shall confesse himselfe alone of all his sinnes, to the priest of his owne proper parish, once in the yeare at least: and that hee shall endeuour by his owne selfe to fulfill the penance, whensoeuer hee receiueth the sacrament of Eucharistie, at least at the time of Easter. Vnlesse by the assent of his Minister, vpon some reasonable cause to abstaine for the time. Otherwise doing, let him both lacke the communion of the church being aliue, and christian burial when he is dead. Wherefore bee it decreed, that this wholesome constitution shall be published accustomablie in churches, to the end that no man of ignorance or of blindnesse make to himselfe a cloke of excuse. And if any shall confesse himselfe to any other priest then of his owne parish vpon anie iust cause, let him aske and obtaine first licence of his owne priest: Otherwise, the priest to haue no power to bind him or to loose him, &c.

Note heere, he calleth it not the sacrament of the altar.

In the time of this Innocentius, and of this Laterane councell, was Dominicke, the first author and founder of the preaching friers: who laboured to the said pope Innocent, for the confirmation of his order; but did not obtaine, in his life time.

Frier Dominicke in the time of pope Innocent the 3. obtained not the confirmation of his order.

The nert yeare after this Laterane councell, died pope Innocent, an. 1216. after whom came Honorius the third. Who in the first yeare of his popedome confirmed the order of the frier Dominicke, and gaue to him and his friers authoritie to preach and to heare confessions, with diuers other priuiledges more. And vnder this pope, which gouerned ten yeares, liued Dominicke fiue yeares after the confirmation of his order, and died, an. 1221. About which yeare, the order of the Franciscan friers began also to breed, and to spread in the world, through preaching and hearing confessions.

The order of frier Dominicke first confirmed by pope Honorius the third.

After this Honorius, nert followed pope Gregorie the ninth, about the yeare of our Lord 1228. who for the promoting of the foresaid order of Dominickes, gaue out this Bull, in tenor as followeth.

The order of the Franciscans confirmed shortlie after the Dominickes.

The Bull of pope Gregorie in the behalfe of the Dominicke friers.

Gregorius bishop, seruant of Gods seruants, to his reuerend brethren, archbishops, bishops, and to his welbeloued children, abbats, priors, and to all prelats of churches, to whom soeuer these presents shall come, greeting, and Apostolicall blessing. Because [a] iniquitie hath abounded, and the charitie of many hath waxt cold: Behold, the Lord hath raised vp the order of our welbeloued children the preaching friers, who not seeking things of their owne, but pertaining to Iesus Christ, to the extirping as well of heresies, as to the rooting out also of other pernicious pestilences; haue dedicated themselues to the preaching of the [b] word of God. We therefore minding to aduance their sacred purpose, &c. and followeth: commanding you to see the said persons, gently to be receiued among you: And that your flockes committed to your charge doe receiue deuoutly the seed of Gods word out of their mouth, and do confesse their sinnes vnto them, all such as list, whom wee haue authorised to the same, to heare confessions, and to enioine penance, &c. Dat. Perusij. an. Pont. nostri 8.

a Iniquitie hath abounded at Rome.

b May, to the preaching rather of mens traditions against the word of God.

The friers authorised to heare confessions, and to enioyne penance.

This pope Gregory died about the yeere of our Lord 1241. after whom came Celestinus the fourth and sate but eighteene daies: then came Innocentius the fourth, and sate eleuen yeeres and six moneths. Who although he began first to fauour the friers: yet afterward being altered by certaine Diuines, of Vniuersities, prelats of churches, and curats; debarred them of their liberties and priuiledges, and gaue out against precepts and excommunications, as well against the friers, as all other religious persons. And not long after the same he was dispatched and made away.

Pope Innocent the fourth against the friers.

Innocentius being thus remoued out of the way, about the yeare of our Lord 1353. Then ſucceeded pope Alexander the fourth a great maintainer of the friers, and ſate 7. yeares. He reuoked and repealed the acts and writings of pope Innocent his predeceſſour, giuen forth againſt the friers: wherewith the Diuines and ſtudents of Paris being not well contented, ſtirred vp foure principall doctours: The firſt and chiefe captaine was Guliel. de ſancto Amore, mentioned before, pag. 287. againſt whom wrote Albertus Magnus, and Thomas Aquine. And at laſt he was condemned by this foreſaid pope Alexander the fourth, in the Extrau. Non ſine multa. The ſecond was Simon Iornalenſis, the third Godfridus de fontibus, the fourth Henricus de Gandauo. Theſe foure with other their complices, compiled a certaine booke againſt the begging order of friers, both Dominicans, and Franciſcans, intituled, De periculis Eccleſiæ, containing fourteene chapters, whereof the fourteenth, which is the laſt, with thirtie nine articles againſt the friers we haue alreadie tranſlated and expreſſed, pag. 291. Beſide theſe thirtie nine articles, be other ſeuen articles moreouer to the ſaid booke annexed, vnder the name of the ſtudents of Paris againſt the friers, proouing why the ſaid friers ought not to be admitted into their ſocietie. Which ſeuen articles becauſe they are but ſhort, I thought heere better to place, then to omit them.

Pope Alexander the fourth vndoeth the acts of pope Innocent the fourth, his predeceſſor.

Extrau. non ſine multa.

Gul. de ſancto Amore, Simon Iornalenſis, Godfridus de fontibus, Hen. de Gandauo, foure champions againſt the friers.

Certaine articles giuen out by the ſtudents of Paris, againſt the friers, why they ſhould not be admitted to their ſocietie.

Articles of the ſtudents of Paris againſt the friers.

FIrſt we ſay, they are not to bee admitted to the ſocietie of our ſchoole, but vpon our will and licence. For our companie or fellowſhip ought not to be coactiue, but voluntarie and free.

Secondly, we ſay they are not to be admitted, for ſo much as we oft proued, their commmittie manifold waies to be hurtfull and incommodious.

Thirdly, ſeeing they be of a diuers profeſſion from vs (for they are called regular, and not ſcholaſticall) we therefore ought not to be ioyned and aſſociate together in one ſcholaſticall office: For as much as the councell of Spaine doth ſay, Thou ſhalt not plough with an oxe, and with an aſſe together. Which is to ſay: Men of diuers profeſſions ought not together to bee matched in one kind of calling, or ſtanding, for their ſtudies and conditions be diſagreeing and diſſeuered from ours, and cannot frame or ſouple together in one communion.

Concilium Hiſpan.

Fourthly, we affirme by the Apoſtle that they are not to be admitted, becauſe they worke diſſenſions and offences: for ſo ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. vlt. We deſire you brethren, that yee obſerue and take heed of ſuch as make diſſenſions and offendicles about the doctrine which you haue learned by the Apoſtles, and auoid them. For ſuch ſerue not the Lord, but their owne belly. Gloſſ. Some they flatter, ſome they backbite, whereby they might feed their bellies. That through their ſweete and pleaſant words, and by their benedictions, they may deceiue the hearts of the ſimple. Gloſſ. That is, with their fine ſugered and trim couched words they ſet forth their owne traditions, wherewith they beguile the hearts of the ſimple innocents.

The friers make diſſenſions.

Friers deuour mens houſes. Penetrantes domos.

Fiftly, we ſay they are not to be admitted: For that we feare leſt they be in the number of them, which go about and deuour mens houſes. For they thruſt in themſelues into euery mans houſe, ſearching and ſacking the conſciences and eſtates of all perſons. And whom they find eaſie to be ſeduced, as women; ſuch they do circumuent, and leade them away from the counſels of their prelats, binding them either in act or oth: from ſuch we are warned by the apoſtle to auoid.

Sirtly, we ſay they are to be auoided: becauſe we feare they are falſe prophets. Which being neither biſhops, nor pariſh prieſts, nor yet their vicars, nor ſent by them, yet they preach (not ſent) againſt the mind of the apoſtle, Rom. 10. ſaying: How ſhall they preach except they be ſent? for elſe there appeareth in them no ſuch great vertue, for the which they ought to bee admitted to preach vncalled. Seeing therefore that ſuch are ſo dangerous to the church, they ought to be auoided.

Friers preach vncalled.

Seuenthly, we ſay they are not to be admitted, becauſe they be a people ſo curious in ſearching and inquiring of other mens doings and ſpirituall demeanor. And yet be they neither Apoſtles, nor yet ſucceſſours of the apoſtles, as biſhops: nor of the number of the ſeuentie two diſciples of the Lord: nor their ſucceſſours, that is, pariſh prieſts: nor their helpers, nor yet vicars. Wherefore, ſeeing they liue ſo in no order, by the ſentence of the apoſtle we are commanded to auoid them, 2. Theſſal. vlt. Where he ſaith: We admoniſh and denounce vnto you (O brethren) in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: that is, as the Gloſſe ſaith (We command you by the authoritie of Chriſt) that you withdraw your ſelues from euerie brother, that walketh inordinately, and not after the tradition, which you haue receiued of vs, &c. Looke vpon the common gloſſe of this place, and you ſhall find, that ſuch are to be auoided till time they amend from ſo doing, &c.

Friers haue no order of any calling in the church.

Beſides theſe articles aboue rehearſed, certaine propoſitions or concluſions were alſo propounded in the ſchooles of Paris the ſame time, ſolemnely to be diſputed and defended againſt the friers: which in a briefe ſumme of words to collect, were theſe.

Certaine concluſions in the Vniuerſitie of Paris to be diſputed of againſt the friers.

Firſt, that the begging friers were not in the ſtate of ſaluation.

Secondly, that they were bound to labor with their hands that could, and not to beg.

Thirdlie, that they ought not to exerciſe the office of preaching, or to heare the confeſſions of them that will come vnto them, although being licenſed thereunto by the biſhop of Rome, or by the Dioceſan: for ſo much as the ſame is preiudiciall to the Miniſters and Prieſts of the parithes.

All theſe foreſaid articles and concluſions, with the booke ſet forth by theſe Paris men; this pope Alexander the fourth condemned to be aboliſhed and burned, writing his precepts to the French king, and alſo the Vniuerſitie of Paris, in the fauour of the friers: willing and commanding the ſaid friers to be reſtored to all their priuiledges and liberties, in as ample manner, as in pope Gregories time before.

Pope Alexander the fourth a great fauourer of the friers.

Not long after pope Alexander the fourth, followed Clement the fourth, an. 1263. and ſate three yeares. Who alſo gaue the priuiledge to the friers, beginning, Quidam temere, &c. In which priuiledge he condemneth them that ſay, that no man without licence of his curat or miniſter, ought to confeſſe him to the friers, or that a ſubiect ought to aſke licence of their miniſters ſo to do, which was againſt the canon Omnis vtriuſque ſexus, &c. made by pope Innocent the third, before recited.

Another priuiledge giuen to the friers by pope Clement the fourth.

Ex Clement. Quidã temere.

After this Clement, againe came pope Martine the fourth, an. 1281. who renued againe the canon, Omnis vtriuſque ſexus, in the behalfe of the curats againſt the friers.

Pope Martin the fourth holdeth with curats againſt the friers.

Then pope Boniface the eighth began to ſit, an. 1294. eight yeares, nine moneths. Who taking ſide with the friers, gaue to them another priuiledge, beginning, Supra Cathedram, &c. In the which priuiledge he licenſed the friers, that without licence of vicars of churches, they ſhall firſt preſent themſelues to the prelats to be admitted; by whom if they be refuſed the ſecond time, then they vpon ſpeciall authoritie of this pope, ſhall be priuiledged, without either biſhop or curat, to preach, to burie, and to heare confeſſions, whoſoeuer will come to them, renuking all that was decreed by his predeceſſours before to the contrarie notwithſtanding.

By this pope Boniface a certaine Dominicke frier was made cardinall, named Nicolaus de Treuiſio, and after the death of Boniface was made alſo pope, an. 1303. ſurnamed pope Benedictus 11. Who ſeeing the conſtitution of Boniface his predeceſſour, to gender diſſenſion betweene the prieſts and friers, made another conſtitution, beginning, Inter cunctas, &c. reuoking the conſtitution of Boniface his predeceſſour. Vpon which conſtitution of pope Benedict, Ioannes Monachus, making a gloſſe, reuoked alſo his other gloſſe made vpon the conſtitution of Boniface before.

Ex Clementi. inter cunctas.

Ioan. Monach. reuoketh his gloſſe.

Againe, after this Benedictus the eleuenth, followed pope Clement the fifth, an. 1305. and ſate nine yeares. Who in his generall councell holden at Vienna, reuoked the conſtitution of Benedictus his predeceſſour, and renued againe the former decree of Boniface, by a new conſtitution of his, beginning, Dudum à Bonifacio 8. &c. Which conſtitution moreouer was confirmed afterward by pope John the 22. an. 1316. Which pope alſo cauſed Ioannes de Poliaco to recant.

Pope Clement the fifth holdeth with the friers, and repealeth the conſtitution of Benedictus. Ex Clement. cap. dudum.

Vpon this variable diuerſitie of the popes (one diſſenting and repugning from another) roſe among the Diuines and ſchoolemen in Vniuerſities great matter of contention, as well in the Vniuerſitie of Paris, as the Vniuerſitie of Oxford about the begging friers, ſome holding one way, ſome another way. But eſpecially fiue principall opinions be noted of learned men, who then diſputing againſt the friers, were condemned for heretikes, and their aſſertions reproued.

The firſt, was the opinion of them which defended, that the friers might not by the licence of the biſhop of Rome and of the prelats, preach in pariſhes, and heare confeſſions. And of this opinion was Guliel. de ſancto Amore, with his fellowes, who, as it is ſaid, were condemned.

Fiue diuers opinions of learned men in this age holding againſt the friers.

The ſecond opinion was this, that friers, although not by their owne authoritie, yet by priuiledge of the pope and of the biſhop, might preach and heare confeſſions in pariſhes, but yet not without licence of the pariſh prieſts. Of this opinion was Bernardus, gloſing vpon the canon, Omnis vtriuſque ſexus, as foreſaid mentioned.

The ſecond opinion. Bernardus ſuper cap. Omnis vtriuſque.

The third opinion was, that friers might preach and heare confeſſions, without licence of the pariſh prieſts: but yet the ſaid pariſhioners notwithſtanding were bound by the canon, Omnis vtriuſque ſexus, to repeate the ſame ſinnes againe, if they had no other, to their owne proper curat: and of this opinion were many, as Godfridus de fontibus, Henricus de Gandauo, Ioannes Monachus cardin. Ioannes de Poliaco, which Ioannes de Poliaco, pope John the 22. cauſed openly in Paris, to recant and retract.

The third opinion. Ioan. de Poliaco.

This Ioannes de Poliaco doctor of Diuinitie in Paris, being complained of by the friers for certaine articles or aſſertions, was ſent for to the pope: where time and place being to him aſſigned, hee in the audience of the pope and of frierly cardinals and other doctors, was ſtraitly examined of his articles. To make the ſtorie ſhort, hee at length ſubmitting himſelfe to to the authoritie of the terrible see of Rome: was caused to recant his assertions openly at Paris. His assertions which hee did hold, were these.

The three assertions of Ioannes de Poliaco, which he was caused by the pope to recant at Paris.

John de Poliaco caused to recant by pope Iohn the 22.

The three assertions of Iohn de Poliaco against the friers.

His three assertions.

Whereof the first was, they which were confessed to friers, although hauing a generall licence to heare confessions; were bound to confesse againe their sins to their owne parish priest, by the constitution, Omnis vtriusque sexus, &c.

The second was, that the said constitution, Omnis vtriusque sexus, standing in his force, the pope could not make: but parishioners were bound once a yeare to confesse their sinnes to their priest. For the doing otherwise importeth a contradiction in it selfe.

The third was, that the pope could not giue generall licence to heare confessions so, but that the parishioner so confessed was bound to reiterat the same confession made, vnto his owne curat. Which he proued by these places of the canon law: 25. quest. 1. Quæ ad perpetuam. Those things which bee generallie ordained for publike vtilitie, ought not to bee altered by any change, &c. Item, the decrees of the sacred Canons, none ought to keepe more then the bishop apostolicall, &c. Ibidem. Item, to alter or to ordaine any thing against the decrees of the fathers, is not in the authoritie or power, no not of the apostolicall see: Ibidem.

25. q. 1. Quæ ad perpetuam. Contra statuta patrum condere vel mutare aliquid nec huius quidem sedis potest auctoritas.

The fourth opinion.

The fourth opinion was, that the friers by the licence of the pope and of the bishops might lawfully heare confessions, and the people might be of them confessed and absolued. But yet notwithstanding, it was reason, conuenient, honest, and profitable, that once in the yeare they should be confessed to their curats (although being confessed before to the friers) because for the administration of sacraments, especially at Easter. Of which opinion was Guilielmus de monte Landuno. Henricus de Gandauo also held, not only to be conuenient, but also that they were bound so to do.

Guilielmus de monte Landuno. Henricus de Gandauo.

The fifth opinion.

The fifth opinion was, that albeit the friers might at all times, and at Easter also, heare confessions as the curats did: yet it was better and more safe, at the time of Easter to confesse to the curats, then to the friers. And of this opinion was this our Armachanus, of whom we presently now intreat.

And thus haue yee, as in a briefe summe, opened vnto you, what was the matter of contention betweene the friers and the churchmen. What popes made with the friers: and what popes made against them. Moreouer, what learned men disputed against them in Paris, and other places, and what were their opinions.

The matter of contention about the friers, stood in foure points. First preaching without licence of curats. Secondly, in hearing confessions. Thirdly, in burying. Fourthly, in begging and taking of the people.

Ex libro cui titulus, Defensoria curatorum.

sustained against the idle beggerly sects of friers, in whom the reader may well perceiue antichrist plainly raigning and fighting against the church: now remaineth, that as I haue before declared the trauels and troubles of diuers godly learned men in the church striuing against the said friers, continually from the time of Guliel. de Amore, hitherto: So now it remaineth, that for as much as this our Armachanus labouring and in the same cause sustained the like conflict with the same antichrist; we likewise collect and open his reasons and arguments vttered in the consistorie and in the audience of the pope himselfe, wherewith he maintaineth the true doctrine and cause of the church against the pestiferous canker creeping in by these friers after subtill waies of hypocrisie, to corrupt the sincere simplicitie of Christs holy faith & perfect Testament. The which reasons and arguments of his, with the whole processe of his doings, I thought good and expedient for the vtilitie of the church, more amplie and largely to discourse and prosecute, for that I note in the sects, institutions, and doctrine of these friers, such subtill poison to lurke, more pernicious and hurtfull to the religion of Christ and soules of christians, then all men peraduenture do consider.

Thus Armachanus ioyning with the clergie of England, disputed and contended with the friers here of England, An. 1358, about a double matter. Whereof the one was concerning confession and other eyeats which the friers inroched in parish churches against the curats, and publike pastors of churches. The other was concerning wilfull beggerie and pouertie, which the friers then tooke vpon them, not vpon any necessitie, being otherwise strong enough to worke for their liuing, but only vpon a wilfull and affected profession. For the which cause the friers appealed him vp to the court of Rome. The occasion whereof thus did rise.

It befell, that Armachanus vpon certaine businesse comming vp to London, found there certaine Doctors disputing and contending about the begging of Christ our Sauiour. Whereupon (hee being greatly vrged and requested oft times thereunto) at request, made seuen or eight sermons vnto the people at London, wherein he vttered nine conclusions. Whereof the first and principall conclusion was, touching the matter of the friers priuiledges, in hearing confessions. His conclusion was this.

First, that if a doubt or question be moued for hearing confessions, which of two places is rather to be chosen: The parish church is to be preferred before the church of the friers.

Secondly, being demanded whether is to be taken (to heare the confession of the parishioners, the parson, or curat, or the frier) it is to be said, rather the parson or the curat.

Thirdly, that our Lord Iesus Christ in his humane conuersation was alwaies poore, but not that he loued pouertie, or did couet to be poore.

Fourthly, that our Lord Iesus Christ did neuer beg, wilfully professing to be poore.

Fifthly, that our Lord Iesus Christ did neuer teach wilfullie to beg, or to professe wilfull beggerie.

The first conclusion was, that Christ our Lord did contrarie, that men ought not wilfully or purposely without meere necessitie to beg.

Seuenthly, that there is neither wisdome nor holines, for any man to take vpon him wilfull beggerie, perpetually to be obserued.

The eighth, that it is not agreeing to the rule of the obseruants, or friers minorits, to obserue wilfull pouertie.

The last conclusion was, touching the Bull of pope Alexander the fourth, which condemned the libell of the maisters of Paris: that the same Bull touched none of these seuen last conclusions.

Upon these nine conclusions premised, Armachanus being appealed, cited, and brought vp to the presence of the pope; began to proue the same his foresaid conclusions or assertions vnder protestation made, that his intention was not to affirme any thing contrarie to the christian faith, or to the catholike doctrine, or that should be preiudiciall or destructiue to the orders of the begging friers, such as were approued by holy church, or confirmed by the high bishops: But only his intention was, to haue the said orders reduced to the puritie of their first institution. Concerning which matter, he desired his reasons to be heard; which if they should be found weaker then the reasons of the friers, the punishment should be his. If otherwise, that then the friers iustly to be rewarded for their slanderous obtrectation and publike contumelies, and iniurious dealings both priuatly and publikely wrought and sought against him: And so taking for his theme: Nolite iudicare secundum faciem, sed iustum iudicium iudicate, &c. That is: Judge not after the outward face, but iudge true iudgement, &c. Iohn seuenth: hee entreth to the probation of his conclusions: First beginning with the former conclusion, that the parish church was a place more fit and conuenient, for the confessions or burials of the parishioners to bee vsed, then any other exempt church or place of the friers. Which hee proued by three causes: First for the more sureneste or certaintie to the conscience of the parishioners confessed. Secondly, for the more more vtilitie and profit of him. Thirdly, for the lesse incommoditie insuing by confessions taken in parish churches, then in friers churches.

The first part of the first conclusion confirmed.

As touching the first, for the more assurednesse and certainty, thus he argued vpon the place of Deut. 12. Vnto that place, which the Lord your God shall assigne of all your tribes, to place his name and dwell therein: thither shall you resort, to offer vp your oblations, tithes, &c. And in the same place God saith: See thou offer not thy sacrifice in euery place that liketh thee: but in that place alone which the Lord hath elect in one of the tribes; and thou shalt do in all things as I command thee.

Deut. 12.

Leuit. 4. 5.

Also vpon the words of Leuit. 4. and 5. which be these: Whosoeuer sinneth of ignorance, shall offer to the priest, and he shall pray for him, and he shall be forgiuen, &c. Vpon these places thus he argued: that for as much as the Sacraments of the church are to be frequented and vsed in no other place, but only in that, which by God himselfe peculiarly is assigned and commanded for the same: And seeing that elect place in the law representeth the parish churches: neither can it be proued that the friers church is the place prescribed of God, but only permitted by bishops of Rome: hee concluded therefore, that parish churches for confessions and burials, were more sure and certaine to the conscience of parishioners, then the exempt places of the friers.

The first part of the first conclusion confirmed by another reason.

By another reason also he confirmed the same, for that the parish church commonly standeth free from the popes interdict, so doe not the churches of the friers. As which stand not so cleare, but that they are vnder suspition and doubt of the popes interdict: By the decretall. De sepulturis in sexto cap. Animarum periculis. In which Decretall, all such conuentuall churches and churchyards of friers be interdicted, which do induce any person or persons, either by oath or promise made, to chuse their burying places in their churches, as commonlie the friers are reported to do. For else what parishioner would forsake his owne church and parish where his ancestors do lie, to be buried among the friers, if the friers did not induce them so to do?

The second part of the first conclusion confirmed.

Moreouer, for the second part, concerning the vtilitie of the place, that hee confirmed doublewise. First, for that confession made within the parish church, hath a double merit of obedience, both for obeying the commandement of God in opening his confession: (Thus he speaketh according to the blindnesse of that time, for that auricular confession hath any commandement of God, cannot be proued:) and also in obeying the commandement of God in obseruing the place by him appointed, the which second merit of obedience lacketh in the friers part.

Another confirmation of the second part of the first article.

Secondly, hee proued to be greater vtilitie for a parishioner to confesse him in his parish church, then with the friers: Because commonly the number of christen people praying, is ten times more in parish churches. Whereby is to be thought, that each singuler person may better be helped through more prayers, then in the Oratories of the friers, &c.

The third part of the first conclusion proued.

Further, as touching the third part of the first conclusion or article he proued, that it had fewer incommodities to resort euerie man to his parish church then to the friers: for that both great vtilitie, and more certaintie (as hath been proued) did insue thereof: which two being taken away, (as must needs, in resorting to the friers church) then two speciall commodities should be hindered, and so great incommodities thereof should follow. And thus much for the place of the friers.

The second conclusion or article.

Now to the second conclusion or article, touching the person of the frier, and of the ordinarie curat. If the question be, which of these two is to be preferred in the office of Ecclesiasticall administration: the opinion of Armachanus was, that the ordinarie curat was better then the extraordinarie frier, and that for the three foresaid respects, to wit: for certaintie or assurance, for vtilitie, and for incommoditie to bee auoided.

Three respects or causes to be proued.

First, that it is more safe and sure for the parishioners to resort to their ordinarie or parish priest, hee argued by three reasons: first because the person of the lawfull ordinarie or priests is expressely of God commanded, where the person of the frier is not, and therefore is forbid. Secondly, because the parishioner may more trust to his ordinarie curat, as who is more bound and obliged to prouide and to be carefull for him, then any other extraordinarie person. Thirdly, because in the person of the ordinarie curat, commonly there is no doubt of any interdict to bind him: whereas contrarie in the friers behalfe, there is good matter to doubt, whether he stand bound vnder the popes censure of excommunication or not, and that for diuers causes, as by the cap. Religiosi, in Clementinis de decimis. Where is decreed, That all such religious men, which hauing no benefices or cure of soules, presume to imporperat vnto them glebe land or other tithes due vnto churches, and not appertaining to them (by any manner of colour or fraudulent circumuention) do incurre the sentence of excommunication, ipso facto. Also by another cap. Religiosi, De priuilegijs, in Clement. Where it is said, that all such religious men are excommunicated De facto, whosoeuer do absolue any, against whom the sentence of excommunication hath been denounced by statute prouinciall, or synodall: as it is commonly said, that the friers hearing mens confessions are accustomed to do, in loosing them whom the censure of prelats or their officials haue bound. Whereof the said Armachanus bringeth forth example of his owne diocesse: For I (said he) in mine owne diocesse of Armachan, haue as good as two thousand vnder mee, who by the censure of excommunication euerie yeare, denounced against wilfull murtherers, common theeues, burners of mens houses, and such like malefactours, stand accursed: Of all which number notwithstanding, scarcely fourteene there bee, which come to me or to any about me for their absolution. And yet all they receiue the Sacraments as other do, and all because they bee absolued, or because they faine themselues to be absolued by none other then by friers: who in so doing, are proued to bee vnder the danger of excommunication, both the friers, and also the parishioners, if they knowing thereof do consent to their errour.

Ca. Religiosi, Clement. de decimis.

In Clementino de priuilegijs, cap. Religiosi.

The friers proued to be excommunicat by the popes law.

Also out of the said Clementines, by three other places in one chapter, hee proued the friers to bee excommunicat, to wit in the chapter Cupientes, De pœnis in Clement. In the which chapter: First, all such religious men are excommunicat, which in their Sermons presume to withdraw their hearers from their tithes paying, due vnto churches. Secondlie, in the said chapter all such friers are suspended from preaching, and so are excommunicat, which within a certaine time did not make a concion to such as come to their confessions, in paying their tithes truely and duely to the church. Thirdlie, in the foresaid chapter also, all such religious persons bee bound in excommunication, which induce men by any manner of meanes, either by vow, oath, or promise, to chuse their burials within their churches, or not to change the same, if they haue made ante such promise before. In all which three points, hee proued the friers to be culpable and excommunicate.

Ca. Cupientes de pœnis. Clement.

The friers proued to be excommunicated by the popes law.

Another proofe that the parishioner may more safely go to his curat, then to the friers.

Moreouer, for the more sure way for the parishioners to resort to their appointed curats, then to the friers, hee argued thus: For that the parish priest or curat being better acquainted with his owne parishioner then is a stranger, can better iudge of the nature and disposition of his disease, and minister to him due physicke of penance for the same, and also will bee more carefull in curing him.

The second part of the second conclusion proued.

Thus the first part of the second conclusion or article being proued and argued, Armachanus procedeth further to proue the second part: that it is better for the parishioners to leaue the friers, and to resort to their owne pastors. Which he proued by eight or nine reasons.

First, for that the ordinarie pastor, is properly appointed of God vnto that ministerie: whereas the frier is but only permitted of man thereunto.

Secondly, for that in resorting to the ordinarie of the parish, is a double reward of merit, whereas in comming to the friers there is but one.

Thirdly, because the ordinarie is more bound to his owne flocke, and is to be thought to be more tender and carefull ouer them, then a stranger.

Fourthly, because to resort to the person of his owne ordinarie, there is more assurance and certaintie (as is aboue declared) then to another.

Innocent. cap. Si animarum.

Fiftly, because (as Innocentius, cap. Si animarum, saith) the comming to the curat or pastor ordinarie, is more easie and light, both in the night and in necessitie.

Sixtly, for so much as the parishioner must needs come to his curat at sometime, and especially being in necessitie; it is expedient and profitable, that his former life before were knowne to him, rather then to the other.

Seuenthly, for that (as the said Innocentius affirmeth) it striketh more shame of his sinne to the parishioner to be confessed to his curat whom he seeth euery day, then to a frier vnknowne.

Eightly, because it is more profitable, especially for them that liue in matrimonie, that he which heareth the confession of the one, should heare also the confession of the other. So that one hearing the confession of them both as a spirituall physitian taking two cures in one bodie, may better know what spirituall counsell is to be ministred to the one, after he hath cured the other, &c.

The third part of the second conclusion argued.

These things thus proued before, then Armachanus consequently procedeth to the third part: Arguing, how that greater detriments and inconueniences doe ensue by confessions, burials and other Ecclesiasticall functions exercised by the friers, then by pastors and secular curats, seruing in parishes. About the which matter, the said Armachanus learnedly and worthily inferreth a long discourse, prouing and inferring how pernicious these orders of friers are to the whole state of the church: And what mischiefe commeth by the priuiledges of certaine popes, which haue priuiledged them to intermeddle in the office and function of ecclesiasticall ministers, to preach and to take almes, and tithes of the people, and imporperations from the church. All which his reasons and arguments to prosecute in order as he hath left them in writing, it would make a matter of a large booke.

Notwithstanding, because it shall not be vnfruitfull both for the time present and the posteritie, to know the manifold detriments and discommodities receiued by these friers, and to know what great benefit God hath done for vs in vnburdening the church of this monstrous generation: And especially because the booke of Armachanus is rare otherwise to bee found, intituled, Defensorium Curatorum: I haue briefly therfore contracted out of the same, certaine of his reasons, such as seemed most appertaining and most worthie of noting.

Defensorium Curatorum. Armachanus.

And first, alleaging the authoritie of Innocent the fourth; he importeth foure inconueniences rising by the friers, which be these: Contempt of the people against their ordinaries, decreasing of deuotion, taking away of shame from the people by confessing to the friers, detaining of oblations, such as the people are wont to giue at their confession and burials, and which by right belong to the parish churches.

Item, by the said priuiledges of the popes, granted to the friers, many other great enormities doe rise. As first, because thereby, the true shepheards doe not know the faces of their flocke.

Cap. Dudum.

Item, by the occasion of these priuiledges giuen to the friers, great contention, and sometimes blowes rise betweene the friers and secular curats, about tithes, imperations, and other auailes.

The harmes that come to the world by the friers, declared.

Item, by the occasion of the foresaid priuiledges, diuers young men as well in Vniuersities as in their fathers houses, are allured craftily by the friers their confessors, to enter their orders: from thence afterward, they cannot get out though they would, to the great griefe of their parents, and no lesse repentance to the young men themselues. The example whereof, Armachanus in the said his treatise inferreth, of a certaine substantiall English man being with him at his Inne in Rome: who hauing a sonne at the Vniuersitie of Oxford, which was enticed by the friers to enter into their order, could by no meanes after release him out. But when his father and his mother would come vnto him, they could not bee suffered to speake with him, but vnder the friers custodie. Whereas the scripture commandeth plainely, that who so stealeth any man and selleth him (being thereof conuicted) shall bee put to death: Exod. 21. And for the same cause, the father was compelled to come vp to Rome to seeke remedie for his sonne. And thus, saith Armachanus, it may appeare what damage and detriments come by these friers vnto the common people.

Example of the friers theft in Oxford.

And no lesse inconuenience and danger also by the said friers, riseth to the clergie: for so much, as lay men seeing their children thus to be stollen from them in the Vniuersities by the friers, do refuse therefore to send them to their studies; rather willing to keepe them at home to their occupation, or to follow the plough, then so to bee circumuented and defeated of their sonnes at the Vniuersitie, as by daily experience (saith he) doth manifestlie appeare. For whereas in my time (saith Armachanus) there were in the Vniuersitie of Oxford 30000. Students: now are there not to be found 6000. The occasion of which so great decay, is to be ascribed to no other cause, but to this circumuention onelie of the friers aboue mentioned.

Friers hinderers of Vniuersities.

30. thousand students in Oxford, in the time of Armachanus.

Ouer and besides this, another inconuenience as great or greater, the said Armachanus inferred to procéede by the friers through the decay of doctrine, and knowledge in all maner faculties and liberall sciences, which thus hée declared. For that these begging friers through their priuiledges obtained of the popes, to preach, to heare confessions, and to burie; and through their charters of imperations, did grow thereby to such great riches and possessions by their begging, crauing, catching and intermedling with church matters, that no booke could stirre of any science, either of Diuinitie, Law, or Physicke, but they were both able and readie to buy it vp. So that euery couent hauing a great librarie full stuffed and furnished with all sorts of bookes, and being so many couents within the realme, and in euery couent so many friers increasing daily more and more: by reason thereof, it came to passe, that very few bookes or none at all remaine for other students. Which by his owne experience hee thus testifieth, saying: that hee himselfe sent forth to the Vniuersitie foure of his owne priests or chaplains, who sending him word againe that they could neither find ỳ Bible, nor any other good profitable booke of diuinitie meet for their studie, therefore were minded to returne home to their countrie: and one of them, hee was sure, was returned by this time againe.

The friers & great cause of decay of learning.

Bookes not to be gotten for the friers.

Example what lacke of bookes commeth by the friers.

Furthermore, as he hath proceded hitherto, the friers to be hurtfull both to the laitie, and to the clergie: so proceeding farther, hee proueth them to bee hurtfull also to themselues. And that in three points, as incurring the vice of disobedience against God, against their owne rule: the vice of auarice: and the vice of pride. The probation of all which points he prosecuted in a long discourse.

The friers guiltie in 3. faults. 1. Disobedience 2. Auarice. 3. Pride.

First (saith he) they are disobedient to the law of God: Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house, ore, nor asse, nor any thing that is his: In ỳ they procure the popes letters to preach in churches, and to take burials from churches, with licence annexed withall to receiue the auailes which rise of the same, which properly belongeth to the right of parish priests.

Armachanus chargeth the friers with disobedience.

Item, they are disobedient to this rule of the gospell: So do to other, as thou wouldest haue done to thée.

Friers disobedient to the rule of Scripture.

Item, they be disobedient against their owne rule, which being founded vpon strait pouertie and beggerie, this licence obtained for them to require necessaries for their labors of the people, is repugning against the same foundation.

Item, they be disobedient to the rule of the scripture, which saith: Let no man take honor vnto him, except hee bee called, as Aaron: Also saith S. Paul, How shall they preach, vnlesse they be sent? And how obserue they this rule of obedience, who professing to keepe the perfection of the Gospell, yet contrarie to the Gospell, procure to themselues priuiledges to run before they be sent?

Item, to their owne rule they are disobedient: For where their chapter saith, that if any will take vpon them this order, and will come to our brethren; let our brethren first send them to the prouincials to bee examined of the catholicke faith and sacraments of the church, &c. Contrarie whereunto the friers haue procured a priuiledge, that not onelie the prouincials, but other inferiors also may take vnto them indifferentlie, whom they can catch; so farre without all examination, that almost at this day there is no notable house of friers, wherein is not either a whole, or halfe a couent of lads and boyes vnder tenne yéere old, being circumuented, which neither can skill of the créed nor Sacraments.

Againe, the rule of Francille saith, that his brethren Obseruants must obserue not to preach in the Dioces of any bishop, without the consent of the bishop. And moreouer, the said Francille in his testament saith: that if he had as much wisdome as Salomon, and found more secular priests in the parishes where they dwell: yet hée would not presume to preach without their will, and also would feare, loue, and honor them, and all other as his masters, and so they be. Hæc ille. Against which rule, how the friers do disobay, how little they reuerence bishops or secular priests; what priuiledges, exemptions, and immunities they procure against them, the world may sée and iudge.

Friers disobedient to their own profession.

Item, when none may bee admitted to preach, or to heare confessions, vnlesse they be entred into orders, and séeing by the common law of the church, none must bee admitted into holy orders, except hée haue sufficient title of liuing and clothing: the friers therefore hauing no such title (being wilfull beggers) doe disobay in both respects, that is, both in entring into such orders without conuenient title, and in exercising the office of preaching without such lawfull orders.

Moreouer, the foresaid Francille in his testament commandeth thus: I command (saith he) firmely by vertue of obedience, to all and singuler my brethren wheresoeuer they be: that none of them presume to obtain in the court of Rome any letter or writing, either by himselfe or by any other means, neither for the church nor for any other place, nor vnder any colour of preaching, nor yet for the persecuting of their owne bodies, &c. Against which testament of Francille, the Franciscanes in procuring their priuiledges from the bishop of Rome, haue incurred manifest disobedience, as all the world may sée. Neither will this obiection serue them, because the pope hath dispensed with Francille rule. For if the testament of Francille, as he saith, came from God, (and so should God haue three testaments) how then can the pope repeale his precept, or dispence with his rule, when by the rule of the law, Par in parem non habet imperium?

Secondly, concerning the vice of auarice, manifestly it may be proued vpon them (saith Armachanus:) for els séeing so many charges belong to the office of a secular parish priest, as to minister the sacrament at Easter, to visit the sicke with extreme vnction, to baptise children, to wed, with such other, wherein standeth as great deuotion: how then happeneth that these friers making no labor for these, onely procure to themselues priuiledges to preach in churches, to heare confessions, and to receiue licence to burie from parish churches, but because there is lucre and gaine in these to be looked for, in the other is none?

Armachanus chargeth the friers with auarice.

Which also may appeare by this: for otherwise if it were for méere deuotion onely, that they procure licence to burie from parish churches, and to preach: why then haue they procured withall, licence to take offerings, oblations and legacies for their funerals? And for their preaching, why haue they annexed also licence to require and take of the people necessaries for their labour, but only auarice is the cause thereof?

Another proofe.

Likewise for hearing of confessions, when all good men haue enough to know their owne faults, and nothing lift to heare the faults of other: it is probablie to bee supposed by this their priuiledge of hearing all mans confessions, that they would neuer haue bin so desirous of procuring that priuiledge, were it not that these friers did féele some sweetnesse, and gaine to hang vpon the same.

Another proofe.

Item, where the rule of frier Francille forbiddeth them to companie with any women, to enter into Monasteries, to bee godfathers and gossips to men and women: how commeth it, that they contrarie to their rule, enter into the secret chambers of queenes and other women, and made to know the most secret counsels of their doings, but that auarice and commodity haue so blinded their eies, and stirred their hearts.

Armachanus chargeth the friers with pride.

Thirdlie, that the friers fall into the vice of pride and ambition, the said Armachanus prooued thus:

To seeke or procure any high place in the church, is a point of pride and ambition. Chrysost. in opere perfecto: Nunquam sine ambitione desideratur primatus in Ecclesia.

The friers seeke and procure a high place in the church.

Ergo, the friers are proud and ambitious.

The minor he proueth: To haue the state of preaching and hearing confessions, is in the church a state of honor.

The friers seeke and haue procured the state of preaching and hearing confessions.

Ergo, The friers seeke and procure an high place in the church, &c.

The 3. conclusion or article.

His third conclusion was, that the Lord Christ in his humane conuersation was alwaies poore, not for that hee loued or desired pouertie for it selfe, &c. Wherein this is to be noted, that Armachanus differed not from the friers in this that Christ was poore, and that hee loued pouertie: but herein stood the difference, in maner of louing, that is, whether he loued pouertie for it selfe, or not. Wherein the foresaid Armachanus vsed foure probations.

First, forsomuch as to bee poore, is nothing else but to bee miserable: and seeing no man coueteth to bee in miserie for it selfe: therefore he concluded, that Christ desired not pouertie for it selfe.

Aristot. Ethic. lib. 1.

His second reason was derived out of Aristotle. Nothing (saith hee) is to be loued for it selfe, but that from which (all commodities being secluded which follow thereupon) is voluntarilie sought and desired. But take from pouertie all respect of commodities following the same, it would bee sought neither of God nor man. Ergo, he concluded, Christ loued not pouertie for it selfe.

Thirdlie againe: No effect of sinne, said hee, is to be loued for it selfe. But pouertie is the effect of sinne. Ergo, pouertie was not loued of Christ for it selfe.

Fourthly, Item, no priuation of the thing that is good, is to be loued for it selfe. Pouertie is the priuation of the thing that is good, that is, of riches (for God himselfe is principallie rich:) Ergo, pouertie for it selfe was not loued of Christ.

The 4. conclusion of Armachanus against the friers.

The fourth conclusion was, that Christ our Lord and Sauiour did neuer beg wilfullie. Which he prooued by sundrie reasons.

1 First, for that Christ in so doing should breake the law, which saith: Thou shalt not couet thy neighbors house, his wife, his seruant, his maid, his ore, his asse, or any thing that is his: Exod. 11. Into the danger of which commandement, hee that beggeth voluntarily must needes incurre.

2 Item, if Christ had begged voluntarilie hee should haue committed against another commandement, which saith: There shall be no begger, nor needie person among you, &c. Deut. 6.

3 Item, Christ in so doing should haue transgressed the emperours law, vnder which he would himselfe be subiect (as appeareth by giuing, and bidding tribute to bee giuen to Cesar) forasmuch as the same emperours law saith: There shall no valiant begger be suffered in the citie.

4 Item, if Christ had been a wilfull begger, hee had broke the law of louing his neighbor: whom he had bered, hauing no need. For who so without need asketh or craueth of his neighbour, doth but bere him, in such sort as he would not be bered himselfe. Which Christ would neuer doe.

5 Item, if Christ had begged wilfullie, hee had moued slander thereby to his owne gospell, which hee with miracles did confirme. For then they that saw his miracle in feeding 5000. in the wildernesse, would haue thought much with themselues how that miracle had bin wrought, if he in feeding other, either could not, or would not feed himselfe.

6 Item, if Christ had begged wilfullie, then he had done that which himselfe condemneth by Paul: for so we read, 1. Tim. 6. That Paul condemneth them, which esteeme pietie to be gain and lucre. Which all they doe that vnder the colour of pietie, hunt or seeke for gaine, when otherwise they need not.

7 Item, if Christ had begged wilfullie, hee had offended in declaring an vntruth, in so doing. For hee that knoweth in his mind, that he needeth not indeed that thing which in word he asketh of other, declareth in himselfe an vntruth, as who in word pretendeth to bee otherwise then hee is in very deede; which Christ without doubt neuer did, nor would euer doe.

8 Item, if Christ had begged wilfullie, that is, hauing no true need thereunto: then had hee appeared either to bee an hypocrite, seeming to bee that hee was not, and to lacke when he did not: or else to be a true begger in very deed, not able to suffice his necessitie. For he is a true begger indeede, which being constrained by meere necessitie, is forced to aske of other, that which hee is not able to giue to himselfe. But neither of these two agreeth in Christ.

9 Item, if Christ had begged wilfully, then why did Peter rebuke the mother of S. Clement his disciple, finding her to stand among the beggers, whom hee thought to bee strong enough to labour with her hands for her liuing: if thee in so doing had followed the example of Christ?

Ex vita S. Clementis.

10 Item, if Christ had begged wilfullie: And if the friers do rightlie define perfection of the Gospell by wilfull pouertie: then was Clement S. Peters successor to blame, which laboured so much to remoue away beggerie and pouertie from among all them, that were conuerted to the faith of Christ: and is specially for the same commended of the church.

Clement ex ample contrary to the friers.

11 Againe, why did the said Clement, writting to James bishop of Jerusalem, command so much to obay the doctrine and examples of the Apostles: who as hee sheweth in that epistle, had no begger nor needie person amongst them, if christian perfection (by the friers philosophie) standeth in wilfull beggerie?

13. matth. cap. 1.

12 Item, if Christ the high Priest had begged wilfully, then did the holie church erre wittinglie, which ordained that none without sufficient title of liuing and clothing, should bee admitted to holie orders. And moreouer, when it is said in the canonicall decrees, that the bishop or clerke that beggeth, bringeth shame vpon the whole order of the clergie.

13 Item, if Christ had wilfullie begged, then the examples of wilfull pouertie had pertained to the perfection of christian life, which is contrarie to the old law: which commandeth the priests (which liued then after the perfection of the law) to haue possessions and tithes, to keepe them from beggerie.

14 Item, if Christ did wilfullie begge, then beggery were a point of christian perfection. And so the church of God should erre, in admitting such patrimonies and donations giuen to the church, and so in taking from the prelats their perfection.

15 Again, what will these friers which put their perfection in begging, say to Melchisedech; who without begging or wilfull pouertie, was the high Priest of God, and king of Salem, and prefigured the order and Priesthood of Christ?

16 And if beggerie be such a perfection of the Gospell (as the friers say) how commeth it, that the holy Ghost giuen to the Apostles, which should lead them into all truth, told them no word of this beggerly perfection, neither is there any word mentioned therof throughout the whole Testament of God?

17 Moreouer, where the prophet saith, I neuer did see the iust man forsaken, nor his seede goe begging their bread: how standeth this with the iustice of Christ, which was most perfitly iust, if hee should be forsaken, or his seede goe begge their bread? And then how agreeth this with the abominable doctrins of friers Franciscan, which put their perfection in wilfull begging?

18 Finallie, doe we not read that Christ sent his disciples to preach without scrip or wallet, and bid them salute no man by the way? Meaning that they should begge nothing of no man? Did not the same Christ also labour with his hands, vnder Joseph? S. Paul likewise, did he not labour with his hands, rather then hee would burden the Church of the Corinthians? And where now is the doctrine of the friers, which putteth state of perfection in wilfull begging?

The 5. conclusion of Armachanus against the friers.

The fift conclusion of Armachanus against the friers was this: that Christ neuer taught any man wilfully to beg, which he prooued thus: It is written, Acts 1. Christ began to doe and to teach. If Christ therefore, which did neuer wilfullie begge himselfe, as hath been proued, had taught men otherwise to doe; then his doing and teaching had not agreed together.

Item, if Christ which neuer begged himselfe wilfullie, had taught men this doctrine of wilfull begging contrarie to his owne doing; hee had giuen suspition of his doctrine, and ministred slander of the same, as hath been prooued in the fourth conclusion before.

Moreouer, in so teaching, hee had taught contrarie to the emperours iust law, which expresly forbiddeth the same.

The 6. conclusion of Armachanus against the friers.

The sixth conclusion of Armachanus against the Friers was, that our Lord Jesus Christ teacheth vs, that we should not begge wilfullie, which hee prooueth by seuen or eight reasons.

First, where it is written, Luk. 14. When thou makest a feast call the poore, weake, lame, and blind; and thou shalt be blessed: for they haue not wherewith to reward thee againe.

To this also pertaineth the decree of the apostle, 2. Thes. 3. Hee that will not worke, let him not eate. Furthermore, the same Apostle addeth in the same place: For you haue vs for example, how we were burdenous to no man, neither did wee eate our bread freelie, but with labour and wearinesse, toiling both day and night, and all because we would not burthen you, &c.

4 Item, where wee reade in the scripture, the slothfull man reprehended, Pro. 6. Why sleepest thou O sluggard? thy pouertie and beggery is comming vpon thee like an armed man, &c. And againe in the same booke of Prouerbs: The slothfull man (saith the scripture) for cold would not go to the plough, therefore he shall begge in summer, and no man shall giue him, &c. Also in the said booke of Prouerbs, last chapter; the diligent labouring woman is commended, whose fingers are exercised about the rocke and spindle. And all these places make against the wilfull begging of sturdie friers.

5 Item, frier Francisse their owne founder in his owne testament testament saith: And I haue laboured with mine owne handes, and will labour, and will that all my frierlings shall labor and liue of their labour, whereby they may support themselues in an honest meane. And they that cannot worke, let them learne to worke, not for any couetousnesse to receiue for their labour, but for example of good works, and to auoid idlenesse. And when the price of their labour is not giuen them, let them resort to the Lords table, and aske their alms from doore to doore, &c. Thus much in his testament. And in his rule hee saith: Such brethren to whom the Lord hath giuen the gift to labour, let them labour faithfullie and deuoutlie, &c. Wherefore it is to be maruelled, how those friers with their wilfull begging, dare transgresse the rule and obedience of frier Francis their great grandfathers testament.

6. Item, if Christ at any time did begge or did lacke, it was more because hee would vse a miracle in his owne person, then because he would begge wilfullie: as when hee sent Peter to the sea to find a groat in the fishes mouth. Which thing yet he thought rather to doe, then to beg the groat of the people, which he might some haue obtained.

7. Item, by diuers other his examples, hee seemeth to teach the same, as where hee saith: The workeman is worthie of his hire. Also, the workeman is worthie of his meate, Matth. 10. Luke 10. And when he spake to Zache, that hee would turne into his house. And so likewise in Bethanie and all other places he euer vsed rather to burden his friends then to beg of other, vnacquainted.

8. Item, with plaine precept thus hee sendeth forth his disciples, willing them not to go from house to house, Luke 10. so as friers vse now to goe. Many other Scriptures there be, which reproue begging: as where it is said: The foote of a foole is swift to the house of his neighbour, Eccle. 29. And in another place: My child (saith hee) see thou want not in the time of thy life; for better it is to die then to lacke: Eccles. 21.

9. Item, where Christ counselling the young man, bad him go and sell that he had and giue to the poore and follow him if hee would bee perfect: doth not there call him to wilfull begging, but calleth him to follow him, which did not beg wilfullie.

The seuenth conclusion of Armachanus against the friers.

The seuenth conclusion of Armachanus is: that no wise nor true holy man can take vpon him wilfull pouertie to bee obserued alwaies: which he proueth by foure reasons.

First, that wilfull beggerie was reproued both by the doctrine of Christ and of the Apostles, as in the conclusion before hath been declared.

2. Item, a man in taking vpon him wilfull beggerie, in so doing should lead himselfe into temptation, which were against the Lords prayer. Forasmuch as Salomon, Prouerb. 30. saith: O Lord, beggerie and great riches giue me not, but onely sufficiencie to liue vpon: lest if I haue too much, I bee driuen to denie thee, and say: who is the Lord, Again, if I haue too little, I be forced thereby to steale, and peruert the name of my God. Wherefore saith Eccles. 27. For need many haue offended. And therefore they that chuse wilfull pouertie, take to them great occasion of temptation.

Wilfull beggery not to be promised.

3. Item, they that take wilfull pouertie vpon them when they need not, induce themselues voluntarily to breake the commandement of God: Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house, &c. Againe, where it is commanded, there shall be no begger among you, &c.

4. Item, hee that taketh vpon him needlesse and wilfullie to beg, maketh himselfe vnapt to receiue holy orders, hauing (as is said) no sufficient title thereunto, according to the lawes of the church.

The eight conclusion of Armachanus against the friers.

The eight conclusion of this matter: That it is not agreeing to the rule of the friers obseruant, to obserue wilfull beggerie. Which (saith he) may bee prooued; for that frier Francis, both in his rule, and in his Testament, being left to his Franciscans, doth plainely preferre labour before begging.

The ninth conclusion of Armachanus. Touching this booke of the maisters of Paris condemned, looke pag. 360. Ex Clement. Quid quorundam.

The 9. and last conclusion of this matter is: That the bul of pope Alexander the 4. which condemneth the booke of the maisters of Paris, impugneth none of these conclusions premised. For the proofe thereof, he thus inferred.

Pope Nicolas the third reuoketh the Bull of pope Alexander the fourth.

1. First, that pope John the 24. in his constitution, beginning thus, Quia quorundam, affirmeth expresly, how pope Nicolas the 3. reuoked and called backe the said bull of pope Alexander the 4. and all other writings of his: touching all such articles, which in the same foresaid constitution of this pope John bee contained and declared. Wherein also is declared, how strait the pouertie of the friers ought to bee, which they call wilfull pouertie.

2. Item, it is manifest and notorious to all men, how the said pope Nicolas the 3. in his declaration sheweth, how the Friers both ought to labour with their hands; and how moreouer the said friers ought not to preach within the diocesse of any bishop, whersoeuer they be resisted. Which being so, the conclusion appeareth, that the bull of pope Alexander the fourth, as touching these articles, is void and of none effect. Beside the which articles, there is nothing else in the said bull of Alexander (that I remember) which impugneth any of these conclusions premised.

Many things mo (said he) I had beside these, both to obiect and to answere againe to the same: and to confirme more surely and firmelie these my reasons and assertions premised: But I haue alreadie too much wearied your holinesse, and your reuerend lordships here present. Wherefore I conclude, and humblie and deuoutlie beseech you, according to my former petition premised in the beginning of this matter; that you iudge not after the outward face, but iudge yee true iudgement: John 7. Ex libro Armachani, cui titulus, Defensorium Curatorum.

The end and conclusion of this oration of Armachanus before the pope. Ex defensorio curatorum.

Notes to be obserued in this former Oration of Armachanus.

Notes to be obserued.

BY this Oration of Armachanus the learned prelate, thus made before pope Innocent and his cardinals, diuers and sundry things there be for the vtilitie of the Church worthy to be obserued. First, what troubles and vexations came to the church of Christ by these friers. Also what persecution followeth after by the meanes of them, against so many learned men and true seruants of Christ. Furthermore, what repugnance and contrarietie was among the popes, and how they could not agree among themselues about the friers. Fourthlie, what pestiferous doctrine, subuerting welneere the testament of Iesus Christ. Fiftly, what decay of ministers in Christs church, as appeareth, pag. 379. Sixtly, what robbing and circumuenting of mens children, as appeareth, pag. 379. Seuenthly, what decay of Vniuersities, as appeareth by Oxford, pag. 379. Eightly, what damage to learning and lacke of bookes to students came by these friers, as appeareth, pag. 379. Ninthly, to what pride vnder colour of fained humilitie; to what riches, vnder dissimuled pouertie they grew vnto, here is to be seene. In so much that at length through their subtile and most dangerous hypocrisie they crept vp to be lords, archbishops, cardinals, and at last also Chancellors of realms, yea and of most secret counsell with kings and queenes, as appeareth, pag. 379.

Contrarietie among the popes.

Whether the friers make vp the bodie of Antichrist or not.

All these things well considered, now remaineth in the church to be marked: that forsomuch as these friers (with their new found testament of frier Francis) not being contented with the testament of God in his sonne Christ, began to spring the same time, when as Satan was prophesied to be let loose, by the order of the scripture; whether therfore it is to be doubted, that these friers make vp the bodie of antichrist, which is prophesied to come in the church, or not: so much more to be doubted, because who so list to trie shall find, that of al other enemies of Christ, of whom some be manifest, some be priuie, all bee together cruell: yet is there no such sort of enemies which more sleightly deceiueth the simple christian, or more deepely drowneth him in damnation, then doth this doctrine of the friers.

The death of godly Armachanus.

But of this oration of Armachanus enough. Which oration what successe it had with the pope, by story it is not certaine. By his owne life declared, it appeareth, that the lord so wrought, that his enemies did not triumph ouer him. Notwithstanding, this by story appeareth, that hee was seuen or eight yeeres in banishment for the same matter, and there died in the same at Auinion; of whom a certaine cardinall, hearing of his death, openly protested, that the same day, a mightie pillar of Christs church was fallen.

The testimonie of a cardinall vpon Armachanus.

Ex chron. reg. Rich. 2.

After the death of Armachanus, the friers had contention likewise with the monks of Benedicts order about the same yeere, 1360. and so remoued their cause both against the monks and against the Vniuersitie of Orford, vnto the court of Rome; wherein, saith the author, they lacked another Richard. Ex Botoniero. By this appeareth to be true, which is testified in the first tome of Wald. that long debate continued betweene the friers and the Vniuersitie of Orford: Against whom first stood Robert Grosted bishop of Lincolne, aboue mentioned: Then Senallus of Yorke: Afterward Ioannes Bachothorpe; and now this Armachanus, of whom here presently we intreate. And after him againe John Wickliffe, of whom (Christ willing) we will speake hereafter: Ex Waldeno.

Friers against the Vniuersitie of Orford.

English writers against the friers.

Against this foresaid Armachanus wrote diuers friers, Roger Conaway a Francican, John Heyldelhame Carmelite, Galfridus Harby frier Augustine. Also frier Engelbert a Dominican, in a booke intituled, Defensorium priullegiorum, and diuers other. I credible heare of certaine old Irish Bibles translated long since into the Irish tongue; which if it be true, it is not other like but to bee the doing of this Armachanus. And thus much of this learned prelate and archbishop of Ireland, a man worthie for his christian zeale of immortall commendation.

Friers that write against Armachanus.

Testified by certaine Englishmen which are yet aliue and haue seene it.

After the death of this Innocent, next was poped in the sea of Rome, pope Vrbane the fifth, who by the fathers side was an Englishman. This Vrbane had been a long waiter in the court of Rome: and when he saw no promotion would light vpon him, complaining to a certain friend of his, he made to him his mone, saying: That hee thought verily, if all the churches of the world should fall, yet none would fall in his mouth. The which friend after seeing him to be pope, and inthronised in his threefold crowne, commeth to him, and putting him in remembrance of his words to him before, saith: that where his holinesse had moued his fortune to him, that if all all the churches in the world would fall, none would fall vpon his head: Now (saith hee) God hath otherwise so disposed, that all the churches in the world are fallen vpon your head, &c.

This pope maintained and kindled great warres in Italy, sending Egidius his cardinall and legat, and after him Arduinus a Burgundian his legat and abbat with great puissance and much monie against sundrie cities in Italie: By whose meanes, the townes and cities which before had broken from the bishop of Rome were oppressed; also Bernabes and Galeaceus princes of Millaine vanquished. By whose example, other being sore feared, submitted themselues to the church of Rome. And thus came vp that wicked church to her great possessions, which her patrons would needs father vpon Constantine the godly emperour.

Ex Sabel. Aenead. 9. lib. 8.

How the church of Rome came by their royall possessions.

In the time of this pope Urbane the fifth, and in the second yeere of his raigne, about the beginning of the yeere of our Lord, 1364. I find a certaine sermon of one Nicolas Orem, made before the pope and his cardinals on Christmas euen. In the which sermon, the learned man doth worthilie rebuke the prelats and priests of his time, declaring their destruction not to bee farre off, by certaine signes taken of their wicked and corrupt life. All the sayings of the prophets spoken against the wicked priests of the Iewes, he doth aptly applie against the clergie of his time, comparing the church then present to the spirituall strumpet spoken of in the 16. of the prophet Ezechiel. And proceeding in conclusion the clergie of the church then, to be so much worse then the old synagogue of the Iewes, by how much it is worse to sell the church and sacraments, then to suffer doues to be sold in the church. With no lesse iudgement also and learning he answereth to the old and false obiections of the papists: who albeit they be neuer so wicked, yet thinke themselues to be the church which the Lord cannot forsake. All which things to the intent they may the better appeare in his owne words, I haue thought good here to translate and exhibite the sermon as it was spoken before the pope.

Nicolaus Orem.

A copie of a sermon made before pope Vrbane, 5. the fourth Sunday in Aduent, 1364. by Nicolas Orem.

A Sermon made before the pope. Esay 56.

The world deuided into two sorts of men before the incarnation of Christ.

Iuxta est salus mea, vt veniat, & iustitia, &c. That is: My saluing health is neere at hand to come, and my righteousnes to be reuealed, &c. Esa. 56. After the sentence of S. Paul, Rom. 2. and in diuers other places, before the natiuitie of Christ, the whole world was diuided into two sorts of men, the Iewes and Gentiles. The Iewes, who waited for the opening of the doore of paradise, by the bloud of the Sauiour to come. The Gentiles, who yet sitting in darkenes were to be called to light, and to be iustified by faith, as is written, Rom. 5.

This saluation pertaining both to the Iew and Gentile, God promised before time to the fathers by the Prophets, to stir vp the desire thereof in their hearts the more: and to increase their firme hope and faith in the same. As first in Mich 6. the voice of the Lord crieth: Health and saluation shall be to all men which feare my name. And Esay 46. I wil giue in Sion saluation, and in Ierusalem my glorie, &c. with diuers such other places like. And forsomuch as hope many times which is deferred, doth afflict the soule, and conceiueth wearinesse of long deferring: he therefore propheſying of the neerenes of the comming therof, saith moreouer, Esay 14. His time is neere at hand to come. Also Abacuc 2. He will come and will not tarrie; with many such other places moe. So then the holy fathers being in limbo, looked and hoped that he should bring out them that sate bound, and which in the house of prison sate in darkenesse, as is read Esay 41. Then the time drew on in which came the fulnesse of the Gentiles, and in which the Lord would declare the riches of this mystery being hidden from the world, and from generations: Col. 1. Wherefore the Lord in this text doth both certifie our fathers of the comming of our sauiour, and doth comfort them touching the neerenesse thereof, and also teacheth the iustification of the Gentiles by faith approching now neere at hand, according to the words of my text, Iuxta est salus mea, &c. Which words were fulfilled then, what time the Lord did manifest his saluation, and did reueale his righteousnesse in the sight of all ỹ Gentils. And is diuided into 3. parts. Of which the first speaketh of the neerenesse of his comming, where is said, Iuxta est salus, &c. The second concerneth the mysterie of the aduent of Christ and his incarnation, where he saith: Vt veniat, &c. Thirdly, is considered the seueritie of God, his terrible reuenging iudgement to be reuealed, where he saith: Vt reueletur, &c. which is to be expounded of his primitiue iustice: whereof speaketh Amos, the fifth, saying: And iudgement shall be reuealed like a floud, and righteousnesse like a strong streame. Wherefore for our contemplation let vs receiue with ioy the solemnities of his holy vigile, the word I say of God the father, that is, Christ. To whom it is said, Esay 49. I haue giuen thee to bee a light to the Gentiles, and to bee my saluation, through the ends of the world. Againe, Esay 46. My saluation shall not slacke, &c.

Diuision.

1 Iuxta est.

2 Vt veniat.

3 Vt reueletur. Amos 5.

As touching the neerenes therof, it is in these daies opened to vs by the gospel, where we read in S. Matth. When the virgin Marie was espoused vnto Ioseph, before they did come together, she was found with child by the holy Ghost. By this it was euident to vnderstand, that our Sauiour ought shortly to proceed out of the chaste wombe of the virgine, according as the prophet did foretell, saying: Behold a virgine shall conceiue and bring forth a sonne, &c. For like as the grape when it waxeth great and full, is neere to the making of wine; and the flower whē it shooteth abroad, it hasteth to the fruit: so the saluation of the world in the swelling and growing of the virgins wombe, began to draw nigh to mankind. For then appeared the grace and benignitie of our sauiour, when his mother was found to haue in her wombe by the holy Ghost, as is declared in that as followeth by the Angell, saying: For that which is borne of her, is of the holy Ghost.

Touching the 2. part of that which is said, vt veniat: this may be applied to the contemplation of the mystery of Christ comming in the flesh. Whereof speaketh Aggeus the Prophet 2. He shall come, who is desired and looked for of all nations, &c. Albeit the same also may be applied to the second Aduent, spoken of the third of Esay: The Lord shal come to iudgement, &c. In memorial whereof, the 4. sunday was dedicate, in the old time of the fathers. And of this day of iudgement is written in the prophet Sophon. cap. 1. The day of the Lord is neere, great and mightie, it is approching at hand, & wondrous short, &c. And albeit not in it selfe, yet it may bee expounded in tribulations that goe before, as preambles vnto the same: as Greg. saith: The last tribulation is preuented with many and sundrie tribulations going before, although the end of all be not yet.

Wherefore now comming to the 3. part of my sermon or theame, let vs see of those tribulations that goe before the last comming of Christ, if there be any such tribulation approching nigh at hand, whereof this last part of my theame may bee verified, where is said, vt reueletur, that my righteousnes shall be reuealed, to wit, the righteousnesse primitiue, that righteousnesse may bee brought, and the prophecie of Daniel fulfilled, Dan. 9. Concerning which matter, foure things here come in order to be declared.

The third part of his sermon.

First concerning the reuealing of tribulation, according to that part of my theame, Vt reueletur, &c. 1. Vt reueletur.

Secondly, concerning the neerenesse of the tribulation comming, according to that part of my theame: Quia iuxta est, &c. 2. Vt iuxta est.

Thirdly, of the false opinions of some, vpon this part of my theame, Vt veniat, &c. 3 Vt veniat.

Fourthly, what meanes and consultation we ought to take: Vt iuxta est salus. 4. Salus.

As for the first, it is so notorious and so common in the scriptures that the church should suffer and abide tribulation, that I need not here to stand in alleaging any thing touching either the causes to be weighed, or the terme to be cōiectured therof. As concerning the which causes, I will giue 2. rules to be noted before, for the better opening of that to follow. The first rule is, that by the 2. kingdoms of the nation of Hebrues, which were in the old time, to wit, by the kingdome of Israel, whose head was Samaria, is signified in ỹ prophets the erroneous synagog: And by the 2. kingdome of Iuda, of whose stocke came Christ, whose head metropolitane was Ierusalem, is signified the true church. And this rule is not mine, but is an authenticke glosse of S. Ierome, and also is the rule of Origene in the last Homilie vpon the old testament, and is approoued by the church.

The first part of the subdiuision.

Two rules to be noted.

The kingdome of Israel signifieth the false Church.

The kingdome of Iuda signifieth the right church.

The second rule is, that by the brodel house and fornication mentioned in the prophets, is signified simony, and abused dispensations, and promotions of persons vnworthie, for lucres sake, or else for any other partiall fauour, which be vnlawfull waies, by all lawes of the world, to come to office and honour. Merx dicitur namque a merendo, that is; for gaine or price is deriued of gaining: for the which gaine or price, that is sold which by nature ought not to be sold. Therefore, to giue any thing for respect of gaine or hire, which ought to be giuen freely for vertues sake, is a kind of spirituall corruption, and as a man would say, an whorish thing, whereof the prophet Esay complaineth speaking of Ierusalem, and saying: The citie which once was faithfull and full of iudgement, how is it now become an whorish citie? And in like maner Osee also the prophet, cap. 9. Ierusalem, thou hast fornicated and gone an whoring from thy God. Thou hast loued like an harlot, to get gaine in euery barne of corne. And in many other places of scripture, where fornication cannot be otherwise expounded.

The second rule.

Esay 1.

Osee 9.

These two rules thus premised, now let vs marke the scriptures, and according to the same iudge of the whole state of the church, both that is past, and that is to come: first intreating of the causes of tribulation to come: secondlie of the vicinitie of time of the said tribulation to come.

Fiue states of the church described.

And first concerning the state of the church, and of causes of tribulation. Thus saith the Lord in the the prophet Ezechiel: 16. cap. speaking to the church vnder the name of Ierusalem: In the day of thy birth I came by thee, and saw thee trodden downe in thine owne bloud, &c. Here he speaketh of the time of the martyrdome of the church. Then it followeth: After this thou wast clensed from thy bloud, that was growne vp, and waxen great: then washed I thee with water, I purged thy bloud from thee (speaking of ceasing of persecution) I annointed thee with oile, I gaue thee change of raiments, I girded thee thee with white silke, I decked thee with costly apparell, I put rings vpon thy fingers, a chain about thy neck, spangs vpon thy forehead, and earings vpon thine eares. Thus wast thou deckt with siluer and gold, and a beautiful crown set vpon thine head. Maruellous goodly wast thou & beautiful, euen a very queene wast thou: For thou wast excellent in my beautie, which I put vpon thee, saith the Lord God, &c. This prophecy or rather history speaketh of and declareth the prosperitie of the church.

3. The corruption of the church

And now heare the corruption and transgression of the church, for so it followeth: But thou hast put confidence in thine own beauty, and plaied the harlot, when thou hadst gotten thee a name. Thou hast committed whoredom with all that went by thee, and hast fulfilled their desires: yea thou hast taken thy garments of diuers colours and decked thine altars therewith, whereupon thou mightest fulfill thy whoredome of such a fashion as neuer was done, nor shall be. Which whoredome can in no wise be expounded for carnall, but spirituall whoredome. And therefore, see how liuely hee hath painted out the corruption and falling of the Church.

4. The correction of the church

And therefore followeth now the correction and punishment of the church. It followeth: Behold, I stretch out my hand ouer thee, and will diminish thy store of food, and deliuer thee ouer into the willes of the Philistines, and of such as hate thee: And they shall breake downe thy stues, and destroy thy brodel houses (that is, the place wherein thou didst exercise this wickednesse) they shall strip thee out of thy clothes: All thy faire beautiful iewels shal they take from thee, and so let thee sit naked and bare, &c.

Ezech. 16.

Here is plainly to be seene what shal happen to the church, and followeth more in the said chapter: Thine eldest sister is Samaria, shee and her daughters vpon thy left hand: But the youngest sister that dwelleth on thy right hand is Sodoma with her daughters, whose sins were these: pride, fulnesse of meate, abundance and idlenesse, neither retched they their hand to the poore. And yet neither Sodoma thy sister with her daughters, hath done so euill as thou and thy daughters: Neither hath Samaria (that is, the Synagogue) done halfe of thy sins, yea thou hast exceeded them in wickednesse. Take therefore and beare thine owne confusion, &c. Againe in the 23. chapter of Ezechiel:

Ezech. 23.

After the Prophet had described at large, the wickednes, corruption, and punishment of the Synagogue, turning to the church, he saith: And whē her sister saw this, she raged and was mad with lust, loue of riches, and following voluptuousnesse. Her fornication and whoredome she committed with princes and great lords, clothed with all manner of gorgeous apparell: so that her pappes were brused, and her brests were marred; and then speaking of her punishment, saith: Then my heart forsooke her, like as my heart was gone from her sister also. And moreouer repeating againe the cause thereof, addeth: Thy wickednesse and thy fornications haue wrought thee all this; &c.

The like we find also in Esay, Ieremy, Ezechiel, and in al the other prophets, who prophesying all together in one meaning, and almost in one maner of words; doe conclude with a full agreement and prophecie to come, that the church shall fall, and then be punished for her great excesses, & to be vtterly spoiled, except she repent of all her abominations. Whereof speaketh

Osee 2.

Oseas cha. 2. Let her put away her whordome out of her sight, and her aduoutry from her brests, lest I strip her naked and set her euen as she came naked into the world (that is, in her primitiue pouerty:) So if she doe not it, it shall follow of her as in the prophet Nahum, chap. 3. For the multitude of the fornication of the faire & beautiful harlot, which is a mistris of witchcraft, yea and selleth the people through her whoredome, and the nations through her witchcraft. And it followeth vpon the same: Behold, I will vpon thee, saith the Lord of hosts, and wil pul thy clothes ouer thy head, that thy nakednesse shall appeare among the heathen, and thy shame among the kingdomes, &c.

5. The reformation of the church.

Wherefore by these it is to be vnderstood, that vpon this church the primitiue iustice of God is to be reuealed hereafter. And thus much of the first of the foure members aboue foretouched.

Certaine notes and signes, that the tribulation of the church draweth neere. 1. Signe. 2. Thes. 2.

Except there come a defection first: how it is to be vnderstanded.

Now to the second member of my theme, Iuxta est: concerning the neerenes of time. Although it is not for vs to know the moments and articles of time: yet by certaine notes and signes peraduenture it may bee collected and gathered, that which I haue here to say. For the tractation whereof, first I ground my selfe vpon the saying of the apostle Paul, 2. Thes. 2. where he writeth: That vnlesse there come a defection first, &c. By the which defection, Ierome vltima quæst. ad inquisitiones Ianuarij, gathereth and expoundeth allegorically, the desolation of the monarchy of Rome: Betweene the which desolation, and the persecution of the church by antichrist, hee putteth no meane space. And now what is the state of that common wealth, if it bee compared to the maiestie of that it hath been, iudge your selues. Another glosse there is that saith, how by that defection is meant; that from the church of Rome shall come a departing of some other Churches.

1. Note or token.

The second note and marke is this, when the church shall be worse in manners then was the Synagogue: as appeareth by the ordinary glosse vpō the third of Ieremy, where it is written: The back-slider Israel, may seeme iust and righteous in comparison of sinful Iuda. That is, the Synagogue in comparison of the church of God. Wherefore writeth Origen, saying, Think that to be spoken of vs what the Lord saith in Ezech. 16: Thou had exceeded thy sister in thine iniquities: Wherefore now (to compare the one with the other,) First ye know how christ rebuked the Pharisies, who, as Ierome witnesseth, were then the clergie of the Iewes, of couetousnesse, for that they suffered doues to be sold in the temple of God: Secondly, for that they did honour God with their lippes and not with their hart, and because they said, but did not. Thirdly, hee rebuked them, for that they were hypocrites. To the first then, let vs see whether it be worse to sell both church and sacraments, then to suffer doues to bee sold in the temple, or not: The second, whereas the Pharisies were rebuked for honouring God with their lips, and not with their heart; there be some, which neither honour God with heart, nor yet with lips: And which neither do well, nor yet say wel, neither do they preach any word at all, but be dumbe dogs not able to barke, impudent and shameless dogs, that neuer haue enough, such pastors as haue no vnderstanding, declining and straying all in their own way, euery one giuen to couetousnes frō the highest to the lowest. And thirdly, as for hypocrisie there be also some, whose intolerable pride and malice is so manifest and notorious, kindled vp like a fire; that no cloake or shadow of hypocrisie can couer it, but are so past all shame, that it may bee well verified of them, which the prophet speaketh: Thou hast gotten thee the face of an harlot, thou wouldest not blush, &c.

The Synagogue and the church compared together in manners.

3. Note or token.

The third signe and token of tribulation approching neere to the church, may well be taken of the too much vnequall proportion seene this day in the church. Where one is hungrie and starueth, another is drunke. By reason of which so great inequalitie, it cannot bee that the state of the church as it is now, can long indure. For like as in good harmony to make the musicke perfect is required a moderat and proportionat equality of voices, which if it do much exceed it taketh away al the sweet melodie: So according to the sentence of the Philosopher, by too much immoderate inequality or disparity of Citizens, the common wealth falleth to ruine. Contrary, where mediocrity, that is, where a meane inequality with some proportion is kept, that policie standeth firme and more sure to continue. Now among all the politicke regiments of the Gentiles, I thinke none more is to be found in histories, wherein is to bee seene so great and exceeding oddes, then in the policie of priests: Of whom some be so high, that they exceed all princes of the earth, some againe bee so base, that they are vnder all rascals, so that such a policie or common wealth, may well be called Oligarchia.

Oligarchie, is where a few beare all the sway, and all the rest be nothing worth.

This may we plainely see and learne in the bodie of man, to the which Plutarchus (writing to Thracinius) doth semblablie compare the common wealth. In the which bodie, if the sustenance receiued should al run to one member, so that that member should bee too much exceedingly pampered, and all the other parts too much pined, that body could not long continue: So in the bodie of the wealth ecclesiasticall, if some who be the heads be so enormely ouergrowne in riches and dignitie, that the weaker members of the bodie be scant able to beare them vp, there is a great token of dissolution & ruine shortly. Wherupon commeth well in place the saying of the prophet Esay: Euery head is sicke, euery hart is full of sorrow: of the which heads it is also spoken in the prophet Amos chap. 6. Wo be to the secure and proud wealthy in Sion, and to such as think themselues so secure vpon the mount of Samaria, taking themselues as heads and rulers ouer other, &c. And moreouer in the said prophet Esay it followeth: From the top of the head to the sole of the foot there is no whole part in all the bodie, to wit, in the inferiors, because they are not able to liue for pouertie; in the superiors, because for their excessiue riches, they are left from doing good. And it followeth in the same place: But al are wounds and botches and stripes. Behold here the danger comming, the wounds of discord and diuision, the botch or sore of rancor and enuie, the swelling stripe of rebellion and mischiefe.

4. Signe.

The 4. signe is the pride of prelats. Some there haue been which fondly haue disputed of the pouertie of christ, and haue inueyed against the prelats, because they liue not in pouertie of the saints. But this phantasie commeth of the ignorance of morall philosophie and diuinitie, and of the defect of naturall prudence: for that in all nations, and by common lawes, priests haue had and ought to haue wherewith to sustaine themselues more honestly then the vulgar sort, and prelates more honestly then the subiects. But yet hereby is not permitted to them their great horses, their troupes of horsemen, their superfluous pomp of their waiting men and great families, which scarselie can bee maintained without pride, neither can be sustained with safe iustice, and many not without fighting and iniuries inconuenient: not much vnlike to that as Iustine the historian writeth of the Carthaginenses: The family (saith hee) of so great emperors was intollerable to such a free citie. In semblable wise, this great pride in the church of God (especiallie in these daies) doth mooue not so few to dtie reuerence, as many to indignation: and yet moe to those things aforesaid, which thinke no lesse but to doe sacrifice to God if they may robbe and spoile certaine fat priests and parsons, namelie such as neither haue nobilitie of bloud, and lesse learning ning to beare themselues vpon, but are liers, seruile and fraudulent, to whom the Lord speaketh by his prophet Amos fourth: Heare you fatted kine of Samaria, yee that doe poore men wrong, and oppresse the needie, the day shall come vpon you, &c.

Amos 4.

5. Signe.

The fift signe is the tyrannie of the prelats and presidents, which as it is a violent thing, so it cannot be long lasting. For as Salomon saith, Sap. 16. For it was requisit that (without any excuse) destruction should come vpon those which exercised tyrannie. The property of a tyrant is to seeke the commoditie not of his subiects, but only his will and profit. Such were the pastors that fed not the Lords flocke, but fed themselues: of whom and to whom speaketh the prophet Ezech. 34. Woe be vnto those pastors of Israel that feed themselues. Should not the shepheards feede the flockes? With many other threatnings against them in the said chapter. Woe be vnto them which reioyce at the transgressions of such whom it lieth in their power to condemne, neither doe they seeke what he is able to pay; to whom crieth Micheas the prophet, 3. chap. Yee hate the good and loue the euill, yee plucke off mens skinnes and the flesh, from the bones: ye eate the flesh of my people, and flay off their skinne: ye breake their bones, ye chop them in peeces as it were into a cauldron, and as flesh into the pot, &c. And therfore the foresaid Ezechiel pronounceth: Behold I will my selfe vpon the shepheards, and require my sheepe from their hands, and make them cease from feeding my sheepe, yea the shepheards shall feed themselues no more, for I will deliuer my sheepe out of their mouthes, so that they shall not deuour them any more.

6. Signe. Promoting of vnworthie ministers.

The sixt signe is in promoting of the vnworthy, and of neglecting them that be worthie. This, as Aristotle saith, is a great cause many times of the dissolution of common weales. And oftentimes it so happeneth in the warres of princes, that the contempt and small regarding of the valiant, and the exalting of others that be lesse worthie, ingendreth diuers kinds and kindlings of sedition. For by the reason partly of the same, partly of the other causes aboue recited; we haue read not only in bookes, but haue seene with our eies, diuers flourishing cities well neere subuerted. Whereas good men be not made of, but are vexed with sorrow and griefe by the euill; the contention at length brasteth out vpon the prince, as Haymo reciteth out of Origen. This hath alwaies been the peruerse incredulitie of mans hard heart, that not onely in hearing, but also in seeing: yet will they not beleeue that other haue perished, vnlesse they also perish themselues.

Haymo.

7. Signe.

The seuenth signe is the tribulation of outward policy and commotions of the people, which in a great part is now happened alreadie. And therefore forasmuch as Seneca saith: Men doe complaine commonly that euils onely come so fast: It is to be feared lest also the ecclesiasticall policie be afflicted not only outwardlie but also in it selfe. And so to be fulfilled in vs, that in Ieremy is prophesied cap. 4. Murther is cried vpon murther, and the whole land shall perish, and suddenly my tabernacles were destroyed, and my tents very quickly. And Ezec. 7. Wherfore I will bring cruell tyrants from among the heathen, to take their houses in possession, I will make the pompe of the proud to cease, and their sanctuaries shall be taken. One mischiefe and sorrow shall follow another, and one rumor shall come after another, then shall they seeke visions in vaine at their prophets, the law shal be gone from their priests, and wisdome from their elders, &c.

Ierem. 4.

Ezech. 7.

The eight signe is the refusing of correction, neither wil they heare their faults told them, so that it happened to the princes and rulers of the church, as it is written in the prophet Zach. cap. 7. They stopped their eares that they would not heare; yea they made their hearts as an adamant stone, lest they should heare the law and words which the Lord of hosts sent in his holy spirit by the prophets aforetime. Also Esay witnessing after the same effect, chap. 30. saith: For it is an obstinat people, lying children and vnfaithfull children that will not heare the law of the Lord, which say to the prophets, meddle with nothing, and tell vs nothing that is true and right, but speake friendlie words to vs, &c. Al this shal be verified when the prelats begin to hate them that tell them truth, and haue knowledge; like vnto such of whom Amos speaketh, cap. 5. They beare him euill will that reproueth them openly, and who so telleth them the plaine truth, they abhor him. And therefore saith the Lord to the church of Ierusalem, Ose 4. Seeing thou hast refused vnderstanding, I haue refused thee also, that thou shalt no more be my priest. And for so much as thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children, and change their honour into shame. And so shal it be like priest, like people, &c. And many other sayings there bee in the prophets, speaking of the dejecting and casting downe of the priestly honour.

Truth shent. Amos 5.

Ose. 4.

Besides these foresaid signes and tokens hitherto recited, there bee also diuers others: as the backsliding from righteousnes, the lacke of discreet and learned priests, promoting of children into the church with such other like. But these being alreadie wel noted and marked, you may easily iudge and vnderstand, whether these times now present of ours be safe and cleare from tribulation to be looked for, and whether the word of the Lord be true according to my theame: Iuxta est iustitia mea vt reueletur, my righteousnesse is neere at hand to be reuealed, &c. And thus much of the second part.

Lack of learned priests.

Now to the third part or member of my subdiuision, which is concerning the false and perillous opinions of some, vpon this word of my theame vt veniat, &c. Which opinions principally be 4. repugning all against the truth of the canonicall scripture.

The third part or member of the subdiuision.

The first opinion is of such men, who hauing too much confidence in themselues, doe thinke and perswade with themselues, that the prelats bee the Church, which the Lord will alwaies keepe and neuer forsake, as hee hath promised in the persons of the apostles; Mathew 28. saying: And I will be with you to the end of the world, &c. But this is to be vnderstanded of faith, whereof Christ speaketh Luke 21. I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith shall not faile. Whereof wee read Eccle. 40. Faith shall stand for euer. &c. And albeit charitie waxe neuer so cold, yet faith notwithstanding, shal remaine in few, and in all distresses of the world: of the which distresses, our Sauiour doth prophecie in many places to come. And lest peraduenture some should thinke themselues to be safe from tribulation because they bee of the church, this opinion the Lord himselfe doth contrarie in Ieremy the 7: Trust not (saith he) in false lying words, saying, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord. And a little after, but you trust in words and lying counsels which deceiue you and do you no good.

The first opinion.

The church where it is, and in whom it consisteth.

Eccles. 40.

Ierem 7.

The second opinion is of them, which deferre time: for this they will grant that the church shall abide trouble, but not so shortly: thinking thus with themselues, that these causes and tokens afore recited, haue been before at other times as wel in the church. For both by Gregorie & Bernard holy doctors, in time past, the prelats haue been in like sort reprehended, both for their bribings, for their pompe and pride, for the promoting of persons and children vnfit vnto ecclesiasticall functions, and other vices moe, which haue raigned before this in the church of God more then now, and yet by God his grace, the church hath prospered and stood. Do ye not see, that if an house haue stood and continued ruinous a long season, it is neuer the more neere the fall thereby, but rather to be trusted the better? Moreouer, many times it commeth so to passe in realmes and kingdomes, that the posteritie is punished for the sinnes of the predecessors. Whereof speaketh the booke of Lamentations the 5. chapter: Our fathers haue sinned, and are now gone, and we must beare their wickednesse, &c. Against this cogitation or opinion well doth the Lord answer by the prophet Ezechiel chapter 12. saying: Behold thou sonne of man the house of Israel saith in this maner: Tush, as for the vision that he hath seene, it will be many a day or it come to passe: It is far off yet, the thing that hee prophesieth. Therefore say vnto them, thus saith the Lord God: The words that I haue spoken shall bee deferred no longer, looke what I haue said, shall come to passe, saith the Lord, &c. Wee haue seene in our daies things to happen, which seemed before incredible. And the like hath been seene in other times also: as wee reade written in the booke of Lamentations chapter 4. The kings of the earth nor all the inhabitance of the world would not haue beleeued, that the enemie and aduersarie should haue come in at the gates of the citie, for the sinnes of her priests, and for the wickednesse of her elders that haue shed Innocents bloud within her, &c. by Hierusalem, as is said, is meant the church.

The 2. opinion.

Thren. 5.

Exech. 12.

Thren. 4.

The third opinion or error is very perillous and peruerse, of all such as say, veniat, let come that will come: Let vs conforme our selues to this world, and take our time with those Temporisers which say in the booke of wisdome, Sap. 2. Come let vs enioy our goods and pleasures that bee present, and let vs vse the creature as in youth quickly, &c. Such as these be, are in dangerous case, and be greatly preiudiciall to good men in the church: And if the heads and rulers of the church were so vile to haue any such detestable cogitations in them, there were no place in hell too deepe for them. This Church founded by the Apostles in Christ, consecrated with the bloud of so many Martyrs, enlarged and increased with the vertues and merits of so many Saints, and indued so richly with the deuotion of so many secular princes, and so long prospered hitherto: if it now should come into the hands of such persons, it should fall in great danger of ruine, and they for their negligence and wickednes well deserued of God to bee cursed; yea here also in this present world to incurre temporall tribulation and destruction, which they feare more: by the sentence of the Lord saying to them in the booke of the Prouerbs chap. 1. Al my counsels yee haue despised, and set my correction at nought. Therefore shall I also laugh in your destruction, when tribulation and anguish shall fall vpon you.

The third opinion or error.

Prou. cap. 1.

Fourthly, an other opinion or errour is of such as being vnfaithfull beleeue not any such thing to come. And this errour seemeth to haue no remedy, but that as other things and other kingdomes haue their ends and limits set vnto them, which they cannot ouerpas: so it must needs be, that such a domination and gouernment of the Church haue an end, by reason of the demerites and obstinacies of the gouernours prouoking and requiring the same: like as we read in the Prophet Ieremie cap. 8. There is no man that taketh repentance for his sinne, that will so much as say, wherefore haue I done this? But euery man runneth foorth still like a wild horse in a battell. And the

The fourth part or member of the ſubdiuiſion. Fourthly and laſtly remaineth to declare, ſome wholeſome concluding now vpon the cauſes preceding: That is, if by theſe cauſes and ſignes (heretofore declared) tribulation be prepared to fall vpon the church, then let vs humble our minds mildely and wiſely. Now therefore, for ſo much as tribulation and affliction is ſo neere comming toward vs, yea lieth vpon vs alreadie, let vs be the more diligent to call vpon God for mercie. For I thinke verily theſe many yeares there haue not been ſo many and ſo deſpitefull hearts and euill willers, ſtout, and of ſuch a rebellious heart againſt the church of God, as be now adaies: neither bee they lacking that would worke all that they can againſt it, and louers of new-fanglenes: whoſe hearts the Lord happilie will turne, that they ſhall not hate his people, and worke deceit againſt his ſeruants, I meane

And if terrene kings in the day of celebration of their natiuitie, be wont to ſhew themſelues more liberall and bountious, how much more ought we to hope well, that the heauenly king of nature moſt benigne, now at his natall and birth day, will not denie pardon and remiſſion to ſuch as rightly call vnto him?

Whereof ſpeaketh Eſay the prophet, chapter 51. My ſauing health ſhall endure for euer, &c. This health grant vnto vs the Father, Son and holy Ghoſt, Amen. Eſay 51.

This ſermon was made by maiſter Nicolas Orem before pope Urbane and his cardinals vpon the euen of the Natiuitie of the Lord, being the fourth Sunday of Aduent, in the yeare of our Lord 1364. and the ſecond of his popedome.

In the 5. yeare of this forenamed pope Urbane, began firſt the order of the Ieſuites. And vnto this time, which was about the yeare of our Lord 1367. the offices heere in England, as the lord chancellour, lord treaſurer, and of the priuie ſeale, were wont to be in the hands of the clergie. But about this yeare through the motion of the Lords in the parliament, and partly (as witneſſeth mine author) for hatred of the clergie, all the ſaid offices were remoued from the clergie, to the lords temporall. The order of Ieſuites. Anno 1367. The chiefe offices of the realme tranſlated from the clergie to the lords temporall.

After the death of pope Urbane, next ſucceeded pope Gregorie the 11. who among his other acts, firſt reduced againe the papacie out of France vnto Rome, which had from thence been abſent, the ſpace now of 70. yeares, being thereto moued (as Sabellicus recordeth) by the anſwere of a certaine biſhop, whom as the pope ſaw ſtanding by him aſked, why he was ſo long from his charge and church at home, ſaying: not to be the part of a good paſtor, to keepe him from his flocke ſo long. Whereunto the biſhop anſwering againe, ſaid: And you your ſelfe being the chiefe biſhop, who may and ought to be a ſpectacle to vs all; why are you from the place ſo long where your church doth lie? By the occaſion whereof, the pope ſought all meanes after that to remoue and to rid his court out of France againe to Rome, and ſo he did. Pope Gregorie the 11. Anno 1370. The papacie reduced againe from France to Rome.

This Gregorie 11. in a certaine bull of his ſent to the archbiſhop of Prage, maketh mention of one named Militzius a Bohemian, and ſaith in the ſame bull that this Militzius ſhould hold opinion and teach, an. 1366. that antichriſt was alreadie come. Alſo that the ſaid Militzius had certaine congregations following him: and that in the ſame congregations were certaine harlots, who being conuerted from their wickednеſſe, were brought to a godly life. Which harlots being ſo conuerted, he vſed to ſay were to be preferred before all the holy religious virgins. And therefore commanded the archbiſhop to excommunicat and perſecute the ſaid Militzius, which in foretime had been a religious man of Prage, and after forſooke his order, and gaue himſelfe to preaching, and at length was by the foreſaid archbiſhop impriſoned. Militzius a Bohemian, for the truth perſecuted by the pope.

Iacobus Miſnenſis a learned man and a writer in the time of Iohn Hus, maketh mention of this Militzius, & calleth him a worthie and a famous preacher. Alſo citeth many things out of his writings: in the which writings this good Militzius thus declareth of himſelfe how he was moued and vrged by the holy Ghoſt to ſearch out by the ſacred Scriptures, concerning the comming of antichriſt. And that he was compelled by the ſame holy ſpirit at Rome publikely to preach, and alſo before the Inquiſitor there to proteſt plainely, that the ſame great antichriſt which is prophecied of in the holy Scriptures, was alreadie come. Moreouer his ſaying was, that the church through negligence of the paſtors was deſolat, did abound in temporall riches, but in ſpirituall riches to be emptie. Alſo that in the church of Chriſt, were certaine Idols which deſtroyed Ieruſalem, and defaced the Temple, but hypocriſie cauſed that theſe Idols could not be ſeene. Alſo that many there were which denied Chriſt, becauſe that knowing the truth, yet for feare of men they durſt not confeſſe their conſcience, &c. And thus much of good Militzius, liuing in the time of Gregorie, 11. and king Edward the third, an. 1375. Ex bulla Gregorij 11. The comming of antichriſt prophecied.

The which king of England holding a parliament in the third yeare of this pope, ſent his embaſſadors to him, deſiring him: that he from thenceforth would abſtaine from his reſeruations of benefices vſed in the court of England. And that ſpirituall men within this realme promoted vnto biſhoprikes, might freely inioy their elections within the realme, and be confirmed by their Metropolitanes, according to the ancient cuſtome of the realme. Wherefore vpon theſe and ſuch other like, wherein the king and the realme thought themſelues much grieued, he deſired of the pope ſome remedie to be prouided, &c. Whereunto the pope returned a certaine anſwere againe vnto the king, requiring by his meſſengers to be certified againe of the kings mind concerning the ſame. But what anſwere it was, it is not in the ſtorie expreſſed, ſaue that the yeare following, which was 1374, there was a tractation at Burges vpon certaine of the ſaid articles betweene the king and the pope, which did hang two yeares in ſuſpenſe, ſo at length it was thus agreed betweene them: that the pope ſhould no more vſe his reſeruations of benefices in England, and likewiſe the king ſhould no more confer and giue benefices vpon the writ, Quare impedit, &c. But as touching the freedome of elections to be confirmed by the Metropolitan, mentioned in the yeare before, thereof was nothing touched. King Edward complaineth of the popes reſeruation of benefices. The pope pitcheth from his reſeruing of benefices in England. Quare impedit.

As touching theſe reſeruations, proviſions, and collations, with the elections of the archbiſhops, biſhops, beneficed men and other, wherewith the pope vexed this realme of England, as before you haue heard; the king by the conſent of the lords and commons, in the 25. yeare of his raigne enacted: that according to a statute made in the 30. yeare of his grandfather Edward the first, wherein was made an act against the rauenous pillage of the pope, through the same prouisions, reseruations, and collations, &c. but not put in execution. By the which prouisions, the state of the realme decreased more and more, the kings royaltie and prerogatiue greatly obscured and diminished, innumerable treasure of the realme transported, aliens and strangers placed in the best and fattest bishoprikes, abbeyes, and benefices within the realme: And such, as either for their offices in Rome, as cardinallships and such like, could not be heere resident, or if resident, yet better away for causes infinite, as partly haue been touched before: not only reuiued the said statute made by Edward the first his grandfather, but also inlarged the same. Adding thereunto verie straite and sharpe penalties against the offenders therein, or in any part thereof, as exemption out of the kings protection, losse of all their lands, goods, and other possessions, and their bodies to be imprisoned at the kings pleasure: and further, whosoeuer was lawfully conuict, or otherwise for want of appearance by processe directed forth, were within the lapse of this statute or premunire (for so bare the name thereof) should suffer all and euerie such molestations and iniuries, as men exempted from the protection of the king. In so much, that whosoeuer had killed such men, had been in no more danger of law therefore, then for the killing of an outlaw, or one not worthie to liue in a common weale. Like vnprofitable members were they then in that time, yea of ignorance esteemed in this common weale of England, as would offer themselues to the wilfull slauerie and seruile obedience of the pope: which thing in these daies, yea and that amongst no small fooles, is counted more then Euangelicall holinesse. Hee that list to peruse the statute, and would see euery branch and article thereof at large discussed and handled, with the penalties therefore due: let him reade the statute of prouision and premunire, made in the 25. yeare of this kings daies. And let him reade in the statutes made in the parliaments holden the 27 yeare, and 38 yeare of his raigne: And vnder the same title of prouision and premunire shall find, the popes primacie and iurisdiction within this realme more nerely touched, and much of his papall power restrained: In so much, that whosoeuer for any cause or controuersie in law, either spirituall or temporall, the same being determinable in any of the kings courts (as all matters were) whether they were personall or reall, citations or other; or should either appeale or consent to any appellation, to be made out of the realme to the pope or see of Rome; should incurre the said penaltie and danger of premunire. Diuers other matters wherein the pope is restrained of his vsurped power, authoritie and iurisdiction within this realme of England; are in the said titles and statutes expressed, and at large set forth, who euer list to peruse the same, which for breuities sake I omit, hasting to other matters.

The law of premunire with the penaltie thereof.

The popes primacie heere in England bridled.

About this time, being the yeare of our Lord 1370, liued holy Briget, whom the church of Rome hath canonized not only for a saint, but also for a prophetesse: who notwithstanding in her booke of reuelations, which hath been oftentimes imprinted, was a great rebuker of the pope, and of the filth of his clergie, calling him a murtherer of soules, a spiller and a piller of the flocke of Christ: more abominable then Iewes, more cruell then Iudas, more vniust then Pilat, worse then Lucifer himselfe. The see of the pope shee prophesieth, shall be throwne downe into the deepe, like a millstone. And that his assister shall burne with brimstone: Affirming, that the prelats, bishops, and priests, are the cause why the doctrine of Christ is neglected, and almost extincted. And that the clergie haue turned the ten commandements of God into two words, to wit, Da pecuniam, that is, Giue money. It were long and tedious to declare all that she against them writeth. Among the rest which I omit, let this suffice for all, where as the said Briget affirmeth in her reuelations, that when the holy Virgin should say to her Son, how Rome was a fruitfull and fertill field: yea, said he, but of weeds only and cockle, &c.

To this Briget I will ioyne also Catharina Senensis, an holy virgin, which liued much about the same time, Anno 1379. Of whom writeth Antoninus part. historiæ 3. This Katharine hauing the spirit of prophecie, was wont much to complaine of the corrupt state of the church, namely of the prelats of the court of Rome, and of the pope: prophesying before of the great schisme, which then followed in the church of Rome, & dured to the councell of Constance, the space of xxxix. yeares: also of the great warres and tribulation, which insued vpon the same. And moreouer declared before and foretold, of this so excellent reformation for religion in the church now present. The words of Antoninus be these: After this virgin in her going to Rome, had told her brother of the warres and tumults that should rise in the countries about Rome, after the schisme of the two popes: I then curious to know of things to come, and knowing that she vnderstood by reuelation what should happen, demanded of her: I pray you (good mother) said I, and what shall befall after these troubles in the church of God? And she said: By these tribulations and afflictions, after a secret maner vnknowne vnto man, God shall purge his holy church, and stir vp the spirit of his elect. And after these things shall follow such a reformation of the holy church of God, & such a renouation of holy pastors, that the only cogitation and remembrance thereof maketh my spirit to reioyce in the Lord. And as I haue oftentimes told you heretofore, the spouse which now is all deformed and ragged, shall be adorned and deckt with most rich and precious ouches and brouches. And all the faithfull shall be glad and reioyce to see themselues so beautified with so holy shepheards. Yea and also the infidels then allured by the sweet sauour of Christ, shall returne to the catholike fold, and be conuerted to the true bishop and shepheard of their soules. Giue thankes therefore to God, for after this storme he will giue to his a great calme. And after she had thus spoken, shee staid, and said no more.

The prophecie of Catharine.

Note.

Besides these aforenamed, the Lord, which neuer ceaseth to worke in his church, stirred vp against the malignant church of Rome, the spirits of diuers other good and godly teachers, as Matthias Parisiensis, a Bohemian borne, who about the yeare of our Lord 1370. wrote a large booke of Antichrist, and prooueth him alreadie come, and noteth the pope to be the same. Which booke one Illiricus a writer in these our daies hath, and promiseth to put it in print. In this booke he doth greatly inueigh against the wickednesse and filthinesse of the clergie, and against the neglecting of their dutie in gouerning the church. The Locusts mentioned in the Apocalypse, he saith, be the hypocrites raigning in the church. The workes of Antichrist, he saith, be these, the fables and inuentions of men raigning in the church: the Images and fained reliques that are worshipped euery where. Item, that men do worship euery one his proper saint and sauiour beside Christ: so that euery man and citie almost hath his diuers and peculiar christ. Hee taught and affirmed moreouer, that godlinesse and true worship of God, are not bound to place, persons, or times, to be heard more in this place, then in another, at this time more then at another, &c. Hee argueth also against the cloisterers, which leauing the only and true Sauiour, set vp to themselues their Franciscans, their Dominickes, and such other: and haue them for their sauiours, glorying and triumphing in them, and fayning many forged lies vpon them. Hee was greatly and much offended with monkes and friers, for neglecting or rather burying the word of Christ, and in stead of him, for celebrating and setting vp their owne rules and canons, affirming it to be much hurtfull to true godlinesse, for that priests, monks and nuns do account themselues only spirituall, and all other to be lay and secular, attributing only to themselues the opinion of holinesse, and contemning other men, with all their politicke administration, and the office as prophane in comparison of their owne. He further writeth that Antichrist hath seduced all Vniuersities and Colledges of learned men, so that they teach no sincere doctrine, neither giue any light to the christians with their teaching. Finally, he forewarneth that it will come to passe, that God yet once againe will raise vp godly teachers, who being feruent in the spirit and zeale of Helias, shall disclose and refute the errors of Antichrist, and Antichrist himselfe, openly to the whole world. This Matthias in the said booke of Antichrist alleageth the sayings and writings of the Vniuersitie of Paris, also the writings of Gulielmus de sancto Amore, and of Militzius afore noted.

Matthias Parisiensis a writer against the pope.

Antichrist alreadie come.

The doctrine and protestation of Matthias.

About the same time, or shortly after, an. 1384. we reade also of Ioannes of Mountziger, Rector of the Vniuersitie of Ulme, who openly in the schooles in his Oration propounded that the bodie of Christ was not God, and therefore not to be worshipped as God, with that kind of worship called Latria, as the Sophister termeth it, meaning thereby the Sacrament not to be adored, which afterward he also defended by writing, affirming also that Christ in his resurrection toke to him againe all his blod which in his passion he had shed. Meaning thereby to infer, that the blod of Christ which in many places is worshipped, neither can be called the blod of Christ, neither ought to be worshipped. But by and by he was resisted and withstood by the monkes and friers: who by this kind of idolatrie were greatly inriched, till at length the senat and councell of the citie was faine to take vp the matter betweene them.

Ioannes Mountziger protestant & gainst the pope.

Anno 1384

Nilus was archbishop of Thessalonica, and liued much about this time. He wrote a long worke against the Latines, that is, against such as toke part and held with the church of Rome. His first booke being written in Greek, was after translated into Latin, and lately now into English, in this our time. In the first chapter of this booke, he laieth all the blame and fault of the dissention and schisme betweene the East and the West church vpon the pope. Hee affirmed that the pope only would command what him listed, were it neuer so contrarie to all the old and ancient canons. That he would heare and follow no mans aduice: that he would not permit any free councels to be assembled, &c. And that therefore it was not possible, that the controuersies betweene the Greeke church and Latine church, should be decided and determined.

Nilus the archbishop of Thessalonica.

In the second chapter of his booke, he purposedly maketh a very learned disputation. For first hee declareth that hee no whit at all by Gods commandement, but only by humane law, hath any dignitie, more then hath other bishops: which dignitie dignitie, the councels, the fathers, and emperours haue granted vnto him. Neither did they grant the same for any other consideration more, or greater ordinance: then for that the same citie then had the imperie of all the whole world: and not at all for that that Peter euer was there, or not there.

Secondarilie he declareth, that the same primacie or prerogatiue is not such and so great as he and his sycophants doe vsurpe vnto themselues. Also he refuteth the chiefest propositions of the papists one after another. Hee declareth that the pope hath no dominion more then other patriarches haue, and that hee himselfe may erre as well as other mortall men: and that hee is subiect both to lawes and councels, as well as other bishops. That it belonged not to him, but to the emperour, to call generall councels: and that in ecclesiasticall causes hee could establish and ordaine no more then all other bishops might. And lastly, that hee getteth no more by Peters succession, then that he is a bishop as all other bishops after the apostles be, &c.

Jacobus Misnensis and Militzius.

I cannot among other, following heere the occasion of this matter offered, leaue out the memorie of Jacobus Misnensis, who also wrote of the comming of antichrist. In the same hee maketh mention of a certaine learned man, whose name was Militzius, which Militzius (saith he) was a famous and worthie preacher in Praga. Hee liued about the yeare 1366, long before Husse, and before Wickliffe also. In the same his writings hee declareth, how the same good man Militzius was by the holy Spirit of God incited, and vehemently moued to search out of the holy Scriptures the manner and comming of antichrist: and found that now in his time hee was alreadie come. And the same Jacobus saith, that the said Militzius was constrained by the Spirit of God to go vp to Rome, and there publikely to preach. And that afterward before the Inquisitour he affirmed the same. That the same mightie and great antichrist, the which the Scriptures made mention of, was alreadie come.

Hee affirmed also, that the church by the negligence of the pastors, should become desolate: and that iniquitie should abound, that is, by reason of Mammon, master of iniquitie. Also, he said that there were in the church of Christ idols, which should destroy Jerusalem, and make the temple desolate, but were cloked by hypocrisie. Further, that there be many which denie Christ, for that they keepe silence: neither do they heare Christ, whom all the world should know and confesse his veritie before men, which also wittingly do detaine the veritie and iustice of God.

Militzius persecuted by the pope.

There is also a certaine Bull of pope Gregorie 11. to the archbishop of Praga: wherein he is commanded to excommunicate and persecute Militzius and his auditours. The same Bull declareth, that he was once a Canon of Praga, but afterward he renounced his Canonship, and began to preach: who also for that he so manifestly preached of antichrist to bee alreadie come; was of John archbishop of Praga put in prison, declaring what his errour was: To wit, how he had his companie or congregation to whom hee preached, and that amongst the same were certaine conuerted harlots, which had forsaken their euill life, and did liue godlie and well: which harlots he accustomed in his sermons to preferre before all the blessed virgins that neuer offended. Hee taught also openlie, that in the pope, cardinals, bishops, prelats, priests, and other religious men, was no truth, neither that they taught the way of truth, but that only hee, and such as held with him, taught the true way of saluation. His Postill in some places is yet to be seene. They alleage vnto him certaine other inconuenient articles, which notwithstanding I thinke, the aduersaries to depraue him withall, haue slanderouslie inuented against him. He had, as appeared by the foresaid Bull, verie manie of euery estate and condition, as well rich as poore that cleaued vnto him.

About the yeare of our Lord 1371, liued Henricus de Iota, whom Gerson doth much commend, and also his companion Henricus de Hassia, an excellent learned and famous man. An epistle of this Henricus de Hassia which he wrote to the bishop of Normacia, Iacobus Cartsiensis inserted in his booke De erroribus Christianorum. In the same epistle the author doth greatlie accuse the spirituall men of euery order, yea and the most holie of all other the pope himselfe, of many and great vices. He said, that the ecclesiasticall gouernours in the primitiue church, were compared to the sunne shining in the day time, and the politicall gouernours, to the moone, shining in the night. But the spirituall men he said, that now are, do neither shine in the day time, nor yet in the night time, but rather with their darknesse do obscure both the day and the night, that is, with their filthie liuing, ignorance, and impietie. He citeth also out of the prophecie of Hildegardis these words; Therfore doth the diuell in himselfe speake of you priests: Daintie bankets and feasts, wherein is all voluptuousnesse, do I find amongst these men: In so much that mine eyes, mine eares, my bellie, and my beines, be euen filled with the froth of them, and my breasts stand astrut with the riches of them, &c. Lastly, saith he, they euerie day more and more as Lucifer did, seeke to climbe higher and higher: till that euery day with him more and more, they fall deeper and deeper.

Henricus de Hassia.

About the yeare of our Lord 1396, there were burned at Bzinga 36. citizens of Moguntina, for the doctrine of Waldenses, as Bzuthius affirmeth: which opinion was nothing contrary to that they held before, wherin they affirmed the pope to be that great antichrist, which should come: Unlesse peraduenture the pope seemed then to be more euidently conuicted of antichristianitie then at any other time before, hee was reuealed to be. The citizens of Moguntia.

For the like cause, many other beside these, are to be found in stories, which sustained the like persecutions by the pope, if leisure would serue to peruse all that might be searched. As where Masseus recordeth of diuers to the number of 140, which in the prouince of Narbone chose rather to suffer whatsoeuer grieuous punishment by fire, then to receiue the decretals of the Romish church, contrarie to the vpright truth of the Scripture. A briefe rehearsall of such as were put to death for holding against the bishop of Rome before the time of Wickliffe.

What should I here speake of the 24. which suffered at Paris, An. 1210? Also in the same author is testified that An. 1211 there were 400. vnder the name of heretiques burned, 80. beheaded: prince Americus hanged, and the ladie of the castle stoned to death.

Moreouer in the chronicles of Houedon, and of other writers be recited a marueilous number, which in the countries of France were burned for heretiques. Of whom, some were called Publicans, some Catharits, some Paterines, and other by others names. What their assertions were, I find no certaine report worthie of credit.

In Tritenius is signified of one Eckhardus a Dominican frier, who not long before Wickliffes time, was condemned and suffered for heresie at Hedelberge, An. 1330, who as hee differeth not much in name, so may he be supposed to be the same, whom other do name Beghardus, and is said to be burned at Erphord. Eckhardus a frier burned.

Of Albingenses because sufficient mention is made before, of whom a great number were burned about the time of king John, I passe them ouer.

Likewise I let passe the heremite, of whom John Bacon maketh relation, in his 2. Dist. quæst. 1. Who disputing in Pauls church, affirmed that those Sacraments, which were then vsed in the church, were not instituted by Christ, An. 1306. Peraduenture it was the same Ranulphus, mentioned in the Flowre of histories, and is said to die in prison: for the time of them doth not much differ. An heremit disputing against the popes sacrament. Ranulphus.

In Boetius, why the pope should so much commend a certaine king, because for one man, he had slaine 400, cutting away the genitals from the rest, I cannot iudge, except the cause were that, which the pope calleth heresie.

But to let these things ouerpasse that be vncertaine, because neither is it possible to comprehend all them which haue withstood the corruption of the popes see: neither haue we anie such firme testimonie left of their doings, credibly to stay vpon: We will now (Christ willing) conuert our storie, to things more certain and vndoubted: grounding vpon no light reports of feeble credit, nor vpon any fabulous legends without authoritie: but vpon the true and substantiall copies of the publike records of the realme, remaining yet to be seene vnder the kings most sure and faithfull custodie. Out of the which records, such matter appeareth against the popish church of Rome, and against his vsurped authoritie, such open standing and crying against the said see, and that not priuilie, but also in open parliament, in the daies of this king Edward the third; that neither will the Romish people of this our age easilly thinke it to be true when they see it, neither yet shall they be able to denie the same, so cleare standeth the force of those records. Ex Archiuis Regia Maiestatis.

We heard a little before, pag. 350, how John Stratford archbishop of Canturburie being sent for, and required by the king to come vnto him, refused so to do. What the cause was why he denied to come at the kings sending, is neither touched of Polydore Virgil, nor of any other monkish chronicler, writing of those acts and times. Whose part had been, faithfully to haue dispensed the simple truth of things done to their posteritie. But that which they dissemblingly and colourablie haue concealed, contrarie to the true law of storie, the true cause thereof we haue found out by the true parliament roles, declaring the storie thus. Partiall dissimulation in our histories of the church of England.

King Edward the 3. in the 6. yeare of his raigne, hearing that Edward Bailiol had proclaimed himselfe king of Scotland; required counsell of the whole estate, to wit, whether it were better for him to assaile Scotland, and to claime the demesne or demaynes of the same: or else by making him partie to take his aduantage. And thereby to inioy the seruice, as other his ancestors before him had done. For this cause hee summoned a parliament of all estates to meete at Yorke, about the beginning of December. Where the king was alreadie come, waiting for the comming of such as were warned thereunto. For the want of whose comming the parliament was reiourned till monday, and from thence to tuesday next insuing. But for so much as most of the states were absent, the assemblie required the continuance of the parliament, vntill the vtas of S. Hillarie then insuing at Yorke, which was granted. And so a new summons was especially awarded to euerie person with speciall charge to attend; so that the affaires of the king and the realme might not be hindred, because of the *Ex anno 6. reg. debate betweene the archbishop of Canturbury and archbishop of Yorke, for the superiour bearing of their crosse.

The archbishop of Canturburie came not to the parliament at Yorke, and all for bearing the crosse.

In conclusion, for all the kings summoning, none other of all the clergie came, but only the archbishop of Yorke, the bishop of Lincolne, and of Carlile, and abbats of Yorke and Selby. So that hereunto came not the archbishop of Canturburie nor any other of his prouince, and all for bearing the crosse. Wherby the same was not only a losse to the opportunitie to Scotland: but also an importable charge to the whole estate by a new reassemblie. And thus much out of the records. Whereby thou mayest easily iudge (prudent reader) what is to be thought of these pope-holy catholike churchmen: being of the popes brood and setting vp, whom such friuolous causes of contention stirre vp to such disquietnesse, both among themselues, and also to such disobedience against their prince: excuse them who can. Ex An. 6. Regis Edwardi 3.

The popes prouisions restrained, tit. 59.

It followeth moreouer in the same records, concerning the abandoning of the popes prouisions: how that the commons find great default at prouisions comming from Rome, whereby strangers were enabled within this realme to inioy ecclesiasticall dignities, and shew diuers inconueniences insuing thereby, namely the decay of daily almes, the transporting of the treasure to nourish the kings enemies, the discouering of the secrets of the realme, and the disabling and impouerishing of the clerkes within this realme.

The church of England spoiled by the pope and his fortreners.

They also shew how the pope had in most couert wise granted to two new cardinals within this realme, (and namely to cardinall Peragotz) aboue ten thousand markes of yearely tares: They therefore required the king and nobles to find some remedie, for that they neuer could ne would any longer beare those strange oppressions, or else to helpe them to expell out of this realme the popes power by force.

The act of king Edward the first reuiued for premunire, tit. 60.

Hereupon, the king, lords and commons, sent for the act made at Carlile, in the 35. yeare of king Edward the first, vpon the like complaint: thereby forbidding, that anie thing should be attempted or brought into the realme, which should tend to the blemishing of the kings prerogatiue, or to the preiudice of his lords or commons. And so at this time, the statute called the act of prouision was made by common consent, which generally forbiddeth the bringing in of any Bulles, or such trinkets from the court of Rome, or the vsing, inioying, or allowing of any such bill, processe, instrument, or such ware, as thereby at large doth appeare. Whereof sufficiently is touched before, pag. 322.

The penaltie of which statute afterward followed in the next parliament, An. Reg. Edw. 18. tit. 32. the which penaltie was this: the transgressors thereof to lie in perpetuall prison, or to be forfeited the land. And that all iustices of assize, goale deliuerie, and Oyer and determiner, may determine the same. Required withall, that the same act of prouision, should continue for euer.

Presentation within 4. monethes, an. reg. 18. tit. 34.

Item, that the said 18. yeere of the raigne of king Edward, tit. 34. it was moreouer propounded: that if any archbishop, or any person religious or other, do not present within 4. months some able clerke to any dignitie, where any person hath obtained from Rome any prouision, Bull, &c. but surcease the same: that then the king may present some able clerke.

No elections to be taken by the pope, but only by the king, an. reg. 18. tit. 35.

Item, propounded in the said parliament an. 18. reg. Ed. 3. that if any bishop elect, shall refuse to take any such bishoprikes other then by such Bull: that then such elect, shall not enter ne enioy his temporalties without his speciall licence.

Disposittions of benefices only in the kings hand, anno 18. Ed. 3. tit. 36.

Also that the king shall dispose all such benefices and dignities of such aliens his enemies, as remaine in the countrie of his enemies, and imploy the profits thereof to the defence of the realme.

Bulles from Rome forbidden, an. 18. reg. Ed. 3. tit. 37.

Moreouer propounded, that commissioners be sent to all the kings ports, to apprehend all such persons as shall bring in any such instrument from Rome, and to bring them forthwith before the counsell to answere thereto.

The deanrie of Yorke taken from the cardinall, an. 18. reg. Ed. 3. tit. 38.

Propounded furthermore, that the deanrie of Yorke which is to be recouered by iudgement in the kings court, may be bestowed vpon some able man within the realme, who will maintaine the same against him (meaning the cardinall, who holdeth the same by prouision from Rome, being the enemie to the king and to the realme) and that the profits may be imployed to the defence of the realme.

The kings answere and agreement to the foresaid petitions.

The kings answere. To all which petitions answere was made in forme following: It is agreed by the king, earles, barons, iustices, and other wise men of the realme, that the petitions aforesaid, be made in sufficient forme of law, according to the petitions aforesaid.

Note, that the bishops be not here named, and yet the parliament standeth in force.

¶ Note in this answere of the king (good reader) that at the grant hereof, the consent of the bishops is neither named, nor expressed, with the other lords of the parliament: and yet, the parliament standeth in his full force, notwithstanding.

Alien monkes to auoid, an. 20. Ed. 3. tit. 30.

TO passe further, in the 20. yeare of the kings raigne in the parliament holden the same yeare, it was propounded: that all alien monkes should auoid the realme by the day of S. Michael, and that their liuings should be disposed, to yong English scholars. The liuing of these the king tooke to his hands.

The liuings of strangers beneficed taken into the kings hand, tit. 21.

Item, that the king may take the profits of all other strangers liuings, as cardinals and others, during their liues. The profits of whom were also in the kings hands.

The liuings of Romish strangers disposed to English men, tit. 32. tit. 33.

That such aliens enemies, as be aduanced to liuings here in England (being in their owne countries, shoomakers, tailers, or chamberlaines to cardinals) should depart before Michaelmas, and their liuings disposed to poore English scholars. The liuings also of these remained in the kings hands.

The commons denied to pay any payment, to any cardinals lying in France, to entreat of warre or peace: which also was granted of the kings part as reasonable.

Cardinals deprined of their liuings in England, tit. 34.

Item, propounded and fully agreed, that the yearely aduancement of two thousand markes (granted by the pope to two cardinals, out of the prouinces of Canturburie and Yorke) should be restrained, and such as shall pursue therefore to be out of the law.

Likewise enacted and agreed, that no English man should take any thing in farme of any alien religious, ne buy any of their goods, nor be of their counsell, on paine of perpetuall imprisonment.

Enacted further, that no person should bring into the realme to anie bishop or other, anie Bull, or anie other letters from Rome, or from anie alien: vnlesse hee shew the same to the Chancellour or Warden of the Cinque ports, vpon losse of all he hath.

Finally, in the end of the said parliament, the bishops were commanded before the next conuocation, to certifie vnto the Chancerie the names of such aliens, of their benefices, and the values of the same.

THe parliament of the 25. yeare, was begun the 6. day of Februarie, the 25. yeare of king Edward 3. In the which parliament beside other matters moe, was propounded: that remedie might be had against the popes reseruations, by which brocage and meanes the pope receiued the first fruits of all ecclesiasticall dignities: A more consumption to the realme, then all the kings wars.

The popes first fruits and reseruations more hurtfull to ths realme then all the kings wars, tit. 14.

The request of the king for causes not to be determined at Rome, tit. 7.

IN the parliament holden at Westminster, the 38. yeare of Edward 3. in the vtaues of Hilarie (Simon bishop of Elie being lord Chancellour) it was required by the kings owne mouth, and declared to the whole estates: How daily citations and false suggestions were made to the pope, for matters determinable in his courts within the realme, and for procuring prouisions to ecclesiasticall dignities, to the great defacing of the ancient lawes, to the spoiling of his crowne, to the daily conueying away of the treasure, to the walking of ecclesiasticall liuings, to the withdrawing of diuine seruice, almes, hospitalitie, and other acceptable workes, and to the daily increase of all mischiefes: Wherefore, in person by his owne mouth, the king required the whole estate to prouide hereof due remedie.

To be noted finallie in this parliament of the 38. yeare, that the act of prouisors, brought in this parliament, although in the printed copie, chap. 1. 2. 3. 4. doth agree with the record, in manner: yet in the said records vnprinted, are moe biting words against the pope: a mysterie not to be knowne of all men.

IT followeth moreouer in the said acts of king Edward the 3. and in the 40. yeare of his raigne, another parliament was called at Westminster the 3. of May, an. 1366. the bishop of Elie being lord Chancellour and speaker. Who in the second day of the said assemblie in the presence of the king, lords and commons, declared: how the day before, generally they vnderstood the cause of this their assemblie, and now more particularly should vnderstand the same: specially how that the king vnderstood, that the pope (for the homage which king John made to the see of Rome for the realmes of England and Ireland, and for the tribute by him granted) meant by proces to cite the king to Rome, to answere thereto. Wherein, the king required their aduices, what were best for him to do, if any such thing were attempted. The bishops by their selues required respite of answere, vntill the next day. So did the lords and commons euerie of them by their selues.

King John could not without consent of parliament become tributarie to the pope, tit. 8.

The same next day, the whole estates reassembled together, and by common consent enacted in effect following, viz. For as much as neither king John, nor any other king, could bring his realme and people in such thraldome and subiection, but by common assent of parliament, the which was not done: and therefore done against his oth at his coronation (besides many other causes:) If therefore the pope should attempt any thing against the king, by processe or other matter indeed: That the king with all his subiects, should with all their force and power resist the same.

Agreed by parliament, that the king by force should resist the pope.

Braule between the foure orders of friers and the two Universities: Ex. tit. 10.

Here moreover is not to be omitted, how in the said present parliament, the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge on the one side, and the friers of the foure orders mendicants in the said Universities on the other side; made long complaints the one against the other, to the king in parliament, and in the end submitted themselues to the kings order.

After which, the king vpon full digesting of the whole matter (by assent of parliament) toke order: that as well the chancellor and scholars, as the friers of those orders in the said Universities; should in all graces and other schole exercises, vse each other in friendly wise, without any rumor as before. That none of those orders should receiue any scholars into their said orders, being vnder the age of 18. yeares.

The friers subiect to the kings order only in all their controuersies, parliament tit. 12.

That the said friers shall take no aduantage, nie procure Buls or other processe from Rome, against the said Universities, or proceed therein.

And that the king haue power to redresse all controuersies, betweene them from thencefoorth. And the offenders to be punished at the pleasure of the king, and of the counsell.

Against the vsurpation of the pope.

cause of all the plagues, murrions, famine, and pouertie of the realme, so as thereby was not left the third person, or other commoditie within the realme that lately was.

2 That the taxes paid to the pope of Rome for ecclesiasticall dignities, do amount to fiue fold as much, as the tare of all profits as appertaine to the king by the yeare of his whole realme: And that for some one bishoprieke or other dignitie, the pope by way of translation and death, hath three, foure, or fiue seuerall tares.

The pope cause of all mischiefes in England.

3 That the brokers of that sinfull citie, for money promote many caitifes (being altogether vnlearned and vnworthie) to a thousand markes liuing by yeare, where the learned and worthie can hardlie obtaine twentie markes, whereby learning decayeth.

The treasure of the realme conueyed away by the popes meanes, tit. 97.

4 That aliens (enemies to this land) who neuer saw ne care not to see their parishioners, haue those liuings whereby they despise Gods seruice, and conuey away the treasure, and are worse then Iewes or Saracens.

5 Also it was put vp in the said bill to be considered, that the lawes of the church, would such liuings to be bestowed for charitie only, without praying or paying.

6 That reason would that liuings giuen of deuotion, should be bestowed in hospitalitie.

7 That God had committed his sheepe to the pope, to be pastured, and not shorne or shauen.

The pope giueth example to sell benefices, tit. 99.

8 That lay patrons perceiuing the couetousnes and simonie of the pope, do thereby learne to sell their benefices vnto beasts, none otherwise then Christ was sold to the Iewes.

Inestimable that the pope hath heere out of England, tit. 100.

9 That there is none so rich a prince in christendome, that hath the fourth part of so much treasure, as the pope hath out of this realme, for churches most sinfully.

10 Diuer and besides in the said bill, repeating againe the tendering zeale, for the honor of the church: was declared and particularly named, all the plagues which haue iustly fallen vpon this realme, for suffering the same church to be so defaced, with declaration that it will daily increase without redresse.

Reseruation of the Church of England desired in the parliament, tit. 111.

11 Whereupon with much perswasion this was desired, to helpe to reedifie the same: and the rather for that, this was the yeare of Iubiley, the 50. yeare of the kings raigne, the yeere of ioy and gladnesse, then the which there could be no greater.

12 The meanes how to begin this, was to write two letters to the pope: the one in Latine vnder the kings seale, the other in French vnder the seales of the nobles, importing their particularities, and requiring redresse, of the which letter of the lords, the effect may be seene in a like letter mentioned before, pag. 352.

Acts made for no money to be transported, tit. 103.

13 And for a further accomplishment hereof, to enact, that no money were caried forth of the realme by letter of Lumbardie or otherwise, on paine of forfeiture and imprisonment, and to enact the articles hereafter ensuing.

14 The king hath heretofore by statute prouided sufficient remedie, and otherwise pursueth the same with the holy father the pope, and so mindeth to do from time to time, vntill he hath obtained as well for the matters before, as for the articles insuing, being in a manet all one.

Against the popes liegers, and collectors, tit. 104. The popes collection what is commeth to, tit. 105.

15 That the popes collector and other strangers the kings enemies, and only lieger spies for Englishe dignities, and disclosing of the secrets of the realme, may be touched.

16 That the same collectour being also receiuer of the popes pence, keepeth a house in London with clerkes and officers therto, as it were one of the kings solemne courts, transporting yearely to the pope, twentie thousand markes, and most commonly more.

The best dignities in England in the cardinals, tit. 106.

17 That cardinals and other aliens remaining at Rome, whereof one cardinall is deane of Yorke, another of Salisburie, another of Lincolne, another archdeacon of Canturburie, another archdeacon of Durelme, another archdeacon of Suffolke, another archdeacon of Yorke, another prebendarie of Thame and Nallington, another prebendarie of Buckes in the church of Yorke: haue diuers of the best dignities of England, and haue sent ouer to them yearely xx. M. markes, ouer and aboue that which English brokers lying there, haue.

The pope maintaineth the kings enemies with the kings money, tit. 107.

18 That the pope (to ransome the Frenchmen the kings enimies, who defend Lumbardie from him) doth alwaies at his pleasure leuie a subsidie of the whole clergie of England.

The popes practise in England to make money, tit. 108.

19 That the pope for more gaine maketh sundrie translations of all the bishoprickes and other dignities within the realme.

20 That the popes collector hath this yeare taken to his vse the first fruits of all benefices, by collation or prouision.

The law of premunire to be renued.

21 To renue all the statutes against prouisors from Rome, sith that the pope reserueth all the benefices of the world for his owne proper gifts, and hath this yeare created twelue new cardinals, so as now there are thirtie, where was wont to be but twelue, and all those cardinals, except two or three, are the kings enemies.

Against the popes vsurpation, tit. 112.

22 That the pope in time, will giue the temporall manors of those dignities to the kings enemies, sith he so daily vsurpeth vpon the realme, and the kings regalities.

23 That all houses and corporations of religion who vnto the kings raigne now had free election of heads, the pope hath encroched the same to himselfe.

English money paieth the popes legacies, tit. 113.

24 That in all legacies from the pope, whatsoeuer; the English clergie beareth the charge of the legats, and all for the godnesse of our money.

No good money in the realme for the pope and card. tit. 114.

25 And so it appeareth, that if the money of the realme were as plentifull as euer it was; the collectors aforesaid, with the proctors of cardinals, would soone conuey the same.

The popes collector or proctor driuen out of the realme, tit. 115.

26 For remedie hereof it may be prouided, that no such collector or proctor do remaine in England, on paine of life and member. And that no English man on the like paine, become any such collector or proctor, or remaine at Rome.

The popes collector to be examined.

27 For better information hereof, and namely touching the popes collector, for that the whole clergie being obedient vnto him, dare not displease him: It were good, that sir Iohn Strenlale, parson of S. Botolphs in Holborne, may be sent to come before the lords and commons of this parliament. Who being straitly charged, can declare much more, for that he serued the same collector in house fiue yeares.

English men good Alles.

¶ And thus much of this bill touching the popes matters: whereby it may appeare, not to be for nought that hath been vpon vs reported by the Italians and other strangers, which vsed to call English men good Alles: for they beare all burdens that be laid vpon them.

Order taken in London against vsurie, tit. 158.

Item, in the said parliament it was prouided also, that such order as is made in London against the horrible vice of vsurie, may be obserued throughout the whole realme.

Complaint against the bishop of Yorke and his officers for their excessiue taking for their admissions, tit. 171.

The commons of the diocesse of Yorke complaine of the outragious taking of the bishop and his clerkes, for admissions of priests to their benefices.

To these records of the parliament aboue prefixed of the 50. yeare of this king Edward; we will adioyne also other notes, collected out of the parliament, in the yeare next following, which was 51, and the last yeare of this kings life and raigne, An. 1377, the 27. of Januarie: Although in the printed booke, these statutes are said to be made at the parliament holden, as aboue, in the 50. yeare: which is much mistaken, and ought to be referred to the 51. yeare, as by the records of the said yeare, manifestly doth appeare.

Ex Archiuis reg. Edou. 3. an. reg. 51. tit. 36.

Against the popes prouisions from Rome anno reg. 51. tit. 36.

In which parliament, the bishop of S. Dauids being lord chancellour, making a long oration, taking his theme out of S. Paul: Libenter suffertis insipientes, &c. Declaring in the said oration many things, as first, in shewing the ioyfull newes of the old kings recouerie: then declaring the loue of God toward the king and realme, in chastising him with sicknesse: Afterward shewing the blessing of God vpon the king, in seeing his children children: Then by a similitude of the head and members, exhorting the people as the members of one bodie to conforme themselues vnto the godnesse of the head. Lastly, he turned his matter to the lords and the rest, declaring the cause of that assemblie: that for so much as the French king had allied himselfe with the Spaniards and Scots the kings enemies, which had prepared great powers, conspiring to blot out the English tongue and name: the king therefore was willing to haue therein their faithfull counsell.

The cause of this parliament chiefly for the popes vsurpation against the king.

This being declared by the bishop: sir Robert Ashton the kings chamberlaine, declaring that he was to moue them from the king, for the profit of the realme (the which words percase lay not in the bishops mouth, for that it touched the pope) viz. By protesting first, that the king was readie to do all that ought to be done for the pope. But for that diuers vsurpations were done by the pope to the king his crowne, and realme, as by particular bils in this parliament should be shewed, he required of them to seeke redresse.

Against the pope his prouisions frō Rome, an. reg. 51. tit. 35.

In this present parliament petition was made by the commons, that all prouisors of things from Rome, and their ministers, should be out of the kings protection.

The kings answere.

Whereunto the king answered, that the pope had promised redresse, which if he did not, the lawes then should stand.

Against the pope his dispensations, tit. 62.

It was also in that parliament required, that euerie person of what sexe soeuer, being professed of any religion, continuing the habit of fiftéene yeares, may vpon the triall of the same in any of the kings courts, bée in law vtterlie forebarred of all inheritance, albeit hee haue dispensation from the pope. Against which dispensation, is the chiefe grudge. Whereunto the king and the lords answered, saying, that they would prouide.

By this Anteferri, that is, præmunire, is meant, the preheminence aboue the king. The popes law of præeminere, which now we corruptly call præmunire, debarred by the king, tit. 78.

Item, in the said parliament was propounded, that the statute of prouisors made at any time may be executed, and that remedie may be had against such cardinals, as haue within the prouinces of Canturburie and Yorke, purchased reseruations, with the clause of Anteferri, to the value of twentie or thirtie thousand Scutes of gold against the popes collector: who was wont to be an English man, and now is a méere French, residing at London, and conueyeth yearely to the pope twentie thousand markes, or twentie thousand pounds, who this yéere gathereth the first fruits whatsoeuer. Alleaging the meanes to mét with these reseruations and nouelries, as, to command all strangers to depart the realme during the wars, that no English man to become their farmour, or to send to them any money without a speciall licence, on paine to be out of the kings protection. Whereunto was answered by the king, that the statutes and ordinances therefore made, should be obserued.

Ex actis parliamenti in an. reg. Ed. tertij 15. tit. 24.

In these rolles and records of such parliaments as were in this kings time continued, diuers other things are to be noted much worthie to be marked, and not to be suppressed in silence. Wherein the reader may learne and vnderstand the state of the kings iurisdiction heere within this realme, not to bée straitned in those daies (although the pope then séemed to be in his chiefe ruffe) as afterward since in other kings daies was séene. As may appeare in the parliament of the 15. yére of this king Edward the third, and in the 24. article of the said parliament: where it is to be read, that the kings officers and temporall iustices did then both punish vsurers, and impeached the officers of the church for briberie, and for taking mony for temporall paine, probate of willes, solemnitie of mariage, &c. all the pretensed liberties of the popish church to the contrarie notwithstanding.

Punishment of the clergie in the temporall mens hands.

Clerkes subiect to temporall law.

Furthermore, in the parliament of the 25. yeare, appeareth, that the liberties of the clergie and their exemptions in claiming the deliuerance of men by their booke vnder the name of clerkes, stood then in little force, as appeared by one Hauk-tine Hanby knight: who for imprisoning one of the kings subiects, till he made fine of twentie pound, was therefore executed, notwithstanding the libertie of the clergie, which by his booke would haue saued him, but could not.

The like also appeared by iudgement giuen against a priest at Nottingham, for killing of his master.

And likewise by hanging certaine monkes of Combe. Ex parliam. An. 23. Ed. 3.

The arraignment of the archbishop of Canturburie, an. 15. Ed. 3. tit. 49.

Item, in the parliament of the 15. yeare, by apprehending of I. Stratford, archbishop of Canturburie, and his arraignment: concerning which his arraignment, all things were committed to sir William of Kildisby.

Besides these truths and notes of the kings parliaments, wherein may appeare the toward procéedings of this king and of all his commons against the pretensed church of Rome: this is moreouer to be added to the commendation of the king, how in the volumes of the acts and rolles of the king appeareth: That the said king Edward the third sent also John Wickliffe, reader then of Diuinitie lecture in Oxford, with certaine other lords and ambassadors ouer into the parts of Italie, to treat with the popes legats concerning affaires betwixt the king and the pope with full commission: the tenor whereof héere followeth expressed.

John Wickliffe sent with the kings Ambassadors by the king.

Rex vniuersis, ad quorum notitiam præsentes literæ peruenerint, &c. In English thus.

The king to all and singuler to whom these presents shall come, greeting. Know ye, that we reposing assured confidence in the fidelity and wisdome of the reuerend father Iohn bishop of Bangor, and other our louing and faithfull subiects, M. Iohn Wickliffe, reader of the Diuinitie lecture, M. Io. Guntur deane of Segobyen, and M. Simon Moulton doctor of the law, Sir William Burton knight, M. John Belknap, and M. Iohn Honnington, haue directed them as our ambassadors and speciall commissioners to the parts beyond the seas. Giuing to the said our ambassadors and commissioners, to six or fiue of them, of whom I will that the said bishop shall be one, full power and authoritie, with commandement speciall, to treat and consult mildely and charitablie with the legats and ambassadors of the lord pope touching certaine affaires. Whereupon of late we sent heretofore the said bishop, and William Vghtred monke of Duresme, and M. Iohn Shepie to the see apostolicall: And hereof to make full relation of all things done and past in the said assemblie, that all such things which may tend to the honor of holy church and the aduancement of our crowne and this our realme, may by the assistance of God and the wisdome of the see apostolicall be brought to good effect, and accomplished accordingly. Witnesse our selues, &c. at London dated the 26. day of Iuly in the 48. yeare of our raigne.

By the which it is to be noted, what good will the king then bare to the said Wickliffe, and what small regard he had to the sinfull see of Rome.

Of the which John Wickliffe, because we are now approched to his time; remaineth consequently for our storie to entreat of, so as we haue heretofore done of other like valiant souldiers of Christs church before him.

Iohn Wickliffe.

Here beginneth the storie of John Wickliffe.

AFter al these heretofore recited, by whom (as ye haue heard) it pleased the Lord something to worke against the bishop of Rome, and to weaken the pernicious superstition of the friers: now remaineth consequently, following the course of yeares, orderly to enter into the storie and tractation of John Wickliffe our countriman, and other moe of his time, and same countrie, whom the Lord (with the like zeale and power of spirit) raised vp here in England, to detect more fully and amplie the poison of the popes doctrine, and false religion set vp by the friers. In whose opinions and assertions, albeit some blemishes perhaps may be noted: yet such blemishes they be, which rather declare him to be a man that might erre, then which directly did fight against Christ our Sauiour, as the popes procéedings & the friers did. And what doctor or learned man hath been from the prime age of the church, so perfect, so absolutely sure, in whom no opinion hath sometime swarued awrie? And yet be the said articles of his, neither in number so many, nor yet so grosse in themselues and so cardinall, as those cardinall enemies of Christ perchance do giue them out to be; if his bookes which they abolished, were remaining to be conferred with those blemishes, which they haue wrested to the worst, as euill will neuer said the best.

The blemishes of Wickliffe made worse then they be.

This is certaine and cannot be denied, but that he being the publike reader of Diuinitie in the Vniuersitie of Oxford; was for the rude time wherein he liued, famously reputed for a great clerke, a deepe scholeman, and no lesse expert in all kind of philosophie. The which doth not only appeare by his owne most famous and learned writings and monuments, but also by the confession of Walden his most cruell and bitter enemie. Who in a certaine epistle written vnto pope Martin the fift, saith that he was wondersully astonished at his most strong arguments, with the places of authoritie which he had gathered, with the vehemencie and force of his reasons, &c. And thus much out of Walden. It appeareth by such as haue obserued the order and course of times, that this Wickliffe flourished about the yeare of our Lord 1371. Edward the third raigning in England: for thus we do find in the chronicles of Carton: In the yeare of our Lord 1371. (saith he) Edward the third, king of England, in his parliament, was against the popes clergie: He willingly harkened and gaue care to the voices and tales of heretikes, with certaine of his counsell conceiuing and following sinister opinions against the clergie. Wherefore (afterward) he talked & suffered much aduersity and trouble. And not long after, in the yeare of our Lord (saith he) 1372. he wrote vnto the bishop of Rome, that he should not by any meanes intermeddle any more within his kingdome, as touching the reseruation, or distribution of benefices: and that all such bishops as were vnder his dominion, should inioy their former and ancient libertie, and be confirmed of their Metropolitanes, as hath been accustomed in times past, &c. Thus much writeth Carton. But as touching the iust number of the yeare and time, we will not be very curious or carefull about, at this present. This is out of all doubt, that at what time all the world was in most desperate and vile estate, and that the lamentable ignorance and darknesse of God his truth had ouershadowed the whole earth; this man stepped forth like a valiant champion, vnto whom it may iustly be applied that is spoken in the booke called Ecclesiasticus, of one Simon the sonne of Onias: Euen as the morning star being in the middest of a cloud, and as the Moone being full in her course, and as the bright beames of the Sunne; so doth he shine and glister in the temple and church of God.

Ex Caxtono.

Thus doth almighty God continually succor and help, when all things are in despaire: being alwaies (according to the prophecie of the Psalme) a helper in time of need. The which thing neuer more plainly appeared, then in these latter dais and and extreame age of the church; when as the whole state and condition, not only of worldly things, but also of religion, was depraued and corrupted. That like as the disease named Lethargus among the physitions, euen so the state of religion amongst the diuines, was past all mans helpe and remedie. The onely name of Christ remained amongst christians, but his true and liuely doctrine was as farre vnknowne vnto the most part, as his name was common vnto all men. As touching faith, consolation, the end and vse of the law, the office of Christ, of our impotencie and weakenesse, of the holy Ghost, of the greatnesse and strength of sinne, of true works, of grace and free iustification by faith, of libertie of a christian man, wherein consisteth and reseth the summe and matter of our profession; there was no mention, nor any word almost spoken of. Scripture, learning and diuinitie; was knowne but vnto a few, and that in the scholes onely; and there also turned and conuerted almost all into sophistry. In stead of Peter and Paul, men occupied their time in studying Aquinas and Scotus, and the master of sentences. The world leauing and forsaking the liuely power of Gods spirituall word and doctrine, was altogether led and blinded with outward ceremonies and humane traditions, wherein the whole scope, in a manner, of all christian perfection did consist and depend. In these was all the hope of obtaining saluation fullie fixed: hereunto all things were attributed. Insomuch, that scarcely any other thing was séene in the temples or churches, taught or spoken of in sermons, or finallie intended or gone about in their whole life, but only heaping vp of certaine shadowed ceremonies vpon ceremonies, neither was there any end of their heaping.

The description of Wickliffes time.

The people were taught to worship no other thing but that which they did sée, and did sée almost nothing which they did not worship.

The church being degenerated from the true apostolicke institution aboue all measure (reseruing only the name of the apostolicke church, but far from the truth thereof in very deed) did fall into all kind of extreame tyrannie: whereas the pouertie and simplicitie of Christ was changed into crueltie and abomination of life. In stead of the apostolicke gifts and continuall labors and trauels, slothfulnes and ambition was crept in amongst the priests. Beside all this, there arose and sprung vp a thousand sorts and fashions of strange religions, being the onely rote and well-head of all superstition. How great abuses and deprauations were crept into the sacraments, at what time they were compelled to worship similitudes and signes of things, for the very things themselues: and to adore such things as were instituted and ordained only for memorials? Finally, what thing was there, in the whole state of christian religion so sincere, so sound and pure, which was not defiled and spotted with some kind of superstition? Besides this, with how many bonds and snares of dailie new fangled ceremonies were the sillie consciences of men redeemed by Christ to liberty, snared and snarled? Insomuch, that there could be no great difference almost perceiued betweene christianitie and Iewishnesse, saue only the name of Christ: so that the state and condition of the Iewes, might seeme somewhat more tolerable then ours. There was nothing sought for out of the true fountaines, but out of the durtie puddles of the Philistins. The christian people were wholly carried away as it were by the noses, with meere decrées and constitutions of men, euen whither as pleased the bishops to lead them, and not as Christs will did direct them. All the whole world was filled and ouerwhelmed with errors and darknesse. And no great maruell; for why, the simple and vnlearned people being farre from all knowledge of the holy scripture, thought it sufficient enough for them, to know onlie these things which were deliuered them by their pastors and shepheards; and they on the other part taught in a maner nothing else, but such things as came forth of the court of Rome. Whereof the most part tended to the profit of their order, more then to the glorie of Christ.

All good things defiled and spotted with superstition.

The christian faith was esteemed or counted none other thing then, but that euerie man should know that Christ once suffered, that is to say, that all men should know and vnderstand that thing which the diuels themselues also knew. Hypocrisie was counted for wonderfull holinesse. All men were so addict vnto outward shewes, that euen they themselues which professed the most absolute and singular knowledge of the scriptures, scarsly did vnderstand or know any other thing. And this euidently did appeare, not onely in the common sort of doctors and teachers, but also in the very heads and captaines of the church: whose whole religion and holinesse, consisted in a maner in the obseruing of daies, meats and garments, and such like rhetoricall circumstances, as of place, time, person, &c. Hereof sprang so many sorts and fashions of vestures and garments: so many differences of colours and meates: with so many pilgrimages to seuerall places, as though S. James at Compostella could doe that, which Christ could not doe at Canturburie: or else that God were not of like power and strength in euery place, or could not be found but being sought for by running and gadding hither and thither. Thus the holinesse of the whole yere was transported and put off vnto the lent season. No countrie or land was counted holy, but onelie

Palestina, where Christ had walked himselfe with his corporall feet. Such was the blindnesse of that time, men did striue and fight for the crosse at Hierusalem, as it had been for the chiefe and onelie force and strength of our faith. It is a wonder to reade the monuments of the former times, to see and vnderstand what great troubles and calamities this crosse hath caused almost in euery christian commonwealth. For the Romish champions neuer ceased, by writing, admonishing, and counselling, yea and by quarrelling, to moue and stir vp princes minds to warre and battell, euen as though the faith and beleefe of the gospell, were of small force, or little effect without that woodden crosse. This was the cause of the expedition of the most noble prince king Rich. vnto Hierusalem. Who being taken in the same iournie, and deliuered vnto the emperour: could scarslie be ransomed home againe, for 30. M. markes: pag. 225. In the same enterprise or iournie, Fredericus the emperour of Rome, a man of most excellent vertue, was much endamaged in the same iournie, an. 1179. And also Philip the king of France, scarslie returned home againe in safetie, not without great losses: so much did they esteeme the recouery of the holy citie and crosse.

Palestina decorned holy for Christs walking there.

Richard king of England.

Fredericke the emperour of Rome.

Philip king of France.

Upon this alone, all mens eies, mindes and deuotions, were so set and bent; as though either there were no other crosse but that, or that the crosse of Christ were in no other place but only at Hierusalem. Such was the blindnesse and superstition of those daies, which vnderstood or knew nothing but such as were outwardlie séene: whereas the profession of our religion standeth in much other higher matters and greater mysteries. What is the cause why that Urbanus did so vexe and torment himselfe? Because that Antioch with the holy crosse, was lost out of the hands of the christians. For so wee doe find it in the chronicles, at what time as Ierusalem with K. Guido, and the crosse of our Lord was taken, and vnder the power of the Sultan; Urbanus took the matter so grieuouslie, that for very sorrow he died. In whose place succéeded Lambertus which was called Gregorie the 8. by whose motion it was decréed by the cardinals, that (setting apart all riches and voluptuousnesse) they should preach the crosse of Christ, and by their pouertie and humilitie first of all should take the crosse vpon them, and goe before others into the land of Ierusalem. These are the words of the historie; whereby it is euident vnto the vigilant reader, vnto what grossenesse the true knowledge of the spirituall doctrine of the gospell was degenerate and growne vnto in those daies: how great blindnesse and darknesse was in those daies, euen in the first primacie, and supremacie of the bishop of Rome: as though the outward succession of Peter and the Apostles, had been of greater force and effect to ý matter. What doth it force in what place Peter did rule or not rule? It is much more to be regarded that euery man should labour and studie with all their indeuour to follow the life and confession of Peter: And that man séemeth vnto me to be the true successor of Peter, against whom the gates of hell shall not preuaile. For if that Peter in the gospel do beare the type and figure of the christian church (as all men in a maner doe affirme) what more foolish or vaine thing can there bee, then through primat vsurpation, to restraine and to bind that vnto one man, which by the appointment of the Lord, is of it selfe free and open to so many?

Pope Urbane. Lambert pope.

The knowledge of the Gospel grossely expounded by the Romanists.

Thus in these so great and troublous times and horrible darkenesse of ignorance, what time there séemed in a maner to be no one so little a sparke of pure doctrine left or remaining: this foresaid Wickliffe by Gods prouidence sprang and rose vp: through whom the Lord would first waken and raise vp againe the world, which was ouermuch drowned and whelmed in the deepe streames of humane traditions. Thus you haue here the time of Wickliffes originall.

The rising vp of Wickliffe in a troublous time.

Which Wickliffe after he had now by a long time professed diuinitie in the Vniuersitie of Oxford, and perceiuing the true doctrine of Christs gospell to be adulterate and defiled, with so many filthie inuentions of bishops, sects of monks, and darke errours: And that he after long debating and deliberating with himselfe (with many secret sighes, and bewailing in his mind the generall ignorance of the whole world) could no longer suffer or abide the same, but that he at the last determined with himselfe to helpe and to remedie such things as hee saw to bee wide and out of the way. But forsomuch as he saw that this dangerous medling, could not be attempted or stirred without great trouble, neither that these things which had been so long time with vse and custome rooted and grafted in mens minds, could bee suddenlie plucked vp or taken away, hee thought with himselfe that this matter should be done by little and little. Wherefore he taking his originall at small occasions, thereby opened himselfe a way or meane to greater matters. And first he assailed his aduersaries in logicall and metaphysicall questions, disputing with them of the first forme and fashion of things, of the increase of time, and of the intelligible substance of a creature, with other such like sophemes of no great effect: but yet notwithstanding did not a little helpe and furnish him, which minded to dispute of greater matters. So in these matters first began Kegningham (a Carmelite) to dispute and argue against Iohn Wickliffe.

Wickliffe a Diuine in Oxford.

By these originals, the way was made vnto greater points, so that at the length he came to touch the matters of the Sacraments, and other abuses of the church. Touching which things this holy man toke great paines, protesting (as they said) openlie in the schooles, that it was his chiefe and principall purpose and intent, to reuoke and call backe the church from her idolatrie to some better amendment, especially in the matter of the sacrament of the bodie and blod of Christ. But this bile or sore could not bee touched without the great griefe and paine of the whole world. For first of all, the whole glut of monks and begging friers were set on a rage or madnesse, which (euen as hornets with their sharpe stings) did assaile this good man on euery side: fighting (as is said) for their altars, paunches and bellies. After them the priests, and then after them the archbishop took the matter in hand, being then S. Sudbury, who for the same cause depriued him of his benefice, which then he had in Oxford. Notwithstanding he being somewhat frended and supported by the king, as appeareth, continued and bare out the malice of the friers, and of the archbishop all this while of his first beginning, till about the yeere of our Lord, 1377. After which time now to prosecute likewise of his troubles and conflict, first I must fetch about a little compasse, as requisite is, to inferre some mention of John of Gaunt duke of Lancaster the kings sonne, and lord Henrie Percie, which were his speciall maintainers.

Wickliffe depriued of his benefice at Oxford by S. Sudbery. Ex Chron. D. Albani.

Duke of Lancaster, and Lord Henrie Percie, great maintainers of Iohn Wickliffe.

As yeeres and time grew on, king Edward the third, which had raigned now about 51. yeeres, after the decease of prince Edward his sonne, who departed the yeere before: was strucken in great age, and in such feebleneslie withall, that hee was vnwieldie through lacke of strength to gouerne the affaires of the realme. Wherefore a parliament being called the yeere before his death, it was there put vp by the knights and other the burgesses of the parliament (because of the misgouernment of the realme by certaine greedie persons about the king, raking all to themselues, without seeing any iustice done) that 12. sage and discreet lords, and peeres, such as were free from note of all auarice, should bee placed as tutours about the king, to haue the doing and disposing vnder him (sire at one time, and in their absence sire at another) of matters pertinent to the publike regiment. Here by the way I omit to speake of Alice Perris the wicked harlot, which (as the storie giueth) had bewitched the kings heart, and gouerned all, and sate vpon causes her self through the diuelish help of a frier Dominicke: who by the duke of Lancaster was caused to be taken, and was conuicted, and should haue suffered for the same, had not the archb. of Cant. and the friers (more regarding the libertie of their church, then the punishing of vice) reclaimed him for their owne prisoner. This Alice Perris, notwithstanding shee was banished by this parliament from the king, yet afterward shee came againe, and left him not, till at his death shee toke all his rings vpon his fingers and other iewels from him, and so fled away like an harlot. But this of her by the way.

Alice Perris the kings concubine.

The king bewitched by a woman through the helpe of a frier.

The propertie of an whore.

These 12. gouernors by the parliament aforesaid being appointed to haue the tuition of the king, and to attend to the publike affaires of the realme; remained for a certaine space about him, till afterward it so fell out, that they being againe remoued, all the regiment of the realme next vnder the king, was committed to the duke of Lancaster the kings son. For as yet Richard the sonne of prince Edward lately departed, was very young and vnder age.

12. Gouernors assigned about the king.

This duke of Lancaster had in his heart of long time conceiued a certaine displeasure against the popish clergie: whether for corrupt and impure doctrine ioyned with like abominable excesse of life, or for what some other cause, it is not precisely expressed. Onely by storie the cause thereof may be gessed, to rise by Willam Wickam bishop of Winchester. The matter is this.

Ex Chron. Monasterij Albani.

The bishop of Winchester (as the saying went then) was reported to affirme, that the foresaid Iohn of Gaunt duke of Lancaster, was not the sonne of king Edward, nor of the queene. Who being in trauell at Gaunt, had no sonne (as he said) but a daughter: which the same time by lying vpon of the mother in the bed, was there smothered. Whereupon, the queene fearing the kings displeasure, caused a certaine manchild of a woman of Flanders (borne the very same time) to be conueied and brought vnto her in stead of her daughter aforesaid. And so brought vp the child whom shee bare not, who now is called duke of Lancaster. And this (said the bishop) did the queene tell him, lying in extreemes on her deathbed vnder seale of confession: charging him if the said duke should euer aspire to get the crowne, or if the kingdome by any meanes should fall vnto him, he then should manifest the same, and declare it to the world, that the said duke of Lancaster was no part of the kings bloud, but a false heire of the king. This slanderous report of the wicked bishop, as it sauoureth of a contumelious lie, so seemeth it to proceed of a subtill zeale toward the popes religion, meaning falshood. For that the foresaid duke by fauouring of Wickliffe, declared himselfe to be a professed enemie against the popes profession. Which thing was then not vnknowne, neither vnmarked of the prelats and bishops then in England. But the sequell of the storie thus followed:

A practise of the prelats against the Duke of Lancaster.

This slanderous villanie of the bishops report being blazed abroad, and comming to the dukes eare: he therewith being not a little discontended (as no maruell was) sought againe by what meanes he could, to bee reuenged of this forenamed bishop. In conclusion, the duke hauing now all the gouernment of the realme vnder the king his father, in his owne hand; so pursued the bishop of Winchester, that by act of parliament he was condemned and depriued of all his temporall goods, which goods were assigned to prince Rich. of Burdeur, the nert inheritour of the crowne after the king; and furthermore inhibited the said bishop not to approch neere to the court by 20. miles. Further, as touching this bishop, the storie thus procedeth: Not long after in the yeere of our Lord, 1377. a parliament was called by the meanes of the duke of Lancaster, vpon certaine causes and respects: in which parliament great request and sute was made by the clergie for the deliuerance of the bishop of Winchester. At length when a subsidie was asked in the kings name of the clergie, and request also made in the kings behalfe for spèedie expedition to bee made for the dissoluing of the parliament, the archb. therefore accordingly conuented the bishops for the tractation thereof. To whom the B. with great lamentation complained for lacke of their fellow and brother B. of Wint. Whose iniurie, said they, did derogate to the liberties of the whole church: And therefore denied to ioyne themselues in tractation of any such matters, before all the members together were vnited with the head: And (seeing the matter touched them all together in common, as well him as them) would not otherwise doe. And seemed moreouer to be moued against the archb. for that hee was not more stout in the cause, but suffered him so to be cited of ỹ duke.

M. Wickham B. of Wint. depriued.

Bishops hold together.

Liberties of the Church a great matter.

B. of Wint. sent for to the conuocation.

The archb. although hauing sufficient cause to excuse himselfe, wherefore not to send for him (as also he did) because of the perils which might ensue thereof: yet being inforced and perswaded thereunto, by the importunitie of the bishops, directed downe his letters to the foresaid bishop of Wint. willing him to resort vnto the conuocation of the clergie. Who being glad to obay the same, was receiued with great ioy of the other bishops. And at length by the meanes of Alice Perris, the kings paramour aboue mentioned, (giuing to her a good quantitie of money) the said Winchester was restored to his owne temporalities againe.

As the bishops had thus sent for Winchester, the duke in the meane time had sent for John Wickliffe: who, as is said, was then the diuinitie reader in Oxford, and had commenced in sundrie acts and disputations, contrary to the forme and teaching of the popes Church in many things: who also for the same had been depriued of his benefice, as hath been afore touched. The opinions which he began in Oxford, first in his lectures, and sermons to intreat of, and wherefore hee was depriued, were these: That the pope had no more power to excommunicate any man, then hath another. That if it bee giuen by any person to the pope to excommunicate, yet to absolue the same is as much in the power of another priest, as in his. Hee affirmed moreouer, that neither the king nor any temporall lord could giue any perpetuitie to the church, or to any ecclesiasticall person: for that when such ecclesiasticall persons doe sinne, habitualiter, continuing in the same still, the temporall powers ought and may meritoriously, take away from them, that before hath been bestowed vpon them. And that hee prooued, to haue been practised before here in England by William Rufus. Which thing (said hee) if he did lawfully, why may not the same also be practised now: if he did it vnlawfully, then doth the church erre (saith hee) and doth vnlawfully in praying for him. But of his assertions more shall follow (Christ willing) hereafter. The storie which ascribeth to him these assertions being taken out (as I take it) of the monasterie of S. Albons, addeth withall: that in his teaching and preaching hee was very eloquent, but a dissembler (saith he) and an hypocrite. Why he surmiseth him to bee an hypocrite, the cause was this:

John Wickliffe sent for by the Duke of Lancaster.

Example of K. Rufus.

Ex histo. Monasterij D. Albani.

First, because he resorted much to the orders of the begging friers, frequenting and extolling the perfection of their pouertie.

Secondly, because he and his fellowes vsually accustomed in their preaching to goe barefoot, and in simple russet gownes.

By this I suppose, may sufficiently appeare to the indifferent, the nature and condition of Wickliffe, how farre it was from the ambition and pride, which in the slanderous penne of Polydore Virgil, reporting in his 19. book of him, that because he was not preferred to higher honors and dignities of the church (conceiuing therfore indignation against the clergy) became their mortall enemie. How true this was, he only knoweth best, that rightly shall iudge both the one and the other.

The slanderous penne of Polydore.

In the meane time, by other circumstances and parts of his life, we may also partly coniecture what is to be thought of the man. But howsoeuer it was in him either true or false: yet it had been Polydors part, either not so intemperatelie to haue abused his pen, or at least to haue shewed some greater authoritie and ground of that his report. For to follow nothing else but flying fame, so rathlie to defame a man whose life hee knoweth not, is not the part of a faithfull storie writer.

Wickliffe falsly charged with ambition by Polydore.

But to returne from whence we digressed. Beside these his opinions opinions and assertions aboue recited, with other moe, which are hereafter to bee brought in order; hee began also then something nerelie to touch the matter of the sacrament, proouing that in the said sacrament, the accidences of bread remained not without the subiect, or substance: both by the holie scriptures, and also by the authoritie of the doctors, but specially by such as were most ancient. As for the latter writers, that is to say such as haue written vpon that argument vnder the thouland yeeres since Christs time, hee vtterly refused: saying, that after these yeeres Sathan was loosed and set at libertie. And that since that time the life of man hath bin most subiect and in danger of errors: the simple and plaine truth to appeare and consist in the scriptures, whereunto all humane traditions whatsoeuer they bee, must be referred, and specialie such as are set forth and published now of late yeeres. This was the cause why he refused the latter writers of decretals, leaning onelie to the scriptures and ancient doctors: most stoutly affirming out of them that in the sacrament of the bodie which is celebrate, with bread the accidence not to bee present without the substance. That is to say, that the bodie of Christ is not present without the bread, as the common sort of priests in those daies did dreame. As for his arguments what they were, wee will shortly at more opportunitie by Gods grace, declare them in another place. But herein the truth (as the Poet speaketh very truely) had gotten John Wickliffe great displeasure and hatred at many mens hands: and specially of the monks and richest sort of priests.

Wickliffe beginneth to touch the matter of the sacrament.

The latter writers of the church to be misdoubted.

The accidences not to be in the sacrament without the substance.

Albeit through the fauor and supportation of the duke of Lancaster, and lord Henrie Percie, hee persisted hitherto in some meane quiet against their wouish violence and crueltie: Till at last about the yeere of our Lord 1376. the bishops still urging and inciting their archbishop Simon Sudburie, who before had depriued him, and afterward prohibited him also not to stir any more in those sorts of matters: had obtained by processe and order of citation to haue him brought before them. Whereunto both place and time for him to appeare after their vsuall forme was to him assigned.

The duke hauing intelligence that Wickliffe his client should come before the bishops, fearing that he being but one, was too weake against such a multitude: calleth to him out of the orders of friers, foure bachelers of diuinitie, out of euery order one, to ioyne them with Wickliffe also for more suretie. When the day was come assigned to the said Wickliffe to appeare, which day was thursday, the nineteenth of Februarie: John Wickliffe accompanied with the foure friers aforesaid, and with them also the duke of Lancaster, and lord Henrie Percie, lord Marshall of England, the said lord Percie also going before them to make roome and way wherewith Wickliffe should come.

Thus Wickliffe (through the prouidence of God) being sufficientlie garded, was comming to the place where the bishops sate: whom by the way they animated and exhorted not to feare nor shrinke a whit at the companie of the bishops there present, who were all vnlearned (said they) in respect of him. For so proceed the words of my foresaid author, who I follow in this narration: neither that he should dread the concourse of the people, whom they would themselues assist and defend, in such sort as he should take no harme. With these words, and with the assistance of the Nobles, Wickliffe in heart incouraged, approcheth to the church of S. Paul in London. Where a maine preasse of people was gathered to heare what should be said and done. Such was there the frequencie and throng of the multitude, that the lords (for all the puissance of the high Marshal) vneth with great difficultie could get way through. Insomuch, that the bishop of London (whose name was William Courtney) seeing the stir that the lord Marshall kept in the church among the people, speaking to the lord Percie, said: that if hee had knowne before what maistries hee would haue kept in the church, hee would haue stopped him out from coming there. At which words of the bishop, the duke disdaining not a little, answered to the bishop againe, and said: that hee would keepe such maistrie there, though he said nay.

Striuing for the Lords to passe by the people.

Wil. Courtney bishop of London.

The words of the bishop of London to the lord Percie.

At last, after much wrastling they pierced through and came to our Ladies chapell. Where the dukes and Barons were sitting together with the archbishops and other bishops. Before whom the forsaid John Wickliffe according to the manner, stood before them, to know what should bee laid vnto him. To whom first spake the lord Percie, bidding him to sit downe, saying: that he had many things to answer to, and therefore had neede of some softer seat. But the bishop of London cast eftsoones into a fumish chafe with those words, said: he should not sit there. Neither was it, said he, according to law or reason, that he which was cited there to appeare to answere before his ordinarie, should sit downe during the time of his answer, but should stand. Upon these words a fire began to heat and kindle betweene them. Insomuch that they began to rate and to reuile one the other, that the whole multitude therewith disquieted, began to be set on a hurrey.

J. Wickliffe bid to sit downe before the bishops.

Wickliffe denied by the bishop of London to sit downe.

Strife betweene the lords Marshall and bishop of London.

The people set in a sturre.

Then the duke taking the lord Percies part with hastie words began also to take vp the bishop. To whom the bishop againe nothing inferior in reprochfull checkes and rebukes did render and requite not only to him as good as hee brought: but also did so farre excell him, in this railing art of scolding, that to vse the words of mine author, Erubuit Dux quod non potuit præualere litigio. i. that the duke blushed and was ashamed, because he could not ouerpasse the bishop in brawling and railing, and therefore fell to plaine threatning, menacing the bishop, that he would bring downe the pride not onely of him, but also of all the prelacie of England. And speaking moreouer vnto him: Thou (said hee) bearest thy selfe so brag vpon thy parents, which shall not be able to helpe thee; They shall haue enough to doe to help themselues. For his parents were the earle and countesse of Deuonshire. To whom the bishop againe answered, that to bee bold to tell truth, his confidence was not in his parents, nor in any man else, but only in God in whom he trusted. Then the duke softly whispering in the eare of him next by him, said that hee would rather plucke out the bishop by the haire of his head out of the church, then hee would take this at his hand. This was not spoken so secretlie, but that the Londoners ouerheard him. Whereupon being set in a rage, they cried out, saying: that they would not suffer their bishop so contemptuouslie to be abused. But rather they would lose their liues, then that he should so be drawne out by the haire. Thus that councell being broken with scolding and brawling for that day, was dissolued before nine of the clocke. And the duke with the lord Percie went to the parliament: where the same day, before dinner a bil was put vp in the name of the king by the lord Thomas Woltock, and lord Henrie Percie, that the citie of London should no more be gouerned by a maior, but by a captaine, as in times before. And that the marshall of England should haue all the ado in taking the arrests within the said citie, as in other cities besides, with other petitions moe, tending to the like derogation of the liberties of London. Which bill being read, standeth vp John Philpot burgesse then for the citie, saying to them which read the bill, that that was neuer seene so before: and adding moreouer, that the maior would neuer suffer any such things, or other arrest to be brought into the citie, with moe such words of like stoutnesse.

The bishop ouergoeth the duke in scolding.

This bishop of London was W. Courtney sonne to the earle of Deuonshire.

The duke threatneth to draw out their bishop by the haire out of the Church.

Londoners take part with their bishop.

Petitions put vp in the Parliament against the citie of London.

The next day following, the Londoners assembled themselues in a councell, to consider among them vpon the bill for changing the maior, and about the office of the marshall, also concerning the iniuries done the day before to their bishop.

Hastie counsell of the Londoners.

In which meane time they being busie in long consultation of this matter, suddenly and vnawares entred in the place two certaine lords, whether to come to spie, or for what other cause the author leaueth it vncertaine, the one called lord Fitzwalter, the other lord Guy Brian. At the first comming in of them, the vulgar sort was readie forthwith to flee vpon them as spies, had not they made their protestation with an oth, declaring that their comming in was for no harme toward them. And so were compelled by the citizens to sweare to the citie their truth and fidelitie, contrary to the which oth if they should rebell, they would bee contented to forfeit whatsoeuer goods and possessions they had within the citie.

The Oration of Lord Fitzwalter to the Londoners.

This done, then began the lord Fitzwalter in this wise to perswade and exhort the citizens: first declaring how hee was bound and obliged to them and to their citie, not for the oth onlie now newly receiued, but of old and ancient good will from his great grandfathers time. Besides other diuers duties, for the which hee was chiefly bound to bee one of their principall tutors: forsomuch as whatsoeuer tended to their damage and detriment, redounded also no lesse vnto his owne, for which cause hee could not otherwise chuse, but that as hee did vnderstand to be attempted against the publike profit and liberties of the citie, hee must needs communicate the same to them. Who vnlesse they with speedie circumspection doe occure and preuent perils that may and are like to ensue, it would turne in the end to their no small incommoditie. And as there were many other things, which required their vigilant care and diligence, so one thing there was, which hee could in no wise but admonish them of: which was this, necessarie to be considered of them all, how the lord Marshall Henrie Percie in his place within himselfe had one inward and custodie, whether with the knowledge, or without the knowledge of them, hee could not tell: this hee could tell, that the said L. Marshall was not allowed any such ward or prison in his house, within the libertie of the citie. Which thing if it be not seene to in time, the example thereof being suffered, would in fine breed to such a preiudice vnto their customs and liberties, as they should not hereafter, when they would, reforme the iniurie thereof.

The Citizens of London breake vp the lord Percie his house at Sauoy.

These words of the lord Fitzwalter were not so soone spoken, but they were as soone taken of the rash citizens, who in all hastie furie running to their armour and weapons, went incontinently to the house of the lord Percie, where breaking vp the gates, by violence they tooke out the prisoner, and burned the stocks wherein he sate, in the midst of London. Then was the lord Percie sought for; whom (saith the storie) they would doubtlesse haue slaine if they might haue found him. With their billes and iauelins, al corners and priuie chambers were searched, beds and hangings tome asunder. But the lord Percie (as God would) was then with the duke, whom one John Yper the same day with great instance had desired to dinner.

Gods prouision in sauing his seruants.

The

The house of the Duke of Lancaster searched of the Londoners.

The Londoners not finding him at home, and supposing that he was with the duke at Sauoy, in all hastie heate turned their power thither, running as fast as they could to the Dukes house. Where also in like manner they were disappointed of their cruell purpose. In the meane while as this was doing, commeth one of the dukes men running post hast to the duke and to the lord Percie, declaring what was done.

The duke and L. Percie flie to the Prince.

The duke being then at his oysters, without any further tarrying, and also breaking both his shinnes at the forme for hast, tooke boate with the lord Percie, and by water went to Kingstone, where then the princesse with Richard the young prince did lie. Who there declared vnto the princesse all the whole matter, concerning the outrage of the Londoners as it was. To whom she promised againe, such an order to be taken in the matter, as should bee to his contentation. At what time the commons of London, thus as is said, were about the dukes house at Sauoy, meeteth with them a certaine priest, who marueling at the suddaine rage and concourse, asked what they sought. To whom answer was giuen againe of some, that they sought for the duke and lord marshall, to haue of them the lord Peter de la Mare, whom they wrongfully had detained in prison. To this the priest answered againe more boldlie then opportunelie: That Peter (said he) is a false traitour to the king, and worthie long since to be hanged. At the hearing of these words, the furious people with a terrible shoute cried out vpon him, that hee was a traitor and one that tooke the dukes part, and so falling vpon him with their weapons striued who might first strike him. Who after they had wounded him very sore, so being wounded they had him into prison, where within few daies vpon the sorenes of his wounds he died.

A priest in the Duke of Lancasters house cruelly killed.

Neither would the rage of the people thus haue ceased, had not the bishop of London leauing his dinner come to them at Sauoy, and putting them in remembrance of the blessed time (as they tearme it) of Lent, had perswaded them to cease and to be quiet.

The villany of the Londoners against the duke.

The Londoners seeing that they could get no vantage against the duke, who was without their reach: to bewreake their anger they tooke his armes, which in most despitefull wise they hanged vp, in the open places of the citie in signe of reproch, as for a traitor. Insomuch that when one of his gentlemen came through the citie with a plate containing the dukes armes, hanging by a lace about his necke, the citizens not abiding the sight thereof, cast him from his horse, and pluckt his scutchin from him, and were about to worke the extremitie against him, had not the maior rescued him out of their hands, and sent him home safe vnto the duke his master. In such hatred was then the duke among the vulgar people of London.

The message of the princesse to the Londoners.

After this, the princesse vnderstanding the harts and broile of the Londoners set against the foresaid duke, sent vnto London three knights, sir Alured Lewer, sir Simon Burle, and sir Lewes Clifford, to entreat the citizens to bee reconciled with the duke. The Londoners answered: that they for the honor of the princesse, would obay and doe with all reuerence, what shee would require. But this they required and enioyned the messengers to say to the duke, by word of mouth, that hee should suffer the bishop of Winchester afore mentioned and also the lord Peter de la Mare, to come to their answer, and to be iudged by their peeres. Wherby either they might be quit if they were guiltlesse: or otherwise if they be found culpable, they might receiue according to their desertes after the lawes of the realme. What griefe and displeasure the duke conceiued and retained in his mind hereof: Againe, what meanes and sute the Londoners for their part made to the old king for their liberties: What rimes and songs in London were made against the duke: How the bishops at the dukes request were moued to excommunicat those malicious slanderers: And moreouer, how the duke at last was reuenged of those contumelies and iniuries: How hee caused them to bee brought before the king: How sharplie they were rebuked for their misdemeanor, by the worthie oration of the lord Chamberlain, Robert Attone, in the presence of the king, archbishops, bishops, with diuers other states, the kings children, and other Nobilities of the Realme: in conclusion, how the Londoners were compelled to this at length, by the common assent & publik charges of ỹ city, to make a great taper of ware, which with the Dukes armes set vpon it, should be brought with solemne procession to the church of S. Paul, there to burne continually before the Image of our ladie: And at last, how both the said duke and the Londoners were reconciled together, in the beginning of the new king, with the kisse of peace, and the same reconcilement publikely denounced in the church of Westminster, and what toy was in the whole citie thereof: These because they are impertinent and make too long a digression from the matter of Wickliffe, I cut off with breuity, referring the Reader to other, histories namely of Saint Albones, where they are to be found at large.

The duke reuenged of the Londoners.

The Londoners caused to beare a Taper of wax in procession, in honor of the duke.

As these aforesaid for breuitie sake I passe ouer, so will I not be long, & yet cannot omit that, which happened the same time and yeere to the bishop of Norwich, to the intent that this posteritie now may see, to what pride the clergie then of the Popes church was growne to. The same time as this broile was at London, the bishop of Norwich a little after the time of Easter comming to the towne of Lennam, belonging to his lordship: being not contented with the old accustomed honour due vnto him, and vsed of his predecessours before in the same towne, required moreouer with a new and vnused kind of magnificence to be exalted: Insomuch, that when he saw the chiefe Magistrate or Maior of that towne to go in the stretes with his officer going before him, holding a certaine wand in his hand tipped at both ends with blacke horne, as the manet was: hee reputing himselfe to be lord of that towne (as hee was) and thinking to be higher then the highest, commanded the honour of that staffe due to the maior, to bee yelded and borne before his lordly personage. The maior or bailiffe, with other the townesmen, courteoulie answered to him againe, that they were right willing and contented with all their hearts to exhibite that reuerence vnto him, and would so doe, if he first of the king and counsell could obtaine that custome, and if the same might bee induced after any peaceable way with the good wils of the commons and bodie of the towne: Otherwise, said they, as the matter was dangerous, so they durst not take in hand any such new alteration of ancient customes and liberties, lest the people (which is alwaies inclinable and prone to euill) do fall vpon them with stones, and driue them out of the towne. Wherefore kneeling on their knees before him, there humblie they besought him that hee would require no such thing of them: that he would saue his owne honor and their liues, who otherwise if he intended that way, were in great danger. But the bishop youthfull and hautie, taking occasion by their humblenesse, to swell the more in himselfe, answered that hee would not be taught by their counsell, but that hee would haue it done, though all the commons (whom hee named Ribals) said nay. Also rebuked the maior and his brethren for mecocks and dastards, for so fearing the vulgar sort of people.

Example of pride in the Popes clergie.

The courtesie of the townesmen toward the Bishop.

The stout answere of the Bishop to the townesship.

The citizens perceiuing the wilfull stoutnesse of the Bishop, meekely answering againe, said; they minded not to resist him, but to let him doe therein what he thought good: onelie desired him that hee would licence them to depart, and hold them excused for not waiting vpon him, and conducting him out of the towne with that reuerence which he required. For if they should be seene in his companie, all the suspition thereof would be vpon them, and so should they be all in danger, so much as their liues were worth. The bishop not regarding their aduice and counsell, commanded one of his men to take the rod borne before the maior, and to cary the same before him. Which being done, and perceiued of the commons; the bishop after that maner went not farre, but the rude people running to shut the gates, came out with their bowes, some with clubs and staues, some with other instruments, some with stones, and let driue at the bishop and his men, as fast as they might: in such sort, that both the bishop and his horse vnder him with most part of his men were hurt and wounded. And thus the glorious pride of this iollie prelate, ruffling in his new scepter, was receiued and welcomed there. That is, was so pelted with battes and stones, so wounded with arrowes and other instruments fit for such a skirmish, that the most part of his men, with his mace bearer, and all running away from him, the poore wounded bishop was there left alone, not able to keepe his old power, which went about to vsurpe a new power more then to him belonged. Thus as it is commonly true in all, so is it well exemplified here, which is commonlie said, and as it is commonly seene, that pride will haue a fall, and power vsurped will neuer stand. In like manner if the citizens of Rome, following the example of these Lennam men, as they haue the like cause, and greater to doe by the vsurped power of their bishop, would after the same sauce handle the pope, and vnscepter him of his mace and regalitie, which nothing pertaineth to him; they in so doing both should recouer their owne liberties, with more honour at home, and also winne much more commendation abroad. Ex chron. mon. D. Albani.

The towne of Lennam riseth against the bishop.

Pride will haue a fall.

Power vsurped will neuer stand.

The vsurped power of the pope would haue a bridle.

A story of the Bishop of Norwich.

This tragedy with all the parts thereof, being thus ended at Lennam, which was a little after Easter (as is said) about the month of April, An. 1377. the same yeere vpon the 12. day of the month of June next after, died the worthie and victorious prince king Edward the third, after hee had raigned 51. yeeres. A prince no more aged in yeeres then renowned for many singular and heroicall vertues, but principally noted and lauded for his singular meekenesse and clemencie toward his subiects and inferiors, ruling them by gentlenesse and mercie, without all rigour or austere seueritie. Among other noble and royall ornaments of his nature, worthilie and copiouslie set forth of many, thus hee is described of some, which may briefly suffice for the comprehension of all the rest: Orphanis erat quasi pater, afflictis compatiens, miseris condolens, oppressos releuans, & cunctis indigentibus impendens auxilia opportuna. That is: To the Orphans hee was as a father, compatient to the afflicted, mourning with the miserable, relieuing the oppressed, and to all them that wanted an helper in time of neede, &c. But chiefly aboue all other things, in this prince to bee commemorate in my mind, is this: that hee aboue all other kings of this realme, vnto the time time of king Henrie the eight was the greatest brideler of the popes vsurped power and outragious oppressions: during all the time of which king, neither the pope could greatly preuaile in this realme, and also Iohn Wickliffe was maintained with fauour and aid sufficient.

But before we close vp the storie of this king; there commeth to hand that which I thought not good to omit, a noble purpose of the king in requiring a view to be taken in all his dominions of all benefices and dignities ecclesiasticall remaining in the hands of Italians and Aliens, with the true valuation of the same directed downe by commissions, in the time of king Richard the second, whereof the like also is to be found: the tenour of which commission of king Edward, I thought here vnder to set downe for worthie memorie.

EDward by the grace of God king, &c. To the reuerend father in Christ N. By the same grace bishop of L. greeting. Being willing vpon certaine causes to bee certified what and how many benefices aswell archdeaconries and other dignities, as vicarages, parsonages, prebends and chapels, within your dioceſſe, be at this present in the hands of Italians and other strangers, what they be, of what value, and how euery of the said benefices be called by name. And how much euery of the same is worth by the yeere, not as by way of taxe or extent, but according to the true value of the same: likewise of the names of all and singuler such strangers being now incumbents or occupying the same and euery of them: moreouer the names of al them, whether Englishmen or strangers, of what state or condition soeuer they be, which haue the occupation or disposition of any such benefices with the fruits and profits of the same, in the behalfe or by the authority of any the aforesaid strangers by way of farme, or title or procuration or by any other waies or meanes whatsoeuer, and how long they haue occupied or disposed the same: and withall if any the said strangers be now residents vpon any benefices: command you, as wee heretofore commanded you, that you send vs a true cerificat of all and singuler the premisses, into our high court of Chancerie vnder your seale distinctlie and openly, on this side the feast of the Ascension of our Lord next comming, without further delay: returning vnto vs this our writ withall. Witnesse our selfe at Westminster 16. day of Aprill in the 48. yeere of our raigne of England, and ouer France the 35. yeere.

{Anno 48 Edwardi tertij.}

By vertue hereof certificat was sent vp to the king into his Chancery, out of euery dioceſſe of England, of all such spirituall liuings as were then in the occupation either of priors aliens, or of other strangers, whereof the number was so great, as being all set downe, would fill almost halfe a quier of paper. Wherby may appeare that it was high time for the king to seeke remedie herein, either by treatie with the pope or otherwise: considering so great a portion of the reuenues of his realme was by this meanes conueied away and employed either to the releeke of his enemies, or maintenance of the Forrainers: amongst which number, the cardinals of the court of Rome lacked not their share. Like matter is alſo found in the time of king Richard the ſecond, vpon what occaſion it is vncertaine: but as it ſeemeth by record of that time: A new pope being come in place, hee would take no knowledge of any matter done by his predeceſſors that might any way abridge his commoditie. And therfore this king was forced to begin anew, as may appeare by this following.

Ex Bundello Breuium Regis de An.2.Kich.2. parte 1.

King Richard the ſecond.

K.Richard 2. AFter king Edward the third, ſucceeded his ſonnes ſonne, Richard the ſecond, being yet but young, of the age of eleuen yéeres: who in the ſame yeer of his fathers deceaſe with great pompe and ſolemnitie was crowned at Weſtminſter, an.1377. who following his fathers ſteppes, was no great diſſauourer of the way and doctrine of Wickliffe: albeit at the firſt beginning, partly through the iniquitie of time, partly through the popes letters, he could not doe that hee would. Notwithſtanding ſomething he did in that behalfe, more perhaps then in the end he had thanke for of the papiſts, as more (by the grace of Chriſt) ſhall appeare. But as times do change, ſo changeth commonly the cauſe and ſtate of man. The biſhop now ſéeing the aged king to be taken away, during the time of whoſe old age all the gouernement of the realme depended vpon the duke of Lancaſter: And now the ſaid biſhops againe ſéeing the ſaid duke, with the lord Percie, the lord marſhall, to giue ouer their offices, and to remaine in their priuat houſes without intermedling, thought now the time to ſerue them, to haue ſome vantage againſt John Wickliffe, who hitherto vnder the protection of the foreſaid duke, and lord Marſhall had ſome reſt and quiet. Concerning the ſtorie of which Wickliffe, I truſt (gentle Reader) it is not out of thy memorie what went before pa. 393. how he being brought before the biſhops, by the meanes of the duke and lord Henry Percie, the councell was interrupted, and brake before nine of the clocke. By reaſon whereof, Wickliffe at that time eſcaped without any further trouble. Who notwithſtanding being by the biſhops forbid to deale in that doctrine any more, continued yet with his fellowes going barefoot, and in long friſe gownes, preaching diligently vnto the people. Out of whoſe ſermons theſe articles moſt chiefly at that time were collected.

The biſhops take vantage of time.

That the holie Euchariſt after the conſecration, is not the very bodie of Chriſt, but figuratiuely.

The firſt article collected out of Wickliffes ſermons.

That the church of Rome, is not the head of all churches more then any other church is: Nor that Peter hath any more power giuen of Chriſt, then any other Apoſtle hath.

Item, that the pope of Rome hath no more in the keies of the church, then hath any other within the order of prieſthod.

Item, if God be: the Lords temporall may lawfullie and meritoriouſlie take away their temporalities from the churchmen offending, habitualiter.

Item, if any temporall lord doe know the church ſo offending, he is bound vnder paine of damnation, to take the temporalities from the ſame.

Item, that the goſpell is a rule ſufficient of it ſelfe to rule the life of euery chriſtian man here, without any other rule.

Item, that all other rules, vnder whoſe obſeruances diuers religious perſons be gouerned, doe adde no more perfection to the goſpell, then doth the white colour to the wall.

Item, that neither the pope nor any other prelate of the church, ought to haue priſons wherein to punish tranſgreſſors.

Beſide theſe articles, diuers other concluſions afterward were gathered out of his writings and preachings by the biſhops of England, which they ſent diligentlie to pope Gregorie at Rome: Where the ſaid articles being read and peruſed, were condemned for hereticall and erroneous by three and twentie cardinals.

The articles of John Wickliffe ſent to the pope. Pope Gregorie the xi.

In the meane time the archbiſhop of Canturburie, ſending forth his citations, as is aforeſaid, called before him the ſaid John Wickliffe in the preſence of the duke of Lancaſter, and lord Percie, who vpon the declaration of the popes letters made, bound him to ſilence, forbidding him not to entreat any more of thoſe matters. But then through the diſturbance of the biſhop of London and the duke, and lord Percie, that matter was ſone diſpatched, as hath been aboue recorded, pag. 393. And all this was done, in the daies and laſt yéere of K. Edward the third, and pope Gregorie the eleuenth.

Wickliffe called before the archbiſhop of Canturburie.

The next yeere following, which was the yeere of our Lord 1378. being the firſt yéere of king Richard the ſecond; the ſaid pope Gregorie taking his time, after the death of king Edward, ſendeth his bull by the hands and meanes (peraduenture) of one maiſter Edmund Stafford, directed vnto the Vniuerſitie of Orford, rebuking them ſharplie, imperiouſlie and like a pope, for ſuffering ſo long the doctrine of John Wickliffe to take root, and not plucking it vp with the crooked ſickle of their catholike doctrine. Which Bull when it came to be exhibited vnto their hands, by the popes meſſenger aforeſaid: the proctors and maiſters of the Vniuerſitie ioyning together in conſultation ſtood long in doubt, deliberating with themſelues, whether to receiue the popes Bull with honour, or to refuſe and reiect it with ſhame.

{Anno 1378}

Edmund Stafford bringer of the popes Bull.

The maiſters of Orford doubt whether to receiue or reiect the popes Bull.

I cannot here but laugh in my mind to behold the authors of this ſtorie whom I follow: what exclamations, what wondrings and maruels, they make at theſe Oxford men, for ſo doubting at a matter ſo plaine, ſo manifeſt of it ſelfe, (as they ſay) whether the popes Bull ſent to them from Rome was to be receiued or contrarie. Which thing to our monkiſh writers ſeemed then ſuch a prodigious wonder, that they with bluſhing cheekes are faine to cut off the matter in the middeſt with ſilence.

The copie of this wild bull, ſent to them from the pope, was this.

Gregorie the biſhop, the ſeruant of Gods ſeruants, to his wel- beloued ſonnes, the Chancellour and Vniuerſitie of Oxford, in the dioceſſe of Lincolne, greeting, and apoſtolicall benediction.

The popes mad Bull ſent to Oxford.

WE are compelled not only to maruell, but alſo to lament that you, conſidering the apoſtolicall ſeate hath giuen vnto vnto your Vniuersity of Oxford so great fauour and priuiledge, and also for that you flow as in a large sea in the knowledge of the holy Scriptures, and ought to be champions & defenders of the ancient and catholike faith (without the which there is no saluation,) by your great negligence and sloth, will suffer wild cockle, not only to grow vp among the pure wheate of the florishing field of your Vniuersity, but also to waxe more strong and choke the corne. Neither haue ye any care (as wee are enformed) to extirpe and plucke the same vp by the rootes, to the great blemishing of your renoumed name, the perill of your soules, the contempt of the church of Rome, and to the great decay of the ancient faith. And further (which grieueth vs) the encrease of that filthie weed was more sharpely rebuked and iudged of in Rome then in England where it sprang. Wherfore let there be meanes sought by the helpe of the faithfull, to roote out the same. Grieuously it is come to our eares, that one Iohn Wickliffe, parson of Lutterworth in Lincolne dioces, a professour of diuinitie (would God he were not rather a master of errours) is runne into a kind of detestable wickednesse, not onely and openly publishing, but also vomiting out of the filthy dungeon of his breast, diuers professions, false and erroneous conclusions, and most wicked and damnable heresies. Whereby he might defile the faithfull sort, and bring them from the right path headlong into the way of perdition, ouerthrow the state of the church, and vtterly subuert the secular policie. Of which his mischieuous heresies, some seeme to agree (onely certaine names and tearmes changed) with the peruerse opinions, and vnlearned doctrine of Marsilius of Padua, and Iohn of Gandune, of vnworthie memorie, whose bookes were vtterly abolished in the realme of England, by our predecessor of happie memorie Iohn 22. Which kingdome doth not only flourish in power, and abundance of faculties, but is much more glorious and shining in pureness of faith: Accustomed alwaies to bring forth men excellently learned in the true knowledge of the holy Scriptures, ripe in grauitie of maners, men notable in deuotion, and defenders of the catholike faith. Wherefore wee will and command you by our writing Apostolicall, in the name of your obedience, and vpon paine of priuation of our fauour, indulgences and priuiledges granted vnto your and your Vniuersitie, from the said see Apostolicall: that hereafter ye suffer not those pestilent heresies, that those subtill and false conclusions and propositions, misconstruing the right sense of faith and good workes (howsoeuer they tearme it, or what curious implication of words soeuer they vse) any longer to be disputed of, or brought in question: Lest if it be not withstood at the first, and plucked vp by the roots, it might perhaps be too late hereafter to prepare medicines when a greater number is infected with the contagion. And further, that yee apprehend immediately or cause to be apprehended the said Iohn Wickliffe, and deliuer him to be detained in the safe custodie of our welbeloued brethren, the archbishop of Canturburie, and the bishop of London, or either of them. And if you shall find any gainesayers, corrupted with the said doctrine (which God forbid) in your said Vniuersitie within your iurisdiction, that shall obstinately stand in the said errours: that then in like maner yee apprehend them, and commit them to safe custodie, and otherwise to doe in this case as it shall appertaine vnto you: So as by your carefull proceedings herein, your negligence past concerning the premisses, may now fully be supplied and recompensed with present diligence. Whereby you shall not onely purchase vnto you the fauour and beneuolence of the seat Apostolicall, but also great reward and merit of almightie God.

The pope complaining of I. Wickliffe.

Marsilius Patauinus, Ioan. de Gandumo, noted.

Here the wild bull striketh.

Yeuen at Rome at S. Maries the greater, xj. Kalend. of Iune, and in the seuenth yeare of our consecration.

Beside this bull sent to the Vniuersitie of Oxford, the said pope Gregorie directed moreouer his letters the same time to the archbishop of Canturbury Simon Sudburie, to the bishop of London named William Courtney, with the conclusions of Iohn Wickliffe therein inclosed, commanding them, by vertue of those his letters Apostolicall, and straitly enioyning them to cause the said Iohn Wickliffe to be apprehended, and cast into prison: and that the king and the nobles of England should be admonished by them, not to giue any credit to the said Iohn Wickliffe, or to his doctrine in any wise.

Simon Sudbury archbishop of Cant. Wil. Courtney bishop of London.

Beside this bill or bull of the pope, sent vnto the archbishop of Canturbury and to the bishop of London, bearing the date, 11. Calend. Iun. and the 7. yeare of the reigne of the pope: I find moreouer in the said storie, two other letters of the pope concerning the same matter, but differing in forme, sent vnto the same bishops, and all bearing the same date both of the day, yeare, and moneth of the reigne of the said pope Gregory. Whereby it is to be supposed, that the pope either was very exquisite and solicitous about the matter, to haue Wickliffe to be apprehended, which wrote three diuers letters to one person, and all in one day, about one businesse: or else that hee did suspect the bearers thereof; the scruple whereof I leaue to the iudgement of the reader.

Three sundry letters of the pope to one person, about one matter.

Furthermore, beside these letters written to the Vniuersity, and to the bishops, he directeth also another epistle bearing the same date vnto king Edward; as one of my stories saith, but as another saith, to K. Richard, which soundeth more neere to the truth, forasmuch as in the 7. yeare of pope Gregorie the 11. which was the yeare of our Lord, 1378. king Edward was not aliue. The copie of his letters to the king here followeth.

The copie of the Epistle sent by the bishop of Rome to Richard king of England, to persecute Iohn Wickliffe.

The popes letter to king Richard against I. Wickliffe.

VNto his well beloued son in Christ, Richard the most noble king of England, health, &c.

The kingdome of England which the most highest hath put vnder your power and gouernance, being so famous and renoumed in valiancie and strength, so abundant and flowing in all kind of wealth and riches: but much more glorious, resplendent and shining through the brightnesse and cleerenesse of all godlinesse and faith, hath accustomed alwaies to bring forth men endued with the true knowledge and vnderstanding of the holy Scriptures, graue in yeares, feruent in deuotion, and defenders of the catholike faith: The which haue not onely directed and instructed their owne people through their wholesome doctrine and precepts into the true path of Gods commandements; but also as we haue heard by the report and information of many credible persons (to our great greefe and heart sorrow) that Iohn Wickliffe parson of Lutterworth, in the diocesse of Lincolne, professor of Diuinitie (I would to God hee were no author of heresie) to be fallen into such a detestable & abominable madnesse, that he hath propounded and set forth diuers and sundrie conclusions full of errours, and containing most manifest heresie, the which doe tend vtterly to subuert and ouerthrow the state of the whole church. Of the which, some of them (albeit vnder coloured phrase and speech) seeme to smell and sauor of peruerse opinions, and the foolish doctrine of condemned memorie of Marsilius of Padua, & Iohn of Ganduno, whose bookes were by pope Iohn the 22. our predecessor, a man of a most happie memorie, reproued and condemned, &c.

Hitherto gentle Reader, thou hast heard how Wickliffe was accused by the bishop. Now you shall also heare the popes mightie reasons and arguments, by the which hee did confute him, to the king. It followeth.

Here is bishoning, but no teaching.

Therefore, forsomuch as our reuerend brethren the archbishop of Canturburie, and the bishop of London haue receiued a speciall commandement from vs by our authoritie, to apprehend and commit the forenamed Iohn Wickliffe vnto prison, and to transport his confession vnto vs: if they shall seeme in the prosecution of this their businesse to lacke your fauor or helpe, we require and most earnestly desire your maiestie, euen as your most noble predecessors haue alwaies beene most earnest louers of the catholike faith (whose case or quarrell in this matter is chieflie handled) that you would vouchsafe euen for the reuerence of God, and the faith aforesaid, and also of the apostolike seate, and of our person, that you will with your helpe and fauor, assist the said archbishop and all other that shall goe about to execute the said businesse. Whereby besides the praise of men, you shall obtaine a heauenly reward and great fauour and good will at our hand, and of the see aforesaid. Dated at Rome at S. Mary the greater, the 11. Kalend. of Iune, in the 7. yeare of our bishoprike, An. 1378.

The articles included in the popes letters which hee sent to the bishops and to the king against Wickliffe, were these as in order do follow.

The conclusions of Iohn Wickliffe, exhibited *in the conuocation of certaine bi*shops at Lambeth.

Certaine conclusions of I. Wickliffe.

ALl the whole race of mankind here on earth besides Christ hath no power simplie, to ordaine that Peter and all his ofspring should politickely rule ouer the world for euer.

2 God cannot giue to any man for him and his heires any ciuill dominion for euer.

3 All writings inuented by men, as touching perpetual heritage, are impossible.

4 Euery man being in grace iustifying, hath not onely right vnto the thing, but also for his time hath right indeed aboue all the good things of God.

5 A man cannot only ministratoriouslie giue any temporall or continuall gift, either as well to his naturall son, as to his son by imitation.

6 If God be, the temporall lords may lawfully and meretoriouslie take away the riches from the church when they doe offend habitualiter.

7 We know that Christs vicar cannot, neither is able by his buls, neither by his owne will and consent, neither by the consent of his colledge, either make able or disable any man.

8 A man cannot be excommunicated to his hurt or vndoing, except he be first and principally excommunicate by himselfe.

9 No man ought, but in Gods cause alone, to excommunicat, suspend, or forbid, or otherwise to proceed to reuenge by any ecclesiasticall censure.

10 A curse or excomunicatiō do not simply bind, but in case it be pronoũced & giuen out against the aduersary of Gods law.

11 There is no power giuen by any example, either by Christ or by his apostle, to excommunicate any subiect, specially for denying of any temporalties, but rather contrariwise.

12 The disciples of Christ, haue no power to exact by any ciuill authoritie, temporalties by censures.

13 It is not possible by the absolute power of God, that if the pope or any other christian, doe pretend by any meanes to bind or to loose, that thereby he doth so bind and loose.

14 We ought to beleeue that the vicar of Christ, doth at such times onely bind and loose, when as he worketh conformablie by the lay and ordinance of Christ.

15 This ought vniuersally to bee belecued, that euery priest rightly and duly ordered, according vnto the law of grace, hath power according to his vocation, whereby he may minister the sacraments, and consequently absolue any man confessing his fault, being contrite and penitent for the same.

16 It is lawfull for kings (in causes licensed by the law) to take away the temporalties from the spiritualtie, sinning habitualiter, that is, which continue in the custome of sin, and will not amend.

17 Whether they be temporall lords, or any other men whatsoeuer they be, which haue endowed any church with temporalties: it is lawfull for them to take away the same temporalties, as it were by way of medicine, for to auoide sin, notwithstanding any excommunication or other ecclesiasticall censure, forsomuch as they are not giuen but vnder a condition.

18 An ecclesiasticall minister, and also the bishop of Rome may lawfully be rebuked of his subiects, and for the profit of the church, be accused either of the clergie or of the laity.

These letters with the articles inclosed being thus receiued from the pope, the bishops toke no little heart, thinking and fully determining with themselues and that in open profession before their prouinciall Councell, that all manner respects of feare or fauour set apart, no person neither high nor low should let them, neither would they be seduced by the intreatie of any man, nor by any threatnings or rewards, but that in this cause they would execute most surely vpright iustice and equitie: yea albeit present danger of life should follow thereupon. But these so fierce braggs, and stout promises, with the subtill practises of these bishops, which thought them so sure before: the Lord (against whom no determination of mans counsell can preuaile) by a small occasion, did lightly confound and ouerthrow. For the day of the examination being come; a certaine personage of the princes court, and yet of no great noble birth, named Lewes Clifford, entring in among the bishops; commanded them that they should not procéed with any diffinitiue sentence against John Wickliffe. With which words all they were so amazed and their combes so cut, that (as in the storie is mentioned) they became so mute and speechlesse, as men hauing not one word in their mouthes to answere. And thus by the wondrous worke of God his prouidence, escaped John Wickliffe the second time out of the bishops hands, and was by them cleerely dismissed vpon his declaration made of his articles, as anon shall follow.

The stout braggs of the bishops ouerthrowne.

Wickliffe against called before the bishops. Lewes Clifford.

John Wickliffe against deliuered from the bishops.

Moreouer, here is not to be passed ouer, how at the same time, and in the said chapell of the archb. at Lambeth, where the bishops were sitting vpon John Wickliffe, the storie writing of the doing thereof, addeth these words, saying: Non dico ciues tantùm Londinenses, sed viles ipsius ciuitatis se impudenter ingerere præsumpserunt in eandem capellam, & verba facere pro eodem, & istud negotium impedire, confisi, vt reor, de ipsorum præmissa negligentia prælatorum, &c. That is, I say not onely, that the Citizens of London, but also the vile abiects of the citie, presumed to be so bold in the same chapell at Lambeth, where the bishops were sitting vpon J. Wickliffe; both to entreate for him, and also to let and stop the same matter, trusting, as I suppose, vpon the negligence which they saw before in the bishops, &c.

Ouer and beside, here is not to be forgotten, how the said John Wickliffe, the same time of his examination, offered and exhibited vnto the bishops, in writing, a protestation, with a declaration or exposition of his owne mind, vpon the said his articles, the effect whereof here followeth.

The protestation of Iohn Wickliffe.

The protestation of John Wickliffe.

First I protest (as I haue often before done) that I doe mind and intend with my whole heart (by the grace of God) to be a true christian, and as long as breath shall remaine in me, to professe and defend the law of Christ. And if it shall happen that through ignorance or otherwise, I shall faile therein; I desire my Lord God of pardon and forgiuenesse. And now againe as before also, I do reuoke and make retractation, most humblie submitting my selfe, vnder the correction of our holy mother the church. And forsomuch as the sentence of my faith, which I haue holden in the schooles and elsewhere, is reported euen by children, and moreouer, it is caried by children euen vnto Rome: therfore lest my deare beloued brethren should take any offence by me, I will set forth in writting the sentence and articles. for the which I am now accused and empeached: the which also euen vnto the death I will defend. As I beleeue all Christians ought to doe, and specially the bishop of Rome and all other priests and ministers of the Church. For I do vnderstand the conclusions after the sense and maner of speaking of the scriptures and holy doctors, the which I am readie to expound: And if they shall be found contrarie vnto the faith, I am readie to reuoke and spéedily to call them backe againe.

An exposition vpon the conclusions of Iohn Wickliffe, exhibited by him to the bishop.

ALL the race of mankind, here in earth beside Christ, hath no power simply to ordaine, that Peter, &c.

Exposition of John Wickliffe vpon his conclusions.

This conclusion of it selfe is euident, for as much as it is not in mans power to stop the comming of Christ to his finall iudgement, but he must néeds come, according to the article of our créed, to iudge both the quicke and the dead. And then (as the scripture teacheth) shall surcease all ciuill and politike rule here, I vnderstand the temporall and secular dominon, pertaining to men here dwelling in this mortall life. For so doe the Philosophers speake of ciuill dominion. And although the thing which is terminable, and hath an end, is called sometimes perpetuall: yet because in holy scripture, and in vse of the Church, and in the bookes of Philosophers most commonly that is taken to be perpetuall, which hath no end of time hereafter to come: according to the which sense, the Church singeth Gloria patri, &c. nunc & in perpetuũ: I also after ỹ same signification do take here this word (perpetually); and so is this conclusion consonant to the principles of the Scripture, that it is not in mans power to ordaine the course and votage of the Church, here perpetually to laste.

2. God cannot giue to any man, &c.

Exposition of the second conclusion.

To the second conclusion I answere, vnderstanding ciuill dominion, as in the conclusion before. And so I hold, that God first by his ordinat power cannot giue to any person ciuill dominion here for euer: Secondly, by his absolute power it is not probable for him so to do: For so much as he cannot euer detaine his spouse in perpetuall prison of this life, nor alwaies deserre the finall beatitude of his Church.

3. To the third conclusion. Many writings or charts inuented by men, as touching perpetuall heritage ciuill, be vnpossible.

The veritie of this conclusion is incident. For we must not canonize all maner of Charts, whatsoeuer, as catholicke, or vniuersall: for then it were not lawful by any means to take away or sequester things giuen by Chart or charter, when any doth vniustly occupy the same. And so, if that stand confirmed and ratified by the faith of the Church, great occasion thereby should be ministred to men so chartered, to trust to their temporal charts, and so might grow thereby much libertie and licence to sinne. For like as by what supposition, euery truth is necessary: so by the same supposition, euery false thing is possible, as it is plaine by the testimonie of the Scripture, and of holie doctors speaking of necessitie of things to come.

4. Euery man being in grace iustifying finally, hath not onelie right vnto the thing, but also for his time hath right indeed, ouer all the good things of God.

In gratia gratificante finaliter.

The veritie hereof is euident, by holy Scripture, Mat. 24. Where verity promiseth to euery man entring into his ioy: verily (saith he) I tell you, he shall set and place him ouer all the goods he hath. For the right and title belonging to the communion of Saints, in their countrie (he meaneth in the kingdom of heauen) Fundatur obiectiue super vniuersitatem bonorum dei: That is: Hath his relation, as vnto his obiect, to all the goods and possession of God.

Note here he speaketh only of the right of things in the countrie to come, and not in this exile.

5. A man can but only ministratoriously, giue any temporall dominion or gift perpetuall, as well to his owne naturall sonne, as to his sonne by imitation.

It is euident. For euery man ought to recognise himselfe in all his works and doings, as an humble seruant and minister of God. As the words of Scripture doe teach vs. Let a man so esteéme of vs as the ministers of Christ. Yea, so Christ himselfe did teach his chefe Apostles to minister; but in their countrie, the Saints shall giue vnto their fellow brethren the dominion of their goods, vt patet de suis corporibus & bonis eis inferioribus in natura, according to the words of Luk. 6. They shall giue you, and put into your bosoms a good measure and perfect, well filled and heaped vp, and running ouer.

6. If God be, temporal Lords may lawfully, and meritoriously take away the goods of fortune from the Church when they do offend, habitualiter.

This conclusion is correlatiue with the first article of our faith: I beléeue in God the father almightie, &c. Where I vnderstand this word (may) in this conclusion after the maner of autentike Scripture, which saith and granteth, that God is able of these stones to raise vp children to Abraham; for otherwise all Christian princes were heretikes. For this conclusion, thus standeth the reason: If God be, he is omnipotent: and if he be almightie, hee is able to command the Lords temporal so to do: and if he may so command, then may they lawfully so take away such goods, &c. And so by the vertue of the same principle, Christian princes haue practised the said sentence vpon the Churchmen heretofore, as did William Rufus, &c.

But

But God forbid that any should beleeue hereby my intention to haue been, that secular lords may lawfully take away what goods soeuer and by what meanes soeuer, by their owne naked authoritie at their pleasure: but onely by the authoritie of the church may so doe, in cases and forme limited by the law.

7 We know that it is not possible that the vicar of Christ is able by his pure Bulles &c.

¶ This is manifest by the Catholike faith, forasmuch as the church doth fully beleeue that the abling of any man, ought first to proceed and come of God; wherefore, no man being Christ his vicar, hath any power in this matter, but onely as vicar in the name of the Lord so far forth as hee is enabled of the Lord, to notifie vnto the church whom God hath enabled. Wherefore if any man do any thing not as vicar in the name of the Lord, whom he ought to forethinke to be his author and head: it is a presumption of Lucifer, forsomuch as Christ by his apostle saith, 1. Cor. 3. All our abilitie or sufficiencie commeth of God. And so consequently, it commeth not purely by the ministery of his vicarship, that he is inabled, but the ableness or vnableneslle of him being the vicar of Christ, commeth to him another way from aboue.

8 A man cannot be excommunicate to his hurt or vndoing, except he be excommunicate first and principally of himselfe.

It is euident, forasmuch as al such excommunication ought to proceed and begin originally of his owne sin which is damnified: Whereupon Augustin saith, De verbis Domini Sermone 51. Do not thou conculcate thy selfe, and man ouercommeth thee not. And moreouer the saith of the church doth teach, quòd nulla ei nocebit aduersitas, si nulla dominetur iniquitas: that is to say, No aduersitie shall hurt, if no iniquitie haue the vpper hand. And yet notwithstanding, euery excommunication for many causes is also to be feared, although that the excommunication of the church to the humble man being excommunicated, be not damnable but wholesome.

9 No man ought but in Gods cause alone to excommunicate, suspend, &c.

It is cleare, forasmuch as euery iust cause is the cause of God, whose respect ought chiefly to be waighed and pondered. Yea the loue of the person excommunicate ought to surmount the zeale of reuengement, and the desire of all temporall goods whatsoeuer; for otherwise he that doth excommunicate, doth damnifie himselfe. To this 9 conclusion notwithstanding it is congruent, that a prelate may excommunicate in the cause also of man, so that his principall respect in so doing be had to the iniurie done to his God, as appeareth 13. quæst. 4. Inter querelas.

10 No curse or excommunication can bind simply, but in case it be giuen out against the aduersarie of Christs law.

And it appeareth thus, because that God doth bind simplie euery one that is bound, who cannot excommunicate but onely for transgression of his law. Whereunto it is consonant notwithstanding, that the censure of the church doth not bind simplie, but secondarilie in that case and respect, as it is denounced against the aduersarie of the members of the church.

11 There is no example of Christ, which giueth power to his disciples to excommunicate any subiect (especially for denying of any temporalties) but contrarie.

Which is thus declared by the saith, whereby wee beleeue that God is to be beloued aboue all things, and our neighbour and enemie are to be beloued aboue all temporall goods of this world necessarily; for the law of God cannot be contrarie vnto it selfe.

12 The disciples of Christ haue no power by any ciuill coaction, to exact temporall things by their censures.

This appeareth by the saith of the Scripture, Luke 23. Where Christ did forbid his apostles ciuilly to raigne or to beare any lordship. The kings (saith he) of the Gentiles beare rule ouer them, but you not so. And after this sense it is expounded of S. Bernard, of S. Chrysostome, and other holy men: which conclusion notwithstanding, yet may they exact temporall things by ecclesiasticall censures incidently, if case be that it appertaine to the reuengement of their God.

13 It is not possible by the absolute power of God, that if the pope or any other christian do pretend to bind or loose at their pleasure by what meanes soeuer, that thereby he doth so bind and loose.

The contrary of this conclusion will destroy the whole catholike saith, importing no lesse but him to be a blasphemer which so vsurpeth such absolute power of the Lord. And yet by this conclusion I intend not to derogate from the power of the pope, or of any other prelate of the church, but that hee may by the vertue of the head so bind and loose. But do vnderstand the conditionall of this negatiue (to be impossible) after this sense, that it cannot bee that the pope or any other prelate of the church can pretend by himselfe to bind or loose (how and after what maner he list himselfe) except in such sort, that hee doe indeed so bind and loose before God, as he doth pretend to doe.

The reason thereof is this, because otherwise it is vnlawfull for him so to do, except he should doe it in the vertue of that law, and so consequently, vnlesse it be conformable to the law and ordinance of Christ.

15 To this conclusion, this ought vniuersally to bee beleeued, that euery priest rightly and duely ordered, hath power according to his vocation, &c. The power of all priests toward God quall. Ordo sacerdotalis non suscipit magis & minus. Potestas ordinis. Potestas regiminis.

The reason hereof is this, because that the order of priesthood in his owne nature and substance, receiueth no such degrees, either of more or of lesse. And yet notwithstanding, the power of inferiour priests in these dates is vpon due consideration restrained, and sometimes againe in time of extreme necessitie, released. And thus according to the doctors, a prelate hath a double power, to wit, the power of order, and the power of iurisdition or regiment. And according to this second power, the prelats are in a higher maiestie, and regiment.

16 It is lawfull for princes and kings (in cases by the law limited) to withdraw temporall commodities from churchmen, abusing the same, habitualiter. 16. q. 7. filijs.

The reason therof is plaine, for that temporall lords ought rather to leane to spirituall almes, which bringeth with it greater frut, then to corporall almes the case so standing, that sometime it were a necessarie worke of spirituall almes, to chastise such clerkes by taking from them their temporall liuings, which vse to abuse the same to the damnifying both of their soule and body. The case which the law doth limit in this matter, were the defect of correcting his spirituall head, or else for lacke of correcting the faith of the clerke which so offendeth, as appeareth, 16. q. 7. filijs. Dist. 40. cap. Si papa.

17 Whether they be temporall lords, or any other men whatsoeuer, which haue endued any church with temporalities, &c.

The truth thereof is euidently seene, for that nothing ought to stop a man from the principall workes of charitie necessarilie, because in euery action and worke of man is to bee vnderstood a priuie condition necessarie of God his good will concurring with all, as it is in the ciuill law de c. Conradi cap. 5. in fine collat. 1. And yet God forbid, that by these words occasion should bee giuen to the lords temporall to take away the goods of fortune from the church.

18 An ecclesiasticall minister, yea the bishop of Rome may lawfully be rebuked of his subiects, and for the profit of the church be accused, either of the clergie, or of the laity.

The proofe of this is manifest hereby, because the said bishop of Rome is subiect to fall into the sinne against the holy Ghost, as may be supposed, sauing the sanctitude, humility and reuerence due to such a father. For so long as our brother is subiect vnto the infirmitie of falling, hee lieth vnder the law of brotherly correction. And when the whole colledge of cardinals may be slothfull in ministring due correction for the necessary prosperity of the church: it is apparant that the residue of the body of the church, which possiblie may stand most of lay men, may wholesomely correct the same, accuse and bring him to a better way. The possibility of this case is touched, Dist. 40. Si Papa. If the pope doe erre from the right faith, &c. For like as such a great fall ought not to bee supposed in the lord pope without manifest euidence: so againe, such an obstinacie ought not to be supposed in him, possible being fallen, but that hee will humblie receiue the wholesome medicine of his superiour, correcting him in the Lord. The practise of which conclusion also is testified in many chronicles. Farre be it from the church of Christ, that veritie should bee condemned which soundeth euill to transgressors and other slothfull persons, for then the whole saith of the Scripture were in a damnable case.

Thus John Wickliffe in giuing his exposition vnto his foresaid propositions and conclusions, as is aboue prefired, through the fauour and diligence of the Londoners, either shifted off the bishops, or else satisfied them so, that for that time he was dismissed and scaped clearely away, onely being charged and commanded by the said bishops, that hee should not teach or preach any such doctrine any more, for the offence of the lasie people.

Thus this good man being escaped from the bishops with this charge aforesaid, yet notwithstanding ceased not to proceed in his godly purpose, labouring and profiting still in the church as he had begun.

Vnto whom also (as it happeneth by the prouidence of God) this was also a great helpe and stay, for that in the same yeere, or in the beginning of the next yeare following, the foresaid pope Gregory xi. which was the stirrer vp of al this trouble against him, turned vp his heeles and died. After whom ensued such a schisme in Rome, betweene two Popes, and other succeeding after them, one striuing against another; that the schisme thereof endured the space of xxxix. yeares, vntill the time of the councell of Constance. The death of pope Gregorie 11. A schisme in Rome.

The occasioner of which schisme first was pope Vrban the 6. who in the first beginning of his popedome was so proud and insolent to his Cardinals, and other, as to Dukes, Princes, and Queenes, and so set to aduance his nephew and kinsred, with iniuries to other princes, that the greatest number of his cardinals and courtiers by little and little shrunke from him, and set vp an other French pope against him, named Clement, who reigned 2 xi. yeares. And after Vrbanus 6. pope.

him Benedictus the 13. who reigned yeares 26. Againe of the contrarie side after Urbanus the sixth, succeeded Boniface the ninth, Innocentius the viij. Gregorious the xij. Alexander the fifth, Iohn 13.

¶ Papæ,	yeares.	moneths.	¶ Antipapæ.	yeares.
Vrbanus 6	11.	8.	Clement.	11.

Innocentius 8.	2.	0.
Gregorius 12.	2.	7.
Alexander 5.	0.	11.
Iohannes 13	5.	10.

As touching this pestilent and most miserable schisme, it would require heere another Iliade to comprehend in order all the circumstances and tragicall parts thereof, what trouble in the whole church, what partstaking in euery countrey, what apprehending and imprisoning of priests and prelats, taken by land and sea, what shedding of blood did follow thereof. How Otho duke of Brunswicke and prince of Tarentum, was taken and murthered. How Joan Queene of Jerusalem and Sicilia his wife, who before had sent to pope Urban, beside other gifts at his coronation, xl. M. Duckets in pure gold; after by the said Urban was committed to prison, and in the same prison strangled. What cardinals were racked, and miserablie without all mercy tormented on gibbets to death, what slaughter of men, what battels were fought betweene the two popes, whereof 5000. on the one side were slaine, beside the number of them which were taken prisoners. Of the beheading of fiue cardinals together after long torments, and how the bishop Aquilonensis, being suspected of pope Urban, for not riding faster with the pope, his horse being not good, was there slaine by the popes commandement, sending his souldiers vnto him, to slay him, and cut him in pieces. All which things, with other diuers moe acts of horrible cruelty, happening in the time of this abominable schisme, because they are abundantly discoursed at full by Theodorcike Niem, who was neere to the said pope Urban, and present at all his doings: therefore as a thing needlesse, I here pretermit, referring them who couet to be certified more amply herein, vnto the three bookes of the said Theodoricke aboue mentioned.

Was not here a folly agreemẽt?

Theodoricus a Niem de schismate.

About the same time also, about 3. yeares after, there fell a cruell dissension in England, betweene the common people and the nobilitie, the which did not a little disturbe and trouble the common wealth. In this tumult Simon of Sudburie archbishop of Canturburie, was taken by the rusticall and rude people, and was beheaded. In whose place after, succeeded William Courtney, which was no lesse diligent then his predecessor had been before him, in doing his diligence to root out hereticks. Notwithstanding, in the meane season Wicklifs sect increased priuilie, & daily grew to greater force, vntill the time that William Barton Vicechancellor of Oxford, about the yeare of our Lord 1380. had the whole rule of that Universitie: who calling together 8. monasticall doctors, and 4. other, with the consent of the rest of his affinitie, putting the common seale of the Universitie vnto certaine writings: he set forth an edict, declaring vnto euery man, and threatning them vnder a grieuous penaltie, that no man should be so hardie, hereafter to associat themselues with any of Wickliffes fautors or fauourers: and vnto Wickliffe himselfe hee threatned the greater excommunication, and further imprisonment, and to all his fautors, vnlesse that they after three daies canonicall admonition or warning, or as they call it, peremptory, did repent and amend. The which thing when Wicklife vnderstood, forsaking the pope and all the clergie, hee thought to appeale vnto the kings maiestie: but the duke of Lancaster comming betweene, forbad him that hee should not hereafter attempt or begin any such matters, but rather submit himselfe vnto the censure and iudgement of his ordinarie. Whereby Wickliffe being beset with troubles and perations, as it were in the midst of the waues, he was forced once againe to make confession of his doctrine: in the which his confession, to auoid the rigor of things, he answered as is aforesaid, making his declaration, and qualifying his assertions after such a sort, that he did mitigate and allwage the rigor of his enemies.

Anno 1382

The next yeare after, which was 1382. by the commandement of William archbishop of Canturbury, there was a conuocation holden at Londõ, where as John Wickliffe was also commanded to be present. But whether he there appeared personally, or not, I find it not in story certainely affirmed. The mandate of the archbishop William Courtney (sent abrode for the conuenting together of this councell) here followeth vnder written, truely copied out of his owne registers.

The mandate of the archb.

Ex Registro Archb. Cant. Courtney.

Memorandum, that where as well amongst the nobles as commons of this realme of England, there hath a certaine brute bin spread of diuers conclusions both erroneous, and also repugnant to the determination of the church, which tend to the subuersion of the whole church, and to our prouince of Canturburie, and also to the subuersion of the whole realme, being preached in diuers and sundrie places of our said prouince, generally, commonly, and publikely: We William by Gods permission archbishop of Canturburie, primate of all England, and legat of the see apostolicall, being minded to execute our office and dutie herein; haue conuocated or called together certain our fellow brethren and others a great many, as well Doctours and Bachelers of diuinitie, as doctors of the canon and ciuill law, and those whom we thought to bee the most famous men, skilfullest men, and men of soundest iudgement in religion, that were in all the realme, whose names here vnder ensue. And the same being (the 17. day of the moneth of May) in the yeare of our Lord 1382. in a certaine chamber within the territories of the priorie of the friers preachers of London before vs & our foresaid fellow brethren assembled, then & there personally present: After that ẏ said conclusions (the tenor wherof here vnder ensueth) were openly proponed, and distinctly and plainely read: Wee burthened our foresaid fellow brethren, doctors, and bachelers, in the faith wherein they stood bound to our Lord Jesus Christ, and as they would answere before the high iudge in the day of iudgement, that they should speake their opinions touching the said conclusions, and what euery of them thinketh therein.

And at length, after good deliberation had vpon the premisses, the foresaid our brethren, the bishops, doctors and bachelers, reassembled before vs the 21. day of the same moneth in the foresaid chamber, the foresaid conclusions being againe and againe repeated and plainely read: by vs and by the common consents of vs all it remaineth published and declared, that some of the said conclusions are hereticall, and othersome erroneous and contrarie to the determination of the church, as hereafter most manifestly shall appeare. And for as much as by sufficient information wee find and perceiue, that the said conclusions in many places of our said prouince, haue beene, as is said, both taught and preached; and that diuers other persons doe hold and maintaine the same, and be of heresie vehemently and notoriously suspected: we haue thought good as well generally as specially, to send out this processe vnder written.

¶ The letter of the archbishop directed to the bishop of London, against Wickliffe and his adherents.

A letter of the archbishop of Cant. against Wickliffe.

William by Gods permission archbishop of Canturburie, Metropolitane of all England, and of the apostolicall see legate: To our reuerend brother by the grace of God bishop of London, salutation. The prelats of the church ought to bee so much the more vigilant and attentiue about the charge of the Lords flocke committed vnto them: how much the more they shall vnderstand the Wolues being clothed in sheeps apparell, fraudulently to go about to worry & scatter the sheepe. Truely by the continuall crie and bruted fame (which it grieueth me to report) it is come to our knowledge, that although by the canonicall sanctions, no man being forbidden or not admitted, should either publikely or priuilie without the authority of the apostolicall see or bishop of that place, vsurpe or take vpon him the office of a preacher: Some notwithstanding such as are the children of damnation, being vnder the vaile of blind ignorance, are brought into such a doting mind, that they take vpon them to preach, and are not affraid to affirme and teach diuers and sundrie propositions and conclusions here vnder recited, both heretical, erroneous and false, condemned by the church of God, and repugnant to the decree of holy church, which tend to the subuerting of the whole state of the same, of our prouince of Canturburie, and destruction and weakning of the tranquillity of the same: and that as well in the churches, as in the streets, as also in many other prophane places of our said prouince, generally, commonly, and publikely, do preach the same, infecting very manie good christians, causing them lamentablie to wander out of the way, and from the catholike church, without which there is no saluation. Wee therefore considering, that so pernicious a mischiefe which may creepe amongst many, we ought not to suffer, and by dissimulation to passe ouer, which may with deadly contagion slay the soules of men, lest their blood be required at our hands: are willing so much as God will permit vs to doe, to extirpate the same. Wherefore, by the counsell and consent of many of our brethren and Suffragans, wee haue conuented diuers and sundrie doctors of Diuinitie, as also professors and other clerks of the canon and ciuill lawes, the best learned within the realme, and of the most soundest opinion and iudgement in the catholike faith, to giue their opinions and iudgements concerning the foresaid conclusions. But forasmuch as the said conclusions and assertions being in the presence of vs, and our fellow brethren and other conuocates, openly expounded, and diligently examined, and in the end found by common counsell and consent, as well of them as of vs, and so declared that some of those conclusions were heretical, and some of them erroneous, and repugnant to the determination of the church, as here vnder are described: Wee will and command your brotherhood, and by vertue of holy obedience straitly enioyne all and singuler our brethren, and suffraganes of our body and church of Canturburie, that with all speedie diligence you possiblie can, you likewise enioyne them (as we haue enioyned you) and euerie of them. And that euery one of them in their churches and other places of their citie and Dioceese, doe admonish and warne, and that you in your church and other churches of your citie and Dioces, doe admonish and warne, as we by the tenour of these presents, doe admonish and warne the first time, the second time and the third time: and yet more straitely doe warne, assigning for the first admonition one day, for the second admonition another day, and for the third admonition canonical and peremptory, another day: That no man from henceforth of what estate or condition soeuer, doe hold, preach, or defend the foresaid heresies and errours or any of them: nor that he admit to preach any one that is prohibited or not sent to preach, nor that he heare or hearken to the heresies or errours of him or any of them, or that he fauour or leane vnto him either publikely or priuily: but that immediately he shun him as he would auoide a serpent putting forth most pestiferous poison, vnder paine of the greater curse; the which wee command to be thundred against all and euery one which shall be disobedient in this behalfe, and not regarding these our monitions, after that those three daies be past which are assigned for the canonicall monition, and that their delay, fault or offence, committed require the same: That then according to the tenour of these writings, we command both by euery one of our fellow brethren and our suffragans in their cities and dioces, and by you in your city and dioceese (so much as belongeth both to you and them) that to the vttermost, both yee and they cause the same excommunications to be pronounced. And furthermore, wee will and command our foresaid fellow brethren, and all and singuler of you apart by your selues, to bee admonished, and by the aspersion of the blood of Iesus Christ we likewise admonish you: that according to the institution of the sacred canons, euery one of them in their cities and dioces, be a diligent inquisitor of this hereticall prauitie: and that euery one of you also in your cities and dioces, bee the like inquisitor of the foresaid hereticall prauitie: And that of such like presumptions they and you carefully and diligently inquire, and that both they and you (according to your duties and office in this behalfe) with effect do proceed against the same, to the honour and praise of his name that was crucified, and for the preseruation of the christian faith and religion.

hauing tried them by the truth, you should haue found them otherwise.

Brute Fulmin.

He that killeth you shall thinke he doth God good seruice.

Yea rather for the honor of your pope, and destruction of christian faith.

Here is not to be passed ouer, the greate miracle of Gods diuine admonition or warning: for when as the archbishop and suffragans, with the other Doctors of Diuinitie, and lawyers with a great companie of babling friers, and religious persons were gathered together to consult, as touching Iohn Wickliffes bookes, and that whole sect: When as they were gathered together at the gray friers in London, to begin their businesse, vpon saint Dunstans day after dinner, about two of the cloche, the very houre and instant that they should goe forward with their businesse, a wonderfull and terrible earthquake fell throughout all England: whereupon diuers of the suffragans being feared, by the strange and wonderful demonstration, doubting what it should meane, thought it good to leaue off from their determinate purpose. But the archbishop (as chiefe captaine of that armie, more rath and bold then wise) interpreting the chance which had happened, cleane contrarie to another meaning or purpose, did confirme and strengthen their hearts and minds, which were almost daunted with feare, stoutly to proceede and goe forward in their attempted enterprise. Who then discoursing Wickliffes articles, not according vnto the sacred Canons of the holy Scripture, but vnto their owne priuate affections and traditions, pronounced and gaue sentence, that some of them were simplie and plainely heretical, other some halfe erroneous, other irreligious, some seditious, & not consonant to the church of Rome.

In earthquake what time Wickliffe was examined. Ex Chron. mon. Albanensis.

Item, the twelfth day of June, in the yeare aforesaid, in the chamber of the friers preachers, the foresaid maister Robert Rigges, Chancellor of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, and Thomas Bizghtwell professors of Diuinitie, being appointed the same day and place, by the foresaid reuerend father in God archbishop of Canturburie: appeared before him, in the presence of the reuerend father in God, lord William, by the grace of God bishop of Winchester, and diuers others doctors and bachelars of Diuinitie and of the canon and ciuill law, whose names are before recited. And first the said Chancellor by the said lord archbishop of Canturburie, being examined what his opinion was touching the foresaid articles: publikely affirmed and declared, that certaine of those conclusions were heretical, and certaine erroneous, as the other doctors and clerks afore mentioned had declared: And then immediately next after him, the foresaid Thomas Bizghtwell well was examined, which vpon some of the conclusions at first somewhat staggered, but in the end being by the said archbishop diligently examined vpon the same, did affirme and repute the same to be hereticall and erroneous, as the foresaid Chancellor had done. Another Bachelar of Diuinitie also there was, named N. stammering also at some of those conclusions, but in the end affirmed that his opinion therein was, as was the iudgement of the foresaid Chancellor and Tho. as is aboue declared. Whereupon, the said lord archbishop of Canturburie, willing to let and hinder the perill of such heresies and errours: deliuered vnto the foresaid Chancellour, there being publikely read, his letters patents, to be executed, the tenour whereof in these words doth follow.

A letter of the Archb. of Cant. to the Chancellor of Oxford.

WIlliam by the grace of God archbishop of Canturburie, primate of all England, and legate of the apostolicall see: To our welbeloued sonne in Christ the Chancellor of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, within the diocesse of Lincolne, greeting, grace, and benediction. The prelats of the church, about the Lords flocke committed to their charge, ought so much to bee more vigilant as that they see the Wolfe clothed in sheeps attire, fraudulently goe about to worrie and scatter the sheepe. Doubtlesse, the common fame and brute is come vnto our eares, &c. Vt in mandato precedenti. Wee will therefore and command, straitly inioyning you, that in the church of our blessed Ladie in Oxford, vpon those daies in the which accustomablie the sermon is made, as also in the schooles of the said Vniuersitie vpon those daies the Lectures bee read, yee publish and cause by others to bee published to the clergie and people, as well in their vulgar tongue, as in the Latine tongue, manifestly and plainely without any curious implication, the same hereticall and erroneous conclusions, so repugnant to the determination of holy church, as is aforesaid: to haue beene and be condemned, and which conclusions also we declare by these our letters to be vtterly condemned. And that furthermore you forbid, and canonically admonish, and cause to bee admonished, as we by the tenour of these presents doe forbid and admonish you, once, twice, and thrice, and that peremptorilie: that none hereafter hold, teach, preach, or defend the heresies and errours aboue said, or any of them, either in schoole or out of schoole by any sophisticall cauillation or otherwise: or that any admit to preach, heare, or hearken vnto Iohn Wickliffe, Nicolas Herford, Philip Reppingdon, canon regular, or Iohn Ashton, or Laurence Redman, which bee vehemently and notoriouslie suspected of heresie, or else any other whatsoeuer, so suspected or defamed: or that either priuately or publikely, they either aide or fauour them or any of them, but that incontinently they shun and auoide the same as a Serpent which putteth forth most pestiferous poyson. And furthermore, wee suspend the said suspected persons from all scholasticall act, till such time as they shall purge themselues before vs in that behalfe: and that you denounce the same publikely, by vs to haue beene and be suspended; and that ye diligently and faithfully enquire of all their fautors and fauourers, and cause to be inquired throughout all the halles of the said Vniuersitie. And that when you shall haue intelligence of their names and persons, that yee compell all and euery of them to abiure their outrages by ecclesiastical censures and other paines canonicall whatsoeuer, vnder paine of the greater curse, the which against all and singuler the rebellious in this behalfe, and disobeying our monitions, wee pronounce: so that their fault, deceit, and offence in this behalfe, deserue the same (the said monition of ours being first sent) which in this behalfe wee esteeme and allow canonicall, that then and againe according to the effect of these our letters, &c. The absolution of all and singuler such, which shall incurre the sentence of this instrument by vs sent forth (which God forbid) we specially reserue vnto our selues: exhorting you the Chancellor by the aspersion of the blood of Iesus Christ, that to the vttermost of your power hereafter you doe your endeuour, that the clergie and people being subiect vnto you, if there bee which haue straied from the catholike faith by such errours, may be brought home againe, to the laud and honour of his name that was crucified, & preseruation of the true faith. And further our will is, that whatsoeuer you shall doe, in the premisses in manner and forme of our processe in this behalfe, to be had and done: that you for your part, when you shall bee required thereunto, plainely and distinctly doe certifie vs by your letters patents, hauing the tenour hereof.

Make sure worke.

The conclusions and articles here mentioned in this letter are aboue prefixed. Of which some were condemned for hereticall, some for erroneous.

After this, within few daies the foresaid archbishop W. Courtney, directed downe his letters of admonition to Robert Rigge commissarie of Oxford, for the repressing of this doctrine. Which yet notwithstanding both then, and yet to this day (God bee praised) doth remaine: the copie of his monition to the commissary here out of his owne Register followeth.

The monition of the archbishop, vnto the foresaid Chancellor.

IN Dei nomine, Amen. Whereas wee Wil. by the permission of God archbishop of Canturburie, lord primate of England and legate of the apostolicall see, by the consent of our suffragans, haue caused to be assembled together, diuers clerkes both secular and regular of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, within our prouince of Canturbury & other catholike persons, to informe vs of and vpon certaine conclusions hereticall and erroneous, generally and commonly preached and published in diuers places of the said prouince of Canturburie, to the subuersion of the whole state of the church, and our said prouince: And also mature deliberation had vpon the same, by the common counsell of the said our suffragans and their conuocates, it was declared, that certaine of the said conclusions, to haue beene and be condemned, some for hereticall, and some for erroneous, and notoriouslie repugnant to the determination of the church, which we also our selues haue declared to bee damnable: And haue vnderstood by credible information, and partly by experience, that thou Robert Rigge, Chancellor of the Vniuersity aforesaid, hast and doest incline partly to the foresaid damnable conclusions, whom also we in this part haue partly suspected, dost intend to molest these our clerks aboue specified, and others adhering vnto vs in this behalfe, as they ought to doe, through thy subtill and sophisticall imaginations, sundrie and manifold waies: therefore wee admonish thee M. Rob. Chancellor aforesaid, the first, second, and third time, and peremptorily: that thou doest not grieue, let, or molest, iudicially or extraiudicially, apertly or priuilie, or cause to bee grieued, let, and molested, or procure directly or indirectly, by thy selfe or any other as much as in thee lyeth to be grieued, the foresaid clerks secular or regular, or such as fauour them, in the premisses, in their scholasticall acts, or in any other condition whatsoeuer: And that thou suffer none hereafter to teach, maintaine, preach, or defend any such heresies or errors in the said Vniuersitie, either within or without the schooles: Neither that thou do admit Iohn Wickliffe, Nicolas Herford, Philip Repingdon, Iohn Ashton, or Laurence Redman, which are vehemently and notoriouslie suspected of heresie, or any other so suspected or defamed, vnto that office of preaching: but that thou denounce the said persons to bee suspended, whom wee haue suspended from all scholasticall act, whilest they cleare their innocencie in this part before vs, vnder the paine of the greater curse, which we here in these writings denounce against thy person if thou shalt not obey those our admonitiõs, with effect, as thy crime, subtilty and offence in this behalfe shall require according to this our admonition premised, which we repute in this part for canonicall, as well then as now, and now as well as then, reseruing the absolution of this sentence excommunicatorie, if it happen to light vpon thee, (as God forbid) specially vnto our selues. Testified with the hands of the Iurers, aboue in the pag. 400. before specified.

Another letter of the archb. to the Commissary of Oxford.

The examination of Nicolas Herford, Philip Repingdon, and Iohn Ashton.

THe 18. day of the moneth and yeare aforesaid, in the chamber of the preaching friers afore mentioned, before the foresaid archbishop in the presence of diuers Doctors and Bachelars of diuinitie, and many lawyers both canon & ciuill, whose names are vnder written: appeared M. Nic. Herford, Philip Repingdon, and Iohn Ashton Bachelars of Diuinity. Who after a corporall oth taken to shew their iudgement vpon the conclusions aforesaid, were examined seuerally each one by himselfe, before the archb. Who there required day and place to deliberate vpon the conclusions aforesaid, and to giue their answere vnto the same in writing. And also required to haue a copy of the said conclusions to be deliuered vnto them. The which copy, the said Nicolas and Philip (being openly read vnto them) receiued. Also the foresaid M. Iohn Ashton likewise was examined, and iudicially admonished by the said archb. by vertue of his oth, that he setting aside all sophisticall words and subtilties, he fully and plainely would say his mind vpon the conclusions aforesaid. And being asked moreouer by the said archb. whether he would haue a further day to deliberate vpon his answeres, as the foresaid Nicolas and Philip had before: said expressly that he would not, but would answere presently to those conclusions, and so for finall answere said, as concerning all these conclusions (containing them all together) that his iudgement was in this behalfe to hold his peace. Wherfore the foresaid archbishop reputing the said Iohn herein to be suspected, admonished him in forme of words as followeth: We admonish thee Iohn Ashton, whom we repute to bee defamed, and notoriouslie suspected of heresie, the first, the second, and third time: that in our prouince of Canturbury hereafter, thou doe not preach publikely or priuately without our speciall licence, vnder paine of the greater curse, which wee denounce here by these presents against thy person, if thou obey not our monitions, for now as for then. And consequently, forasmuch as the said Iohn being asked of the archb. confessed that he had heard before of the publication of the archb. Mandate, wherein was inhibited ỹ no person prohibited or not sent, should preach hereafter: the foresaid archbishop assigned to him friday next following, which was the 20. day of the same moneth, after dinner to appeare before him, either at Lambeth, or in the same place: to say for himselfe, wherefore hee might not bee pronounced pronounced for an heretike, and for such a one to be denounced through his whole prouince. Also the said archbishop assigned to the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, the said day and place to answer peremptorily, and to say fully and plainly to the conclusions aforesaid, all sophisticatiō of words and disputation set apart.

20. of June. In the twentith day aforesaid of the said month of June, the yeere and place aboue prefixed, before the foresaid archbishop, sitting in his tribunal seat, in the presence of diuers doctors of Diuinitie, and lawyers, both ciuill and canon; personally appeared master Nicolas Herford, and Philip Reppingdon, bachelars of Diuinitie, and John Ashton, master of Art. Where the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, being required by the said archbishop to answere, and say fully and plainly their iudgement vpon the conclusions prefixed, whereunto the said archbishop had assigned to the said Nicolas & Philip the same terme; did exhibit to the said archbishop there iudicially sitting, certain answers in writing contained, after the manner of indenture: the tenor whereof here vnder is contained, and after the same forme answered to the said conclusions. The tenor of which indenture containing the foresaid conclusions to them moued as afore, followeth in these words.

Herford and Reppingdon appeare.

The protestation of Nicolas, Philip, and Iohn, with their articles and answers to the same.

The protestation of Herford and Ashton, prohibited to the archbishop. WE protest here as before, publikely in these presents; that we intend to be humble & faithfull children to the church and holy Scripture, and to obey in all things the determinations of the church. And if it shall chance vs at any time, which God forbid, to swarue from this our intention, we submit our selues humbly to the correction of our reuerend father, lord archbishop of Canturbury, and primate of all England: and of all other which haue interest to correct such swaruers. This protestation premised, thus we answer to the cōclusions aforesaid.

Articles with the answers. That the substance of materiall bread and wine remaineth in the sacrament of the altar after consecration.

After the sense contrary to the Decretall, beginning Firmiter credimus, we grant that it is heresie.

That the accidents doe not remaine without the subiect, after consecration of the sacrament.

After the sense contrary to that Decretall Cum Marthe, we grant that it is heresie.

That Christ is not in the sacrament, the selfe same truly and really in his owne corporall presence.

Although this conclusion as the words stand, sound to be probable and intelligible, yet in the sense contrary to the Decretall in Cle. Si dudum: we grant that it is heresie. And briefly concerning this whole matter of the sacrament of the altar, as touching also all other things, we professe that we will both in word and sense, hold with the holy Scripture, with the determination of the holy church, and sayings of the holy doctors.

Obstinatly to affirme that it hath no foundation in the Gospell, that Christ ordained the masse.

We grant that it is heresie.

That God ought to obey the diuell.

In this sense, that God in his own person or essence, ought to obey the diuell with the obedience of necessity.

We grant that it is heresie.

If a man be duly contrite, that all externall confession is to him superfluous and vnprofitable.

We grant that it is heresie.

If the pope be a reprobat and an euill man, and consequently a member of the the diuell, he hath no power ouer the faithfull of Christ, giuen to him of any, vnlesse it be of Cesar.

We grant that it is heresie.

That after pope Vrban the 6. none is to be receiued for pope, but that we ought to liue after the manner of the Grecians, vnder our owne lawes.

We grant that it is heresie.

To say, that it is against the holy Scripture for ecclesiasticall persons to haue temporall possessions.

If obstinacie be ioined withall, we grant that it is heresie.

That no prelat ought to excommunicat any man, vnlesse he know him before to be excommunicat of God.

We grant that it is an error. Vnderstanding this knowledge to meane an experimental knowledge: so that herewith may stand the decree of the church. 11. q. 3. Nemo Episco.

That hee which doth so excommunicat, is thereby an heretike or excommunicat.

After the sense agreeing with the other before, we grant to be an error.

That a prelat excommunicating a clerke, which appealeth to the king or counsell of the realme, in so doing, is a traitor to God, the king, and the realme.

We grant it is an error.

That they which leaue off to preach, or to heare the word of God and the Gospell preached, for the excommunication of men, are excommunicat, and in the day of iudgement shall be counted for traitors to God.

Vnderstanding this conclusion vniuersally so, as scripture and lawes doe vnderstand such indefinit propositions: wee grant it as an error.

To affirme that it is lawfull for any deacon or priest, to preach the word of God without the authority of the sea apostolike, or catholike bishop, or of any other whose authority he knoweth sufficient.

We grant it is an error.

To affirme that there is no ciuill lord, no bishop nor prelat whilest he is in mortall sinne, we grant it is an error.

That temporall lords may at their pleasure take away the temporall goods from churches, offending habitualiter: wee grant it is an error, after this sense, that they may so take away temporall goods of the churches, without the cases limitted in the lawes of the church and kingdomes.

That the vulgar people may correct the lords offending at their pleasure: vnderstanding by this word may, that they may doe it by the law: we grant it is an error, because that subiects haue no power oue their lords.

That tithes be pure almes, and that parishioners may for the offences of their curats, detaine the same, and bestow them to others at their pleasure: vnderstanding by this word may, as before, to may, by the law: we grant it is an error.

That spectall praiers applied to any one person by prelats or religious men, doe no more profit then the generall praiers, if there be no let by the way to make them vnlike: vnderstanding this conclusion vniuersally negatiuely, and vnderstanding by speciall praiers, the praiers made vpon speciall deuotion, and generall praiers of generall deuotion: then after this sense, no such spectall praiers applied to any one person, by special orators doe profit more specially the said person, then generall praiers doe, which are made of the same, and for the same persons; we grant it is an error.

Hee that giueth almes to the friers, or to any frier that preacheth, is excommunicat, both he that giueth, and he that taketh: vnderstanding this proposition vniuersally, or conditionally, as is aforesaid; we grant to be an error.

That who so entreth into any priuat religion whatsoeuer, is thereby made more vnapt and vnmeet to obey the commandements of God: we grant it is an error.

That such holy men as did institute any priuat religions whatsoeuer, as well of secular hauing possessions, as of friers hauing none, in so instituting, did sinne: vnderstanding this reduplicatiuely or vniuersally: we grant it is an error. After this sense, that what Saint soeuer did institute priuat religions, instituting the said religion vpon that consideration as they did, did sinne.

That religious men liuing in priuat religions, be not of the religion of Christ: vnderstanding the proposition vniuersally, as is aforesaid: we grant it is an error.

That friers are bound to get their liuings by the labour of their hands, and not by begging: vnderstanding this proposition vniuersally, as before: we grant it is an error.

These things haue we spoken reuerend father and lord, in all humility, vnder your gracious supportation and benigne correction, according to our abilities and slender capacities for this present (the honor of God, the veritie of our beliefe, and safe conscience in all points reserued:) more humbly yet beseeching you, that if any other thing there be, that seemeth meet vnto your excellencie and discretion to bee more or otherwise said and spoken, that your gracious fatherhod would vouchsafe to informe vs as children by the sacred Scriptures, by the determination of the church, or authorities of the holy doctors. And doubtlesse with ready wils, and obedient minds, we will consent and agree vnto your wholsome doctrine. May it therefore please your fatherhod, right reuerend in God, according to the accustomed manner of your benignitie, fauorably to accept these our words and sayings, forasmuch as the foresaid conclusions were neuer by vs either in schooles affirmed, or else in sermons publikely preached.

Further examinations and proceedings against the foresaid Nicolas Herford, Philip Reppingdon, and Iohn Ashton.

Further examinations against the said Nicolas, Philip, and John, Nicolas Herford, Philip Reppington. WHen al these answers were made vnto the said lord arch. of Canturbury, the said Nicolas and Philip, for that they answered not vnto the meaning and words of the first conclusion expressly; but contrary to the sense of the decretall Firmiter credimus, were there iudicially examined what their sense and meaning was; but they would not expresse the same. it demanded of them according to the sense of the same conclusion declared on the behalfe of the said lord of Canturbury, whether the same materiall bread in numero, which before the consecration is laid vpon the altar, remaine in the proper substance and nature, after the consecration in the sacrament of the altar; and likewise of the wine? To this the said Nicolas and Philip answered, that for that time they could say no more therein, then that they had already answered, as is before alleaged in writing. And for that vnto the sense and words of the second conclusion they answered not fully and expresly, but in a sense contrary to the Decretall Cum Marthe, being asked what was the meaning, would not expresse the same: therefore it was demanded of them according to the sense of the same conclusion, declared in the behalfe of the said lord of Canturbury, whether those corporall accidences which formally were in the bread and wine before the consecration of them: after the consecration were in the same bread and wine, or else were subiected in any other substance? To this they answered; that better to answer, then before in their writings they already had, for that time they could not. To the meaning also and words of the third conclusion, for that they answered not plainly and expresly, but in sense contrary to the Decretall in the Clementines Si dudum, being asked what was that sense and meaning, would not declare the same: Wherefore it was then demanded of them, according to the sense of the same conclusion, declared on the behalfe of the said lord of Canturburie: Whether the same body of Christ, which was assumpted of the Virgin, be in the sacrament of the altar, secundum seipsum, euen as he is really in carnall substance, proper essence and nature. To this they answered; that for that time they could say no more then that they had said, as before is specified in writing.

Furthermore, to the sense and text of the sixth conclusion, for that they answered not fully and expresly, being asked whether God ought any manner of obedience to the diuell or not: they said, yea, as the obedience of loue, because he loueth him, and punished him as he ought. And to proue that God ought so to obey the diuell, they offered themselues to the fire.

To the 11. conclusion, for that they answered not expresly, being asked whether a prelat might excommunicat any man being in the state of grace: said, yea.

Vnto the 20. conclusion, for that they answered not fully, simply, and expresly, being demanded whether speciall or generall praiers did most profit, and were of greater force: they would not say but that speciall.

Vnto the last conclusion, for that they answered neither simply, nor expresly, and being demanded particularly, whether any frier were bound to get his liuing with his manuall labor, so that it might not bee lawfull for them to liue by begging: they would make no answer at all.

The iudgement of the doctors vpon these Articles.

After that, the foresaid lord archbishop of Canturbury demanded of all the foresaid doctors, what their iudgement was touching the answers that were made vpon all and singuler such conclusions. All which doctors and euery of them seuerally said: that there all the answers giuen vnto the first, second, third, and sixth conclusions (as is before recited) were insufficient, heretical & subtill; and that all the answers made specially to the tenth, ninth, and last conclusions, as is aboue mentioned; were insufficient, erroneous, and peruerse. Whereupon the said lord archbishop of Canturbury, considering the said answers to be heretical, subtill, erroneous, and peruerse, accordingly as the said doctors (as is aforesaid) had weighed and considered; admonished the said Nicolas and Philip sufficiently vnder these forme of words.

Admonition and citation of the archbishop against the examinats.

The name of Christ being called vpon: we William by Gods permission, archbishop of Canturbury, metropolitan of all England, and legat of the Apostolike sea, and through all our prouince of Canturbury, inquisitor of all heretical prauitie; doe sufficiently and lawfully admonish and cite you Nicolas Herford, and Philip Reppingdon, professors of Diuinitie, hauing this day and place assigned you by your owne consent and our petition, peremptorily to answer and to say fully and plainly your opinions touching these conclusions, whereunto we doe refer you (all subtil, sophisticall, and logicall words set apart) being thereunto sworne, cited and commanded. Which thing to doe, without cause reasonable or any licence giuen thereunto, you neither haue bin willing, nor are willing, nay rather ye contemptuously refused to answere to some of those conclusions before vs iudicially, according to the effect of our monition, citation and commandement beforesaid. But for that yee haue answered vnto some of them heretically, and to othersome erroneously, although not fully, wee admonish and cite you once, twice, and thrice, and that peremptorily: that plainly and fully (all subtill, sophisticall and logicall words set apart) you and euery of you answer vnto the same conclusions, and vnto that sense and meaning by vs limitted; vnder the paine that otherwise such conclusions deserue by you confessed, and that for the same conclusions, you ought to haue.

Which admonition being made and done, for that the foresaid Nicolas and Philip would make none other answer; the said lord archbishop of Canturbury concluded that businesse, prefixing and assigning vnto the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, eight daies space; that is to say, vntill the 27. day of the same month: and that then they should appeare before the said lord archbishop of Canturbury, whersoeuer within the same his prouince of Canturbury he should fortune to be, to heare his decree that should be made in that behalfe. This done, the foresaid archbishop of Canturbury monished and cited lawfully and sufficiently, John Ashton vnder the tenor of these words following.

Another day assigned for the examinats to appeare.

Procesle made by the archbishop against John Ashton.

In the name of God: We William by Gods permission, archbishop of Canturbury, primat of all England, legat of the sea Apostolicall, and through all our prouince of Canturbury, of all heretical prauity chiefe inquisitor: doe monish and cite thee, John Ashton, maister of Art, and student in Diuinity, appearing before vs, iudicially to say and speake the plaine veritie touching these conclusions, to the which we doe referre thee: and to the which we haue caused thee to sweare, laying thy hand vpon a booke: as being also otherwise by vs admonished and commanded, to keepe this day and place by vs appointed, for the third time peremptorily, to propone such reasonable cause (if thou hast any) wherefore thou oughtest not to be pronounced an heretike. And sufficiently and lawfully we monish and cite thee, the first, second and third time, and that peremptorily, that thou, fully and plainly (all subtill, sophisticall, and logicall words set apart,) doe answere vnto the same conclusions, vnder the paine that vnto such conclusions belong and on thy part confessed, and that thou for such conclusions oughtest to suffer. Which monition being thus premised, the said archbishop read the first conclusion, and of the said John inquired what was his opinion and meaning therein: and hereupon he said his mind concerning the foresaid monition. Then the foresaid John Ashton, being often required by the archbishop, that he would answere in the Latine tongue, to those questions which were demanded of him, because of the lay people that stood about him; hee crying out in the English tongue, vttered friuolous and opprobrious contumelies to moue and excite the people against the said archbishop, as it should seeme. Neither did hee vnto the first conclusion, nor vnto any of these other conclusions, effectually and pertinently seeme to them to answere: but rather by subtilties and shifts, saying oftentimes, and as expresly as Luke said, it was sufficient for him to beleeue as the holy church beleeued. Then the said archbishop examined him vpon the first conclusion touching the sacrament of the altar: whether that after the words of consecration, there remaineth materiall bread, particular bread, or vniuersall bread? He said the matter passed his vnderstanding, and therefore said, he would in that forme and manner answere, and otherwise not. But amongst other things, hee spake in deriding wise vnto the said archbishop against this word Materiall, saying: you may put that in your purse, if you haue any. Whereupon the said archbishop, calling that an vnwise and foolish answere, as the rest of the doctors did (of whom mention was made before) rather for that he was a graduat in the schooles, farther proceeded against the said John Ashton in this wise.

John Ashton seuerally examined.

The archbishop and his frier: doe flee the English tongue for the people.

Whether materiall bread remaine in the sacrament.

And thou John Ashton monished & commanded by vs, as is aforesaid, after thine oth taken; without any reasonable cause or any other licence, neither wouldst thou, nor yet wilt, but refusedst, and yet doest cõtemptuously, to answere vnto such conclusions before vs, iudicially according to our monition and commandement aforesaid; we hold all such conclusions by thee confessed, and thee the foresaid John, with all thy said conclusions, conuicted. And therefore we doe pronounce and declare by sentence giuing, that thou John Ashton, concerning those conclusions, which by vs with good deliberation of diuers prelats our suffragans, and also diuers and sundry professors of Diuinitie, and other wise men and learned in the law, according to the canonicall sanctions, being condemned and declared for an hertike and heretical, to haue bẽn, and still is an heretike, and thy conclusions heretical. And as touching thy other conclusions, by vs heretofore counted erroneous, and for erroneous condemned: wee doe pronounce and declare sententially by these our writings, that both thou hast erred, and doest erre.

Maister Thomas Hilman suspected to be a fauorer of John Ashton.

The 20. day of June.

Upon the same 20. day of June, in the yeere and place aboue recited, the foresaid lord of Canturbury being desirous, as he pretended, to be informed by Thomas Hilman, bachelar of Diuinity, there being present, and somewhat fauoring the said maister John Ashton, what his iudgement and opinion was touching the foresaid conclusions, prefixed and assigned vnto the said Thomas (for that time demanding the same deliberation and day) eight daies after, that is to say, the 28. of the said month, that he appeare before the archbishop of Canturbury, whersoeuer within his said prouince of Canturbury, he should then happen to be, to declare plainly and fully what his iudgement and opinion was, touching the foresaid conclusions. 28 day of June an. 1381.

The Friday next following, that is to say, the 28. day of June, the foresaid M. Nicolas, Philip, and Thom. Hilman, appeared before the said archbishop, and lord Inquisitor of Canturbury, in the chapel of his manor of Otford, in the diocesse of Canturbury, there sitting in his tribunall seat. To whom the said bishop of Canturbury saying; that for because at that time he had not the presence and assistance of the doctors in diuinity, and of the canon and ciuill law; he continued the said businesse touching the said Nicolas, Philip, and Thomas, in the same state wherein then it was, til Tuesday next & immediatly ensuing: that is to say, the first day of July, the yeere of the Lord aforesaid, and prefixed vnto the said Nicolas, Philip, and Thomas Hilman the same day to appeare before him, wheresoeuer within his prouince of Canturbury, he should then chance to be, to doe that which vpon the said 28. day, they were purposed to doe together or apart.

The 1. day of July, an. 1382.

Which Tuesday being come, the foresaid archbishop in the chiefe house of his church at Canturbury, before the houre of 9. with the doctors, whose names are vnder contained and other clerks a great multitude; expected the foresaid Nicolas, Philip, and Thomas, long time, by the beadle calling them and looking after them, who neuertheless appeared not before two of the clocke after dinner the same day, continuing the foresaid businesse in the priuine state till the same houre. At which houre, the foresaid archbishop of Canturbury hauing assistants, the doctors and clerks vnder recited, examined the foresaid master Thomas Hilman, then and there iudicially appearing, what his opinion was touching the foresaid conclusions: who at them and the meaning of them somewhat stammering, at last, to all and singuler the same conclusions then to him read and expounded, thus answered: I suppose and iudge all and singuler those conclusions lately condemned by my lord of Canturbury that now is, together with the counsell and consent of his clerks, to be heretical and erroneous, euen as the same my lord of Canturbury and other doctors of diuinitie, of the canon and ciuill law, by common consent and counsell haue supposed and thought. And that the same (being for heresies and errors as before is said condemned) doe as much as in mee is condemne; protesting that I will hold and affirme the contrary of those conclusions, and in the same faith liue and die. Then said the archbishop of Canturbury, then and there sitting as tribunall or Iudge, pronouncing the said masters, Nicolas and Philip, (long in court called before and tarried for, and yet not appearing) guilty of contumacie and disobedience: excommunicated them for the penalty of this their contumacie, in tenor of these words following.

The answer of Tho. Hilman.

Mr. Herford and Phil. Reppington for not appearing, excommunicated.

Excommunication pronounced by the archbishop.

We William by the grace of God archbishop of Canturbury, Primat of England, Legat of the apostolicall sea, and through all our prouince of Canturbury, of all hereticall prauitie chiefe inquisitor; doe pronounce master Nicolas Herford, and master Philip Reppington, professors of Diuinity, hauing this day and place by our prefixion, appointed to heare and decree in this businesse of hereticall prauitie (being in court by our Bedle long called and taried for, and yet not appearing) to be stubborne and disobedient persons: and for the penaltie of this their contumacie, we doe excommunicat them and either of them by these presents.

The denouncing of the excommunication against Nicolas Herford, and Philip Reppington.

The 12. day of July, an. 1382. Excommunication to be denounced at Pauls crosse.

William by Gods permission archbishop of Canturbury, &c. To our beloued sonne in Christ, whosoeuer hee be, that this instant sunday shal preach at Pauls crosse in London, salutation, grace and blessing. Forasmuch as we prefixed a certaine competent day and place to master Nicolas Herford, and master Philip Reppington, Canon regular of the monastery of our Lady of Leicester, being doctors of Diuinitie, and of heretical prauitie vehemently suspected: After certaine answers not fully made, but impertinently and nothing to the purpose, as also heretical and erroneous: In diuers places of our said prouince commonly, generally, and publikely taught and preached, and therefore that they should iudicially appeare before vs, to doe and to receiue peremptorily in that behalfe, what thing soeuer the quality of that businesse should moue vs vnto: and that we haue for their contumacie, in not appearing before vs at that day and place iudicially appointed, as right therein required: Wee by these presents command and commit vnto you, firmely inioining you, that when all the multitude of people shall be gathered together to heare your sermon, that in the day and place appointed, you publikely and solemnly denounce the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, holding vp a crosse, and lighting vp a candle, and then throwing downe the same vpon the ground, to haue been so and in such maner excommunicated, and still be.

Philip Reppington, &c. as before: We straitly charge and command you, that you publikely and solemnly denounce in the church of our Lady, and in the schooles of the Vniuersity, the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, to haue bin by vs excommunicated, and still be. And that you further cite, or cause to be cited peremptorily, the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, that they & euery of them appeare before vs within 15. daies after the date of this citation, wheresoeuer it shall fortune vs, within our said prouince of Canturbury, then to bee To heare and see how we meane to proceed against them, and euery of them, concerning the foresaid heretical and erroneous conclusions, according to the forme of retroactions and quality of the businesse in this behalfe had and vsed. And that both of the day of the receit of this present citation, of the maner and forme thereof; or if that you shall apprehend by personall citation the said Nicolas and Philip, or either of them, or whether they shall be absent and hide themselues, as of euery thing else, which in this behalfe you shall thinke meet to be done: that betweene this and the feast of S. The excommunication of Herford and Reppington denounced at Pauls crosse.

Against this blind excommunication of the said archbishop, the parties excommunicat commenced and exhibited their appeale vnto the bishop of Rome. Which appeale of theirs as insufficient, or rather to him vnpleasant, the said archbishop vtterly reiected (as might oftentimes ouercommeth right) proceeding in his preconceiued excommunication against them, and writting moreouer his letters to him that should preach next at Pauls crosse, as is aforesaid, to denounce & to publish openly the said Nicolas Herford, and Philip Reppington to be excommunicat, for that not appearing at their terme assigned. Which was in the 13. day of the month of July.

13. day of July, an. 1382.

Other letters of the archbishop sent to the Chancellor of Oxford.

Which archbishop moreouer the said yeere, month and day aforesaid, sent also another letter to M. Rigge, commissary of Oxford, straitly inioining and charging him not onely to denounce the said sentence of excommunication, and to giue out publike citation against them, but also to make diligent search and inquisition through all Oxford for them, to haue them apprehended and sent vp to him, personally before him to appeare at a certaine day prescribed for the same. Whereby may appeare how busie this bishop was in disquieting and persecuting these poore men, whom rather hee should haue nourished and cherished as his brethren. But as his labor is vaik, so his reward will follow, at what day the great archbishop of our soules shall iudicially appeare in his tribunall seat, to iudge both the quicke and the dead.

Hitherto no law to burne any man for religion.

The archbishop yet not contented with this, doth moreouer by all meanes possible, follicite the king to ioine with all the power of his temporall sword, for that he well perceiued, that hitherto as yet the popish clergie had not authoritie sufficient by anie publike law or statute of this land to proceede vnto death against any person whatsoeuer, in case of religion, but onely by the vsurped tyrannie and example of the court of Rome. Where note (gentle Reader) for thy better vnderstanding, the practise of the Romish prelats in seeking the kings helpe to further their bloudie purpose against the good saints of God. Which king being but young, and vnder yeeres of ripe iudgement, partly induced, or rather seduced by importune suite of the foresaid archbishop, partly also either for feare of the bishops (for kings cannot alwaies doe in their realmes what they will) or else perhaps inticed by some hope of subsidie to be gathered by the clergy, was content to adioine his priuate assent (such as it was) to the setting downe of an ordinance, which was indeed the very first law that is to be found made against religion and the professours thereof, bearing the name of an Act made in the parliament holden at Westminster, Anno 5. Rich. 2. Where among sundry other statutes then published, and yet remaining in the printed bookes of of Statutes, this supposed statute is to be found, cap. 5. & vltimo, as followeth.

The king circumuented by the archbishop.

This statute was made by the clergy, without consent or knowledge of the commons.

Item forsomuch as it is openly knowne that there be diuers euill persons within the realme, going from countie to countie, and from towne to towne, in certaine habits vnder dissimulation of great holinesse, and without the licence of the Ordinaries of the places, or other sufficient authoritie, preaching daily not onely in churches and churchyards, but also in markets, faires, and other open places where a great congregation of people is, diuers sermons containing heresies and notorious errors, to the great emblemishing of Christian faith and destruction of the lawes, and of the estate of holy church, to the great perill of the soules of the people, and of all the realme of England, as more plainly is found and sufficiently proued before the reuerend father in God the archbishop of Canturbury, and the bishops and other prelats, maisters of Diuinitie, and doctors of canon and of ciuill law, and a great part of the clergy of the said realme, specially assembled for this great cause; which persons doe also preach diuers matters of slander, to ingender discord and dissension betwixt diuers estates of the said realme, as well spirituall as temporall, in exciting of the people to the great perill of all the realme: which preachers cited or summoned before the Ordinaries of the places there to answer to that whereof they be impeached, they will not obey to their summons and commandements, nor care not for their monitions nor censures of the holy church, but expresly despise them. And moreouer, by their subtile and ingenious words, doe draw the people to heare their sermons, and doe maintaine them in their errors by strong hand, and by great routs: It is ordained and assented in this present parliament, that the kings commissions be made and directed to the Shiriffes and other ministers of our soueraigne Lord the king, or other sufficient persons learned, and according to the certifications of the prelats thereof to be made in the Chancery from time to time, to arrest all such preachers, and also their fautors, maintainers, and abetters, and to hold them in arrest and strong prison, till they will iustifie to them according to the law and reason of holy church. And the king willeth & commandeth, that the Chancellor make such commissions at all times, that he by the prelats or any of them shall bee certified and thereof required, as is aforesaid.

Note that this statute was repealed afterwards at the instance of the commons.

An examination of the foresaid supposed Statute, and of the inualiditie thereof.

Which supposed Statute, for as much as it was the principall ground whereupon proceeded all the persecution of that time; it is therefore not impertinent to examin the same more particularly, whereby shall appeare, that as the same was fraudulently and vnduely deuised by the prelats onely; so was it in like manner most iniuriously and vnorderly executed by them. For immediatly vppon the publishing of this law, without further warrant either from the king or his counsell, commissions vnder the great seale of England were made in this forme. Richard by the grace of God, &c. vt patet act. pag. 541. Witnesse my selfe at Westminster the 26. day of Iune, in the sixth yeere of our raigne. Without more words of warrant vnder written, such as in like cases are both vsuall and requisite: Viz. per ipsum Regem: per Regem & consilium: or per breue de priuato Sigillo. All or any of which words being vtterly wanting in this place, as may bee seene in the kings records of that time: it must therefore be done either by warrant of this foresaid Statute, or else without any warrant at all. Whereupon it is to be noted, that whereas the said Statute appointed the commissions to bee directed to the Shiriffe, or other ministers of the kings, or to other sufficient persons learned for the arresting of such persons: the said commissions are directed to the archbishop and his Suffragans, being as it appeareth parties in the case, authorising them further without either the words, or reasonable meaning of the said Statute, to imprison them in their owne houses, or where else pleased them.

No vsuall words of warrant affixed to this commission.

Besides also, what manner of laws this was, by whom deuised, and by what authority the same was first made and established, iudge by that that followeth: viz.

In the Vtas of S. Michael, next following at a parliament summoned and holden at Westminster, the sixth yeere of the said king, among sundry petitions made to the king by his commons, whereunto he assented, there is one in this forme, Article 52.

The petition of the commons for the repealing of this foresaid statute.

Item, prayen the commons, that whereas an Statute was made the last parliament in these words: It is ordained in this present parliament, that commissions from the king be directed to the Shiriffes and other ministers of the king, or to other sufficient persons skilfull, and according to the certificats of the prelats thereof to be made vnto the chancery from time to time to arrest all such preachers, and their fautors, maintainers, and abetters. And them to detaine in strong prison, vntill they will iustifie themselues according to reason, and law of holy church. And the king willeth and commandeth, that the Chancellor make such commissions at all times, as shall be by the prelats or any of them certified, and thereof required, as is aforesaid. The which was neuer agreed nor granted by the commons: but whatsoeuer was moued therein, was without their assent. That the said Statute be therefore disanulled. For it is not in any wise their meaning, that either themselues, or such as shall succeed them, shall be further iustified or bound by the prelats, then were their ancestors in former times, whereunto is answered, il plaist aa, Roy. 1. the king is pleased.

The king ratifieth the repeale.

Hereby notwithstanding the former vniust law of an. 5. was repealed, and the fraud of the framers thereof sufficiently discouered: yet such meanes was there made by the prelats, that this act of repeale was neuer published, nor euer sithence imprinted with the rest of the statutes of that parliament. Insomuch as the said repeale being concealed, like commissions and other processe were made from time to time, by vertue of the said bastard statute, as well during all the raigne of this king, as euer sithence against the professors of religion; as shall hereafter by the grace of God appeare in the second yeere of king Henry the 4. where the clergy pursued the like practise. And now againe to the story of our Oxford Diuines, and of the archbishop, to whom the king writeth his letters patents, first to the archbishop, then to the Vicechancellor of Oxford in forme as followeth.

The kings letters patents to the Archbishop.

The kings letter against the fauorers of Wickliffe.

RIchard by the grace of God king of England, and lord of Ireland: To all those to whom these present letters shall come, greeting. By the petition of the reuerend father in God, William archbishop of Canturbury, Primate of England, exhibited vnto vs, we right well vnderstand: That diuers and sundry conclusions, very contrary to wholsome doctrine, and redounding both to the subuersion of the catholike faith, the holy church, and his prouince of Canturbury, in diuers and sundry places of the same his prouince haue beene openly and publikely preached, although damnably preached. Of the which conclusions, some as heresies, othersome as errors haue been condemned; but not before good and mature deliberation first therein had and vsed, and by common counsell of the said archbishop, his suffragans, and many doctors in Diuinity, and other clerks, and learned men in the holy scriptures, were sententially and wholesomely declared. Whereupon the said archbishop hath made this supplication vnto vs; that both for the coertion and due castigation of such as shall henceforth of an obstinat mind preach or maintaine the foresaid conclusions, that wee would vouchsafe to put to the arme and helping hand of our kingly power. We therefore moued by the zeale of the catholike faith, whereof we be and will be defenders, and vnwilling that any such heresies or errors should spring vp within the limits of our dominion: Giue and grant speciall licence and authoritie by the tenor of these presents, vnto the foresaid archbishop, and to his suffragans, to arrest and imprison either in their owne prisons, or any other, all and euery such person and persons, as shall either priuily, or apertly preach and maintaine the foresaid conclusions, so condemned; and the same persons so imprisoned there at their pleasures to detaine, till such time as they shall repent them and amend them of such hereticall prauities, or else shall be of such arrests by vs and our counsel otherwise determined and prouided. Further charging and commanding all and singuler our liegemen ministers and subiects, of what state and condition soeuer they be, vpon their fidelity and allegiance, wherein they stand bound to vs, that by no meanes they either fauor, counsell, or helpe the preachers, or else maintainers of the said conclusions so condemned, or their fauourers, vpon paine and forfeiture of all that euer they haue. But that they obey and humbly attend vpon the said archbishop, his suffragans and ministers, in the execution of these presents; so that due and manifest publication against the foresaid conclusions and their maintainers, without any perturbation may be done and executed, as for the defence of our realme and catholike faith shall be thought most meet and requisite. In witnes whereof, we haue caused these our letters patents to be made.

Another letter of the king to the Vicechancellor.

THe king: To the Chancellor and the procurators of the Vniuersitie of Oxford which now be, or for the time being shall bee, greeting. Moued by the zeale of Christian faith, whereof wee be, and alwaies will be defenders, and for our soules health induced thereunto, hauing a great desire to represse, and by condigne punishment to restraine the impugners of the foresaid faith, which newly and wickedly goe about and presume to sow their naughty and peruerse doctrine, within our kingdome of England, and to preach and hold damnable conclusions, so notoriously repugnant and contrary to the same faith, to the peruerting of our subiects and people, as wee vnderstand. Before they any further proceed in their malicious malicious errors, or else infect others: We haue by these presents appointed you to bee inquisitor generall (all the chiefe diuines of the said Vniuersitie being your assistants) and the same likewise to be done of al and singuler the graduats, diuines and lawyers of the same Vniuersity. And if they shall know any which be of the iurisdiction of the said Vniuersitie of Oxford, which be probably of them to be suspected in the fauour, beleefe, or defence of any heresie or error, and specially of any of the conclusions publikely condemned by the reuerend father, William, archbishop of Canturbury, by the councel of his clergie, or els of any other conclusion like vnto any of them in meaning, or in words; and that if henceforth you shall find any that shall beleeue, fauour, or defend any of the foresaid heresies or errors, or any other such like, or else which shall be so bold to receiue into their houses and inns, master John Wickliffe, M. Nic. Herford, M. Philip Reppingdon, or M. John Ashton, or any other noted by probable suspition of any the foresaid heresies, or errors, or any other like vnto them in meaning, or in word: Or that shall presume to communicate with any of them, or else to defend or fauour any of such fauorers, receiuers, communicants and defenders, within seuen daies after the same shall appeare and be manifest vnto you, to banish and expell them from the Vniuersitie and towne of Oxford, till such time as they shall declare their innocencie before the archbishop of Canturburie for the time being, by manifest purgation. So notwithstanding, that such as be compelled to purge themselues, you certifie vs and the said archbishop vnder your seales, from time to time within one moneth that they be such maner of men. Commanding furthermore, that through all the halles of the said Vniuersitie, ye cause diligentlie to be searched and inquired out of hand: If anie man haue anie book or tractation of the edition or compiling of the foresaid master Iohn Wickliffe, or Nicholas Herford: and that when and whersoeuer ye shall chance to find any such booke or tractation, yee cause the same to be arrested and taken, and vnto the foresaid archbishop within one moneth (without correction, corruption, or mutation, whatsoeuer) word for word, and sentence for sentence, to be brought and presented. And therefore wee straitly enioyne and command you, vpon your fidelitie and allegeance wherein ye stand bound vnto vs, and vpon paine of forfeiture of al and singuelr your liberties and priuiledges of your said Vniuersitie, and of all that euer you haue besides: that you giue your diligent attendance vpon the premisses, and that well and faithfully you execute the same in manner and forme aforesaid. And that you obey the foresaid archbishop, and his lawfull and honest mandates, that he shall thinke good to direct vnto you in this behalfe, as it is meete ye should. And we giue in charge vnto the Vicechancellor and maior of Oxford for the time being, and to all and singuler our sheriffes, vndersheriffes, bailiffes, and subiects, by these presents: that they aid, obey, and bee attendant vpon you in the execution of the premisses. In witnesse whereof, &c. Witnesse the king at Westminster, the 13. day of July, the sixth yeere of his raigne.

Another sharpe letter of king Richard sent to Oxford against Wickliffe and his fellowes.

The effect of the kings letter briefly comprehended.

Besides these letters patents, the said young king moued by the vnquiet importunitie of the archbishop, sendeth moreouer another speciall letter to the Vicechancellor and proctors of the Vniuersitie of Oxford. Wherein vnder a pretensed zeale of defence of Christian faith, he straitly and sharpely enioyneth and assigneth them (for the vtter abolishing of those conclusions and opinions) to make a generall inquisition through the whole Vniuersitie, as well for the parties aforesaid, Iohn Wickliffe, Nicolas Herford, Philip Keppington, Iohn Ashton, and such other, as also for all other whom they know or iudge to be suspected of that doctrine, or to be maintainers, receiuers, and defenders of the foresaid parties, or their conclusions any manner of way; to the intent, that they being so apprehended through their diligent search, may bee within seuen daies of their admonitions expulsed the vniuersitie, and cited vp to the archb. of Cant. Before him to appeare, and to stand to their answers. Willing moreouer and commanding the said vicechancellor and proctors with other regents their assisters, that if any person or persons in any house, hall, or colledge, or in any other place shall be found to haue any of their bookes, or treatises compiled by the said John Wickliffe, Nicolas Herford, &c. they will cause without delay the said person or persons, with their books to be arrested and attached, and presented within one moneth, without correction, corruption, or mutation, to the foresaid archbishop, vpon their faith and alleageance, as they will auoid the forfeiture of all and singuler the liberties and priuiledges to the vniuersitie appertaining. And that they will be obedient to the archbishop aforesaid in the ordering hereof, and all other his iniunctions to bee obeied in all things lawfull and honest. Giuing moreouer in these our letters charge and commandement to the maior, bailiffes, and other the inhabitants of Oxford, to be assistant and attendant vnto the foresaid vicechancellor and proctors, touching the execution of the premisses, bearing the date of the fourteenth day of July: which was the yeere of our Lord, 1382.

Matters incident of Robert Rigges, Vicechancellor of Oxford, Nicolas Herford, and Philip Repington, with others.

Robert Rigs Vicechancellor of Oxford.

The Vicechancellor the same time in Oxford was M. Robert Rigges. The two proctors were John Huntman and Walter Dilly, who then as far as they durst, fauored the cause of John Wickliffe and that side. Insomuch, that the same time and yeere, which was an. 1382. when certaine publike sermons should be appointed customablie at the feast of the Ascension, and of Corpus Christi, to be preached in the cloyster of S. Frideswide (now called Thrists Church) before the people, by the vicechancellor aforesaid and the proctors (the doings thereof the vicechancellor aforesaid, and proctors had committed to Philip Repington and N. Her. so that N. Her. should preach on the Ascension day, and Repington vpō Corpus Christi day.) First Herford beginning was noted to defend John Wickliffe, openly to be a faithfull, good and innocent man: for the which no small adoe with outeries was among the friers. This Herford, after he had long fauoured and maintained Wickliffes part, grew first in suspition amongst the enemies of the truth. For allone as he began somewhat liberally and freelie to pronounce and vtter any thing which tended to the defence of Wickliffe, by and by the Carmelites, and all the orders of religion were in his top, and laid not a few heresies vnto his charge, the which they had strained here and there out of his sermons, and had compiled together in a certaine forme, by the hands of certaine notaries, through the industrie and diligence of one Peter Stokes a Carmelite, a kind of people prone and readie to all kind of mischiefe, byzores, debate, and dissension. After this the feast of Corpus Christi drew neere, vpon which day it was loked for that Repington should preach. This man was a canon of Leicester, and had before taken his first degree vnto doctorship: who preaching the same time at Brodgates, for the same sermon he became first suspected, and hated of the Pharisaicall brode of the friers. But through the great and notable dexteritie of his wit, (which all men did behold and see in him) accompanied with like modestie and honestie: he did so ouercome, or at the least asswage this crueltie and persecution which was towards him, that shortly after by the consent of the whole fellowship, hee was admitted doctor. Who as soone as he had taken it vpon him, by and by hee stepped forth in the schooles, and began immediatly to shew forth and vtter, that which hee had long hidden and dissembled. Protesting openly, that in all morall matters, he would defend Wickliffe. But as touching the sacrament he would as yet hold his peace, vntill such time as the Lord shall otherwise illuminate the hearts and minds of the clergie.

Nicolas Herford preaching on the Ascension day, defended Wickliffe.

Repington first canon of Leicester, after bishop of Lincolne.

Repington commenceth doctor.

Now the day of Corpus Christi aforesaid approching neere, when the friers vnderstood that this man should preach shortly, fearing lest that hee would rub the galles of their religion, they conuented with the archbi. of Cant. that the same day a little before that Philip should preach; Wickliffes conclusions which were priuatly condemned, should be openly defamed in the presence of the whole vniuersitie. The doing of which matter was committed to Peter Stokes frier, standerd bearer and chiefe champion of that side against Wickliffe.

Peter Stokes standerd bearer to the papists.

There were also letters sent vnto the commissarie, that he should helpe and aide him in publishing of the same conclusions, as is before declared.

These things thus done and finished, Repingdon at the houre appointed proceeded to his Sermon. In the which sermon among many other things, he was reported to haue vttered these sayings, or to this effect.

That the popes or bishops ought not to be recommended aboue temporall lords.

Notes of the Sermon of Repington.

Also that in morall matters he would defend master Wickliffe as a true catholike doctor.

Moreouer, that the duke of Lancaster was very earnestly affected and minded in this matter, and would that all such should be receiued vnder his protection: Besides many things mo which touched the praise and defence of Wickliffe.

And finallie, in concluding his sermon, he dismissed the people with this sentence: I will (said hee) in the speculatiue doctrine, as appertaining to the matter of the sacrament of the altar, keepe silence and hold my peace, vntill such time as God otherwise shall instruct and illuminate the hearts of the clergy.

When the sermon was done, Repington entred into S. Frideswides Church, accompanied with many of his friends: who, as the enemies surmised, were priuilie weaponed vnder their garments, if need had been. Frier Stokes the Carmelite aforesaid, suspecting all this to be against him, and being afraid of hurt, kept himselfe within the Sanctuarie of the church, not daring as then to put out his head. The Vicechancellor and Repington, friendly saluting one another in the Church porch, sent away the people, and so departed euery man home to his owne house. There was not a little ioy through the whole vniuersitie for that Sermon: but in the meane time, the vnquiet and busie Carmelite, slipt not his matter:

matter. For first by his letters hee declared the whole order of the matter vnto the archbishoppe, exaggerating the perils and dangers that he was in, requiring and desiring his helpe and aid, pretermitting nothing, whereby to moue and stirre vp the archbishops minde, which of his owne nature was as hot as a tosse, as they say, and ready enough to prosecute the matter of his owne accord, though no man had prickt him forward thereunto. Besides all this (three daies after) with a fierce and bold courage, the said Frier breathing out threatnings and heresies against them, took the way vnto the schooles, minding there to proue, that the pope and the bishops ought to be praied for before the lords temporall. Whiles this frier was thus occupied in the schooles, hee was mocked and derided of all men, and shortly after hee was sent for by the archbishop to London: whom immediatly after, the vicechancellor and Brightwell followed vp, to purge and cleere themselues and their adherents from the accusations of this Frier Peter. At the length they being examined vpon Wickliffes conclusions that were condemned: they did all consent, that they were worthily condemned. The vicechancellor being afterward accused for the contempt of the archbishops letters, when as he perceiued and saw, that no excuse would preuaile to auoid that danger, humbling himselfe vpon his knées, hee desired pardon. The which when he had now againe (as is aforesaid) albeit very hardly obtained; by the helpe of the bishoppe of Winchester, hee was sent away againe with certaine commandements, and suspensions of heretikes. Then began the hatred on either part somewhat to appeare and shew, and specially all men were offended, and in the tops of these Friers and religious men, vpon whom whatsoeuer trouble or mischiefe was raised vp, they did impute it as to the authors and causers of the same. Amongst whom there was one Henry Crompe, a monke Cistertian, a well learned diuine, which afterward was accused by the bishops of heresie. Yee at that time was openly suspected by the Commissary, because in his lectures he called the heretikes Lollards, from his acts (as they terme them) in the Schole. Then he comming by and by vp to London, made his complaint vnto the archbishop and to the kings counsell.

Whether the lords temporall were to be praied for before the pope and bishops.

The frier derided and mocked in the schooles.

Religious men first causers of this trouble.

Henry Crompe first an accuser of other, after accused himself for heresie.

Whereupon he obtaining the letters of the king, and of his counsell, by the vertue thereof (returning againe to the Vniuersitie) was released and restored againe to his former state: the words of which letter here followeth vnder written.

The copie of the kings letter.

The kings letter to the vicechancellor and procters of Oxford.

THe king to the Vicechancellour and procurators of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, greeting. Whereas we of late vnderstanding by the grieuous complaint of Henry Crompe, monke, and regent in Diuinitie within the said Vniuersity, how that he, being assisted by the reuerend father in God the archbishop of Canturbury, and by other clerks and diuines in the citie of London, to proceed in the condemnation of certaine conclusions erroneous and hereticall, hath been therefore molested by you: and that you through sinister suggestion of some aduersaies (pretending the peace of the said Vniuersity) to haue been broken by the said Henry in his last lecture, did therefore call him before you to appeare and answere; and for his not appearing, did therefore pronounce him as obstinat, and conuict of peace breaking: also haue suspended the said Henrie from his lectures, and all scholasticall acts. And whereas we by our writ, did call you vp for the same, to appeare and answere before our counsell vnto the premisses: so that all things being well tried and examined by the said counsell, it was found and determined, that all your processe against the said Henry, was void and of none effect, and commandement giuen, that the said Henry should be restored and admitted againe to his former lectures and scholasticall acts, and to his pristine state as you know. To the intent therefore that this decree aforesaid should be more duly executed of your part, we here by these presents straitly charge and command you, that you speedily reuoking againe all your processe against the said Henry in the Vniuersitie aforesaid, with all other that followed thereof; doe admit and cause to be restored againe the said Henry to his scholasticall acts, his accustomed lectures and pristine estate, without all delay according to the forme of the decree and determination aforesaid. Enioining you moreouer, and your commissaries or deputies, and your successors, and all other masters, regent and not regent, and other presidents, officers, ministers, and schollers of the Vniuersitie aforesaid, vpon your faith and allegiance you owe to vs, that you doe not impeach, molest or grieue, or cause to be grieued (any manner of way, priuie or apert) the said Frier Henry for the causes premised, or Frier Peter Stokes Carmelite, for the occasion of his absence from the Vniuersity, or Frier Stephan Packington Carmelite, or any other religious or secular person fauoring them, vpon the occasion of any either word or deed whatsoeuer, concerning the doctrine of master Iohn wickliffe, Nicolas Herford, and Philip Reppington, or the reproofe and condemnation of their heresies and errors, or the correction of their fauorers, but that you doe procure the peace, vnity, and quiet, within the said Vniuersity, and chiefly betweene the religious and secular persons: and that you with all diligence nourish, increase, & preserue the same to the vttermost of your strength. And that you in no case omit to doe it accordingly, vpon the forfaitures of all and singuler the liberties and priuiledges of the Vniuersity aforesaid. Witnesse my selfe at Westminster the 14. day of Iuly.

Henry Crompe complaineth to the kings counsell of the most secular masters of Oxford.

Henry Crompe, Peter Stokes, Carm. Stephā Packington, Carm. restored by the king to their scholastical acts.

Mention was made, as you heard a little before, how master Rigges Vicechancellor of Oxford, comming vp with master Brightwel to the archbishop of Canturbury, was there straitly examined of the conclusions of Wickliffe, where hee notwithstanding, through the help of the bishop of Winchester, obtained pardon, and was sent away againe with commandements and charges, to seek out all the fauorers of John Wickliffe. This commandement being received, Nicolas Herford, and Philip Reppington (being priuily warned by the said vicechancellor) in the meane season conueied them out of sight, and fled to the duke of Lancaster for succor and helpe: but the duke, whether for feare, or what cause else I cannot say, in the end forsoke his poore and miserable clients.

Herford and Reppington fled to the duke of Lancaster.

In the meane time, whyle they were fled thus to the duke, great search and inquisition was made for them, to cite and to apprehend them wheresoeuer they might be found. Whereupon the archbishop of Canturbury William Courtney, directed out his letters first to the vicechancellor of Oxford, then to the bishop of London named Robert Braybroke; charging them not onely to excommunicat the said Nicolas and Philip within their iurisdiction, and the said excommunication to bee denounced likewise throughout all the diocesse of his suffragans: but also moreouer, that diligent search and watch should be laid for them, both in Oxford and in London, that they might bee apprehended: requiring moreouer, by them to be certified againe, what they had done in the premisses. And this was written the fourteenth day of July, anno 1382. Ex Regist.

Letters of the archbishop to the vicechancellor.

Letters of the archbishop to the bishop of London.

Robert Braybroke bishop of London.

The 14. day of July, an. 1382.

Vnto these letters receiued from the archbishop, diligent certificat was giuen accordingly, as well of the bishop of London his part, as also of the vicechancellor, the tenor whereof was this.

The letter certificatorie of the Vicechancellor to the archbishop.

The letter of Rob. Rigges vicechancellor of Oxford to the archbishop.

TO the reuerend father in Christ, lord William, archbishop of Canturbury, primat of all England, and legat of the Apostolike sea: Robert Rigges, professor of Diuinity, and vicechancellor of the Vniuersity of Oxford, greeting with due honour. Your letters bearing the date of the 14. of Iuly I haue receiued: by the authority whereof I haue denounced, and caused to be denounced effectually, the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, to haue bin, and to be excommunicat publikely and solemnly in the church of S. Mary, and in the schooles, and to be cited also personally, if by any meanes they might be apprehended, according as you commanded. But after diligent search laid for them of my part, to haue them personally cited and apprehended, I could not finde neither the said M. Nicolas, nor M. Philip: who haue hid or conueied themselues, vnknowne to me, as here is well knowne. Whereof I thought here to giue signification to your Fatherhood. Sealed and testified with the seale of mine office. From Oxford the 25. of Iuly.

The 25. day of July, an. 1382.

In the meane time, Nicolas Herford and Reppington being repulsed of the duke, and destitute (as was said) of his supportation, whether they were sent, or of their owne accord went to the archbishop, it was vncertaine. This I finde in a letter of the foresaid archbishop, contained in his register: that Reppington the 23. day of October the same yeere 1382. was reconciled againe to the archbishop, and also by his generall letter was released, and admitted to his scholasticall acts in the Vniuersitie. And so was also John Ashton: of whom (Christ willing) more shall follow hereafter. Of Nicolas Herford all this while I finde no speciall relation.

Herford and Reppington repulsed from the duke of Lancaster.

The 23. day of October, Reppington released by the archbishop.

John Ashton reconciled by the archbishop.

In the meane time, about the twenty three of the month of September the said yeere, the king sent his mandate to the archbishop for collecting of a subsidie, and to haue a conuocation of the clergy summoned, against the nert parliament, which should begin the eighteenth day of Nouember. The archbishop likewise on the fifteenth day of October, directed his letters monitory (as the maner is) to Robert Braybroke bishop of London, to giue the same admonition to all his suffragans, and other of the clergy within his prouince for the assembling of the conuocation aforesaid. All which done and executed, the parliament begunne, being holden at Oxford the eighteenth day of Nouember, where the conuocation was kept in the monastery of Fridesswide in Oxford. In the which conuocation, the archbishop, with other bishops there sitting in their pontificalibus, declared two causes of that their present assembly, whereby (saith he) to represse heresies, which beganne newly in the realme to spring, and for correcting other excesses in the church. The other cause (said he) was to aid and support the king with some necessary subsidie of money to be gathered, which thus declared declared, the conuocation was continued till the day following, which was the 19. of Nouember.

The 19 day of Nouember, An. 1382.

At the said day and place, the archbishop with the other prelats assembling themselues as before: the archbishop after the vsed solemnitie, willed the procurators of the clergie, appointed for euery diocesse, to consult within themselues, in some conuenient seuerall place, what they thought for their parts touching the redresse of things, to bee notified and declared to him and to his brethren, &c.

Furthermore, forsomuch (saith he) as it is so noysed through all the realme, that there were certaine in the Vniuersitie of Oxford, which did hold and maintaine conclusions (as he calleth them) hereticall and erroneous condemned by him, and by other lawyers and doctors of Diuinitie: hee therefore assigned the bishops of Sarum, Hereford and Rochester, with William Rugge then vicechancellor of the Vniuersitie of Oxford (for belike Robert Rigge was then displaced) as also William Berton, and John Middleton doctors; giuing them his full authoritie with cursing and banning, to compell them to search and to enquire with all diligence and waies possible, ouer all and singuler whatsoeuer, either Doctors, Bachelors, or scholars of the said Vniuersitie, which did hold, teach, maintaine, and defend, in schooles or out of schooles, the said conclusions heretical (as he called them) or erroneous; and afterward to giue certificate truely and plainely touching the premisses. And thus for that day the assemblie brake vp to the nert, and so to the nert, and the third being Monday, the 24. day of Nouember: Ex Regist. W. Courtney.

Rob. Rigge displaced from the Vicechancellorship.

Inquisition made at Oxford.

The 24. day of Nouember, An. 1382.

On the which day, in the presence of the prelats and the clergie in the chapter house of S. Frideswide, came in Philip Repington (otherwise called of the brethren afterward Rampington) who there abiured the conclusions and assertions aforesaid, in this forme of words as followeth.

In Dei nomine, Amen. I Philip Repington, canon of the house of Leicester, acknowledging one catholike and apostolike faith, doe curse and also abiure all heresie, namely these heresies and errors vnder written, condemned and reproued by the decrees canonicall, and by you most reuerend father, touching which hitherto I haue beene diffamed: condemning moreouer and reprouing both them and the authors of them, and do confesse the same to bee catholically condemned: And sweare also by these holy Euangelists, which here I hold in my hand, and doe promise, neuer by any perswasions of men, nor by any way hereafter, to defend or hold as true, any of the said conclusions vnder written: but doe and will stand and adhere in all things, to the determination of the holy catholike church, and to yours, in this behalfe. Ouer and besides, all such as stand contrarie to this faith, I do pronounce them with their doctrine and followers worthie of euerlasting curse. And if I my selfe shall presume at any time to hold or preach any thing contrarie to the premisses, I shall be content to abide the seueritie of the canons. Subscribed with mine owne hand, and with mine owne accord, Philip Repington. And thus the said Rampington was discharged, who afterward was made bishop of Lincolne, and became at length the most bitter and extreme persecutor of this side, of all the other bishops within the realme, as in processe hereafter may appeare.

The abiuration of Philip Repington.

Philip Repington after his abiuration became a terrible persecutor.

After the abiuration of this Repington, immediatly was brought in John Ashton, student of Diuinitie; who being examined of those conclusions, and willed to say his mind, answered: that he was too simple and ignorant; and therefore would not, and could not answere any thing clearely or distinctly to those conclusions. Whereupon the archbishop assigned to him Doctor W. Rugge the vicechancellor, & other diuines, such as he required himselfe, to be instructed in the mysterie of those conclusions against the after noone: who then appearing againe after dinner before the archbishop and the prelats, did in like sort and forme of words abiure as did Repington before.

A short time my lord, for a man in one fore noone to learne a faith against his conscience.

The abiuration of John Ashton.

Of this John Ashton we read, that afterward by Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canturburie, hee was cited and condemned; but whether he died in prison, or was burned, we haue yet no certainetie to shew. This is certaine by the plaine words of the Chronicle of saint Albons, that when the archb. with his Doctors and friers sat in examination vpon this said John Ashton in London: the Londoners brake open the doore of the conclaue, ipsumq; Archiepiscopum in ciuitate sedentem impediuerunt, cum processum fecisset contra Iohannem Ashton, &c. That is, and did let the archbishop himselfe sitting in the citie of London, when he would haue made processe against J. Ashton, An. 1382. And thus much of J. Ashton.

Ex chron. Monast. D. Albani. J. Ashton.

The Londoners open the doore where the archbishop sat against J. Ashton.

As touching Nicolas Herford, during the time of this conuocation, he did not appeare; and therefore had the sentence of excommunication. Against which he put his appeale from the archbishop to the king and his counsell. The archb. would not admit it, but finding staies and stops caused him to bee apprehended and inclosed in prison. Notwithstanding through the will of God, and good meanes he escaped out of the prison, returning againe to his former exercise, and preaching as hee did before, albeit in as couert and secret maner as hee could. Whereupon the archbishop thundring out his bolts of excommunication against him, sendeth to all parsons and ministers, willing them in all churches, and all festuall daies, to diuulge the said his excommunication against him, to all men: Writeth moreouer and sendeth speciall charge to all and singuler of the laitie, to beware that their simplicitie be not deceiued by his doctrine, but that they like catholike children will auoide him, and cause him of all other to be auoided.

M. Herford would not appeare.

N. Herford appealed from the archbishop.

N. Herford cast into prison.

Herford escapeth out of prison.

Furthermore, not contented with this, he addresseth also his letter vnto the king, requiring also the aide of his temporall sword to chop off his necke, whom he had alreadie cast downe. See and note Reader, the seraphicall charitie of these priestly prelats towards the poore redeemed flocke of Christ. And yet these be they which washing their hands with Pilate, say and pretend: Nobis non licet interficere quenquam: It is not our parts to kill any man. The copie of the letter written to the king is this.

The letter of the archbishop to the king.

TO the most excellent prince in Christ, &c. William, &c. greeting in him by whom kings doe reigne, and princes beare rule. Vnto your kingly celsitude by the tenour of these presents we intimate, that one master Nicolas Herford doctor of Diuinitie, for his manifest contumacie and offence in not appearing before vs being called at the day and place assigned, therfore is inwrapped in the sentence of the greater curse, publikelie by our ordinarie authoritie: And in the same sentence hath continued now fortie daies, and yet still continueth with indurate heart, wickedly contemning the keyes of the church, to the great perill both of his soule, and to the pernicious example of other. Forsomuch therefore, as the holy mother the church hath not to doe or to proceede any further in this matter; we humblie desire your kingly maiestie, to direct out your letters for the apprehending of the said excommunicate according to the custome of this realme of England, wholesomelie obserued and kept hitherto: to the intent, that such whom the feare of God doth not restraine from euill, the discipline of the secular arme may bridle and plucke backe from offending. Your princely celsitude the Lord long continue. From Lambeth the 15. of Ianuarie.

The cruell letter of the archb. against M. Herford to the king.

This is not to seeke againe that which is lost by the rule of Ezechiel.

To this letter of the archbishop, might not the king (gentle Reader) thus answere againe, and answere well?

Prosopœia. What the king might haue answered againe.

YOur letters with your complaint and requests in the same contained we haue receiued and well considered. For the accomplishing whereof, ye shall vnderstand, that as we are readilie bent to gratifie and satisfie your mind in this behalfe on the one side: so we must beware againe on the other, that our authoritie be not abused either to oppresse before wee know, or to iudge before wee haue tried. Wherefore forsomuch as you in your letters doe excite and sharpen the seuere discipline of our secular sword, against one Nicolas Herford, for his not appearing before you: and yet shewing in the said your letters no certaine cause to vs what you haue to charge him withall: we therefore following the example of Alexander Magnus, or rather the rule of equitie in opening both our eares indifferently, to heare as well the one part as the other, doe assigne both to him, whenas he may be found, and to you when ye shall be called, a terme to appeare before vs. To the intent that the controuersie betweene you and him, standing vpon points of religion, being tried by the true touchstone of Gods holy word, due correction indifferentlie may be ministred according as the offence shal be found. In the meane time, this we cannot but something maruell at in your said letters; First, to see you men of the church and angels of peace, to be so desirous of blood. Secondlie, to consider you againe so fierce in prosecuting the breach of your law, and yet so cold in pursuing the breach of the expresse law of God and his commandements. Thirdly, to behold the vnstable doublenesse in your proceedings, who pretending in your publike sentence, to become as intreaters for them to vs in the bowels of Iesus Christ, that we will withdraw from them the rigor of our seueritie, and yet in your letters you be they which most set vs on. If not appearing before you, be such a matter of contumacie in case of your law, that it is in no case to bee spared: what should then our princelie discipline haue done to men of your calling? Henrie Spenser bishop of Norwich, being at Canturburie, was sent for by our speciall commandement to come to our speech, denied to come, and yet we spared him. Iohn Stratford archbishop your predecessor, being required of our progenitor king Edward the third to come to him at Yorke, would not appeare: by the occasion whereof, Scotland the same time was lost, and yet was he suffred. The like might be said of Robert Winchelsey in the daies of king Edward the first, and of Edmund archbishop of Canturburie, in the daies of king Henrie the third; Stephan Langton was sent for by king Iohn to come, he came not. The like contumacie was in Becket toward K. Henrie the 2. Also in Anselme toward king Henrie the first. All these for their not appearing before their princes, ye doe excuse, who notwithstanding might haue appeared without danger of life, this one man for not appearing before you, you thinke worthie of death: whose life you would haue condemned notwithstanding, if he had appeared. It is no reason if the Squirill climing to the tree from the Lions clawes would not appeare, being sent for to be deuoured; that the Eagle therefore should seise vpon him without any iust cause declared against the partie. Wherefore according to this and to that aforesaid, when he shall appeare, and you be called, and the cause iustly weighed, due execution shall be ministred.

And thus far concerning Nicolas Herford, and the other aforesaid. But all this meane while what became of J. Wickliffe it is not certainely knowne. Albeit so farre as may be gathered out of Walden, it appeareth that he was banished and driuen to exile. In the meane time it is not to be doubted, but he was aliue during all this while, whersoeuer he was, as by his letter may appeare, which he about this time wrote to pope Vrbane the 6. In the which letter he doth purge himselfe, that being commanded to appeare before the pope at Rome, hee came not: declaring also in the same a briefe confession of his faith. The copy of which epistle here followeth.

The epistle of Iohn Wickliffe sent vnto pope Vrbane the 6. An. 1382.

The epistle of J. Wickliffe to pope Vrbane.

VErilie I doe reioyce to open and declare the faith which I doe hold vnto euery man: And specially vnto the bishop of Rome: the which forsomuch as I doe suppose to be sound and true, he will most willingly confirme my said faith, or if it bee erroneous amend the same.

First I suppose, that the Gospell of Christ, is the whole body of Gods law, and that Christ which did giue that same law himselfe, I beleeue him to be a very man, and in that point, to exceede the law of the Gospell, and all other parts of the Scripture. Againe, I doe giue and hold the bishop of Rome, forsomuch as he is the vicar of Christ here in earth, to be bound most of all other men vnto that law of the Gospell. For the greatnesse amongst Christs disciples, did not consist in worldly dignity or honours, but in the neere and exact following of Christ, in his life and maners: whereupon I do gather out of the heart of the law of the Lord, that Christ for the time of his pilgrimage here, was a most poore man, abiecting and casting off all worldly rule and honour, as appeareth by the gospell of Mat. the 8. and the 2. Cor. 8. chap.

The true disciples of Christ seeke no honor.

Hereby I doe fully gather, that no faithfull man ought to follow, neither the pope himselfe, neither any of the holy men, but in such points, as he hath followed the Lord Iesus Christ. For Peter, and the sonnes of Zebede by desiring worldly honour, contrarie to the following of Christs steps, did offend, and therefore in those errours, they are not to be followed.

Hereof I doe gather, as a counsell, that the pope ought to leaue vnto the secular power, all temporall dominion and rule, and thereunto effectually to moue and exhort his whole clergie, for so did Christ; and specially by his apostles. Wherfore if I haue erred in any of these points, I will most humblie submit my selfe vnto correction, euen by death if necessitie so require: And if I could labour according to my will, or desire in mine owne person, I would surely present my selfe before the bishop of Rome; but the Lord hath otherwise visited me to the contrarie, and hath taught me rather to obey God then men. Forsomuch then, as God hath giuen vnto our Pope, iust and true euangelicall instinctions, we ought to pray, that those motions be not extinguished by any subtle or craftie deuice.

And that the pope and cardinals be not moued to doe any thing, contrarie vnto the law of the Lord. Wherfore let vs pray vnto our God, that he will so stir vp our pope Vrbane the sixth as he began, that he with his clergie may follow the Lord Iesus Christ, in life and maners: and that they may teach the people effectually, and that they likewise may faithfully follow them in the same. And let vs specially pray, that our pope may be preserued from all maligne and euill counsell, as which doe know that euill and enuious men of his household would giue him. And seeing the Lord will not suffer vs to bee tempted aboue our power, much lesse then wil he require of any creature to doe that thing which they are not able, forsomuch, as that is the plaine condition and maner of Antichrist.

The pope occupied so in schismaticall wars that he had no leisure to other matters.

Thus much wrote Iohn Wickliffe vnto pope Vrban. But this pope Vrbane, otherwise tearmed Turbanus, was so hot in his warres against Clement the French pope his aduersarie, that he had no leisure, and lesse list, to attend vnto Wickliffes matters. By the occasion of which schisme, God so prouided for poore Wickliffe, that he was in some more rest and quietnesse. Concerning which schismaticall warres of these popes, forasmuch as we haue here entred into the mention thereof, it shall not be impertinent from the order of our story, digressing a little from the matter of Iohn Wickliffe, to touch something of the tragicall doings of these two holy popes, striuing for the triple crowne: to the intent that the christian Reader (iudgeing by their fruits and proceedings) may see and vnderstand what difference is betweene these popes, and Christ and his apostles. For though in the storie of the Gospell it is read, that certaine of the disciples did striue which should be the greater; yet neither doe we reade that one of them tooke euer weapon against the other: and moreouer in the said storie of the Gospell it doth appeare, that they in so striuing as they did, were therefore sharpely rebuked of our Sauiour Christ, and were taught by him another lesson.

Difference betweene the apostles and the popes in striuing for preeminence.

About the beginning of the next yeare following, which was An. 1383. Pope Vrbane setting all his studie how to represse and conquer the contrarie pope his aduersarie, being then at Auenion (seeing all his other meanes to faile, and that his crosskeyes could doe no good) tooke to him the sword of Romulus, and set vpon him with open warre. And first deuising with himselfe whom hee might best chuse for his chefe champion: thought none meeter for such affaires then Henry Spencer being then bishop of Norwich a yong and a stout prelate, more fitter for the camping cure, then for the peaceable church of Christ, as partly also might appeare before by his acts done at Lennam in striuing for the maiors mace, mentioned before, pag. 394. Vnto this bishop of Norwich, the pope had sent his buls about this time, to Croisy whosoeuer would go with him into France, to destroy the Antipope, which named himselfe Clement, and to make warre against all those that tooke his part. Which buls, for that they gaue vnto him such great authoritie, he caused to be published, in the parliament house, and caused the copies of the same to be sent all about, and to bee set vp and fastned vpon all the church doores and in mastserie gates, that all men might reade them. In the which buls these priuiledges were granted, the copie wherof here followeth.

Anno 1383. The pope set to warre.

The very fruits of Antichrist.

1 In primis, that the said bishop of Norwich may vse his sword against the Antipope, and all his adherents, fauorers and counsellors, and with violence put them to death.

2 Item, that he hath full power to inquire of all and singuler such schismatiks, and to put them in prison: and to confiscate all their goods, moueable and immoueable.

3 Item, that he hath power and authoritie to depriue al lay men that are such schismatiks of all maner secular offices whatsoeuer, and to giue their offices to other fit and conuenient persons.

4 Item, that he may depriue all such clerks, and declare them to be schismatiks, and in this behalfe to giue and bestow their benefices either with cure or without cure, their dignities, parsonages or offices, to other persons more meet for the same.

5 Item, he hath power and authoritie ouer lay persons that are exempt, and clerks both secular and regular, yea although they be friers mendicants, or masters and professors of other houses or hospitals of S. Johns of Ierusalem, or saint Marie of Flanders, or professors of what order soeuer else.

6 Item, he hath power to dispence with what secular clerke soeuer, being beneficed either with cure or without cure, and also with such as haue dignities, parsonages or offices, being regulars either exempt or not exempt, that euery one of them may be absent with him from their dignities and benefices, &c. vnder the standard of the crosse, without licence of any of their prelats required, and yet to receiue and take the intire commodities of their benefices, as though they had been personally resident vpon the same.

7 Item, there is granted to al that passe the seas in this quarell, either at their owne expences or at the expenses of any other, full remission of their sinnes: and as large priuiledges are granted to all those that goe ouer the sea with him, as to any that pay their money, or go to fight for the holy land.

8 Also al such as with their proper goods and substance shall giue sufficient stipend to able souldiers, at the discretion of the foresaid lord bishop mustered, or by any other his deputie, although he himselfe be not personally at this businesse aforesaid: yet shall hee haue like remission and indulgence, as they which haue been personally with him in this expedition.

9 Item, all they are partakers of this remission, which shall giue any part of their goods to the said bishop to fight against the said schismatiks.

10 Item, if any shall chance to die in the iourney, that are souldiers vnder the said standard of the crosse, or else before the quarrell by some meanes be finished: shall fully and wholly receiue the said grace, and shall be partakers of the foresaid remission and indulgence.

11 Item, he hath power to excommunicate, suspend and interdict what persons soeuer be rebellious or disturbers of him in the execution of his power and authoritie committed vnto him, of what dignitie, state, degree, preeminence, order, place, or condition soeuer they shall be: whether they shall be either of regall, queenly, or imperiall dignitie, or of what dignitie else soeuer either ecclesiasticall or mundane.

12 Item, he hath power and authoritie to compell and inforce what religious person soeuer, to appoint them and send them ouer sea, if it seeme good to him: yea although they be professors of the friers mendicants for the execution of the premisses.

The popes absolution by the bishop pronounced.

BY the authoritie apostolicall to mee in this behalfe committed, wee absolue thee A. B. from all thy sinnes confessed with with thy mouth, and being contrite with thy heart, and therof thou wouldest be confessed if they came vnto thy memory: and we grant vnto thee, plenarie remission of all manner of sins, and once promise vnto thee thy part of the reward of all iust men, and of euerlasting saluation. And as many priuiledges as are granted to them that goe to fight for the holy land, wee grant vnto thee: and of all the praiers and benefits of the church, the vniuersall Synod, as also of the holy catholike church, we make thee partaker of.

Christs passion hath here no place.

This couragious or rather outragious bishop, armed thus with the popes authoritie, and prompt with his priuiledges, in the yeare aforesaid, 1383. about the time of Lent, came to the parliament, where great consultation and contention and almost no lesse schisme was about the voyage of this popish bishop in the parliament, then was betweene the popes themselues. In the which parliament many there were, which thought it not safe to commit the kings people and subiects, vnto a rude and vnskilfull priest. So great was the diuersitie of iudgements in that behalfe, that the voyage of the said bishop was protracted vnto the Saturday afore passion Sunday. In the which Sunday was sung the solemne antheme, Ecce crucem Domini, fugite partes aduersæ. That is, Behold the crosse of the Lord; Flie away all you aduersaries. After which Sunday, the parties so agreed amongst themselues by common decree, that the bishop should set forward in his voyage, hauing to him giuen the fifteenth which was granted to the king in the parliament before. Which things thus concluded in the parliament, this warlike bishop preparing before all things in a readinesse set forward in his pope-holy iourney. Who about the moneth of May, being come to Canturburie, and there tarying for the wind, in the monasterie of saint Augustine, receiued a writ from the king that he should returne to the king, and to know further of his pleasure. The bishop fearing that if he turned againe to the king, his iourney should be staid, and so all his labour and preparance lost with great derision and shame vnto him: thought better to commit himselfe to fortune with that little armie he had, then by tarying to be made a ridicle to his aduersaries. Wherefore he sent word backe againe to the king, that he was now readie prepared, well forward on his iourney. And that it was not expedient now to protract the time for any kind of talke, which peraduenture should bee to no maner of purpose: and that it was more conuenient for him to hasten in his iourney to Gods glory, and also to the honour of the king. And thus he calling his men vnto him, entred forthwith the seas, and went to Calis: where he waiting a few daies for the rest of his armie, after the receite of them, toke his iourney first to the towne of Grauenidge, which hee besieged so desperately, without any preparance of engins of warre or counsell, or of politicke men skilfull in such affaires: that he seemed rather to fly vpon them, then to inuade them. At length through the superstition of our men, trusting vpon the popes absolution, he so hardily approched the walles and inuaded the enemies, that a great number of them were piteously slaine with shot and wild fire: till at the end (the inhabiters being oppressed and vanquished) our men entred the towne with their bishop, where they at his commandement destroying both man, woman, and child, left not one aliue of all them, which remained in the whole towne. Sicque crucis beneficio factum, vt crucis hostes ita delerentur, quòd vnus ex eis non remansit: that is, And so it came to passe by the vertue of the crosse, that our men croysed so preuailed against the enemies of the crosse, that not one of them remained aliue. Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani.

O bloodines of Antichrist.

Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani in vita Rich. 2.

From Grauenidge this warlike bishop set forward to Dunkyrke, where not long after the Frenchmen meeting with him ioyned with them in battell: in which battell (if the storie bee true) 12. thousand of the Frenchmen were slaine in the chase, and of our men but seuen onely missing. It would require a long tractation here to discourse all things done in these popish warres. Also it would be no lesse ridiculous to view and behold the glorious temeritie of this new vpstart captaine. But certes, lamentable it is to see the pitifull slaughter and murther of Christs people, by the meanes of these pitilesse popes, during these wars in France: As when the bishop comming from Dunkyrke to the siege of Ypres, a great number of Englishmen there were lost, and much money consumed, and yet nothing done effectually, to the great shame and ignominie of the bishop. Againe, after the siege of Ypres (thus with shame broke vp) the said bishop proceeding with a small power, to fight with the French kings campe, contrarie to the counsell of his captaines, which counted him rash and vnskilfull in his attempt, was faine to breake companie with them, whereby part of the armie went vnto Burburgh, and the bishop with his part returned to Grauenidge, which both townes shortly after were besieged by the French armie, to the great losse both of the English and French men. In fine, when the bishop could keepe Grauenidge no longer, the said bishop with his croysies, crossing the seas, came home againe as wise as he went. And thus making an end of this pontificall warre, we will returne againe from whence we digressed, to the storie and matter of John Wickliffe.

Which John Wickliffe returning againe within short space, either from his banishment, or from some other place where he was secretly kept, repaired to his parish of Lutterworth, where he was parson, there quietly departing this mortall life, slept in peace in the Lord, in the beginning of the yeare 1384. vpon Silluesters day.

Here is to be noted the great prouidence of the Lord in this man, as in diuers other, whom the Lord so long preserued in such rages of so many enemies, from all their hands, euen to his old age. For so it appeareth by Thomas Walden, writing against him in his tomes entituled De Sacramentis contra Wicleuum: that he was well aged before hee departed: by that which the foresaid Walden writeth of him in the Epilog, speaking of Wickliffe in these words: Ita vt cano placeret, quod iuueni complacebat, &c. That is: so that the same thing pleased him in his old age, which did please him being yong. Whereby it seemeth that Wickliffe liued till hee was an old man by this report. Such a Lord is God, that whom hee will haue kept, nothing can hurt.

Waldensis 2. tom. de Sacramentis.

This Wickliffe had written diuers and sundrie workes, the which in the yeare of our Lord 1410. were burnt at Oxford, the abbat of Shrewsburie being then commissarie, and sent to ouersee that matter. And not onely in England, but in Boheme likewise, the bookes of the said Wickliffe were set on fire, by one Subincus archbishop of Prage, who made diligent inquisition for the same, and burned them: The number of the volumes, which hee is said to haue burned most excellently written, and richly adorned with bosses of gold, and rich corerings (as Eneas Siluius writeth) were aboue the number of two hundred.

The number of Wickliffes bookes came to 200. volumes. Eneas Siluius.

Iohannes Cocleus in his booke De historia Hussitarum, speaking of the bookes of Wickliffe, testifieth, that hee wrote verie many bookes, sermons, and tractations. Moreouer, the said Cocleus speaking of himselfe, recordeth also: that there was a certaine bishop in England which wrote vnto him, declaring, that he had yet remaining in his custodie two huge and mightie volumes of John Wickliffes workes, which for the quantitie thereof might seeme to be equall with the workes of saint Augustine. Hæc Cocleus.

The bookes of Wickliffe.

Amongst other of his treatises I my selfe also haue found out certaine, as de sensu & veritate scripturæ. Item, De Ecclesia. Item, De Eucharistia confessio Wickleui; which I intend hereafter, the Lord so granting, to publish abrode.

As concerning certaine answeres of John Wickliffe which he wrote to king Richard the 2. touching the right and title of the king, and of the pope: because they are but short, I thought here to annere them. The effect whereof here followeth.

Iohn Wickliffes answere vnto king Richard the second, as touching the right and title of the king and the pope.

IT was demanded, whether the kingdome of England may lawfully in case of necessitie, for his owne defence, detaine and keepe backe the treasure of the kingdome, that it be not carried away to forren and strange nations, the pope himselfe demanding and requiring the same vnder paine of censure, and by vertue of obedience.

Wickliffe setting apart the minds of learned men, what might be said in the matter, either by the canon law, or by the law of England or the ciuill law, it resteth (saith he) now onely to perswade and proue the affirmatiue part of this doubt by the principles of Christs law. And first I proue it thus: Euery naturall body hath power giuen of God to resist against his contrarie, and to preserue it selfe in due estate, as Philosophers knew very well.

Insomuch, that bodies without life, are indued with such kind of power (as it is euident) vnto whom hardnesse is giuen to resist those things that would breake it, and coldnesse to withstand the heate that dissolueth it. Forsomuch then, as the kingdome of England (after the maner and phrase of the Scriptures) ought to bee one body, and the clergie with the communaltie, the members thereof, it seemeth that the same kingdome hath such power giuen it of God; and so much the more apparant, by how much the same body is more precious vnto God, adorned with vertue and knowledge. Forsomuch then as there is no power giuen of God vnto any creature, for any end or purpose, but that hee may lawfully vse the same to that end and purpose: it followeth that our kingdome may lawfully keep backe and detaine their treasure for the defence of it selfe, in what case soeuer necessitie do require the same.

Secondarilie, the same is proued by the law of the Gospell. For the pope cannot challenge the treasure of this kingdome, but vnder the title of almes, and consequently vnder the pretence of the workes of mercy, according to the rule of charity.

The popes riches is but the almes of good men.

But in case aforesaid, the title of almes ought vtterly to cease: Ergo, the right and title of challenging the treasure of our realme shall cease also in the presupposed necessitie. For forsomuch as all charitie hath his beginning of himselfe, it were no worke of charitie, but of meere madnesse, to send away the treasures of the realme vnto forren nations, whereby the realme it selfe may fall into ruine, vnder the pretence of such charitie.

Necessitie taketh away the popes almes.

It appeareth also by this, that Christ the head of the church, whom all christian priests ought to follow, liued by the almes of deuout women, Luke 7. 8. Hee hungred and thirsted, hee was a stranger, and many other miseries he sustained, not only in his members, but also in his owne body, as the apostle witnesseth, Corin. 8. He was made poore for your sakes, that through his pouertie, you might bee rich: whereby in the first endowing of the church, whatsoeuer hee were of the clergie that had any temporall possessions, hee had the same by forme of a perpetuall almes, as both writings and chronicles doe witnesse.

Note well the saying here of Bernard.

Wherupon S. Bernard, declaring in his 2. booke to Eugenius, that he could not challenge any secular dominion by right of succession, as being the vicar of S. Peter, writeth thus: That if saint Iohn should speake vnto the pope himselfe, as Bernard doth vnto Eugenius, were it to be thought that he would take it patiently? But let it be so, that you doe challenge it vnto you, by some other waies or meanes; but truely by any right or title apostolicall, you cannot so doe. For how could hee giue vnto you that which hee had not himselfe? That which hee had hee gaue you, that is to say, care ouer the church: but did hee giue you any lordship or rule? Hearke what hee saith: Not bearing rule (saith he) as lords in the clergie, but behauing your selues as examples to the flocke. And because thou shalt not thinke it to be spoken onely in humilitie, and not in veritie, marke the word of the Lord himselfe in the Gospell: The kings of the people do rule ouer them; but you shall not doe so.

The pope must leane his lordship or else apostleship, let him chuse whether.

Here lordship and dominion is plainely forbidden to the apostles, and darest thou then vsurpe the same? If thou wilt be a lord, thou shalt lose thine apostleship; or if thou wilt bee an apostle thou shalt lose thy lordship. For truely thou shalt depart from the one of them. If thou wilt haue both, thou shalt lose both, or else thinke thy selfe to be of that number, of who God doth so greatly complaine, saying: They haue reigned, but not through me: They are become princes, and I haue not knowne it. Now if it doe suffice thee to rule with the Lord, thou hast thy glory, but not with God. But if wee will keepe that which is forbidden vs, let vs heare what is said: He that is the greatest amongst you (saith Christ) shall bee made as the least, and he which is the highest shall bee as the minister; and for example, set a child in the middest of them. So this then is the true forme and institution of the apostles trade: Lordship and rule is forbidden, ministration and seruice commanded.

The maner of the apostles.

By these words of this blessed man, whom the whole church doth reuerence and worship, it doth appeare that the pope hath not power to occupie the church goods as lord thereof, but as minister, and seruant, and procor for the poore. And would to God that the same proud and greedy desire of rule and lordship which this seate doth challenge vnto it, were not a preamble to prepare a way vnto Antichrist. For it is euident by the Gospell, that Christ through his pouertie, humilitie, and suffering of iniurie, got vnto him the children of his kinngdome.

How the pope ought to occupie the church goods.

The way to obtaine the kingdome of Christ.

And moreouer, so farre as I remember, the same blessed man Bernard in his third Booke writeth also thus vnto Eugenius: I feare no other greater poison to happen vnto thee, then greedie desire of rule and dominion.

This Wickliffe albeit in his life time had many grieuous enemies, yet was there none so cruell vnto him, as the clergie it selfe. Yet notwithstanding hee had many good friends, men not only of the base and meanest sort, but also nobility, amongst whom these men are to bee numbred: John Clenbon, Lewes Clifford, Richard Sturius, Thomas Latimer, William Neuill, John Mountegew, who plucked downe all the Images in his church. Besides all these, there was the earle of Salisburie, who for contempt in him noted towards the Sacrament, in carrying it home to his house, was enioyned by Radulfe Exgom bishop of Salisburie, to make in Salisburie a crosse of stone, in which all the storie of the matter should bee written, and he euery Friday during his life to come to the crosse barefoot, and bareheaded in his shirt, and there kneeling vpon his knees, to do penance for his fact. Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani in vita Ric. 2.

The earle of Salisburie.

The penance of the earle of Salisburie.

The Londoners at this time somewhat boldly trusting to the Maiors authoritie, who for that yeare was John of Northampton; tooke vpon them the office of the bishops, in punishing the vices (belonging to ciuill law) of such persons as they had found and apprehended in committing both fornication and adulterie. For first they put the women in the prison which amongst them then was named Dolium. And lastly bringing them into the market place, where euery man might behold them, and cutting off their golden lockes from their heads; they caused them to be caried about the streetes, with bagpipes and trumpets blowne before them, to the intent they should bee the better knowne and their companies auoided: according to the maner then of certaine theeues that were named Appellatores, (accusers or peachers of others that were guiltlesse) which were so serued. And with other such like opprobrious and reprochfull contumelies, did they serue the men also that were taken with them in committing the forenamed wickednesse and vices. Here the storie recordeth how the said Londoners were incouraged hereunto by Io. Wickliffe and others that followed his doctrine to perpetrate this act, in the reproch of the prelats being of the clergie. For they said, that they did not so much abhor to see the great negligence of those to whom that charge belonged, but also their filthie auarice they did as much detest: which for greedinesse of money were choked with bribes, and winking at the penalties due to such persons by the lawes appointed, suffered such fornicators and incestuous persons fauourablie to continue in their wickednes. They said furthermore, that they greatly feared, lest for such wickednesse perpetrated within the citie and so apparantly dissimuled; that God would take vengeance vpon them and destroy their citie. Wherefore they said, that they could doe no lesse then to purge the same: lest by the sufferance thereof, God would bring a plague vpon them, or destroy them with the sword, or cause the earth to swallow vp both them and their citie. Hæc ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani.

The fruits of good and true doctrine.

Ex Chron. Monast. D. Albani.

¶ This storie (gentle Reader) albeit the author thereof whom I follow, doth giue it out in reprochfull wise, to the great discommendation of the Londoners for so doing: yet I thought not to omit, but to commit the same to memorie; which seemeth to me rather to tend vnto the worthie commendation both of the Londoners that so did, and to the necessarie example of all other cities to follow the same. After these things thus declared, let vs now adioyne the testimoniall of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, of Iohn Wickliffe.

The publike testimonie giuen out by the Vniuersity of Oxford, touching the commendation of the great learning and good life of Iohn Wickliffe.

VNto all and singuler the children of our holy mother the church, to whom this present letter shall come; the vicechancellor of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, with the whole congregation of the masters, wish perpetuall health in the Lord. Forsomuch as it is not commonly seene, that the acts and monuments of valiant men, nor the praise and merits of good men should be passed ouer and hidden with perpetuall silence, but that true report and fame should continually spread abrode the same in strange and farre distant places, both for the witnesse of the same, and example of others: Forsomuch also as the prouident discretion of mans nature being recompensed with cruelty, hath deuised and ordained this buckler and defence, against such as doe blaspheme and slander other mens doings, that whensoeuer witnesse by word of mouth cannot be present, the pen by writing may supplie the same:

Ex tomo operum Ioan. Huss. fol. vlt.

Hereupon it followeth, that the speciall good will and care which we bare vnto Io. Wickliffe, sometime child of this our Vniuersitie, and professour of Diuinitie; mouing and stirring our minds (as his manners and conditions required no lesse) with one mind, voice, and testimonie, wee doe witnesse, all his conditions and doings throughout his whole life, to haue been most sincere and commendable: whose honest maners and conditions, profoundnesse of learning, and most redolent renoune and fame, wee desire the more earnestly to bee notified and knowne vnto all faithfull, for that we vnderstand the maturitie and ripenesse of his conuersation, his diligent labours and trauels to tend to the praise of God, the helpe and safegard of others, and the profit of the church.

Great learning ioyned with good life and godlinesse.

Wherefore we signifie vnto you by these presents, that his conuersation (euen from his youth vpwards, vnto the time of his death) was so praise worthie and honest, that neuer at any time was there any note or spot of suspition noysed of him. But in his answering, reading, preaching and determining, hee behaued himselfe laudably, and as a stout and valiant champion of the faith; vanquishing by the force of the Scriptures, all such who by their wilful beggery blasphemed and slandered Christs religion. Neither was this said doctor conuict of any heresie, either burned of our prelats after his buriall. God forbid that our prelats should haue condemned a man of such honestie, for an heretike: who amongst all the rest of the Vniuersitie, had written in Logicke, Philosophie, Diuinitie, Moralitie, and the speculatiue art without peere. The knowledge of which all and singuler things, wee doe desire to testifie and deliuer forth: to the intent, that the fame and renoune of this said doctor, may be the more euident and had in reputation, amongst them, vnto whose hands these present letters testimoniall shall come.

The bones of Wickliffe were not yet commanded by the councell of Constance to be burned.

Ex 2. tomo operis I. Huss. fol. vlt.

In witnes wherof, we haue caused these our letters testimoniall to bee sealed with our common seale. Dated at Oxford in our congregation house, the 5. day of October, in the yeare of our Lord, 1406.

The testimonie and words of master Iohn Hus, as touching M. Iohn Wickliffe.

VErilie, as I do not beleeue neither grant that M. J. Wickliffe is an heretike: so do I not denie, but firmely hope that he is no heretike: Forsomuch as in all matters of doubt I ought as neere as I can, to chuse the best part. Wherfore I surely trust, that M. J. Wickliffe is one of the number of them which are saued. The words of Christ moue me thereunto, saying, Mat. 7. Doe ye not iudge, that yee bee not iudged: and Luke

The testimony and iudgement of M. Iohn Hus concerning Iohn Wickliffe.

the 6. Doe not condemne, and ye shall not be condemned, and the words of the apostle, 1. Cor. 4. Doe yee not iudge before the Lord himselfe doe come, the which shall open those things that are hid in darknesse, to manifest the priuities of all harts.

Secondly, the loue and charitie which I ought to beare vnto my neighbor (louing him as my selfe) doth moue me thereunto, Luk. 10.

Thirdly, his good fame and report moueth me, the which he hath of the good prelats, of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, and not of the wicked, and commonly of the vulgar sort; although not of the couetous, proud, and luxurious prelats.

Fourthly, his owne workes and writings doe stirre mee thereunto, by the which he goeth about with his whole indeauor, to reduce all men vnto the law of Christ, and specially the clergie: that they should forsake the pompe and dominion of this world, and with the apostles leade the life of Christ.

Fifthly, his owne protestations, which he doth oftentimes vse in his sentences, often repeating the same, doe not a little moue me.

Sixthly, his earnest desire and affection which he had vnto the law of Christ, doth not a little allure me thereunto, disputing of the veritie thereof, the which cannot faile in any one iot or title. Whereupon hee made a booke of the veritie of the holy Scripture, approuing euen vnto the vttermost, the truth of Gods law.

Lib. de sensu & veritate scripturæ per I. Wicklauum.

Wherefore it were too foolish a consequent to say, that because the number of the prelats & clergie in England, France, and Boheme doe count Iohn Wickliffe for an heretike, that therefore he is an heretike, &c. Like as the reason for burning of the bookes; for it is written in the first booke of Machabes, first chapter: that they did burne the bookes of the Lord, tearing them in pieces, and whosoeuer was found to haue kept any bookes of the testament or will of the Lord, or the which obserued and kept the law of the Lord, they were by the kings commandement put to death. If then the burning of the bookes by wicked men did argue or proue the euilnes of these bookes, then was the law of God euill and naught.

True iudgement standeth not vpon number and multitude.

Burning of bookes proueth not by and by an hereticke.

So likewise the burning of S. Gregories bokes, and diuers other saints and good men, should argue and proue that they were euill and naughtie men. Whereupon as it doth not follow, that because the bishops, Scribes and Pharises, with the elders of the people, condemned Christ Iesus as an heretike, that therefore he is an heretike: So likewise doth it not follow, of any other man: The bishops, maisters of Diuinitie, monks and prelats condemned this man as an heretike: Ergo hee is an heretike. For this consequent is reproued by Iohn Chrysostome, which was twice condemned as an heretike by the bishops and the whole clergie. Likewise S. Gregorie in his bookes, was condemned by the cardinals.

A false consequent reproued by I. Chrysostome.

John duke of Lancaster defender of Iohn Wickliffe.

By like proofe also as they affirme M. Iohn Wickliffe to be an heretike; Iohn D. of Lancaster (a man of worthie memorie and progenitor of Henrie king of England) should also be an heretike. For the said duke defended, fauoured and greatlie loued M. Iohn Wickliffe: Ergo the said duke is or was an heretike: the consequent is good. The minor is well knowen vnto the Englishmen. The Maior appeareth in the canon, where it is said, He which defendeth an heretike, &c.

I. Wickliffe proued no heretike.

But these things set apart, I demand of the aduersarie, whether maister Iohn Wickliffe be damned for euer or no: If he say that he is damned because he is an heretike: I propound this vnto him, whether maister Iohn Wickliffe whiles hee liued, held any false doctrine contrarie to the holy Scripture: If he doe affirme it, let him then shew what doctrine it is, and afterward declare that hee held it obstinately: And hee shall find, that in his bokes hee alwaies wrote most commendable protestations against obstinacie and stiffenecked nesse. And by and by after, maister Iohn Stokes in his Intimation saith, that maister Iohn Wickliffe in England, is counted for an heretike. This seemeth also false by the letter testimoniall of the Vniuersitie of Oxford: vnto the which there is more credit to bee giuen, then vnto him. And this shall suffice for this present.

The councell of Constance against Iohn Wickliffe.

¶ Now as wee haue declared the testimony of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, and of Iohn Hus, concerning the praise of Iohn Wickliffe: it followeth likewise, that wee set forth and expresse the contrary censure and iudgements of his enemies, blinded with malicious hatred and corrupt affections against him, especially of the popes councell gathered at Constance, proceeding first in condemning his bookes, then of his articles, and afterward burning of his bones. The copie of which their sentence giuen against him by that councell here followeth.

The sentence giuen by the councell of Constance, in condemning the doctrine and 45. articles of Iohn Wickliffe.

The sentence of the councell of Constance against Iohn Wickliffe.

THe most holy and sacred councell of Constance, making and representing the catholike church for the extirpation of this present schisme, and of all other errours and heresies, springing and growing vnder the shadow and pretence of the same, and for the reformation and amendment of the church, being lawfully congregate and gathered together in the holy Ghost, for the perpetuall memorie of the time to come.

We are taught by the acts and histories of the holy fathers, that the catholike faith, without the which, as the holy apostle saint Paul saith, it is vnpossible to please God, hath beene alwaies defended by the faithfull and spirituall souldiers of the church, by the shield of faith, against the false worshippers of the same faith, or rather peruerse impugners: which through their proud curiositie will seeme to know more, and to bee wiser then they ought to bee, and for the desire of the glorie of the world, haue gone about oft times to ouerthrow the same: These kinds of warres and battels haue beene prefigured to vs before in those carnall warres of the Israelites against the Idolatrous people. For in those spirituall warres the holy catholike church, through the vertue and power of faith, being illustrate with the beames of the heauenly light, by the prouidence of God, and being holpen by the helpe and defence of the saints and holy men, hath alwaies continued immaculate, and (the darkenesse of errours, as her most cruell enemies, being put to flight) she hath most gloriously triumphed ouer all. But in these our daies, the old and vnicleane enemie hath raised vp new contentions and strifes, that the elect of this world might bee knowne, whose prince and captaine in time past was one Iohn Wickliffe a false christian. Who during his life time, taught and sowed very obstinately many articles contrarie and against the christian religion, and the catholike faith. And the same Iohn Wickliffe wrote certaine bookes which he called a Dialogue, and a Trialogue, besides many other treatises and workes, the which he both wrote and taught, in the which hee wrote the aforesaid, and many other damnable and execrable articles: the which his bookes, for the publication and aduancement of his peruerse doctrine, hee did set forth openly for euery man to reade. Whereby beside many offences, great hurt and damage of soule, hath ensued in diuers regions and countries, but specially in the kingdomes of England and Boheme. Against whom the maisters and Doctors of the Vniuersities of Oxford and Prage, rising vp in the truth and veritie of God, according to the order of scholes, within a while after did reprooue and condemne the said articles.

The dialogue and trialogue of I. Wickliffe.

Moreouer, the most reuerend fathers the archbishops, and bishops, (for that time present) of Canturburie, Yorke, and Prage, legats of the apostolike see, in the kingdome of England and Boheme, did condemne the bookes of the said Wickliffe to be burnt. And the said archbishop of Prage, commissarie of the apostolike see, did likewise in this behalfe determine and iudge. And moreouer he did forbid, that any of those bookes which did remaine vnburned, should bee hereafter any more read. And againe, these things being brought to the knowledge and vnderstanding of the apostolike see, and the generall councell: the bishop of Rome in his last councell, condemned the said bookes, treatises and volumes, commanding them to bee openly burned. Most straitly forbidding, that any men which should beare the name of Christ, should be so hardy either to keepe, reade, or expound any of the said bookes or treatises, volumes, or workes, or by any meanes to vse or occupie them: either else to alleage them openly or priuilie, but to their reproofe and infamie. And to the intent that this most dangerous and filthie doctrine should be vtterly wiped away out of the church, hee gaue commandement throughout all places; that the ordinaries should diligently enquire and seeke out by the apostolike authoritie and ecclesiasticall censure, for all such bookes, treatises, volumes, and workes. And the same so being found, to burne and consume them with fire: prouiding withall, that if there bee any such found, which will not obey the same; processe to bee made against them, as against the fauourers and maintainers of heresies. And this most holy Synod hath caused the said 45. Articles to be examined and oft times perused, by many most reuerend fathers of the church of Rome, cardinals, bishops, abbats, maisters of Diuinitie and doctors of both lawes, besides a great number of other learned men: the which articles being so examined, it was found (as in truth it was no lesse) that many, yea and a great number of them to be notoriously for hereticall reproued and condemned by the holy fathers; other some, not to be catholike, but erroneous: some full of offence and blasphemie: certaine of them offensiue vnto godly eares, and many of them to be rashfull and seditious. It is found also, that his books do containe many articles of like effect and qualitie, and that they doe induce and bring into the church, vnsound and vnwholesome doctrine, contrary vnto the faith and ordinance of the church. Wherefore in the name of our Lord Iesu Christ, this sacred Synod, ratifying & approuing the sentences & iudgements of the archbishops & councel of Rome: doe by this their decree and ordinance, perpetually for euermore condemne and reproue the said articles, and euerie one of them, his bookes which he intituled his Dialogue and Trialogue, and all other bookes of the same author, volumes, treatises and workes, by what name soeuer they be intituled or called, the which wee will here to be sufficiently expressed and named. Also we forbid the reading, learning, exposition, or alleaging of any of the said bookes, vnto all faithfull christians, but so farre forth as shall tend to the reproofe of the same:

The bookes of Wickliffe condemned to be burned.

Words of authority without probation.

Like my fellow if I be a thiefe.

So we speake you say.

Vnwholesome, because they teach against the pompe of the pope.

So thought the souldiers perpetually to keepe downe Christ from rising.

O marueilous sacred Synod.

forbidding all and singuler catholike persons vnder the paine of curse, that from henceforth they bee not so hardie openly to preach, teach, or hold, or by any meanes to alleage the said articles or any of them, except (as is aforesaid) that it doe tend vnto the reproofe of them: commanding all those bookes, treatises, workes and volumes aforesaid, to be openly burned, as it was decreed in the synod at Rome, as is afore expressed. For the execution whereof duely to be obserued and done, the said sacred Synod doth straitly charge and command the ordinaries of the places, diligently to attend and loke vnto the matter, according as it appertaineth vnto euery mans dutie by the canonicall lawes and ordinances.

What these articles were here condemned by this councell, collected out of all his workes, and exhibited to that said councell, to the number of 45. the copie of them following vnder written declareth.

Certaine other articles gathered out of Wickeliffes bookes by his aduersaries, to the number of 45. exhibited vp to the councell of Constance, after his death, and in the same councell condemned.

Other articles of Wickliffe to the number of 45 condemned by the councell of Constance.

BEsides the 24. articles aboue mentioned, there were other also gathered out of his bookes, to the number of 45. in all, which his malitious aduersaries peruerslie collecting, and maliciouslie expounding, did exhibit vp to the councell of Constance: which to repeate all, though it be not here needfull, yet to recite certaine of them as they stand in that councell, it shall not be superfluous.

25 All such as be hired for temporall lining to pray for other, offend and sinne of simonie.

26 The prayer of the reprobate preuaileth for no man.

27 Hallowing of churches, confirmation of children, the sacrament of orders be reserued to the pope and bishops onely, for the respect of temporall lucre.

28 Graduations, and doctorships in Vniuersities and Colledges as they be vsed, conduce nothing to the church.

29 The excommunication of the pope and his prelats, is not to be feared, because it is the censure of Antichrist.

30 Such as found and build monasteries, do offend and sin, and all such as enter into the same be members of the diuell.

31 To enrich the clergie, is against the rule of Christ.

32 Siluester the pope, and Constantine the emperour were deceiued, in giuing and taking possessions into the church.

33 A deacon or priest may preach the word of God without the authoritie of the apostolike see.

34 Such as enter into order, or religion monasticall, are thereby vnable to kéepe Gods commandements, and also to attaine to the kingdome of heauen, except they returne from the same.

35 The pope with all his clergie, hauing those great possessions as they haue, bee heretikes in so hauing, and the secular powers in so suffering them doe not well.

36 The church of Rome is the synagogue of Satan, neither is the pope immedatly the vicar of Christ, nor of the apostles.

37 The decretals of the pope bee apocrypha and seduce from the faith of Christ, and the clergie that studie them be fooles.

38 The emperour and secular lords be seduced, which so inrich the church with such ample possessions.

39 It is not necessarie to saluation to beleeue the church of Rome to be supreme head ouer all churches.

40 It is but follie to beléeue the popes pardons.

41 All othes which be made for any contract or ciuill bargaine betwixt man and man, be vnlawfull.

42 Benedict, Frances, Dominicke, Bern. with all such as haue beene patrons of priuate religion, except they haue repented, with such also as haue entred into the same; bee in a damnable state, and so from the pope to the lowest nouices, they be all together heretikes

Besides these articles to the number of 45. condemned (as is said) by the councell of Constance; other articles also I find diuerslie collected or rather wrested out of the bookes and writings of Wickliffe: some by William Woodford, some by Walden, by frier Tillington and other, whom they in their bookes haue impugned rather then confuted. In the number of whom, William Woodford especially findeth out these articles, and writeth against the same, to the number of 18. as here vnder follow.

Articles against Wickliffe by W. Woodford.

1 The bread remaineth in his owne substance, after the consecration thereof vpon the altar, and ceaseth not to bee bread still.

2 As John was figuratiuely Helias, and not personally; so the bread figuratiuely is the body of Christ, and not naturally. And that without all doubt, this is a figuratiue speech, to say, This is my body; as to say, This John is Helias.

3 In the decrée, Ergo Berengarius, the court of Rome, hath determined, that the sacrament of the holy Eucharist, is naturally true bread.

4 They which do affirme, that the infants of the faithfull departing without the sacrament of baptisme, are not to bee saued, be presumptuous and fooles in so affirming.

5 The administration of the sacrament of confirmation, is not onely reserued to the bishops.

6 In the time of saint Paul, onely two orders of clerkes did suffice in the church: Priests, and deacons. Neither was there in the time of the apostles any distinction of popes, patriarkes, and archbishops, and bishops; but these the emperors pride did find it out.

7 Such as in times past, either for couetousnes of temporall lucre, or of hope of mutuall succour by kindred, or for cause to excuse their lust (although they despaired of issue) were married were coupled together, not by true matrimonie.

8 The causes of diuorcement, either for spirituall consanguinitie or for affinitie, be not founded in Scripture, but are onely ordinances of men.

9 These words, I will take thée to wife, are rather to bee taken in contract of matrimonie, then these words, I doe take thée to wife. And the contract with any partie by the words of the future tence, ought not to be frustrate for the contract with any partie afterward made, by the words of the present time.

10 There be 12. disciples of Antichrist, popes, cardinals, patriarkes, archbishops, bishops, archdeacons, officials, deanes, monks, canons, friers, and pardoners.

11 In the booke of Numbers the 18. chapter, and in Ezechiel 44. chapter, it is commanded simplie, that neither the priests of Aaron, nor the Leuites should haue any part of inheritance with other tribes, but should liue meerely of tithes and oblations.

12 There is no greater heretike or Antichrist, then that clerke which teacheth, that it is lawfull for Priests and Leuites of the law of grace, to be indued with temporall possessions. And if there be any heretikes, apostataes, or blaspheamers, these clerks be such.

13 It is not onely lawfull for the lords temporall to take away goods of fortune from the churchmen, sinning vsually: but also are bound so to do, vnder paine of eternall damnation.

14 Hee that is the more humble and more seruiceable to the church, and more enamored with the loue of Christ, he is in the church militant the greater and the more nere vicar of Christ.

15 If corporall vnction or anoyling were a sacrament (as now it is fained to bee) Christ and his apostles would not haue left the ordinance thereof vntouched.

16 Vnto the true dominion secular, is required vertuous life of him that ruleth.

17 All things that happen, do come absolutely of necessitie.

18 Whatsoeuer the pope or his cardinals can deduce clearely out of the Scripture, that onely is to be beleeued, or to bee done at their monition: and whatsoeuer otherwise they do command is to be condemned as hereticall.

Besides this M. Woodford afore mentioned, diuers other there were which wrote against these articles of Wickliffe afore said, maintaining the popes part, as séemeth for flatterie, rather then following any iust cause so to doe, or shewing forth any reason or learning in disproouing the same. Notwithstanding, on the contrarie part, some there were againe both learned and godly, which taking the part of Wickliffe, without all flatterie, defended the most of the said articles, openly in schooles and other places, as appeareth by the workes of John Hus: who in his publike determinations in the Vniuersitie of Prage, stood in defence of the same against all his aduersaries. As partly is here to bee seene in these tractations vnder following.

Tractatus fratr. W. Woodford contra trialogum Wicklem.

¶ The publike defence of certaine articles of Iohn Wickliffe, in the first Act before the whole Vniuersitie of Prage, in Charles Colledge.

¶ The determination of Iohn Hus vpon the xiiij. Article of Wickliffe, as touching the preaching and hearing of the word of God, made in the yeare of our Lord 1412.

FOrasmuch as to condemne the truth wittingly or without reasonable examination doth tend to great danger of saluation, as the Lord saith, Luke 6. Doe yee not condemne, and ye shall not be condemned: Therfore to auoide this great danger, the Vniuersitie of Prage, and the whole communaltie thereof, the Rector, Maisters, Doctors, Bachelers and Students, in their generall assemblie, not agreeing to the condemnation pronounced by the Doctours in their councell house, requireth of the said Doctours a reasonable proofe of their condemnation, and that they should by Scripture, authoritie, or infallible reason, proue the falshood of euery those fiue and fortie articles. The which being once done, the said Vniuersitie will agree to the said condemnation as iust: For the Vniuersitie doth well know, that as Augustine saith, in the end of his second booke of christian doctrine: That whatsoeuer a man doth learn besides ẏ holy Scriptures, if it be hurtfull, there it is condemned: If it bee profitable, there there it is found. And when a man hath found all things therein which he hath profitably learned elsewhere, hee shall much more abundantly finde those things which are found in no place elle, but are learned in the maruellous depth, and maruellous profoundneſſe of thoſe moſt sacred Scriptures only.

The whole Vniuersitie is against the iudgement of the Doctors which condemned the 45. articles.

Gregor. moral lib. 23. Thus writeth Auguſtine. And Gregory in his three and twentith booke of Morals, saith thus; God in the holy Scripture hath comprehended whatsoeuer thing may happen vnto any man, and in the same hath, by the examples of thoſe which are gone afore, taught them which are to come, how to reforme their liues. Whereby it appeareth, that euery of the fiue and forty articles, containeth in it wholly the thing that is false and vntruth, the same is either plainly or darkly condemned in the holy Scriptures.

Secondly, it followeth by the sentence and mind of this holy man, that if the condemnation of the fiue and forty articles be profitable, the same is found in the holy scriptures. And where as againe Saint Auguſtine writeth vnto Saint Hierome, in his eighth epiſtle and the ninth Diſtinction: I (saith he) haue learned to attribute this honor and reuerence vnto thoſe writers only which are called canonicall, that I dare affirme none of them to haue erred in their workes or writings. As for all other writers, I doe so reade them, that although they abound with neuer so much holineſſe, or excell in doctrine, I doe not by and by thinke it true, because they themselues doe so iudge: but if they can by other canonicall authors or probable reasons, perſwade or proue that they doe not digreſſe from the truth.

Also the said Auguſtine in his booke De vnico Baptiſmo, lib. 2. saith thus: Who doth not know or vnderſtand, the holy canonicall Scripture to bee contained in his owne bonds and limits, and the same to be preferred before all other letters and decrees of bishops, &c. And a little after he hath the like saying: As for the letters of other bishops which haue bin written, or be written, (after the canon being confirmed) they may lawfully be reprehended and reproued, both by the word of them that be more skilfull in that matter, and also by the ancient authoritie of other bishops, or by the prudence and wisdom of such as be better learned, or more expert, or else by generall councels, if it so chance that they in any point haue erred and gone allray from the sincere truth.

By these sayings of S. Auſten and other like, &c. the Vniuerſitie of Prage hath concluded and determined, that they will not receiue the condemnation of the fiue and forty articles, made by the doctors in their councell house as iuſt and true, except they which condemned them, will proue their condemnation by the holy Scriptures and probable reasons vpon euery of the fiue and forty articles.

Wherefore for the due examination of the foresaid condemnation, whether it be effectuall or no, we will at this present take in hand the fourteenth article of the number of the fiue and fortie; which article is this:

The 14. article of J. Wickliffe. They which leaue off preaching and hearing of the word of God for feare of excommunication of men, are already excommunicat, and in the day of iudgement shall be counted the betraiters of Christ.

The defence of this 14. article. This article containeth, firſt that all prieſts omitting the preaching of the word of God for feare of the excommunication of men, they are already excommunicat.

Secondly, it containeth, that all such as doe omit the hearing of the word of God, for feare of excommunication, are already excommunicated.

Thirdly, that both these sorts of men in the day of iudgement, shall be counted traitors of Christ.

The preaching of the Goſpell commanded of God. As concerning the firſt point, it is presuppoſed that the preaching of the word of God is commanded vnto the Apoſtles and their followers, as it appeareth in Matth. 10. where it is said: Jeſus sent his twelue diſciples, commanding them and saying; Go and preach, that the kingdome of heauen is at hand. Also in the laſt of Matthew, and the 10. of Luke. Whereupon, Peter the Apoſtle of Christ, acknowledging this precept and commandement for himselfe, and for the other Apoſtles and succeſſors, in the tenth of the Acts, saith thus; He commanded vs to preach and teſtifie, that it is he which is ordained of God the iudge both of the quick and the dead. This commandement also the other Apoſtles did acknowledge, and specially the chosen veſſell, pronouncing vnder a great threatning in the firſt Corinthians, 9. chap. Woe be vnto me if I doe not preach the Goſpell. And pope Nicolas considering that great threatning in 43. Diſtinction, saith: The diſpenſation and diſtribution of the heauenly seed is commanded and inioined to vs: Wo be vnto vs if we do not sow it abroad, or if we hold our peace. Which thing, when as the veſſell of election did feare and cry out vpon, how much more ought all other inferiors to feare and dread the same? To the same purpoſe doth S. Gregory write in his paſtorall in the diſtinction, Sit rector. It is also euident by many other doctors and holy men, as by S. Auguſtine, Hierome, Iſidore, Bernard, whoſe words it were too long here to rehearſe.

Gregorius Diſt. 44. cap. Sit rector.

The hearing of the word commanded by God. As touching the second point, that the hearing of the word and law of God, is commanded vnto the people, it is euident both by the old and new law: for it is said in the 28. of the Prouerbs; He that turneth away his eare, and will not heare the law of God, his praier shall be curſed. And our Sauiour reburking the Scribes and Phariſies, concludeth thus in the 8. of saint John, saying; He that is of God heareth Gods word: but forasmuch as you are not of God, therefore you heare not his word.

Thirdly, it is to be noted, that excommunication is a separation from the communion, the 11. Queſtion 3. Nihil. & cap. Canonica. And 27. queſtion, firſt, Viduas. 34. queſtion 3. Cum ſacerdos. And this excommunication is double, that is to say, either secret or manifeſt. The secret excommunication is, whereby a man is separated from the myſticall body of Christ, and so from God through sin, according vnto the 59. of Eſay: Your iniquities haue made separation betweene your God and you. And with this excommunication both the Apoſtle excommunicat euery man which doth not loue the Lord Jeſu Christ: saying in the firſt Corinth. and laſt chapter; If any man do not loue the Lord Jeſu Christ, let him be accurſed. The manifeſt and apert excommunication may bee diuided into a manifeſt excommunication by God: whereof it is spoken, Mat. 25. Go ye curſed, &c. And often times elſe in the law of God. Also into a manifeſt excommunication by men, whereby the prelat doth either iuſtly or vniuſtly call out any man from the participation of the communion of the church. Whereof this shall ſuffice at this preſent.

Excommunication. Excommunication double.

The probation of the firſt part. Then, as touching the firſt part of the article, it is thus argued, &c.

Whoſoeuer forſaketh or leaueth the commandements of God vndone, they are excommunicate of God. But the prieſts which leaue off the preaching of the word of God, for feare of the vniuſt excommunication of men, doe leaue the commandement of God vndone. Ergo, thoſe prieſts which doe leaue off preaching the word of God, are excommunicated of God.

The firſt part of this article is true: The Maior appeareth by the Pſalme: Curſed bee they which doe decline and ſwarue from thy precepts. The Minor is euident by the firſt propoſition, which proueth that the preaching of the word of God, is the commandement of God inioined vnto thoſe prieſts and miniſters. Whereupon the saying of our Sauiour, Mat. 15. is spoken vnto them: Wherefore doe you tranſgreſſe the commandements of God for your owne traditions: preaching the word of God for feare of vniuſt excommunication, and so diſhonouring the Father Christ, and the mother the holy church.

It is thus confirmed: All they which do omit or let slip any maner of worke, principally and ſtraitly inioined them of the Lord Jeſus Christ, vnder the cloke and colour of grace, for feare of any excommunication of men, they are already excommunicat. But prieſts, and specially Curats, admoniſhed by the ſpirit of God, leauing off the preaching of the word of God for feare of the excommunication of men, they omit and leaue off for feare of the ſame excommunication, a worke principally and ſtraitly inioined vnto them of the Lord Jeſus Christ, vnder the cloke and colour of grace: Ergo, prieſts, and ſpecially curats, and ſuch as be admoniſhed and warned by the ſpirit of God, omitting the preaching of the word of God for feare of excommunication, are excommunicat. The conſequence is well knowne. The Maior appeareth by the Pſalme; Curſed be they which doe decline and goe away from thy commandements. The Minor is also euident againe by the firſt ſuppoſition.

The Apoſtles did not obey any wicked inhibition. Item, if the Apoſtles of Christ had left off the preaching of the word of God for feare of the excommunication of men, which the Lord did foreſhew vnto them in the 16. of S. John, saying: They ſhal excommunicat you out of their ſynagogues: They had been excommunicated of God. Ergo, by like euidence, the prieſts and miniſters of Christ, being inſpired with the ſame ſpirit to preach and declare the word of God, if they leaue it vndone for feare of the excommunication of men: They are already excommunicat. The conſequent dependeth vpon a ſimilitude. And the antecedent is euident: for if the Apoſtles had left off preaching for feare of excommunication, they had broken the commandements of God: And ſo conſequently, had been accurſed. Wherefore they willing to obſerue and keepe the commandements of God, and to put off the excommunication of men, said vnto the high Prieſts, Elders, and Scribes at Jeruſalem, to Annas, Caiphas, to John and Alexander, and all other of the kindred of the prieſts which were gathered together and commanded them that they ſhould not preach nor teach in the name of Jeſu: If it be iuſt in the ſight of God, that we ſhould rather obey you then God, that iudge you. Acts 4. And in the 5. of the Acts, they said vnto them: We ought rather to obey God then man. By this saying of the holy Ghoſt, it is concluded, that the prieſts and miniſters of Christ, inſpired by the holy Ghoſt to preach the word of God, ought rather obey the holy Ghoſt then thoſe which ſhall prohibit and command them to the contrary, and to ſuffer the excommunication of men patiently. Whereupon pope Anacletus ſpake very well in this, as it is written diſtinction 43: We know (saith he) that many doe goe about to moleſt and trouble the doctors and teachers to this end, that they might vtterly vtterly deſtroy them, and fulfill their owne proper luſts and deſires: yet notwithſtanding the ſaid doctors, as much as in them lieth, ought not to depart or goe backe from their good doings and intent, knowing aſſuredly that bleſſed are they which ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſſe ſake. Thus much writeth he. And the reuerend Bede (vpon theſe words: Yee ſhall finde an aſſe tied vp, and an hee fole with her, loſe her and bring her vnto mee: and if any man ſay any thing vnto you, ſay ye that the Lord hath need of them) writeth thus. Here it is myſtically commanded vnto the doctours and teachers, that if any aduerſitie doe let or hinder, or any man doe prohibit or ſtop, that ſinners cannot bee loſed from their bonds or ſnares, and be brought vnto the Lord, by the confeſſion of their faith, that they notwithſtanding ſhould not leaue off preaching, but conſtantly and boldly affirme and ſay, that the Lord hath need of ſuch, to edifie and build againe his church. For ſo did the Apoſtles: ſo likewiſe ought all the humble and meeke miniſters of Chriſt to doe. And Saint Hierom writing vnto Ruſticus the biſhop of Narbone ſaith thus: Let no biſhop from henceforth be puffed vp or inflamed with the enuie of diuelliſh temptation, if the prieſts now and then doe exhort and teach the people, or preach openly in the churches; or as it is ſaid, doe bleſſe the people. For vnto him which ſhould deny vnto mee the doing hereof, I would ſay in this manner: Yee that will not that prieſts ſhould doe thoſe things which they are commanded by God, let him ſay that hee is greater and aboue Chriſt. By the which words Saint Hierom doth openly declare, that prieſts are commanded to exhort and teach the people, and to preach in the churches. Secondly, that a biſhop denying or forbidding the ſame to be done, ſpecially the prieſts or miniſters being apt men thereunto, is extolled aboue Chriſt. And therefore conſequently, is not to be obeied nor heard in his doings.

Hieronymus ad Ruſticum.

Item, admit that the pope be an heretike, and teach peruerſe and contrary doctrine vnto the holy Scriptures, and that the biſhop bee a catholike man vnto whom the pope giueth in commandement that hee ſhall not ſuffer no man to preach contrary to his opinion; as it happened in Pope Leo, and Saint Hillary the biſhop: adding this alſo, that the biſhop doe execute the popes commandement vnder paine of excommunication: this notwithſtanding if the catholike prieſts learned in the law of God, doe leaue off preaching againſt the popes hereſies, for feare of excommunication of men, they are already excommunicat. The which thing is euident, for ſo much as they are accurſed through the conſent of their ſilence, as Saint Iſidor ſaith 11. Queſtion 1. He that doth conſent vnto ſinners, or defendeth a ſinner, hee ſhall be curſed both before God and man, and ſhall be puniſhed with a moſt ſeuere rebuke; and in the 7. Queſtion. 4. Omnis, it is ſaid; Yee that doth neglect to amend that which hee may correct, committeth no leſſe fault then hee which had before offended: for not onely they which doe commit the offence, but alſo they which conſent thereunto, are iudged partakers therof. In like caſe, prieſts which doe not preach againſt the hereſie which the pope teacheth, are dumbe dogs, not able to open their mouthes, or barke againſt the wolfe, which will kill the ſheep of Jeſus Chriſt: Ergo, how can it then be otherwiſe, but they muſt needs be betraiers of the ſheepe of their owne ſhepheard?

If the pope be an heretike, the godly biſhops may preach againſt him.

Item, let it ſo be, that the biſhop with the chiefe prelats be an adulterer or otherwiſe an open offender, and that he together with his prelats doe command vnder paine of excommunication, that none be ſo hardy to preach againſt adulterie, in ſuch a caſe they which doe omit their dutie in preaching againſt adultery, for feare of excommunication of men, are already excommunicated of God: Ergo, the firſt part of the article is true. The Antecedent is proued; for our Sauiour in the eighth of Marke ſaith thus: He that acknowledgeth mee and my words in this wicked and adulterous generation, the ſonne of man ſhall alſo acknowledge and confeſſe him when hee ſhall come in the glory of his Father with his angels. Therefore hee that ſhall confeſſe Chriſt, and theſe words of Chriſt, Matth. 5. You haue heard that it was ſaid to them in old time, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery: But I ſay vnto you, that euery one which ſhall behold a woman to luſt after her, he hath already committed adultery with her in his heart: He, I ſay, that ſhall confeſſe theſe things before an adulterous biſhop with his chiefe prelats, the which perchance are the wicked and adulterous generation, the ſonne of man ſhall alſo acknowledge him, when he ſhall come in the glory of his Father, and ſo conſequently is he bleſſed. Contrariwiſe, hee which for the feare of excommunication of men will not confeſſe Chriſt and his words, before the ſinfull and adulterous generation, is accurſed. The conſequent holdeth by the words of Chriſt, Luke 9. He that is aſhamed of me and my words, him ſhall the Sonne of man bee aſhamed of, when he ſhall come in his maieſtie, and in the glory of his Father and his holy Angels, pronouncing that which is ſpoken Matth. 25. Verily, I ſay vnto you, I know you not; goe you curſed into euerlaſting fire.

Albeit the chief prieſts be adulterers, yet ought the miniſters to preach againſt adultery.

Alſo our Sauiour Jeſu Chriſt, did not omit or leaue off the preaching of the kingdome of God, for any pretended excommunication of the Biſhops, Scribes and Phariſies: ſo likewiſe his true and humble prieſts, ought not to omit their preaching for any pretenſed excommunication of men: the conſequent holdeth by the ſaying of Chriſt, John 15. Be yee mindfull of the words which I haue ſpoken vnto you, the ſeruant is not greater then his maſter: If they haue perſecuted me, they will perſecute you alſo. The antecedent is apparant by the ſaying of Saint John in his 9. chapter. Euen now the Jewes had conſpired, that whoſoeuer did confeſſe him to bee Chriſt, ſhould be excommunicat. And likewiſe John 7. Whether did any of the princes or rulers, or any of the Phariſies beleeue in him. But this people which knoweth not the law, are accurſed.

The example of Chriſt.

The obedience of Chriſtian prieſts toward their prelats.

Alſo the humble and iuſt miniſters of God ought not vnder paine of ſinne to ceaſe from the fruitfull preaching of the law of God for any vniuſt excommunication, or vnlawfull commandement; and it is proued thus: the humble and iuſt miniſters of Chriſt ought to obey their prelats, in ſuch things as are not contrary to God; as all the holy doctors, and ſuch as are learned in the laws of God doe wholly with one conſent affirme. And forſomuch as an vniuſt excommunication, and vnlawfull commandement, are againſt God, therefore the iuſt and true miniſters of God, ought not to obey ſuch vnlawfull excommunication and commandements, and conſequently ought not to ceaſe for them, from the fruitfull preaching of the Goſpell of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; but ought boldly and gladly to preach the ſame. Forſomuch as the Lord doth comfort them in the 5. of Matth. ſaying thus: Bleſſed and happy are ye when as men doe curſe you, and perſecute you, and ſpeak all kind of euill againſt you, making lies and ſlanders vpon you for my ſake; reioice and be glad, for great is your reward in heauen.

The power of preaching to edification, ought not to ceaſe.

Alſo euery miniſter hauing power giuen him from aboue, to preach the Goſpell, he hath the ſame giuen vnto him for the edifying of the Church, and not for the deſtruction of the ſame.

And the Apoſtle ſaith 2. Cor. 10. But euery one leauing off the preaching of the Goſpell, for feare of any pretenſed excommunication of men, he ſhould fruſtrate the power giuen him, for the edifying of the church. And therefore in ſo doing, ſhould ſinne againſt God and his church; and conſequently, ought rather to chuſe, not to ceaſe from preaching, for feare of any ſuch excommunication, leſt that he be excommunicat of our Lord Jeſu Chriſt.

The preaching of the Goſpell is not to be left off for all the popes prohibition.

Item, ſet caſe that the pope doth command that there ſhall be no preaching in any place; then the miniſters of Chriſt leauing off their preaching, for feare of the popes curſe, are already excommunicated of God. It is euident, forſomuch as they haue neglected the commandement of God, for the commandement of men. And this caſe is poſſible: for by what reaſon the pope may command vnder paine of excommunication, that there ſhall bee no preaching in any place, neither in the pariſh churches, by the ſame reaſon, he may comnand that no man ſhould preach in any place.

The firſt part is euident by the prohibition of pope Alexander, who in his bull did prohibit to preach the word of God vnto the people in chapels, although the ſaid chapels were confirmed by the priuiledge of the ſea apoſtolike. The which bull, the lord Subincon archbiſhop of Prage, with his canons, obtained. By theſe aforeſaid, the firſt part of the article is euident, which is this; that all prieſts omitting the preaching of the word of God, for feare of the excommunication of men, are already excommunicat.

The ſecond part of the article.

The ſecond part of the article is this, that all they which do omit the hearing of the word of God, for feare of the excommunication of men, are already excommunicat.

And it is proued thus; all ſuch as neglect the commandements of God are excommunicat. But they which neglect the hearing of the word of God, for the excommunication of men, are they which neglect the commandements of God. Therefore they which omit the hearing of the word of God for the excommunication of men, are already excommunicat.

Meanes neceſſary vnto ſaluation are not to be omitted.

The Maior is apparant by the 118. Pſalme: Curſed bee they which decline from thy commandements. And the Minor is euident by the ſecond ſuppoſition, which ſaith; that the hearing of the word of God is commanded vnto the people.

This is confirmed: all ſuch as omit the neceſſary meane vnto ſaluation, are excommunicat: but ſuch as omit the hearing of the word of God, for the excommunication by men, be ſuch as do omit the neceſſary meane vnto ſaluation. Therefore in ſo doing, they are excommunicat. The conſequent is plaine: the Maior is made euident by this; That al ſuch as do omit the neceſſary meane vnto ſaluation, doe alſo neglect their ſaluation, and ſo are out of the way of ſaluation, and be excommunicated of God. The Minor appeareth hereby, that to heare the word of God, is the meane more neceſſary vnto ſaluation, as the Apoſtle doth proue in his 10. chapter to the Romans: How, ſaith he, ſhall they beleeue on him, whom they neuer heard of? And how ſhall they heare without a preacher? And by and by after, the Apoſtle inferreth vnto the purpoſe; That faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

Item,

A man ought to doe nothing against his conscience.

Item, whatsoeuer is done contrary vnto conscience, doth edifie vnto eternall damnation: as it is said, as touching the restitution of the spoiled goods, chap. Literas porro. But to omit the hearing of the word of God, for feare of excommunication of men, is a thing which is done against conscience. Therefore to omit the hearing of the word of God for excommunication, doth edifie vnto eternal damnation: and therefore consequently ought not to bee done, for feare of any excommunication. Wherefore a woman being iudged vnto a man, whom shee knoweth to bee within the degrees of consanguinitie, which Gods law hath prohibited, ought not to obey that iudgement, lest that she offend against God; but meekely and patiently to sustaine the excommunication; as it appeareth in the chapter before alleaged. So likewise all true christians ought rather then to offend against God, meekly to sucker the excommunication of men, then to omit the hearing of the word of God. To this purpose also serueth that which is spoken in the 11. quest. 3. He that feareth the omnipotent God, will not presume by any meanes to do any thing contrary vnto the Gospel or Apostles, either contrary vnto the Prophets, or the institutions of the holy fathers. By these premisses, the second part of this article is manifest, that all such as doe omit the hearing of the word of God, for feare of excommunication of men, they are already excommunicated.

The proofes of the third part.

And forsomuch as all christians being of lawfull age, not repenting at the end, shall be counted in a manner as traitors of Christ in the day of iudgement, because that they were vnfaithfull seruants of Christ; therefore they which through feare omit the preaching and hearing of the word of God, for the excommunication of men, shall be counted as traitors of Christ, and shall render account thereof vnto the Lord. Whereupon Chrysostome touching both those sorts in the 41. Homily, shewing how the Lord would haue some to be teachers, and other some to be disciples, saith thus: For vnto those which he would haue to be teachers, he speaketh thus by his Prophet Esay: Ye priests, speake in the hearts of the people, for if the priests doe not manifest all the truth vnto the people, they shall render account therof at the day of iudgement: and likewise if the people doe not learne the truth, they shall also giue an account at the day of iudgement. It is also made more euident by him vpon the 10. of Matthew: Doe not feare them which kill the body, lest that through the feare of death, you doe not freely speake that which you haue heard, neither boldly preach that vnto all men, which you alone haue heard in your eares. So that hereby alone it is euident, that not only he is a betraier of the truth, which transgressing the truth doth openly speake lies in stead of the truth: but he also which doth not freely pronounce, or doth not freely defend the truth, which he ought boldly to defend, is also a traitor vnto the truth. For like as the priest is a debter to preach the truth which he hath heard of the Lord; euen so the lay man is bound to defend the truth, which he hath heard of the minister approued by the scriptures; which if he doe not, then is he a traitor vnto the truth. For stedfast beleefe with the heart, preuaileth vnto righteousnesse; the confession which is made with the mouth, helpeth vnto saluation. Thus much writeth Chrysostome: who together with the people, meekly bearing the excommunication of the bishops, freely preached the truth, and the people heard him; and so by his word and his workes he freely taught the truth, lest he should be a traitor vnto the truth, and consequently be counted as a traitor vnto our Lord Iesu Christ in the day of iudgement. And thus the third part of the Article aforesaid is manifest.

Chrysostome in his 41. Homily.

Chrysostome, although he was excommunicat, yet he did preach.

The defension of the xv. article of Iohn Wickliffe by Iohn Hus.

The 15. article of Wickliffe.

IT is lawfull for any deacon or priest, to preach the word of God without the authority of the Apostolike sea, or of his catholikes.

First, I vnderstand here by the authoritie of the apostolike sea, properly his speciall consent authorising. And likewise I vnderstand by authoritie of the bishop, a speciall consent of the bishop, authorising the said deacon or priest to preach.

The confirmation of the article.

Now as touching the truth of this article, I thus argue: Like as after matrimonie once complete, the man and wife may lawfully without any speciall licence of the pope or bishoppe, procreate carnall children: so likewise deacons or priests, by the motion of God through the Gospell of Iesu Christ, may lawfully without any speciall licence either of pope or bishop, generate spirituall children. Ergo, this article is true, and the antecedent is thus proued. For as it is an acceptable worke vnto God, for man and wife without the speciall licence of the pope or bishop to generate carnall children; so it is acceptable vnto him, that deacons or priests, by the motion of God through the Gospell of Iesu Christ, should lawfully generate spirituall children, without the speciall licence of the pope or of any other bishop: Ergo, the assumption is true.

Euery man being lawfully called of the church, ought to preach the word of God without the popes licence.

But if any man will deny this similitude, let him shew the diuersitie. Yea seeing it is worse not to receiue, or to choke the seed of Gods word, then the carnall seed: so contrariwise is it better to receiue and sow abroad that seed of the word of God, whereby children might be raised vp vnto God, then to receiue or giue such seed, whereby carnall children may be gotten. Whereupon our Sauiour in the 10. of Matthew saith thus: Whosoeuer doth not receiue you, neither heareth your words, wipe off the dust from your feet: verily I say vnto you, that in the day of iudgement, it shall be more better vnto the land of Sodome and Gomer then to that citie.

Also a deacon or priest being stirred by the spirit of Iesus Christ may preach the word of God without the speciall licence of the pope or bishoppe. Ergo, it is lawfull for him so to doe. The consequent is thus manifest; for so much as the spirit of God moueth the deacon or priest vnto the preaching of the Gospell, is of greater force then any prohibition of pope or bishop inuented by man: Ergo, according vnto the rule of the Apostles, they ought infallibly to bee obedient vnto the spirit of Christ, which doth so moue them thereunto, and rather to obey God then man: Acts 5. Also by like reason, as Heldad and Medad vpon whom the spirit of God did rest, did lawfullie prophecie without requiring any licence at Moyses hands, as it is written Numeri 11. By the same reason may the meeke minister of Christ, vpon whom the spirit of God doth rest, without the requiring of any licence, either of the pope or bishop, lawfully preach the word of God vnto the people. And would to God in this behalfe all prelats had the spirit of Moyses: for it is said, Numeri 11. That when as Heldad and Medad were prophecying in the tents, a child ran vnto Moyses, and told him, saying: Heldad and Medad doe prophecie in the tents, and by and by Iosue the sonne of Nunne, the seruant of Moses, which he had chosen out amongst many, (said) my master Moses forbid them; and he said; Why enuiest thou for my sake? would God that all the people could prophecie, and that the Lord would giue them his spirit. O would to God the pope and bishops had the affections which this holy man the friend of God had. Then would he not prohibit the meeke deacons and ministers of Iesus Christ, to preach the Gospell of Iesus Christ. The like affection had the blessed man Gregory, which in his 22. booke of Morals, writing vpon these words of Iob: And I haue afflicted the soule of his husbandmen: hee saith thus: The husbandmen of this earth are these, which being set in small authoritie, with as feruent desire as they can, and with as great labor as they may, doe worke by the preaching of grace, to the erudition of the holy church, the which husbandmen of this world not to afflict, is not to enuie their labors and doings: neither ought the ruler of the church, albeit he doe challenge vnto himselfe alone the title of preaching, through enuie gainsay others which doe preach truly and vprightly. For the godly mind of the pastor which seeketh not his owne glory amongst men, desireth to be holpen: the which thing also the faithfull preacher doth wish, if it might by any meanes be brought to passe, that the truth which he alone cannot sufficiently expresse, all mens mouthes might declare.

God graunt that all the people may prophecie.

Wherefore, whenas Iosua would haue resisted the two which were prophecying in the host, why doest thou enuie (said he) for my sake? for he did not enuie that good in other which he himselfe had. Thus writeth S. Gregory.

Also the meeke ministers of Christ haue by a speciall gift of God, knowledge and mind to preach the Gospell; but neither is it lawfull for the pope or bishop, or any other man to let or hinder them, lest thereby they should let the word of God, that it haue not his free course. Ergo, this article is true; for the king doth not so much rule ouer the goods of his subiects, no not of his owne sonnes, but that they may giue almes to whom they will: much more the bishop hath not so great authoritie ouer the knowledge of the meeke minister, with his other gifts of God, but that he may freely vnder the title of spirituall almes freely preach the Gospell vnto the people. Ergo, forasmuch as it should seem strange, that a bishop should forbid any man to giue any corporall almes to the poore that are an hungred, much more strange and maruellous would it be, if that he should prohibit the spirituall minister of Christ to giue spirituall almes, by the preaching of the Gospell of the word of God.

The course of the word of God ought not to be stopped. Bernard.

Item, no catholike man ought to doubt, but that a man able for the purpose, is more bound to teach them which are ignorant, to counsell and comfort the weake in spirit, to correct such as are vnruly, to forgiue those that doe them wrong, then to doe any other worke of mercie: forsomuch then as he that hath sufficient, is bound vnder paine of damnation to giue corporall almes, as it appeareth Mat. 25. much more he which is able, is bound to doe spirituall almes. And this almes S. Bernard writing vnto Eugenius in his 3. booke, perceiued to be very necessary for the bishop of Rome, where as he said thus; I feare no greater poison, nor greater sword or mischiefe will happen vnto thee, then this vnsatiable desire of dominion. With what face then can the faithfull minister withdraw or keepe backe the spirituall almes from the pope and any other, euen without the speciall licence of the pope or of the bishop; which licence through the farre distance from the pope, the ministers cannot so easily obtaine or come by: For all prohibition of any prelat being broken through necessitie, is is not to bee blamed, 11. Quest. 3. Intercessor, and also in the chapter following.

Item, all authority of preaching giuen vnto deacons and priests in their consecration were but vaine, except that in case of necessity, without any speciall licence, they might preach the Gospell. It is euident, forsomuch as it is not lawfull for them to vse that authority by their aduersary, without a speciall licence. Ergo, it is giuen them in vaine. The consequent is euident by the common saying of the Philosopher, That power is but vaine, whereof proceedeth no vse of action. But forsomuch as this article doth as it were depend vpon the article before passed, therefore this shall suffice, spoken thereof at this present.

Obiection. But against the affirmations of both these articles, this is obiected out of the 16. quest. 1. All faithfull people, and specially all priests, deacons, and all others of the clergy, ought to take heed that they doe nothing without the licence of their bishop. It is also obiected out of the 5. booke of Decretals, Titulo de hæreticis cap. cum ex iniuncto. Where it is said, no man ought to vsurpe to himselfe, indifferently the office of preaching, forsomuch as the Apostle saith; How shall they preach, except they be sent? Whereas also Innocentius doth declare, that it is not sufficient for a man to say, that he is sent of God to preach, except he doe shew the same. As touching the first point, the Glosse doth sufficiently answer vpon this word, without licence; That is to be expounded, saith he, without generall licence: the which is obtained and giuen, when as a bishop doth appoint any priest to gouerne the people. For thereby (saith hee) it seemeth a bishop is thought to giue him generall power to minister vnto the people, and to rule the church. Thus much in the Glosse. And to the same end and purpose it is said in the 7. quest. 1. chapter. Episcopi, bishops or priests, if they come into the church of another bishop, for to visit the same, as it is said Glosse 1. in honore suo. Let them be receiued in their degree, and desired as well to preach the word, as to doe any other consecration or oblation. Secondly, it is to be noted, that which is very well spoken in the same place: No man ought to vsurpe vnto himselfe the office of preaching, as a thing indifferent. For to vsurpe, is vnlawfully to vse any thing: Ergo, the same deacon or priest, doth then vsurpe the office of preaching as indifferently, who liuing vitiously, contrary vnto the law of Christ; or being ignorant of the law of God, doth preach either for gaine, or couetousnesse of liuing, either for his belly or daintie life, or for any vaine glorie: but he which doth liue according vnto the lawes of Christ, and being moued with the affection of sincere charitie, intending purely the honor of God, and the saluation of himselfe and his neighbors, doth preach no lies nor vaine iests, or other things not authorized, but only the law of Christ, and the minds of the holy doctors. And he that doth so preach, necessitie occasioning or mouing him thereunto, in case there be no pope or bishop, or in case possible to withstand the preaching of heretikes or false preaches, he in so doing doth not vsurpe the office of preaching; and in such case there is no doubt but he is sent of God. And this doth also answere vnto that, which is consequently said, that if any man will peraduenture craftily answere, that such preachers are inuisibly sent of God, although not visibly of men, whenas that inuisible sending of God is much more better then the visible sending of men: A man may reasonably answere thereunto, that forsomuch as that internall sending is secret, it is not sufficient for a man onely to say that he is sent of God, forsomuch as euery heretike may so say; but he ought to proue the same his inuisible calling, by the working of some miracle, or by some speciall testimony of the scripture.

The answers to the obiection.

What is falsly to vsurpe the office of a preacher.

Who is a true minister of the church.

Foure kinds of sending or calling. Here it is to bee noted, according to Saint Augustine in his 63. booke of quest. vnto Orosius, that there are foure kinds of sending. The first is from God only, whereof we reade in Moses and other, which were inspired by God. And this kind of sending looseth from the danger of the statute: so that he whom the spirit of God hath inspired, this prelat giuing thanks, may procéede vnto a better life. Whereupon pope Urban said 19. quest. 2. There be (said hee) two lawes, the one publike, the other priuat. The publike law is that which is confirmed in writing by the holy fathers, such as is the canon law, which is onely giuen for transgressions. As for example, it is decréed in the canons, that none of the clergy shall goe from one bishoprick vnto another, without the letters commendatory of his bishop; the which was ordained onely for offendors, that no infamed persons should be receiued of any bishop. For they were wont when they could not celebrate or doe their office vnder their owne bishoprick, to goe vnto another: which now is forbidden by the lawes and precepts.

The common law.

The priuat law. The priuate law is that, which by the instruction of the holy Ghost, is written in the heart, as the Apostle speaketh, of manie, which haue the law of God written in their hearts. And in another place: Forsomuch as the Gentiles haue not the law of God, but naturally doe those things which are of the law, they are lawes vnto themselues. And afterward he saith, the priuat law is much more worthy then the publike law. For the spirit of God is a law: And they which are moued by the spirit of God, are led by the law of God. And who is he, that can worthily resist against the holy Ghost? Whosoeuer therefore is led by the spirit of God, albeit his bishop doe say him nay, let him goe freely by our authority, for the law is not appointed for the iust man: for where as the spirit of God is, there is libertie, and if ye be led by the spirit of God, ye are not vnder the law.

The words of pope Urban.

Behold here it is affirmed, that the sending by God, through inspiration, is not bound vnder the bondage of the law, for that law is more worthy then the publike law. Secondly, that the law is made for transgressers and offenders, and not for the iust. Thirdly, that whosoeuer is led by the spirit of God, although his bishop stand against him, hee may proceed vnto a better life. Whereby it is euident, that a deacon or priest, disposed to preach, and being led by the spirit of God, he may freely preach the Gospell of Christ, without the spirituall licence of his bishop. It is euident, forsomuch as it is good, that a deacon or priest doe liue well, and preach fruitfully. Ergo, he may proceed from idlenesse vnto the labor and office of preaching, and so vnto a better life.

Euery man may pretend to be sent of God immediatly. But whereas it is said afore, that forsomuch as the inward sending or calling is secret, therefore it is not sufficient for a man, barely to affirme onely that he is sent of God, whenas euery heretike may so say; but it is necessary, that he doe confirme and proue his inuisible sending, by the working of some miracle, or by some speciall testimony of the Scripture: Here is to bee noted, that there are two kinds of preachers: some true preachers of our Sauiour Christ; and others seducers of antichrist. The first sort following the master Christ, teach the people in truth. The other sort, being of a corrupt mind, and reprobate touching faith, resist against the veritie: and through couetousnesse, by their fained words doe make merchandise of the people. And these men doe giue, and shall giue miracles, as our Sauiour saith Matth. 24. There shall arise false Christs, and false Prophets, the which shall shew great signes and wonders, insomuch that euen the elect themselues, if it were by any meanes possible, should bee brought into error. And the Apostle in the 2. to the Thessal. 2. as touching their head antichrist, writeth thus: Whose comming shall be according to the operation of Satan, with all power and signes, false miracles, seducing vnto iniquitie those which doe perish, because they haue not receiued the charitie and loue of truth, that they might be saued: therefore will the Lord send vpon them the operation of error, that they shall giue credit vnto lies; that all such as haue not beleeued the truth, but consent vnto wickednesse, should be iudged. Behold how expressly our Sauiour by himselfe, and by his Apostle doth teach vs, how the disciples of antichrist with their head, should shine through their great signes and wonders. But the true disciples of Christ shall not so doe in the time of antichrist. For as Saint Isidor saith in his first booke, 22. De summo bono: Before that antichrist shall appeare, all vertues and signes shall cease from the church, that he may the boldlier persecute the same, as an abiect. For this profit shall all miracles and signes cease vnder antichrist, that thereby the patience of the holy men might be knowne, and the lightnesse of the reprobat which are offended, may be opened, and also that the crueltie of the persecutors should be made more fierce. Thus writeth Saint Isidor. And Saint Gregory in his 24. booke of Morals saith: For why by a terrible examination of Gods secret dispensation, shall all signes of vertue or power bee taken away from the holy church, before that the Leuiathan appeare in that most wicked and damnable man, whose shape he doth take vpon him. For prophecie is hidden, the gift of healing is taken away, the vertue of long abstinence is diminished, the words of doctrine are put to silence, and the wonderful works of miracles are extinguished: which things nothing can vtterly take away, but onely the dispensation of God. But this dispensation is not so openly and manifoldly declared as it hath béen in times past: the which also is done by a marueilous dispensation, that through one onely thing, both Gods loue and iustice should be fulfilled. For a while the power of miracles being taken away, the holy church appeareth the more abiect and forsaken, and the reward of good men doth cease, which reuerenced the same for the hope of heauenly riches, and not for any present signes: and that the minds of euill men against the same, might the sooner be known, which neglect to follow the inuisible things, which the church doth promise, whiles they be led with visible signes.

Two kind of preachers.

Of the signes and wonders of antichrist.

Why true miracles shal cease vnder Antichrist.

Forsomuch then as the humilitie of the faithfull, as it were destitute of the multitude, and appearing of signes by the terrible working of Gods secret dispensation, whereby mercy is giuen vnto the good and iust, wrath heaped vpon the euill. Forsomuch then as it is truly said, that before this Leuiathan shall plainly and manifestly come, pouertie shall goe before his face; for before that time the riches of miracles shall be taken away from the faithfull. Then shall that ancient enemy shew himselfe against them by open wonders: that as he is extolled through signes and wonders, so shall he the more manly bee vanquished of the faithfull, without any signes or miracles. Also in his 16. booke vpon these words, which the blessed man Iob said; Who shall reprehend his way before him, or who shall call in his teeth, what he hath done, whilest hee did speake of the body of all euill, he suddenly conuerted his speech vnto the head of all the wicked; for he did see that toward the end of the world Satan should enter into man, whom the Scripture calleth antichrist, he shall be exalted with such pride, he shal rule with such power, he shal be exalted with such signes and wonders, vnder the pretence of holinesse, that his doing cannot be controlled of men, forsomuch as his signes and tokens are ioined with power and terror, and with a certaine shew of holinesse. Wherefore he saith; who shall controll his waies before him, what man is hee that dare once rebuke or checke him, whose looke or countenance is he afraid of? But notwithstanding, not onely Enoc and Elias, the which are brought as example for his probation, but also the elect doe argue and reproue his way, whiles that they doe contemne, and by the force and power of their mind, resist his malice. But forsomuch as this thing is not done by their owne power and strength, but by Gods helpe and grace, therefore it is very well said; Who shall argue or reproue his waies before him: who but only God? By whose helpe, the elect are aided and made able to resist.

The description of antichrist out of S. Gregory.

And a little after, vpon the same booke of Job, Gregory saith, insomuch as holy men doe withstand his iniquity: It is not they themselues which doe so rebuke his waies, but it is he, through whose helpe they are strengthened. Also in his second booke he saith: Now the holy church doth not regard, but despise the signes and miracles of the heretikes, if they doe any; forsomuch as the church doth sufficiently vnderstand, that it is no kind of holinesse: for why? the proofe of holinesse is not to make signes or wonders, but to loue euery man as himselfe, to think truly of the very true God, and to thinke better of thy neighbour then of thy selfe: for true vertue and holinesse consisteth in loue, and not in shewing of miracles. This the veritie declareth, saying: Hereby shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye loue one another: but he saith not, that hereby men shall know that ye are my disciples, because yee worke miracles; but contrariwise, if ye loue one another: declaring plainly thereby, that it is not miracles, but the mere charity and loue of God, which maketh vs the seruants of God. Wherefore the chiefe testimony of being Gods disciple, is to haue the gift of brotherly loue. This throughout doth S. Gregory write, and often times in other places he speaketh very much of miracles, how that they shall cease amongst the iust, and abound amongst the wicked.

The proofe of holinesse.

Also Chrysostome in his fiue and fiftith homily saith thus: It is a common & an indifferent worke between the ministers of God and the ministers of the diuell, to cast out diuels; but to confesse the truth and to worke righteousnesse, is the only work of the Saints and holy men: therefore whomsoeuer thou doest see casting out of diuels, if hee haue not the confession of the truth in his mouth, neither righteousnesse in his hands, he is not a man of God: but if thou doest see a man openly confessing and declaring the truth, and doing iustice, although he doe not cast out any diuels, yet is he the mã of God. And it followeth: Let vs know, that like as the comming of Christ, before him, the Prophets, and with him the Apostles wrought miracles through the holy Ghost, for such as the thing is which is stirred, such sent and fauor will proceed from the same. He writeth also vpon the beginning of Matthew: The whole world did maruell and wonder at three things; that Christ rose againe after his death; that flesh ascended into heauen; and that he did couert the whole world by his twelue Apostles. There are foure causes which wrought the same: that is to say, the contempt of riches or mony; the despising of pompe and glory; the separation of themselues from all worldly occupation and businesse, and the patient suffering of torments. Thus much writeth Chrysostome also. Also S. Isidore in his first booke and twenty fiue chapter, De summo bono, writeth thus: Like as in the Apostles, the maruellous effect and power of works was much more commendable then the vertue of their signes; euen so now in the church is it much more better to liue well, then to work any signes or miracles. And the cause why that the church of God doth not at this present worke miracles, as it did in the time of the Apostles, is this: that it was necessary at that time that the world should beleeue miracles, and now at this present, euery faithfull beleeuer ought to shine with good works, for to this end were signes & miracles then outwardly wrought, that their faith thereby might be inwardly strengthened and stablished; for whatsoeuer faithfull man he be that seeketh to worke miracles, he seeketh vainglory to be praised of men; for it is written: Miracles are signes and tokens vnto the infidels and misbeleeuers, and not vnto the faithfull. Thus much writeth Isidore.

Signes common and indifferent to the ministers of Christ and antichrist.

The principall miracles.

The cause why the church now worketh not miracles.

Item, Saint Augustine in his booke of confession saith thus: There is no greater miracle amongst men, then to loue our enemies. By these words of these holy men, a man may easily gather, that both in our daies and in the time to come, the disciples of antichrist both doe, and shall more flourish and shew themselues by strange signes and miracles, then the disciples of Christ, according to the saying of our Sauiour Iesu Christ: There shall rise vp amongst you false prophets, which shall worke strange miracles. Secondly, it is approued, that they are greater and stranger miracles, to confesse the truth, and to doe iustice, then to worke any other kinde of miracle. Thirdly, it is gathered thereby, that whatsoeuer minister or deacon doth loue his enemies, contemneth riches, despiseth the glory of the world, and flieth from all worldly troubles, meekly sustaineth and suffereth most terrible and cruell threatnings and strokes for the gospel sake, hee worketh miracles, hauing thereby a testimony and witnesse, that he is the true disciple of Iesu Christ. And it is euident by the saying of our Sauiour Iesu Christ, Mat. 5. Let your good works so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorifie your father which is in heauen. And likewise John 10. Trust vnto your good works. Whereupon S. Gregory in his first booke of Dialogues, writeth thus: The estimation of a true life, consisteth in the vertue of his works, and not in the shewing of signes. Whereby it is fourthly concluded, by that which is aforesaid, that it is a more effectuall testimony and witnesse for a priest or deacon, that he is sent of God to confesse the truth, and follow Christ in the foresaid vertues, then to cast out diuels, or to doe any other miracles: as it is euident by the saying of Chrysostome before alleaged; Whomsoeuer thou doest see to cast out diuels, if the confession or acknowledging of the truth be not in his mouth, neither righteousnesse nor iustice in his hands, he is not a man of God. This is also confirmed by the words of Christ, Mat. 7. Many shall say vnto me in that day; Lord, Lord, haue not we prophecied in thy name; haue not we cast out diuels in thy name; and haue not we also wrought many great wonders and miracles in thy name? Then I will answer and say vnto them: forsomuch as I haue not knowne you at any time, depart from me yee workers of iniquitie. And as touching the second part, Chrysostome saith: If you see a man confessing and preaching the truth, and working righteousnesse, although he doe not cast out diuels, he is a man of God.

A great miracle to loue a mans enemy.

The true miracles of Christs ministers.

The testimony of a true priest.

Hereby it appeareth, that euery deacon, priest, or minister confessing the truth, and working iustice, hath a perfect and sure testimony that he is sent of God, and that it is not necessary for him to approue this his sending by the working of any miracle, in stead of working righteousnesse, neither by any testimoniall, the which should plainly declare him by name, that he was sent of the Lord to preach.

The first part appeareth manifest by that which is already spoken, that all miracles in the time of antichrist shall cease in the elect.

The second part is also euident, forsomuch as none of the present preachers, can shew by the scripture of the law of God, that he is specially named thereunto.

And likewise doe I also affirme and say, as touching all preachers which shall come hereafter, that they are not named by name. But let no man here obiect Enoc and Elias, which were ancient preachers, and prophecied by the holy spirit of God. And it is apparent, that like as it is not a cause sufficient to proue, that this priest or deacon is sent of God to preach, because he worketh miracles; so is it not a cause sufficient to proue, that he is not sent of God to preach, because he doth no miracles; but to confesse the truth, to worke righteousnesse, to contemne the world with the glory thereof, patiently to suffer rebukes, is a sufficient testimony for any priest or deacon, hauing knowledge of the law of God, freely to preach the Gospell of Iesus Christ, forsomuch as in such case he is sent of God. And this is the sending which the Apostle speaketh of in the 10. to the Romans: How should they preach, except they be sent? Whereupon the glosse of S. Augustine writeth thus: These things serue to set forth Gods grace, declaring that all our goodnesse is preuented of grace.

For he saith, beleefe commeth of hearing, hearing commeth of preaching, and preaching by the sending of God; so that al together wholly commeth out of the fountaine of grace, and preaching truly commeth of sending. This hath the glosse: how shall they then preach, without they be sent of God? And this is euident, that the first and principall sending is from God alone, as it is approued by Moyses.

The second sending is both from God and man, as by the example of Iosua and others, which were sent both by God and the rulers to preach.

The third sending is from man alone, the which is not founded in the law of God, but in mens traditions, which they rather esteeme.

The fourth sending, which hath but the name onely, is proper to them, which of themselues vnworthily vsurpe the office of preaching, as those false Prophets of whom God speaketh in the 23. of Jeremy; I did not send them, and they ran: I spake not vnto them, and they prophecied: if they had continued in my counsels, and had declared my words vnto my people, I would haue conuerted them from their euill waies, and wicked imaginations. And our Sauiour speaketh of these prophets in Matthew, saying: There shall arise false prophets. And Peter his true vicar, in his second Epistle and second chapter, prophecying vnto the faithfull beleeuers in Christ, speaketh thus of them: There were amongst the people false prophets, as there shall be amongst you also maisters of lies, through whom the truth shall be blaspheined and slandered. And that he might the better instruct the people to know them, them, he addeth that they shall go about with fained words, for couetousnesse sake, to make merchandise of you.

The difference betweene the ministers of Christ and antichrist.

Wherefore euery faithfull man, diligently weighing these things in his mind, may now easily perceiue how great a number of false prophets there be, through whom the christian truth is blasphemed: and all couetous dealing is exercised: and these are they which freely preach lies. But the humble and true ministers of Christ, whersoeuer they doe appeare, by and by they are persecuted, whereby the prophecie of the Apostle is verified, which is written in the second Epistle to Timothy, the 3. All men, saith he, which desire to liue godly, shall suffer persecution: but the euill men and seducers shall prosper in their wickednesse, running daily more and more into all kind of errors. The wicked haue now so much preuailed, that they doe preach lies, making heretikes of the faithfull christians, neither is there any man that dare prohibit them their lying, so that they doe not preach against the vices of the prelats. How then can you say, that antichrist is not exalted aboue all that which is called God, suppressing downe the members of Christ in his office, fortifying and fostering his members in lying? Therefore the true and faithfull disciples of Christ ought to stand ready girt about their loines, and shoes vpon their feete in defence of the Gospell, taking the sword in hand, which is the word of God: Ephes. 6. And to fight against the crafts of antichrist, who goeth about vtterly to extinguish the true preaching of the Gospel of our Lord Iesu Christ.

The ministers of antichrist do cloke the vices of their prelats.

¶ The second disputation in the Vniuersitie of Prage, vpon the seuenteenth Article of Iohn Wickliffe, most fruitfull to bee read; prouing by foure and twentie reasons out of the Scriptures, how that princes and lords temporall, haue lawfull authority and iurisdiction ouer the spiritualty and churchmen both in taking from them, and correcting their abuses, according to their doings and deserts.

TO the honor of almighty God, and of our Lord Iesu Christ, both for the trying out of truth, and the profit of holy mother the church, according to the congregation of our Vniuersitie of Prage, which auoiding alwaies to doe that shall be preiudiciall to the truth, hath deferred to giue their consent vnto the condemnation of the 45. Articles, wishing euen vnto this present, sufficient probation to be giuen of the condemnation of the said Articles, & particularly of euery one of them. Whereupon the said Vniuersitie doth alwaies require due proofe of the same, forsomuch as pope Damasus in his canon distinction 68. chap. Chorepiscopi, saith thus: That it is necessarie that whatsoeuer thing standeth not by due reason, should be rooted out. Whereby it appeareth, that the condemnation of the 45. Articles, if it stand not with proofe and sufficient demonstration for euery Article, it is necessary to be rooted out.

The condemnation of the xlv. articles lacketh reason, and therefore is not to be allowed.

But if any man will obiect and say, that to require a reason of euery thing, is to derogat from Gods diuine power. Vnto this obiection master William doth answer himselfe in his Philosophie, the first booke, almost at the end; where he intreating of the place, in Gen. 2. God made man of the slime of the earth, &c. hath these words: For in what point (saith we) are we contrary to the holy Scriptures, if wee seeke by reason to declare wherefore any thing is done, which is said in the Scriptures to be done? For if that a wise man should say that a thing is done, and doe not declare how it is done: and another man speaketh the very selfesame thing, and declareth how it is done, what contrarietie is there? But forsomuch as they themselues know not the force of nature, to the intent that they might haue all men partakers with them of their ignorance, they would haue no man to inquire it out. But they would haue vs beleeue as ignorant people, neither to seeke any reason of our beliefe, that the prophecie might be fulfilled; Such as the people is, such shal be the priest. But we truly doe say, that in all things a reason is to be sought, if it may by any meanes bee found. But if that any man doe stay at any thing which the Scripture doth affirm, let him comit the same vnto faith, & vnto the holy Ghost. For Moses saith; If the lambe cannot be eaten, let it not be by and by consumed in the fire: but let him first call his neighbour which dwelleth next house vnto him; and if they also be not sufficient to eat the lambe, then let it be burned in the fire. So likewise, whenas we goe about to seeke any thing as touching the Godhead, and that we be not able of our selues to comprehend the same, let vs call our neighbour which dwelleth next house vnto vs: that is to say, let vs seeke out such a one as dwelleth in the same catholike faith with vs; and if then, neither we, neither yet hee be able to comprehend the same, let it then be burned with the fire of faith.

An allegorie vpon the Paschall lambe.

But these men, albeit they haue many neighbours dwelling neere vnto them, yet for very pride they will not call any man vnto them, chusing rather to continue still ignorant, then to ask anie question. And if they doe know any man to inquire for his neighbor in such case, by and by they cry out vpon him as an heretike: presuming more vpon their own heads, then hauing confidence in their wisdome. But I exhort you to giue no credit vnto their outward appearance, for already it is verified in them which the Satyrical Poet saith, No credit is to be giuē vnto the outward shew: for which of them all is it that doth not abound with most shamefull and detestable vices? And in another place he saith: They are very dainty of their speech, and haue great desire to keep silence. And thus much hath master Wilhelmus. Let all such heare whom this parable doth touch: for I with the rest of the masters, bachelors, and students of our Vniuersitie, considering how hard a matter the condemnation of the 45. articles of Wickliffe without reason, is, and how greeuous a thing it were, if we should thereunto cōsent, do call together my neighbors, the doctors of this Vniuersitie, & all others which would obiect any thing against the same, that we might presently finde out the reason of the condemnation of this article, concerning the taking away the temporalities from the clergy.

A protestation, whereby he giueth light vnto the reader, how the proposition aforesaid is to be vnderstood, and addeth, that the goods of the clergy are not vtterly to be taken away, but in case they doe abuse the same.

Notwithstanding I do professe that it is not my intent, like as it is not the meaning of the Vniuersity, to perswade that princes or secular lords should take away the goods from the clergy when they would, or how they would, and conuert them to what vse they list. But our whole intent is, diligētly to search out whether this article, as touching the taking away of temporalities from the clergy, may haue in it any true sense, whereby it may be defended without reproofe. Wherefore this article being the 17. in the number of the 45. is propounded vnder this forme: The lords temporall may at their owne will & pleasure, take away the temporall goods from the clergy, if they do offend, and therein continue. It is thus proued: The kings of the old Testament tooke away the temporall goods at Gods commandement from the clergy: that is to say, from the priests offending. Therfore the kings also of the new Testament, at Gods commandement, may doe the like, whenas the priests of the new law doe offend. The consequent dependeth vpon a similitude. And the antecedent is euident. First, it is proued by Salomon in the 3. of the kings, 2. chap. Which Salomon deposed Abiathar the high priest, because he had taken part with Adonias the brother of Salomon, to make him king, without the aduice either of Dauid, or of Salomon himselfe, which ought to raigne; and set vp Sadoc the priest in the place of Abiathar, because he had not consented with Abiathar, vnto Adonias, as it is written in the 3. booke of Kings, 1. chapter: where it is said; Adonias the sonne of Agithe, exalted himselfe, saying; I will raigne, and made vnto himselfe chariots and horsemen, and fortie men which should run before him: neither did his father rebuke him at any time, saying, Wherefore hast thou done this? For he was very comely, being second sonne, next to Absolon, and his talke was with Ioab the sonne of Saruia and Abiathar the priest, which tooke part with Adonias. But Sadoc the priest, and Banaias the son of Ioiada, and Nathan the Prophet, and Semei, and Serethi, and Felethi, and all the power of Dauids host, were not on Adonias part.

The seuenteenth article proued by 44. arguments.

This was the cause of the deposing of Abiathar, because he tooke part with Adonia, that he should be king against Salomon, the eldest son of king Dauid: wherefore it is written in the 3. booke, and 2. chap. of the kings: The king said vnto Abiathar the priest, go your waies vnto Anathoth thine owne field, for thou art a man of death; but this day I will not slay thee, because thou hast carried the arke of the Lord before my father Dauid, and didst labor in all things wherein my father labored. Then did Salomon cast out Abiathar, that hee should be no more the priest of the Lord, that the word of the Lord might be fulfilled which he spake vpon the house of Hely in Silo.

Behold the most prudent king Salomon, according to the wisdome which was giuen him of God, did exercise his power vpon the said priest, putting him out of his priesthood, and setting in his place Sadoc the priest. This was a greater matter thē to take away the tēporalities. If thē in the law of Christ, which now raigneth ouer vs, a bishop should likewise rebell against the true heire of the kingdome, willing to set vp another for king, why should not the king or his heire haue power in like case, to take away the temporalities from him so offending?

1. Nabuchodonozor.

Item, it is also euident by the king Nabuchodonozor, which had power giuen him of God, to lead away the children of Israel, with their Priests and Leuites, into the captiuitie of Babylon: as it is written 4. booke of the Kings, 25. chapter.

2. Ioas.

Item, it is read in the 4. booke of Kings, and 12. chap. how that Ioas the most godly king of Iuda, according to the wisdome which God had granted him, took away all the consecrat vessels which Iosaphat, Ioram, and Ochosias, his fore-fathers kings of Iuda had consecrated, and those which he himselfe had offered, and all the treasure that could be found in the temple of the Lord, and in the kings palace, and sent it vnto Azahel king of Syria, and he departed from Ierusalem. Marke how this most holy king exercised his power, not onely in taking away the temporalities of the priests, but also those things which were consecrat in the temple of the Lord, to procure vnto the common wealth the benefit of peace.

4. Ezechias.

Item, in the 4. booke, and 18. chap. of the Kings, it is written, how that the holy king Ezechias took all the treasure that was found in the house of the Lord, and in the kings treasury, and brake brake downe the pillers of the temple of the Lord, and all the plates of gold which he himselfe had fastned thereupon, and gaue them vnto the king of the Assyrians, yet was he not rebuked of the Lord therefore, as he was for his other sinnes, as it appeareth in the second booke of Paralip. 32. chapter. For so much then as in time of necessitie, all things ought to be in common vnto christians, it followeth then that the secular lords in case of necessitie, and in many other common cases, may lawfully take away the moueable goods from the clergie, when they do offend.

5 Item, it is also read in the 12. of Matthew, that the disciples of Iesus for to slake their hunger vpon the Sabbath day, pulled the eares of corne, and did eate them, and the Pharisies rebuked them therefore; vnto whom Christ answered, Haue ye not read what Dauid did, when he was hungrie, and those that were with him; how he entred into the house of the Lord, and did eate the shew bread, which it was not lawfull for him, neither for them that were with him to eate, but only for the Priests? This storie is written in the first booke of the Kings, and 21. chapter. And the commandement in the 12. of Deuteronomie. Whereby it appeareth, that it is lawfull in time of necessitie to vse any thing, be it neuer so much consecrat. Otherwise, children by giuing their moueables to the consecration of any temple, should not bee bound to helpe their parents; which is contrarie and against the Gospell of S. Matthew in the 16. chapter: whereas our Sauiour sharpely rebuked the Pharisies, that for their owne traditions they did transgresse the commandement of God.

Dauid.

Case of necessitie.

6 Item, Titus and Vespasian secular princes, had power giuen them of God 24. yeares after the Lords ascension, to take away the temporalities from the priests which had offended against the Lords holy one, and thereby also bereft them of their liues: and it seemeth vnto many they did and might worthily do the same according to Gods good will and pleasure. Then for so much as our priests in these daies may transgresse and offend as much, and rather more against the Lords annointed, it followeth that by the pleasure of God, the secular Lords may likewise punish them for their offence.

Titus and Vespasian.

7 Our Sauiour being King of kings, and high Bishop, with his disciples, did giue tribute vnto Cæsar, as it appeareth Matth. 17. and commanded the Scribes and Pharisies to giue the like vnto Cæsar, Matth. 22. Whereby he gaue example vnto all priests that should come after him to render tribute vnto their kings: whereupon blessed S. Ambrose in his fourth booke vpon these words in the 5. of Luke, (Cast out your nets) writeth thus: There is another kind of fishing amongst the Apostles, after which manner the Lord commanded Peter only to fish, saying, Cast out thy hooke, and that fish which commeth first vp, take him. And then vnto the purpose he saith: It is truly a great and spirituall document, whereby all christian men are taught, that they ought to be subiect vnto the higher powers, and that no man ought to thinke that the lawes of a king heere on earth are to bee broken. For if the Sonne of God did pay tribute, who art thou so great a man, that thinkest thou oughtest not to pay tribute? He payed tribute which had no possessions: and thou which daily seekest after the lucre of the world, why doest thou not acknowledge the obedience and dutie of the world? Why doest thou through the arrogancie of thy mind exalt thy selfe aboue the world, when as through thine owne miserable couetousnesse, thou art subiect vnto the world? Thus writeth Saint Ambrose, and it is put in the 11. quæst. 1. Magnum quidem. He also writeth vpon these words in the 20. of Luke, Shew me a penie, whose image it hath: If Christ had not the image of Cæsar, why did he pay any tribute? He gaue it not of his owne, but rendred vnto the world, that which was the worlds: And if thou wilt not be in danger of Cæsar, possesse not those things which are the worlds; for if thou hast riches, thou art in danger of Cæsar.

The example of Christ paying of tribute.

S. Ambrose mind.

Christ commanded tribute to be paid vnto the emperour.

Wherefore if thou wilt owe nothing vnto any earthly king, forsake all those things, and follow Christ. If then all ecclesiasticall Ministers, hauing riches, ought to be vnder the subiection of kings, and giue vnto them tribute: it followeth that kings may lawfully by the authoritie which is giuen them, take away their temporalities from them.

8 Hereupon S. Paul acknowledging himselfe to be vnder the iurisdiction of the emperour, appealed vnto Cæsar, as it appeareth, Act. 25.

Paul appealed to the emperor. S. Ambrose there in the 8. distinct. Daniel 2.

I stand, saith he, at Cæsars iudgement seat, there I ought to be iudged. Whereupon in the 8. distinction, chapter, quo iure, S. Ambrose alleageth, that all things are lawfull vnto the emperour, and all things vnder his power. For the confirmation whereof, it is said, Daniel second chapter; The God of heauen hath giuen vnto thee a kingdome, strength, empire, and glorie, and all places, wherein the children of men do dwell, and hath giuen into thy power the beasts of the field, and fowles of the aire, and set all things vnder thy subiection.

9 Also in the 11. question and 1. he saith: If the emperour require tribute, we do not denie that the lands of the church shall pay tribute; if the emperour haue need of our lands, hee hath power to challenge them, let him take them, if he will; I do not giue them vnto the emperour, neither doe I denie them. This writeth S. Ambrose, expressely declaring that the secular lord hath power at his pleasure to take away the lands of the church; and so consequently the secular lords haue power at their owne pleasures to take away the temporall goods from the ecclesiasticall Ministers, when they do offend.

10 Item, S. Augustine writeth: If thou sayest, what haue we to do with the emperour? But now as I said, wee speake of mans law. The Apostle would be obedient vnto kings, and honor them, saying, Reuerence your kings: and do not say, what haue I to doe with the king? What hast thou then to do with possessions? By the kings law thy possessions are possessed. Thou hast said, what haue I to do with the king? but do not say, what haue thy possessions to do with the king? For then hast thou renounced the lawes of men, whereby thou diddest possesse thy lands. Thus writeth S. Augustine in his 8. distinction, by whose words it is manifest, that the king hath power ouer the church goods, and consequently may take them away from the clergie, transgressing or offending.

S. Augustine.

11 Item, in his 33. epistle vnto Boniface, he saith: What sober man will say vnto our kings, care not you in your kingdome, by whom the church of the Lord is maintained, or by whom it is oppressed; it pertaineth not vnto you, who will be either a religious man, or who will be a church robber? Vnto whom it may be thus answered: Doth it not pertaine vnto vs in our kingdome, who will either liue a chast life, or who will be an vnchast whoremonger? Behold, this holy man sheweth heere how that it is the dutie of kings, to punish such as are robbers of churches, and consequently the proud clergie when as they do offend.

Magistrates, keepers of both tables.

The dutie of kings to punish the clergie.

12 Item, he writeth in the 33. quest. 7. si de rebus: The secular lords may lawfully take away the temporall goods from heretickes: and for so much that it is a case greatly possible that manie of the clergie are vsers of Simonie, and thereby heretikes; therefore the secular lords may very lawfully take away their temporalities from them. For what vnworthie thing is it, saith Saint Augustine, if the Catholikes do possesse according vnto the will of the Lord, those things which the heretikes held? For so much as this is the word of the Lord vnto all wicked men, Matth. 21. The kingdome of God shall be taken away from you, and giuen vnto a nation, which shall do the righteousnesse thereof; is it in vaine which is written in the 11. chapter of the booke of Wisdome? The iust shall eate the labours of the wicked.

Wisdome 11.

And whereas it may be obiected as touching the desire of other mens goods; Saint Augustine answereth, that by that euidence the seuen nations, which did abuse the land of promise, and were driuen out from thence by the power of God, may obiect the same vnto the people of God, which inhabite the same. And the Iewes themselues, from whom, according vnto the word of the Lord, the kingdome is taken away and giuen vnto a people, which shall doe the workes of righteousnesse, may obiect the same vnto the church of Christ, as touching the desire of other mens goods; but Saint Augustines answere is thus:

An obiection of the desire of other mens goods.

Wee, saith hee, do not desire another mans goods, for so much as they are ours by the commandement of him, by whom all things were made. By like euidence the clergie hauing offended, their temporall goods are made the goods of others, for the profit of the church. To this purpose also, according to Saint Augustine, scrueth the 14. question 4. Vnto a misbeleeuer, it is not a halfe-penie matter, but vnto the faithfull is a whole world of riches: shall we not then conuince all such to possesse another mans goods, which seemed to haue gathered great riches together, and know not how to vse them; for that truelie is not anothers, which is possessed by right, and that is lawfullie possessed, which is iustly possessed, and that is iustlie possessed, which is well possessed. Ergo, all that is euill possessed is another mans, and he doth ill possesse it, which doth euill vse it.

S. Augustine 14. question 4.

If then any of the clergie doe abuse the temporall goods, the temporall lords may at their owne pleasure, according vnto the rule of charitie, take away the said temporall goods from the clergie so transgressing. For then according to the allegation aforesaid, the clergie doth not iustly possesse those temporall goods, but the temporall lords proceeding according to the rule of charitie, do iustly possesse those temporalities, for so much as all things are the iust mans. 1. Corinth. 3. chapter. All things, saith the Apostle, are yours; whether it be Paul or Apollo, or Cephas, either the world, either life, or death, or things present, or things to come; for all things be yours, you be Christs, and Christ is Gods. Also 23. quest. 7. Quicunque, it is written: Iure diuino omnia sunt iustorum. The words of Saint Augustine in that place, ad Vincentium, bee these: Whosoeuer, saith hee, vpon the occasion of ths law or ordinance of the emperour, doth molest or persecute you, not for loue of anie charitable correction, but onely for hatred and malice to doe you displeasure, I hold not with him in so doing.

1. Corinth. 3.

By Gods law, cuncta iustorum esse dicuntur.

And although there is nothing heere in this earth, that anie man may possesse assuredly, but either hee must hold it by Gods law, by which cuncta iustorum esse dicuntur: that is, all things be said to pertaine to the possession of the iust: or else by mans law, which standeth in the kings power to set and to ordaine, &c. Here by the words of Augustine alleaged, yee see all things belong to the possession of the iust, by Gods law.

13 The clergie subiect vnto the Emperour and King, by meanes of their possessions.

Item, for so much as the clergie by meanes of their possessions are in danger of the Emperor and King: it followeth, that if they doe offend, the Emperor or King may lawfullie take away their possessions from them. The consequent dependeth on this poynt, for so much as otherwise they were not in subiection vnder the Emperor or King: and the antecedent is manifest by the 11. question and 1. Parag. His ita respondetur. Where as it is specified in Latine thus: [His ita respondetur, Clerici ex officio Episcopo sunt supposti, ex possessionibus prædiorum imperatori sunt obnoxij: ab Episcopo vnctionem, decimas, & primitias accipiunt; ab imperatore verò prædiorum possessiones nanciscuntur:] that is to say: The clergie by meanes of their office are vnder the Bishop, but by reason of their possessions they bee subiect vnto the Emperor: Of the Bishop they receiue vnction, tithes, and first fruites; of the Emperor, they receiue possessions. Thus then it is decreed by the Emperiall law, that liuelihoods should be possessed: whereby it appeareth, that the clergie by the possession of their liuelihoods are in danger of the Emperour: for him to take away from them, or to correct them according to their deseruings, and to haue the controlement of them, as it shall seeme good vnto him.

14 Vsers of Simonie are punished by the ciuill Magistrate.

Item, the temporall Lords may take away the temporalities from such as vse Simonie, because they are heretickes. Ergo, this Article is true.

The antecedent is manifest, for so much as the secular Lords may refuse such as vse Simony, and punish them except they doe repent. For by the decree of Pope Paschasius in the first and last question it appeareth, that all such as vsed Simonie, were to be refused of all faithfull people, as chiefe and principall heretickes; and if they doe not repent after they be warned, they are also to be punished by the externe power. For all other faults and crimes, in comparison of Simonie, be counted but light, and seeme small offences.

Paschasius in 1. q. vlt. cap. pater.

The Laitie correcters of the Clergie.

Whereupon the glosse expounding the same text, saith, that by this word externe, is vnderstood the laitie, which haue power ouer the clergie, besides the Church, as in the 17. distinct. [Non licuit, & 23. quæst. 5. principes.] Whereby it is euident, that the temporall Lords may take away the temporall goods from the clergie when as they doe offend.

Gregorie writeth to the French Queene.

Item, Saint Gregorie in the Register vpon his 7. booke and 9. Chapter, writeth thus vnto the French Queene: For so much as it is written that righteousnesse helpeth the people, and sinne maketh them miserable: then is that kingdome counted stable, when as the offence which is knowne, is soone amended.

Wicked priests the destruction of the people.

Therefore, for so much as wicked priests are the cause of the ruine of the people, (for who shall take vpon him, to be intercessor for the sinnes of the people, if the Priest which ought to intreate for the same, haue committed greater offences?) and vnder your dominions the Priests doe liue wickedly and vnchastly: therefore that the offence of a few might not turne to the destruction of many, we ought earnestly to seeke the punishment of the same. And it followeth: If we doe command any person, we doe send him forth, with the consent of your authoritie, who together with other Priests, shall diligently seeke out, and according vnto Gods word correct and amend the same. Neither are these things to be dissimuled, the which we haue spoken of, for he that may correct any thing, and doth neglect the same, without all doubt he maketh himselfe partaker of the sinne or offence.

Therefore foresee vnto your owne soule, prouide for your nephews, and for such as you doe desire to raigne after you, prouide for your countrey, and with diligeuce prouide for the correction and punishment of that sinne, before our Creator doe stretch out his hand to strike.

S. Gregorie to the french King.

And in his next Chapter, he writeth vnto the French King: Whatsoeuer you doe vnderstand, to pertaine either vnto the honour and glory of our God, to the reuerence of the church, or to the honour of the priests, that doe you diligently cause to be decreed and in all points to be obserued. Wherefore once againe we doe mooue you, that you commaund a Synode to be congregate, and as we wrote lately vnto you, to cause all the carnall vices which raigneth amongst your Priests, and all the wickednesse and Simonie of your Bishops, which is most hard to be condemned and reproued; vtterly to be banished out of your kingdome; and that you will not suffer them to possesse any more substance vnder your dominion, then Gods commandement doth allow.

Beholde how carefully blessed Gregory doth exhort the Queene and the King to punish the vices of the clergie, lest through their negligence they should be partakers of the same: and how they ought to correct their subiects. For as it is conuenient to be circumspect and carefull against the outward enemies, euen so likewise ought they to be against the inward enemies of the soule. And like as in iust warre against the outward enemies, it is lawfull to take away their goods, so long as they continue in their malice, so also is it lawfull to take away the goods of the clergie, being the inward enemie. The consequent is prooued thus, for so much as the domesticall enemies are most hurtfull.

Item, it is thus argued: If God be, the temporal Lords may meritoriouslie and lawfully take away the temporall goods from the Clergie, if they doe offend. For this point let vs suppose that wee speake of power, as the true autentike Scripture doth speake, Matth. 3. 9. God is able euen of these stones to raise vp children vnto Abraham.

Whereupon it is thus argued: For if God he, he is omnipotent, and if he so bee, hee may giue like power vnto the secular Lords. And so consequently they may meritoriouslie and lawfully vse the same power. But lest that any man may obiect, that a proofe made by a strange thing is not sufficient, it is therefore declared how that the temporall Lords haue power to take away their almes bestowed vpon the church, the church abusing the same, as it shal be prooued hereafter. And first thus: It is lawfull for kings in cases limited by the law to take away the moueables from the Clergie when they do offend: it is thus proued; For the temporall Lords are most bound vnto the works of greatest mercie most easie for them, but in case possible, it should be greater almes, and easier temporall dominion, to take away their almes from such as build therwithal vnto eternall damnation, through the abuse therof, then to giue the said almes for any bodily relefe. Ergo: the assumption is true.

Whereupon first this sentence of the law of Christ in the 2. Thes. 3. is noted, whereas the Apostle writeth thus: When we were amongst you, we declared this vnto you, that hee that would not worke should not eate. Wherefore the law of nature doth licence all such as haue the gouernance of kingdomes, to correct the abuse of the temporalities which would be the chiefe cause of the destruction of their kingdomes: whether the temporall Lords or any other had endowed the Church with those temporalities or not. It is lawfull for them in some case to take away the temporalities, as it were by way of physicke to withstand sinne, notwithstanding any excommunication, or other ecclesiasticall censures, for so much as they are not endowed, but only with condition thereunto annexed.

When and how the title of any gift is lost.

Hereby it appeareth, that the condition annexed to the endowing, or inriching of any church, is, that God should be honoured; the which condition if it once faile, the contrarie taking place, the title of the gift is lost: and consequently the Lord which gaue the almes ought to correct the offence. Excommunication ought not to let the fulfilling of iustice. Secondlie, according to the Canon law, 16. quest. 7. this sentence is noted, where it is thus spoken as touching the children, nephewes and the most honest of the kinred of him which hath builded or endowed any church: That it is lawfull for them to bee thus circumspect, that if they perceiue the priest do defraud any part of that which is bestowed, they should either gently admonish or warne him, or else complaine of him to the bishop, that he may be corrected. But if the bishop himselfe attempt to do the like, let them complaine of him to his Metropolitane: and if the Metropolitane doe the like, let them not deferre the time, to report it in the eares of the king. For so saith the canon, Let them not deferre to report it in the eares of the king. To what end I pray you, but that he should do correction? neither is it to be doubted, but that correction doth more appertaine vnto the king in this point for their goods, whereof he is chiefe Lord by a subtraction proportional, according to the fault or offence.

It is lawfull for the ciuill rulers to correct the clergie.

Item, it is thus prooued: It is lawfull for the secular Lords by their power to doe correction vpon the clergy by some kind of fearefull discipline apertaining to their secular power. Ergo, by like reason it is lawfull for them by their power to doe such correction, by all kind of fearefull discipline pertaining vnto their secular power. For so much then as the taking of their temporalities is in kind of fearefull discipline pertaining vnto the secular power: it followeth that it is lawfull for them thereby to doe such correction. And consequently it followeth that the truth is thus to be prooued. The consequent is euident: and the antecedent is prooued by Isidore 23. quest. 5. Principes. Where it is thus written: There should bee no secular powers within the church, but only for this purpose, that whatsoeuer thing the priests or ministers cannot bring to passe by preachings or teachings, the secular powers may command the same by the terror & feare of discipline. For oftentimes the heauenlie kingdome is profited and holpen by the earthly kingdome, that they which are in the church, and doe any thing contrarie vnto faith and discipline, by the rigour of the princes may bee troden downe, and that the power of the rulers may lay that discipline vpon the necks of the proud and stifnecked, which the vtility and profit of the church cannot exercise or vse.

Item, all things that by power ought to worke or bring to any perfect end by the reasonable measuring of the meane thereto, it may lawfully vse by power, the subtraction or taking away of the excesse and the addition of the want of the meanes, according as shall bee conuenient or meete for the measure to be made. For so much then as the secular Lords ought by their power to prouide for the necessarie sustentation of the Christian Clergie by the reasonable measuring of their temporalties, which they are bounde to bestow vpon the Christian clergie, it followeth that they may lawfully by their power vse ỹ taking away or putting vnto of those tẽporalties according according as shall be conuenient for the performance of that reasonable matter.

Item, it is lawfull for the clergie, by their power to take away the sacraments of the church from the laity customably offending, for so much as it doth pertaine to the office of the christian ministers by their power to minister the same vnto the laie people. Wherefore, for so much as it doth pertaine vnto the office of the laitie, according vnto their power to minister, and giue temporalities to the clergie of Christ, as the Apostle saith, 1. Cor. 9. It followeth, that it is also lawfull for them by their power to take away the temporalities from the clergie, when they doe customablie sinne and offend.

21 Item, it is also lawfull for the secular lords, by their power to chastise and punish the lay people when they do offend, by taking away of their temporalities, according to the exigent of their offence, for so much as the lay people are subiect vnder their dominion. Wherefore the clergie being also subiect vnder the dominion of the secular lords, as appeareth, Rom. 13. and many other places, it is euident that it is lawfull by their power to punish the clergie, by taking away of their temporalitities, if their offence do so deserue.

22 Item, the true and easie direction of the clergie vnto the life of Christ and the Apostles, and most profitable vnto the laitie, that the clergie should not liue contrarie vnto Christs institution, seemeth to be the taking away of their almes, & those things which they had bestowed vpon them. And it is thus proued: That medicine is most apt to be laid vnto the sore, whereby the infirmitie might sooneſt be holpen, and were most agreeable vnto the patient: Such is the taking away of the temporalities: Ergo, this article is true. The minor is thus proued, for so much as by the abundance of temporalities the worme or serpent of pride is sprung vp, whereupon vnsatiable desire and lust is inflamed, and thereby proceedeth all kind of gluttonie and leacherie. It is euident in this point, for so much as the temporalities being once taken away, euery one of those sinnes is either vtterly taken away, or at the least diminished, by the contrarie vertue induced and brought in. It seemeth also most pertinent vnto the laitie, for so much as they ought not to lay violent hands vpon their ministers, or to abiect the priestly dignitie, neither to iudge any of the clergie in their open courts. It seemeth also by the law of conscience, to pertaine vnto the lay people, for so much as euery man which worketh any worke of mercie, ought diligently to haue respect vnto the abilitie of them that he bestoweth his almes vpon, lest that by nourishing or helping loiterers, he be made partaker of his offence. Whereupon, if a priest do not minister of their spiritualties, as Hostiensis teacheth in his third booke, of their tithes, first fruits and oblations, that the people ought to take away the almes of their tithes from them.

23 Item, it is confirmed by the last chapter of the 17. question, out of the decree of rents appropriat vnto the church, quicunq;. Whereas the case is put thus, that a certaine man hauing no children, neither hoping to haue any, gaue all his goods vnto the church, reseruing vnto himselfe the only vse and profits thereof: it hapned afterward that he had children, and the bishop restored againe his goods vnto him, hoping not for it. The bishop had it in his power, whether to render again or no, those things which were giuen him, but that was by the law of man, and not by the law of conscience. If then by the decree of the holy doctor S. Augustine in his sermon of the life of the clergie, Aurelius the bishop of Carthage had no power by Gods law to withhold that which is bestowed vpon the church for the necessitie of children, by the which law, the wanton, proud, and vnstable clergie being more then sufficiently possessed and inriched, do detaine and keepe backe the temporalities to the detriment and hurt of their owne state, and of the whole militant church, the secular patrons being thereby so impouerished, that they are compelled by penurie to rob and steale, to oppresse their tenants, to spoile and vndo others, and often times by verie necessitie are driuen to beggerie.

24 Item, suppose that a priest and minister, how grieuously soeuer he do offend, by what kind or signe of offence soeuer it bee, as it was in the bishop Iudas Iscarioth, of the religious Monke Sergius, of pope Leo the heretike, and manie other priests, of whom the Scripture and chronicles make mention, and daily experience doth teach vs the same: it is euident that as it is supposed, the priests in the kingdome of Boheme grieuouslie offending, it is the kings part, for so much as he is supreme head next vnder God, and lord of the kingdome of Boheme, to correct and punish those priests. And for so much as the gentlest correction, and punishment of such as be indurate in their malice, is the casting away of their temporall goods, it followeth, that it is lawfull for the king to take away temporalities. Wherefore it should seeme verie maruellous and strange, if that priests riding about, should spoile virgins, violently corrupt and defile honest matrons, if in such case it were not lawfull for them to take away their armours, weapons, horses, guns and swords from them. The like reason were it also, if they had vnlawfully conspired the death of the king, or that they would betray the king vnto his enemies.

Item, whatsoeuer any of the clergie doth require, or desire of the secular power, according vnto the law and ordinance of Christ, the secular power ought to perfome and grant the same. But the clergie being letted by riches, ought to require helpe of the secular power, for the dispensation of the said riches. Ergo the secular power ought in such case by the law of Christ, to take vpon them the office or duty of getting, keeping, and distributing all such maner of riches. The minor is hereby proued, that no man ought to haue riches, but to that end, that they be helps, preferring and helping vnto the office which is appointed of God. Therefore in case that secular possession do hinder the clergie from their dutie, the secular power ought to take it away, for so did the Apostles, Act. 6. saying, It is not lawfull for vs to leaue the word of God vntaught, and to minister to tables.

And thus hitherto hath Iohn Hus prosecuted Wickliffes articles, with long arguments and reasons, the which were too long a trauell, neither agreeable for this place, to alleage all the whole order of his reasons and proofes, which he vsed in that disputation, aboue the number of twentie more, besides the testimonies of all the writers before recited, the which he alleageth out of the Scriptures, Decretals, S. Ambrose in his booke of offices, S. Augustine in his 5. booke and 5. quest. and also vnto Macedo, Isidore, the councell of Nice, Gregorie his 11. quest. Bernard vnto Eugenius in his third booke, and out of Lincolniensis 61. epistle, besides many other moe. The sum of all which testimonies tend vnto this end, that he might vtterlie take away all earthly rule and dominion from the clergie, and to bring them vnder the subiection and censure of kings and emperours, as it were within certaine bonds, the which is not only agreeable vnto equitie and Gods word, but also profitable for the clergie themselues. He teacheth it also to be necessarie, that they should rather be subiect vnder the secular power, then to be aboue them, because that else it were dangerous, lest that they being intangled with such kind of busines, they should be an easier prey vnto Satan, and sooner trapped in his snares. And thereby it should come to passe that the gouernance and principalitie of all things being at the length brought into the hands of the clergie, the lawfull authoritie of kings and princes should not only be giuen ouer vnto them, but in a manner as it were grow out of vse: specially for so much as alreadie in certaine kingdomes and common wealthes, the Eccleſiasticall power is growne vnto such height, that not only in Boheme, but also almost throughout all the common wealthes, they do occupie the third, or at least the fourth part of the rents and reuenues. And last of all, he alleageth the example of Gregorie and of Mauritius, and afterward the propheciе of Hildegardis, writing in this maner: Hildegardis.

As the ecclesiasticall ministers do willingly receiue reward and praise of kings and rulers for their good deeds: So also ought they when they do offend, willingly suffer and receiue punishment at their hands for their euill doings. The consequent holdeth thus; for so much as the punishment meekely and humblie receiued for his offence doth more profit a man, then his praise receiued for any good worke. Whereupon S. Gregorie writeth thus vnto Mauritius the emperour when he did persecute him, saying: I beleeue that you do please almightie God so much the better, in so cruelly afflicting me, which haue bin so euill a seruant vnto him. If then this holy Pope did so humblie and meekely, without any offence, suffer this affliction of the emperour, why should not any of the clergie, when they do offend, meekely sustaine punishment, at the kings or rulers hands, vnder whom he is bounden to be subiect? When as the true vicar of Christ saith, the 1. of Peter and 2. chapter, Be yee subiect vnto euery creature for Gods cause, whether it be vnto the king, as most excellent, or vnto the rulers, as men sent of God, for the punishing of the wicked, and to the praise of the good, for so is the good will of God. Gregorius ad Mauritium.

Whereupon pope Leo, leaning vnto this rule, submitted himselfe vnto Ludouicus the emperour, as it is written in the 2. quest. 7. vnder these words: If we haue done any thing incompetently, or that we haue not obserued the vpright path and way of equitie amongst subiects, we will amend the same, either by your owne iudgement, either else by the aduice or iudgement of those which you shal appoint for that purpose. For if we which ought to correct and punish other mens faults, do commit more grieuous our selues, we are not then the disciples of the truth (but as with sorow we speake it) we shall bee aboue all other, the masters of errour. Pope Leo submitteth himselfe vnto the emperor Ludouicus.

And in the tenth distinction he writeth thus: As touching the obedience vnto the emperour, as concerning the precepts and commandements of our emperours, and our predecessours bishops (the which the Glosse nameth emperours, which are annoynted after the manner of bishops) to bee obserued and kept vnbroken, we do professe our selues by all meanes possible, as much as in vs lieth, or that we may and can by the helpe of God preserue and keepe them both now and euer. And if peraduenture any man do informe, or hereafter shall informe you otherwise, know you him assuredly, to be a lier and slanderer.

Marke how this deuout and holy pope, calling the emperors bishops, submitted himselfe according to the rule of S. Peter the Apostle vnder the obedience, and also punishment of the emperour. Wherefore then should not the clergie of the kingdome of Boheme submit themselues vnder the obedience of their king, for Gods cause, for to be punished if they do offend, and not only submit themselues vnto the king, but also vnto the rulers, and not only vnto the rulers, but vnto euery other creature? For by how much they do so humble, and abase themselues in this world for Gods sake, so much the more shall they be exalted with him: but what is the let thereof, but only pride, whereby antichrist doth exalt himselfe aboue the most humble and meeke Lord Iesus Christ?

The tyrannie and pride of the clergie.

Also it seemeth to appeare by that which is afore said vpon the taking away of the temporalities out of the prophecie of Hildegardis the virgin, the which he writeth in his bookes vnder Eugenius the pope in the councell of Treuerse, approued and allowed by many bishops of France, Italie, and Almanie, which were there present, where as also S. Bernard himselfe was present; the which virgin prophesying, spake in this manner. The kings and other rulers of the world, being stirred vp by the iust iudgement of God, shall set themselues against them, and runne vpon them: saying, We will not haue these men to raigne ouer vs with their rich houses, and great possessions, and other worldly riches, ouer the which we are ordained to be lords and rulers, and how is it meete or comely that those shauelings with their stoles and chisils should haue more souldiers, or more or richer armour or artillerie then wee? So is it not conuenient that one of the clergie should be a man of war, neither a souldier to be one of the clergie. Wherfore let vs take away from them, that which they do not iustly, but wrongfullie possesse. And immediatly after she sayeth thus: The omnipotent father equallie diuided all things: that is to say, the heauens he gaue vnto the heauenly creatures, and the earth vnto the earthlie. And by this meanes was there a iust diuision made betweene the children of men, that the spiritualtie should haue such things as belong vnto them, and the secular people, such things as are meete and necessarie for them, so that neither of these two sorts should oppresse each other by violence, for God doth not command that the one sonne or child should haue both the cloke and the cote, and the other should go naked, but he willed that the one should haue the cloke, and the other the cote. Wherefore the secular sort ought to haue the cloke for the greatnesse of their worldly cares, and for their children, which dailie increase and multiply. The cote he giueth vnto the spiritualtie, that they should not lacke clothing, and that they should not possesse more then necessitie doth require. Wherefore we iudge and thinke it good that all these aforesaid be diuided by reason and equitie. And whereas the cloke and the cote are both found, there the cloke be taken away, and giuen vnto the needie, that they do not perish for lacke or want. These aforesaid spake the virgin Hildegardis, plainly foreshewing the taking away of the temporalities from the clergy by the secular Lords, and shewing for what cause they shal be so taken away. And what manner of diuision shall be made of those things that are taken away, that they be not consumed, and spent vnprofitablie.

The prophecie of Hildegardis.

For so much as mention is heere made of Hildegardis, it shall not seeme impertinent, moued by the occasion hereof, to giue forth vnto the reader such things as we haue found in certaine old volumes, touching her prophecie of the comming of certaine false prophets, only meaning, as it seemeth, the begging friers, which sprang vp shortly after her time. The tenour whereof is this, word for word, as we find it written.

Hildegardis prophesying of friers and monkes.

In those daies, there shall rise vp a people without vnderstanding, proud, couetous, vntrustie, and deceitfull, the which shall eat the sins of the people, holding a certaine order of foolish deuotion, vnder the fained cloke of beggerie, preferring themselues aboue all other, by their fained deuotion, arrogant vnderstanding, and pretended holines, walking without shamefastnes, or the feare of God, inuenting many new mischiefes, being strong and stout: but this order shall be accursed of all wise men, and faithfull christians; they shall cease from labour, and giue themselues ouer vnto idlenesse: chusing rather to liue through flatterie, then by begging. Moreouer, they shall together studie, how they may peruersly resist the teachers of the truth, and slay them together with the noble men: how to seduce and deceiue the nobilitie, for the necessitie of their liuing and pleasures of this world; for the diuell will graft in them foure principall vices: that is to say, flatterie, enuie, hypocrisie and slander. Flatterie, that they may haue large gifts giuen them. Enuie, when they see gifts giuen vnto other, and not vnto them. Hypocrisie, that by false dissimulation, they may please men. Detraction, that they may extoll and commend themselues, and backbite others, for the praise of men and seducing of the simple. Also they shall instantly preach without deuotion or example of the martyrs, and shall detract the secular princes, taking away the sacraments of the church from the true pastors, receiuing almes of the poore, diseased, and miserable, and also associating themselues with the common people, hauing familiarity with women, instructing them how they shall deceiue their husbands and friends by their flatterie and deceitfull words, and rob their husbands to giue it vnto them: for they will take all these stollen and euill gotten, and say, giue it vnto vs, and we will pray for you, so that they being curious to hide other mens faults do vtterly forget their owne; and alas, they will receiue all things of rouers, pickers, spoilers, theeues and robbers, of sacrilegious persons, vsurers, and adulterers, heretikes, schismatikes, apostataes, whores and bauds, of noble men, periurers, merchants, false iudges, souldiers, tyrants, princes, of such as liue contrarie to the law, and of many peruerse and wicked men, following the persuasion of the diuell, the sweetnesse of sinne, a delicate and transitorie life, and fulnesse euen vnto eternal damnation. All these things shall manifestly appeare in them vnto all people, and they day by day, shall waxe more wicked and hard hearted; and when as their wickednesse and deceits shall be found out, then shall their gifts cease, and then shall they go about their houses hungrie, and as mad dogs looking downe vpon the earth, and drawing in their neckes as doues, that they might be satisfied with bread: then shall the people crie out vpon them; Woe be vnto you ye miserable children of sorow, the world hath seduced you, the diuell hath bridled your mouthes, your flesh is fraile, and your hearts without sauour, your minds haue been vnstedfast, and your eyes delighted in much vanitie and folly, your dainty bellies desire delicate meats; your feet swift to run vnto mischiefe. Remember when you were apparantly blessed, yet enuious, poore but rich, simple, mightie deuout flatterers, vnfaithfull betrayers, peruerse detracters, holy hypocrites, subuerters of the truth, ouermuch vpright, proud, vnshamefast, vnstedfast teachers, delicate martyrs, confessors for gaine, meeke slanderers, religious, couetous, humble, proud, pitifull, hard hearted liers, pleasant flatterers, peace makers, persecutors, oppressors of the poore, bringing in new sects newly inuented of your selues, mercifull, wicked, louers of the world, sellers of pardons, spoilers of benefices, vnprofitable orators, seditious conspirators, drunkards, desirers of honor, maintainers of mischiefe, robbers of the world, vnsaciable preachers, men pleasers, seducers of women, and sowers of discord: for Moyses the glorious prophet, spake verie well of you in his song: A people without counsell or vnderstanding: would to God they did know, vnderstand and foresee the end. You haue builded vp an high, and when you could ascend no higher, then did you fall; euen as Simon Magus, whom God ouerthrew, and did strike with a cruel plague; so you likewise through your false doctrin, naughtines, lies, detractions and wickednes, are come to ruine: and the people shall say vnto them, go ye teachers of wickednesse, subuerters of the truth, brethren of the Sunamitie, fathers of heresies, false apostles, which haue fained your selues to follow the life of the Apostles, and yet haue not fulfilled it in any part, sonnes of iniquitie, we will not follow the knowledge of your waies, for pride and presumption hath deceiued you, and insaciable concupiscence hath subuerted your erroneous hearts. And when as yet yee would ascend higher then was meete or comely for you, by the iust iudgement of God, you are fallen backe into perpetuall opprobrie and shame. This blessed Hildegardis whose prophecie this is, flourished about the yeare of our Lord 1046, as it is written in Martins chronicles.

Also Hugo in his second booke of Sacraments, in the 2. part, 3. chap. and 7. saith: The laytie forsomuch as they intermeddle with earthlie matters necessarie vnto an earthly life, they are the least part of the bodie of Christ. And the clergie, for so much as they do dispose those things which pertaine vnto a spirituall life, are as it were the right side of the bodie of Christ. And afterward interpreting both these parts himselfe, he saith: A spirituall man ought to haue nothing, but such as pertaineth vnto God, vnto whom it is appointed to be sustained by the tithes and oblations which are offered vnto God: but vnto the christian and faithfull laytie, the possession of the earth is granted, and vnto the clergie the whole charge of spirituall matters is committed, as it was in the old Testament. And in his 7. chapter he declareth how that certaine things are giuen vnto the church of Christ, by the deuotion of the faithfull, the power and authoritie of the secular power reserued, lest there might happen anie confusion: For so much as God himselfe cannot allow no disordered thing. Whereupon oftentimes the worldly princes do grant the bare vse of the church, and oftentimes vse and power to exercise iustice, which the clergie cannot exercise by any Ecclesiasticall Minister, or any other person of the clergie. Notwithstanding they may haue certaine lay-persons, ministers vnto that office. But in such sort, saith he, that they do acknowledge the power which they haue, to come from the secular prince or ruler, and that they do vnderstand their possessions can neuer be alienat away from the kings power, but (if that necessitie or reason do require) the same possessions in all such case of necessitie do owe him obeysance and seruice. For like as the kings power ought not to turne away the defence or safegard which hee oweth vnto other: so likewise the possessions obtained and possessed by the clergie, according to the dutie and homage which is due vnto the patronage of the kings power cannot by right be denied. Thus much writeth Hugo.

In the third act the same yeare, after the feast of S. Vitis, as touching Tithes, &c.

¶ Tithes are pure almes.

Almes. Mercie.

VPon this article it is to be noted, that for so much as almes is a worke of mercie, as S. Augustine, Chrysostome, and others do ioyntly affirme, and that mercie (according to Lincolniensis mind) for the present is a loue or desire to helpe the miserable out of his miserie: and for so much as the miserie of mankind is double: that is to say, spirituall and bodily: the which is the want or taking away of the good, and the goods of man is either the goods of the soule or of the bodie: And the goods of the soule is double (that is to say: the lightning of the mind, and the vprightnes of affection) the miserie of the soule is also double, as the darknesse of ignorance, and a froward and wilful swaruing from the truth. And both the goods of the soule are wont to be comprehended vnder one title of name: that is to saie, wisdome; and both the miseries of the soule vnder the name of follie. Whereupon all the whole goodnes of the soule is wisdome, and all the whole miserie thereof is ignorance: the miseries of the bodie are, lack of meat, that is to say, hunger, and lack of drinke, called thirst: and briefly, all miserie is the want of some thing which is desired. Also these are bodily miseries, nakednes, lacke of harbour, sickneſſe, and imprisonment. All the miseries therefore being numbred together, are but one of the soule, the which is follie and lacke of wisdome, and six of the bodie, the which the Lord in the 25. of Matthew doth plainely rehearse. There are also commonly appointed seuen bodily almes, that is to saie, to feed the hungrie, to giue drinke vnto the thirstie, to clothe the naked, to harbour the stranger or harbourlesse, to visit the sicke, and to burie the dead, the which all together are contained in these verses:

Two kinds of miseries. Two kinds of goodnesse.

Ill reason. Follie.

The miseries of the mind and bodie.

Visito, poto, cibo, redimo, tego, colligo, condo.

The which verse is thus Englished, word for word:

Visit the sicke, the hungrie feed,
Giue drinke to the thirstie, cloth the naked:
Burie the dead, the captiue redeeme,
The harbourlesse receiue to thy lodging.

What is almes.

There be also seuen other spirituall almes appointed, which are these: to teach the ignorant, to counsel him that is in doubt. To comfort him which is in heauines. To correct the offender. To forgiue him which hath offended against thee. To beare those which are grieuous. And to pray for all men: the which are also contained in these verses following:

Consule, castiga, solare, remitte, fer, ora.

The which verse is thus Englished, word for word:

Instruct the ignorant, the weake confirme,
Comfort the heaule heart, and correct sinne:
Forgiue the offender, beare with the rude,
Pray for all men both euill and good.

So that notwithstanding vnder the same, counsels and doctrine be comprehended. Thus writeth Thomas in the second part of the second quest. 32. article 2.

What almes is.

Secondly, it is to be noted, that in this present article our intent is only to intreat of bodilie almes, the which (as Thomas writeth in his 2. part. 2. quest. 32. artic. 1.) according vnto some mens minds is thus defined: Almes is a worke whereby any thing is giuen vnto the needie of compassion for Gods sake. And for so much as this definition serueth as well for the spirituall, as for the corporall almes: therefore to the purpose, almes is a worke, wherby any thing is giuen vnto the needie in body for compassion, and for Gods sake. Or that is giuen of compassion or pitie vnto the bodilie needie for Gods sake.

Whereupon it is manifest that almes, as S. Augustine and other holy men say, is a worke of mercie, as also to giue almes. As it appeareth by the name, for in the Greeke it is deriued from this word Elemonia, which is, mercie: for as in the Latine, this word Miseratio, which signifieth pitie, is deriued of Misericordia, which is, mercie; so this word Eleemosyna, which signifieth almes, is deriued of the Greeke word Elemonia, which is to say, mercie, and of the word Sina, which is to say, commandement, as it were a commandement of mercie, or otherwise of this word Elemonia. By this letter I, which is to say, God, and this word Sina, which is, commandement: As if it were said, the commandement of God, as Ianuensis in his booke intituled Catholicon affirmeth.

For our sauiour doth command in the 11. of Luke, to giue almes, saying, Giue almes, and behold all things are cleane vnto you: lest that in this point there may be any equiuocation, it is supposed presently, that the almes giuen of men, is a corporall almes giuen simply vnder the name of almes. Secondly, it is to be noted, that Tithes in this effect are the tenth part of goods of fortune, giuen by a man simplie vnder the name of almes for Gods sake.

Tithes.

These things being thus noted and supposed, the article is thus proued. Euerie gift of fortune, or temporall gift simplie giuen vnder the name of almes, is almes: But some tithes are the gift of fortune, or temporall gift vnder the name of almes. Therfore some tithes are almes. This consequent is manifest of it selfe. The maior appeareth by the first supposition: And the minor by the second.

Item, euerie gift giuen by a man euen of loue, to relieue and helpe the miserable out of his miserie, is an almes. The tenth part of the goods of fortune giuen by a man, simplie vnder the name of almes, for Gods sake, is giuen by the same man euen of loue, to helpe the miserable out of his miserie: Therefore the tenth part of the goods of fortune being giuen by any man simplie vnder the name of almes for Gods sake, is almes. The consequent is manifest. The maior appeareth by this, that euery such gift is either a spiritual or bodily almes. The minor seemeth hereby true, for so much as many holy men haue giuen, and do giue, euen for loue to relieue the miserable out of his miserie. Neither is it to be doubted, but that such kind of tithes are almes. For S. Augustine vpon these words of the Lord in the Gospell writeth thus: Woe be vnto you Pharisies which do tithe mint and anise: If they cannot be clensed without they beleeue in him, he which doth clense his heart through faith, to what purpose is it, that he saith, giue almes, and behold, all things are cleane vnto you? Let vs giue eare, and peraduenture he doth expound it himselfe. They did take out the tenth part of all their fruits, and gaue it for almes; the which any christian man doth not willingly. Then they mocked him, when he spake these words to them, as vnto men which would doe no almes. This the Lord foreknowing, said: Woe be vnto you Pharisies, which tithe mint and rue, and all kind of herbes; and passe ouer the iudgement and charitie of God; for this it is to do almes, if thou doest vnderstand it, begin with thy selfe: For how canst thou be mercifull vnto another, which art vnmercifull vnto thy selfe? This writeth S. Augustine, in plainly saying that tithes are almes.

S. Augustine proueth tithes to be pure almes.

Also in his Enchiridion 76. chap. vpon these words of Luke in the 11. chapter: Notwithstanding that which is more then sufficient, giue in almes, and all things shall be cleane vnto you, he saith thus: When he had rebuked them that they washed themselues outwardly, and inwardly were full of iniqitie and abomination, admonishing them, what, and how a man ought first to bestow almes vpon himselfe, and first to clense himselfe inwardly, he saith: That which doth remaine, giue in almes, and behold all things are cleane vnto you. Afterward, that he might the better declare what he had giuen them warning of, and what they neglected to do, that they should not iudge him ignorant of their almes, he saith, Woe be vnto you Pharisies: as though he should say, I verily gaue you warning that you should giue such almes, whereby all things might be cleane vnto you; but woe be vnto you which doe tithe mint, rue, and all kind of herbes, for I do know these your almes, that you should not thinke with your selues that you had giuen me warning therof, and neglect and passe ouer the iudgement and charitie of God, by the which almes ye might be clensed from all your inward filthinesse. And your bodies also which you do wash should be cleane. For all these things both inward, and also outward, as it is said in another place, clense that which is within, and the outward things shall be also cleane.

Augustin. in Enchirid.

But lest that he should seeme to refuse those almes which are giuen of the fruits of the earth, he said, you ought to haue done these things: That is to say, the iudgement and loue of God, and not to neglect the same. That is to say, the almes of the fruit of the earth. This writeth S. Augustine, expresly calling the tithes almes.

Also Chrysostome vpon the same words in the 11. of Luke, That which remaineth giue in almes, he saith thus: Whereas it was spoken of the Iewish kind of clensing, it is wholly passed. But for so much as tithes is a certaine almes, and the time was not yet expresly come to kill the sacrifices of the law, for this cause he saith, ye ought to do those things, and not to omit the other. And S. Thomas alleageth him in his glosse vpon S. Luke. And Chrysostome himselfe doth touch two points. First, that tithes is almes. Secondly, that tithes are in a maner lawfull, for so much as the gift thereof vnto the priests did not cease in the time of Christ.

Chrysostomus in 11. Luc.

Also Augustine in a certaine Sermon of giuing almes, saith thus, What is to say, Giue almes: and behold all things are cleane vnto you? Let vs giue eare, and peraduenture he doth expounded it himselfe. When he had spoken these words, without doubt they thought within themselues, who did giue almes, and how they did giue it. They tithed all that they had, and tooke out the tenth part of all their fruits, and gaue it for almes: the which no christian lightlie doth so. Marke what the Iewes did, they tithed not only their wheat, but their wine and oyle, and not that only, but also vile things, for the commandement of the Lord, as commin, rue, and anise, of the which they tooke the tenth part, and gaue it for almes. I thinke therefore, for so much as they called vnto their minds, and thought with themselues, that our Lord Christ spake in vaine vnto them that they did no almes, when as they knew their own works, that they tithed the smallest, and worst of all their fruits, and giue almes thereof: they mocked him amongst themselues, because he did speake in such sort vnto them, as vnto men that did no almes. The which the Lord foreseeing, by and by added notwithſtanding: Wo be vnto you Scribes, Phariſies and hypocrites, which tithe your mint, commin, and rue, and all kind of herbs: that you may know, I do vnderſtand your almes. Truly, theſe are your tithes. Theſe are your almes: you tithe out the leaſt and worſt of all your fruits, and haue left the waightie matters of the law vndone. Heere S. Auguſtine often expoundeth, that tithes are almes: Alſo he writeth the like in his booke of homilies in his 6. homilie.

Item, for the proofe of this article that tithes are pure almes it is thus argued. For this propoſition, Tithes are pure almes, is indefinite, taking the truth for many of his particularities. It is moſt certaine that it is not damnable, but moſt catholike, that God is ſomething, the which being falſe in all particulars, it is only true for that alone which doth ſurmount all kind, Ergo, by like reaſon this particular is true, tenths are pure almes: For it is thus proued. Theſe tenths of a good lay-man being wholly diſtributed by a faithfull miniſter vnto a needie lay-man, according to a good intent, how can they be but pure almes, yea, and more pure then any almes giuen by any of the clergie being a fornicator? The whole antecedent I ſuppoſe as poſſible, and doubtfull vnto the condemners, if it be true.

Item, it is alſo thus proued: Theſe tithes, and all other goods of fortune, are pure almes in reſpect of God. For ſo much as euerie man, emperour and king, is a begger of God. As S. Auguſtine doth oftentimes affirme, and conſequentlie if he do receiue fruitfully any ſuch goodnes at the hand of God, the ſame is pure almes in reſpect of God: neither is there any faithfull man that will denie the ſame, but that it ſimplie followeth that the ſame is pure almes before God, Ergo it is pure almes.

It is alſo thus argued: All tithes are by themſelues, and euerie part of them almes: neither is there any reaſon contrarie vnto this, that they are almes. Ergo, they are pure almes. For they are by no other meanes or reaſon, then almes, if they be altogether themſelues almes: For ſo much as it followeth, if they bee by any other meanes or otherwiſe them almes, then they are otherwiſe then ſome almes, and for ſo much as they themſelues are ſome almes, it followeth, that they are otherwiſe then they are indeed; the which is falſe.

Sustenance and clothing, giuen to the Apoſtles, was almes, ergo alſo tithes.

But now to paſſe beyond the bounds of Logicke, it is to be demanded, whether before the church was indowed, or that ſuſtenance and clothing were giuen vnto the Apoſtles, there was any pure almes, or that they were giuen by any other meanes by bond of debt, amongſt men. And for ſo much as the reaſon is not to be fained, but that they were pure almes, ſo afterward the cuſtome of the ſame thing according vnto like reaſon doth not alter the kind of the reaſon. For ſo might beggers challenge by cuſtome beyond the puritie of almes, the temporalities vvhich they do beg. Neither doth debt vtterly exclude the puritie of almes before God: for euery man duely giuing almes, doth as he ought to do: as euery man duly receiuing his almes, ought ſo to receiue it as according to Gods will. And ſimplie to eſtabliſh any humane title, vpon the continuance of anie ſuch almes, it is altogether contrarie vnto the reaſon of almes. Therfore they do continually obſerue, and keepe the reaſon of the puritie of almes, which they had from the beginning, when as the bond conditioned, doth not deſtroy the puritie thereof: wherefore there is no cauſe why it ſhould be denied that tithes are pure almes, except that the proud ſhould be maruellouſlie extolled, contrarie to the humilitie of Chriſt. For they do challenge by the title of their lacke or want ſo to be pleaſed for their tithes. For ſo might the begging frier, by the continuance of his daily begging challenge according vnto the like quantitie or circumſtance. But it is no argument, that if the curat doe performe his corporall miniſterie, that he ought therefore to challenge tithes by any ciuill title, becauſe that as wel on the behalfe of him, which giueth the tithe, as alſo in the behalfe of the curat, euerie ſuch miniſterie ought freelie to be giuen, and not by any ciuil exchange. For ſo much as it is not required, but that rather the compariſon of ſuch exchanges are repugnant, for ſo much as alſo no man freely giueth any almes, except he do looke for the dutie of recompence, by the law of conſcience.

Item, all temporall goods beſtowed vpon the clergie, by the lay people vnder condition, as the goods of the church, are the almes of them which giue it; it is proued thus, for ſo much as all thoſe goods are the goods of the poore, as it appeareth by manie ſayings of holy men and by the lawes.

But they were not the goods of the poore, after they were meere ſecular goods, but only by the meane of the worke of mercie, whereby they were beſtowed vpon the poore: Ergo, they were pure almes. The conſequent dependeth vpon the definition of pure almes.

Item, all things changed to the vſe and power of another, either by ciuill exchange or Euangelicall is changed. But the church goods are ſo changed by one of theſe miniſteries. But the Euangelicall exchange is not to be fained, becauſe it is not done, either by buying or ſelling, or any other ciuil exchange. Therefore there doth not remaine, but only a pure gift, for hope of a heauenlie reward, the which is mercie, and ſo pure almes. And it ſeemeth to follow conſequently, that all the clergie receiuing ſuch almes, are not onlie in reſpect of God, as all other men, but in reſpect of men, beggers. For they would not ſo inſtantly require thoſe almes except they had need of them:

The clergie beggers.

neither ought we to be aſhamed thereof, or to be proud beggers: for ſo much as Chriſt touching his humanitie became a begger for vs, becauſe he declared his need vnto his Father, ſaying, &c.

Item, when anie king, prince, knight, citizen, or any other man doth giue vnto the clergie, or to any prieſt for his ſtipend, he giueth the ſame vnto the church of God, and to the priuate partie, as a perpetuall almes, that he ſhould attend to his vocation, preaching, praying and ſtudying. But this kind of giuing doth not ſuffice to ground any ſecular dominion amongſt the clergie, it followeth that the bare vſe remaineth in them, or the ſecular vſe without any ſecular power.

The maior appeareth hereby, for ſo much as otherwiſe almes ſhould not be a worke of mercie. Whereby it may alſo appeare, that tenths are pure almes giuen to the church, to the vſe of the poore.

And hereupon the holy men do ſay that tenths are the tributes of the needie ſoules. Whereupon S. Auguſtine in a Sermon made vpon the reſtoring of tiths ſaith: The giuing of tiths, moſt deare brethren, are the tributes of the poore ſoules, therefore pay your tribute vnto the poore. And by and by after hee ſaith; Therefore who deſireth either to get any reward, or to haue any remiſſion of ſinnes, by giuing of his tenthes, let him ſtudie to giue almes euen of the ninth part: ſo that whatſoeuer ſhall remaine more then a competent liuing, and decent clothing: that it be not reſerued for riot, but that it be laid vp in the heauenly treaſurie, by giuing it in almes to the poore. For whatſoeuer God doth giue vnto vs more then we haue need of; he doth not giue it vs ſpecially for our ſelues: but doth ſend it vs to be beſtowed vpon others by our hands: if we do not giue it, we inuade another mans poſſeſſions.

Tithes are to be giuen of the ninth part of goods.

Thus much writeth S. Auguſtine, and is repeated in the 16. queſtion, 1. Decimæ.

Alſo S. Ierome in an epiſtle, and it is put in the 16. queſtion, and 2. chap. Quicquid. Whatſoeuer the clergie hath, it is the goods of the poore.

Alſo S. Auguſtine in his 33. epiſtle vnto Boniface, and it is alleaged in the firſt queſtion and 12.

Alſo in the 23. queſtion 7. If we do poſſeſſe any thing priuatly, the which doth ſuffice vs, they are not ours, but the goods of the poore, whoſe ſtewards we are, except we do challenge to our ſelues a propertie by ſome damnable vſurpation. The gloſſe vpon that part of the 23. queſtion 7. ſaith: The prelats are but only the ſtewards of the church goods, and not Lords thereof.

S. Ambroſe alſo vpon this ſaying of the Goſpell, Luke the 16. Giue account of your bailiffeſhip, or ſtewardſhip: Hereby then do we learne, that they are not Lords, but rather ſtewards and bailiffes of other mens ſubſtance.

And S. Ierome, writing to Nepotianus ſaith: How can they be of the clergie? which are commanded to contemne and deſpiſe their owne ſubſtance, and to take away from a friend, it is theft, to deceiue the church it is ſacrilege, and to take away that which ſhould be giuen vnto the poore.

The clergie are ſtewards of the church goods, and not lords thereof.

And S. Bernard in his ſermon vpon theſe words (Simon Peter ſaid vnto Ieſus, chap. 17.) ſaid: Trulie the goods of the church, are the patrimonie of the poore: And whatſoeuer thing the miniſters and ſtewards of the ſame, not Lords or poſſeſſors, do take vnto themſelues more then ſufficient for a competent liuing, the ſame is taken away from the poore, by a ſacrilegious crueltie.

And Euſebius in his treatiſe vpon the pilgrimage of S. Ierome writeth thus: If thou doeſt poſſeſſe a garment, or anie other thing more then extreame neceſſitie doth require, and doeſt not helpe the needie, thou art a theefe and a robber. Wherefore dearely beloued children, let vs be ſtewards of our temporalities, and not poſſeſſors.

And Iſidore in his treatiſe De ſummo bono, chap. 42. ſaith: Let the biſhop know that he is the ſeruant of the people, and not Lord ouer them.

Iſidorus de ſummo bono.

Alſo in the 5. booke of decretals, extra. de donationibus, ſub authoritate Alexandri tertij, epiſcopi Pariſienſis; he ſaith: We beleeue that it is not vnknowne vnto your brotherhood, that a biſhop, and euerie other prelat is but a ſteward of the church goods, and not lord thereof. By theſe ſayings of theſe holy men it is euidentlie declared, that not only tithes, but alſo all other ſubſtance which the clergie hath by gift of worke of mercie, are pure almes, which after the neceſſitie of the clergie once ſatisfied, ought to be tranſported vnto the poore.

Secondly it is declared how that the clergie are not lords and poſſeſſours of thoſe goods, but miniſters and ſtewards thereof.

Thirdly it is ſhewed, that if the clergie do abuſe the ſame, they are theeues, robbers, and ſacrilegious perſons, and except they doe repent, by the iuſt iudgement of God they are to bee condemned.

And thus hitherto I may peraduenture ſeeme to haue made ſufficient long recitall out of Iohn Hus, but notwithſtanding that the commoditie of thoſe things, may abundantlie recompence the prolixitie thereof. Wherefore if I ſhall ſeeme vnto any man in the rehearſall of this diſputation to haue paſſed verie farre the bounds of the hiſtorie: let him thinke thus of mee, that at what time I toke in hand to write wite of these ecclesiasticall matters, I could not omit these things which were so straitly ioyned with the cause of the church.

Neither that I did make more account of the historie which I had taken in hand then of the common vtilitie, whereunto I had chiefe respect. There were besides these certaine other articles: Whereupon the said John Hus had verie wisely and learnedly disputed, but these shall suffice vs for this present. And for the residue wee will passe them ouer, to the intent we may the more speedily returne whereas our story left, declaring what crueltie they vsed not onely against the bookes and articles of John Wickliffe, but also in burning his bodie and bones, commanding them to be taken vp 41. yeeres after he was buried, as appeareth by the decree of the said Synode, the forme whereof, wee thought hereunto to annex as followeth.

Ex Actis concilij Constant.

FOrsomuch as by the authoritie of the sentence and decrée of the councell of Rome, and by the commandement of the church & the apostolicall sée after due delayes being giuen, they proceéded vnto the condemnation of the said John Wickliffe, and his memorie: hauing first made proclamation, and giuen commandement to call forth whosoeuer would defend the said Wickliffe, or his memorie (if there were any such;) but there did none appeare, which would either defend him or his memorie. And moreouer, witnesses being examined by commissioners appointed by pope John and his councell, vpon the impenitencie and finall obstinacie and stubbornnesse of the said John Wickliff (reseruing that which is to be reserued, as in such busines the order of ỹ law requireth;) & his impenitencie & obstinacy euen vnto his end, being sufficiently proued by euident signs and tokens, and also by lawful witnesses of credit, was lawfullie giuen thereunto. Wherefore at the instance of the steward of the treasurie, proclamation being made to heare and vnderstand the sentence against this day: the sacred Synod declareth, determineth, and giueth sentence, that the said John Wickliffe was a notorious obstinat heretike, and that he died in his heresie, cursing and condemning both him and his memorie.

This Synod also decreéth and ordaineth, that the body and bones of the said John Wickliffe, if it might be discerned and knowne from the bodies of other faithfull people, to bee taken out of the ground, and throwne away farre from the buriall of any church, according vnto the canon lawes and decrées. Which determination and sentence definitiue being read and pronounced, the lord president, and the foresaid presidents of the 4. nations, being demanded and asked whether it did please them or no? They all answered (and first Hostiensis the president, and after him the other presidents of the nations) that it pleased them very well, and so they allowed and confirmed all the premisses, &c.

¶ What Heraclitus would not laugh, or what Democritus would not weépe, to sée these so sage and reuerend Catoes, to occupie their heades to take vp a poore mans bodie, so long dead and buried before, by the space of 41. yeeres? and yet peraduenture were not able to find his right bones, but tooke vp some other bodie, and so of a catholicke made an hereticke. Albeit, herein Wickliffe had some cause to giue them thanks that they would at least spare him so long till hee was dead, and also to giue him so long respite after his death, 41. yeeres to rest in his sepulchre before they vngraued him, and turned him from earth to ashes: which ashes also, they tooke and threw into the riuer. And so was he resolued into three elements, earth, fire, and water, thinking thereby vtterly to extinct and abolish both the name and doctrine of Wickliffe for euer. Not much vnlike to the example of the old Pharisies and sepulcher-knights, which when they had brought the Lord vnto the graue, thought to make him sure neuer to rise againe. But these and all other must know, that as there is no counsell against the Lord: so there is no keeping downe of veritie, but it will spring and come out of dust and ashes, as appeared right well in this man. For though they digged vp his bodie, burnt his bones, and drowned his ashes: yet the word of God and truth of his doctrine with the fruit and successe thereof they could not burne, which yet to this day for the most part of his articles doe remaine. Notwithstanding, the transitorie bodie and bones of the man was thus consumed and dispersed, as by this picture here aboue set forth to thine eies (gentle Reader) may appeare.

These things thus finished and accomplished, which pertain to the storie and time of Wickliffe: let vs now (by the supportation of the Lord) proceéd to intreate and write of the rest, which either in his time or after his time, springing out of the same Vniuersitie, and raised vp (as ye would say) out of his ashes were partakers of the same persecution. Of whom speaketh Thomas Walden in his booke, De sacramentis & sacramentalibus, cap. 53. Where he saith, that after Wickliffe many suffered most cruell death, and many mo did forsake the realme.

Ex Th. Walden. lib. de sacrament.

In the number of whom was William Swinderby, Walter Brute, John Purney, Richard White, William Thorpe, Raynold Pecocke B. of S. Assaph, and afterward of Chichester.

Laurence Redman, Dauid Sawtre, John Aschwerby, M. James, Th. Brightwell, William Hawlam, Rafe Grenhurst, I. Scut, Philip Norice.

To this catalogue also pertaineth (mentioned in ancient writers) Laurence Redman master of Arte, Dauid Sautre diuine, John Aschwarby vicar, as they call him, of S. Marie Church at Oxford, William James an excellent young man well learned, Thomas Brightwell, and William Hawlam a ciuillian, Rafe Grenhurst, John Scut, and Philip Norice: which which being excommunicated by pope Eugenius the fourth, in the yeere of our Lord, 1446. appealed vnto a generall or œcumenical councell.

Peter Paine. Peter Paine, who flying from Oxford vnto Boheme, did stoutlie contend against the Sophisters, as touching both kinds of the sacrament of the last supper. Who afterward among the rest of the Orators was one of the 14. that was sent vnto the councell at Basill: whereas by the space of three daies, he disputed vpon the 4. article, which was as touching the ciuill dominion of the clergie, Anno 1438. Also the Lord Cobham, &c. with diuers others besides whose names are mentioned in the kings writ sent to the shiriffe of Northampton, which writ of the king followeth in this tenor: Rex vicecomiti Northamptoniæ salutem, &c. For somuch as John Attpate of Chepingwarden, John Warryner, Ro. Bzewod, &c. bee Recettours and fautors of heretikes, and especially of John Woodward priest, publikely defamed and condemned of heresie, will not be iustified by the censures of the church, as the reuerend father John bishop of Lincolne hath certified vs: We therefore willing to withstand all defenders and fautors of such heresies, do will and command as well the forenamed, as namely the foresaid John Woodward to bee apprehended, straitly charging the same to bee emprisoned by their bodies or otherwise punished as shall seeme good to the Iustices, vntill they and euery of them shall submit themselues to the obedience of the foresaid bishop in this behalfe accordinglie. Wherof faile you not vnder paine of an hundred pound. Witnesse our selues: Beauen at our Manor of Langley the eight day of March, the 12. yeere of our raigne.

Lord Cobham.

To these aboue rehearsed and other fauourers of Wicklike, within this our countrie of England, wee may adde also the Bohemians: forsomuch as the propagation of the said doctrine of Wickliffe, in that countrie also tooke rote, comming from England to Boheme, by this occasion as in storie here followeth.

The occasion how the doctrin of Wickliffe came to Boheme.

There chanced at that time a certaine student of the countrie of Bohemia to be at Oxford, one of a wealthie house and also of a noble stocke. Who returning home from the Vniuersitie of Oxford, to the Vniuersitie of Prage: carried with him certaine bookes of Wickliffe, De realibus Vniuersalibus, De ciuili iure, & diuino, De ecclesia, De quæstionibus varijs contra clerum, &c. It chanced the same time, a certaine noble man in the citie of Prage, had founded and builded a great church of Matthias or Mattheus, which church was called Bethleem: giuing to it great lands, and finding in it two preachers euery day, to preach both holie day and working day to the people. Of the which two preachers, this John Hus was one, a man of great knowledge, of a pregnant wit, and excellentlie fauoured for his worthie life amongst them. This John Hus hauing familiaritie with this young man, in reading and perusing these bookes of Wickliffe, took such pleasure and fruit in reading thereof, that not only he began to defend this author openlie in the schooles, but also in his sermons: commending him for a good man, an holy man, and heauenlie man, wishing himselfe when he should die, to be there placed whereas the soule of Wickliffe should be. And thus for the spreading of Wickliffes doctrine enough.

Wicleuus vir bonus, sanctus, cœlo dignus.

The great affection of John Hus to John Wickliffe.

And thus much briefelie concerning the fauorers and adherents of John Wickliffe, in generall. Now particularlie and in order let vs (by Christs grace) prosecute the stories and persecutions of the said parties aforenamed, as the course of their times shall require, first beginning with the valiant champions William Swinderby, and walter Brute.

The historie of William Swinderby.

Anno 1389

Ex Registro Episcopi Herfordensis.

W. Swinderby first examined.

Denouncers of W. Swinderby 3. Friers, Frelby, Hincely, Blarton.

In the yeere 1389. William Swinderby priest within the diocesse of Lincolne, being accused and detected vpon certaine opinions, was presented before John bishop of Lincolne, and examined vpon certaine articles in the church of Lincolne, after the forme and order of the popes law, according to their vsuall rite obserued, his denouncers were these: frier Frisby obseruant, frier Hincely Augustine: and Thomas Blarton Dominican. The articles wherewith they charged him, although in forme of words as they put them vp, might seeme something strange here to be recited: yet to the intent that all men may see the spitefull malice of these spider friers, in sucking all things to poison, and in forging that is not true, as in processe (Christ willing) hereafter shall better appeare by his answers, I thought good here to notifie the same.

That men may aske their debts by charitie, but in no manner for debt to imprison any man: and that hee so imprisoning is accursed.

That if parishioners doe know their Curate to be a lechour incontinent, and an euill man, they ought to withdraw from him their tithes, or else they be fautors of his sinnes.

That tithes purelie be almose, and in case that curats bee euill men, the same may lawfullie be conferred to other men.

That for an euill curate to curse his suget for withholding of tithes, is nothing else, but to take with extortion wickedlie and vndulie from them their monie.

That no prelat may curse a man, except hee know before that he is cursed of God.

That euery priest may absolue any sinner being contrite, and is bound (notwithstanding the inhibition of the bishop) to preach the Gospell vnto the people.

That a priest taking any annuall pension vpon couenant, is in so doing a simoniacke and accursed.

That any priest being in deadlie sinne, if hee giue himselfe to consecrate the bodie of the Lord, hee committeth idolatrie rather then doth consecrate.

That no priest entreth into any house, but to euill intreate the wife, the daughter or maid. And therefore hee admonished the good man of the house, to take heed what priest he let into his house.

Another conclusion falslie to him obiected: That a childe is not truelie baptised, if the priest that baptiseth, or the godfather or godmother be in deadly sinne.

Item, that no man liuing against the law of God is a priest, how euer he were ordained priest of any bishop.

These Articles or conclusions vntruely collected, were as cruellie exhibited against him by the friers in the bishop of Lincolnes court. The which articles although he neuer preached, taught or at any time defended, as appeareth more in the processe following: yet the friers with their witnesses standing forth against him, declared him to bee conuict: bringing also drie wood with them to the town to burne him, and would not leaue him, before hee made them promise and sware for feare of death neuer to hold them, teach them, nor preach them priuilie, nor apertlie vnder paine of relapse: and that he should goe to certaine churches to reuoke the foresaid conclusions, which hee neuer affirmed. As first in the church of Lincolne, then in S. Margarets church of Leicester. Also in S. Martines Church in Leicester, and in our Ladies churches at Newarke: and in other Parish Churches also, of Melton Mowbray, of Haloughton, Hareburgh, and Lenthburgh. Which penance, being to him enioyned, hee did obediently accomplish: with this forme of reuocation, which they bound him vnto, vnder these words.

W. Swinderby compelled by the Friers to abiure articles, which he neuer taught.

The reuocation of William Swinderby, whereunto he was forced by the friers.

The forced abiuration of W. Swinderby.

I William Swinderby priest, although vnworthie, of the dioces of Lincolne, acknowledging one true catholike, and apostolicke faith of the holy church of Rome, do abiure all heresie and errour repugning to the determination of the holy mother church, whereof I haue been hitherto infamed, namely the conclusions and articles aboue prefixed, and euery one of them to me iudicially obiected, by the commissarie of the reuerend father in Christ and Lord, L. Iohn by the grace of God bishop of Lincolne: and doe reuoke the same, and euery one of them, some as hereticall, some as erroneous and false, and doe affirme and beleeue them to be so, and hereafter wil neuer teach, preach, or affirme publikely or priuily the same. Neither will make any sermon within the dioceese of Lincolne, but asking first and obtaining the licence of the foresaid reuerend father and lord the bishop of Lincolne. Contrarie to the which, if I shall presume hereafter, to say or doe, to hold or preach: I shall be content to abide the seueritie of the Canon, as I haue iudicially by the necessitie of the law, sworne, and doe sweare, &c.

Thus haue you the conclusions and articles of this good man, falslie obiected to him by the malicious and lying friers: and also the retractation, whereunto they by force compelled him: whereby it may likewise be coniectured, what credite is to be giuen to the articles and conclusions which these cauilling friers wresting all things to the worst, haue obiected and imputed both to Wickliffe and all other of that sort, whom they so falslie doe infame, so slanderoulie doe belie, and so maliciously doe persecute. After these things thus done and wrought in the dioceese of Lincolne: it so befell, the said W. Swinderby to remooue to the dioceese and countrie of Herford. Where, he was as much or more molested by the friers againe, and by John Tresnant Bishop of Herford, as by the processe and storie here ensuing set out at large out of their owne registers may appeare.

Here followeth the processe of Iohn Tresnant, Bishop of Herford, had against the aforesaid William Swinderby in the cause of hereticall prauitie, as the popish heretickes call it.

The proces of the B. of Herford against W. Swinderby. The flourishing inuocation of Gods name.

The glorious name of the Prince of peace, and his counsell (whose counsellour no man is, and whose prouidence in his disposition is neuer deceiued) being inuocated: To all and singuler beleeuers of Christ, which shall see or heare this our processe vnderwritten: John by the sufferance of God B. of Herefordgreeting, and peaceable charitie in the Lord. For asmuch as God the creator of all things, the keeper of Iustice, the louer of right, and the hater of malice, beholding from the high throne of his prouidence the sonnes of men, now through the fall of their first father, prone and declining to dishonest and filthie and detestable mischiefes, and to keepe vnder their malice (which wicked transgression did first gender) hath appointed diuers presidents of the world stablished in sundry degrees, by whom and their circumspect prouidence, mans audacitie Lollards by the popes interpretation, is a word derived of Lolium.

They counterfeit in the Prophets words as Apes do in princes apparell.

The denunciation of the promoters to the B. of Hereford.

Matter articulated, against M. Swinderby kudaktie should bee restrained, innocencie should bee nourished amongst the good, and terrour should bee stricken into the wicked not to deceiue: also that their power to hurt, and their insolencie should bee bridled in all places. And whereas amongst many kinds of euils which come to our thoughts, by the dutie of the office committed vnto vs, wee are specially bound to extend our strength chiefly that the catholike faith may prosper in our times, and hereticall prauitie may be rooted from out of the borders of the faithfull: we therefore being excited through the information of many credible and faithfull christians of our diocesse, to root out pestiferous plants, as sheepe diseased with an incurable sicknesse, going about to infect the whole and sound flocke, are by the care of the shepheard to bee removed from the flocke, that is to say, Preachers, or more truely execrable offenders of the new sect, vulgarlie called Lollards, which vnder a certaine cloked shew of holinesse, running abroad through diuers places of our diocesse, and endeuouring to cut asunder the Lords vnsowed coate, that is to say, to rent the vnitie of the holie church, and of the Catholike faith, and also to teare in peeces with their tempestuous blasts the power of S. Peter, that is to say, to weaken the strength of the ecclesiasticall states and degrees, and the determination of the same holy church, haue wickedly presumed and doe presume from day to day to speake, to teach, to maintaine (and that which is more horrible to bee uttered) to preach openlie many things heretical, blasphemies, schismes, and slanderous defamings, euen quite contrarie to the sacred Canons and decrees of the holy fathers, so that they know not to direct their pathes in the waies of righteousnes & truth, in that, that they expound to the people the holy scripture, as the letter soundeth, after a Judiciall sort, otherwise then the holy ghost will needs haue it: whereas the words wander from their proper significations, and appeare to bring in by gessing new meanings: whereas the words must not bee iudged by the sense that they make, but by the sense whereby they be made, where as the constructions is not bound to the Donates rules: whereas faith is far placed from the capacitie of reason: But they labour by their pernicious doctrines and teachings publike and priuie, to boile out the poison of schismes betweene the clergy and the people. Wee to encounter against such kind of preachers, nay rather deceiuers, and horrible seducers amongst the people, aduancing and rowling vp our selues in Gods behalfe, and holy mother church, with the spirituall sword, which may strike them wisely, and wound them medicinablie, for their health and welfare: and namelie William Swinderby priest (so pretending himselfe to bee) as a teacher of such kind of pernicious doctrine, and an horrible seducer amongst the people: to whom personallie appearing before vs on the wednesday, to wit the 14. of the month of June, in the parish church of Kington of our diocesse, in the yere of our Lord, 1391. he being vehementlie defamed to vs of heresie, schisme, and his peruerse doctrines both manifest and priuie: wee therefore haue caused many cases and articles concerning the catholike faith to be ministred vnto him, that hee should answer to the same at a day and place for him meet and conuenient, of his owne choice and freewil: that is to say, on the friday, being the last of the same moneth of June, next following, assigned to him, at the church of Wodenhame of the same our diocesse. Of which cases and articles exhibited vnto vs, by many of Christs faithfull people, * zealous followers of the catholike faith, to make information to our office (which cases and articles also were by vs administred, as is before said, to the same William Swinderby) the tenor thereof followeth, and is thus.

¶ Reuerend father and high lord, lord Iohn, by Gods sufferance bishop of Hereford: It is lamentablie declared vnto your reuerend fatherhod on the behalfe of Christs faithfull people, your deuout children of your dioces of Hereford, that notwithstanding the misbeleefe of very many lollards, which haue too long a time sprung vp here in your diocesse, there is newlie come a certaine child of wickednes, named William Swinderby: who by his horrible perswasions and mischieuous endeuours, and also by his open preachings and priuate teachings, doth peruert as much as in him is the whole ecclesiasticall state, and stirreth vp with all his possible power, schisme betweene the clergie and the people. And that your reuerend fatherhod may be the more fullie informed, who and what maner of man the same William Swinderby is: there bee proposed and exhibited hereafter to the same your fatherhoode on the behalfe of the same faithfull people of Christ, against the same William Swinderby, cases and articles. Which if the same William shall denie, then shall the same cases and articles most euidently be proued against him by credible witnesse worthie of beliefe, and by other lawfull proofe and euidences, to the end that those being proued, the same fatherhod of yours, may doe and ordaine therein, as to your pastorall office belongeth.

In primis, the same William Swinderby pretending himselfe priest, was openlie and publikelie conuicted of certaine articles and conclusions being erroneous, schismaticall, and hereticall, preached by him at diuers places and times before a multitude of faithfull christian people. And the same articles and conclusions did hee by force of law reuoke and abiure, some as hereticall, and some as erroneous and false: auouching and beleeuing them for such, as that from thencefoorth hee would neuer preach, teach, or affirme openly or priuilie any of the same conclusions. And if by preaching or auouching hee should presume to doe the contrarie; that then hee should bee subiect to the seueritie of the Canons, accordingly as hee did take a corporall oth, iudicially vpon the holy Gospels.

3 Also the conclusions, which by the same William were first openlie taught and preached, and afterward abiured and reuoked, as is aforesaid; are contained before in the processe of the bishop of Lincolne, euen as they be there written word by word. And for the cases and articles, they were consequentlie exhibited by the forenamed faithfull christian people against the said William Swinderby, together with the conclusions before said, and hereafter written: of which cases and articles, the tenour hereof ensueth.

3 Item, the said William, contrarie to the former reuocation and abiuration, not conuerting to repentance, but peruerted from ill to worse, and giuen vp to a reprobate sense, came into your diocesse, where, hee running about in sundrie places hath presumed to preach or rather to peruert and to teach of his owne rashnes many hereticall, erroneous, blasphemous, and other slanderous things contrarie and repugnant to the sacred Canons and the determination of the holie catholicke church. What those things were, at what place and what time, it shall hereafter more particularly be declared.

Item, the same William, notwithstanding your commandements and admonitions sealed with your seale, and to all the Curats of your diocesse directed: containing amongst other things, that no person of what state, degree, or condition soeuer he were, should presume to preach or to teach, or else expound the holy scripture to the people, either in hallowed or prophane places, within your diocesse, without sufficient authoritie, by any maner of pretence that could be sought, as in the same your letters monitorie and of inhibition (the tenour whereof hereafter ensueth) is more largely contained: which letters the same William did receiue into his hands, and did read them word by word in the towne of Monemouth of your diocesse, in the yeere of our lord, 1390. so that these your letters and the contents thereof came to the true and vndoubted knowledge of the same William: yet notwithstanding hath the same William presumed in diuers places and times to preach within the same your diocesse, after and against your commandement aforesaid. The tenour of the same letters before mentioned followeth, and is this.

The letter inhibitorie of the B. of Hereford inhibiting to preach without his licence.

IOhn by the sufferance of God bishop of Hereford, to the deane and chapter of our church of Hereford, and to all and singuler abbats, priors, prouosts, deanes rurall, parsons and vicars of monasteries, priories, churches, colledges and parishes, and to other hauing cure of soules within the citie and dioces of Hereford, and to all and euery other being within the same citie and diocesse, greeting, grace, and blessing. Forasmuch as the golden laurell of teaching doctorall, is not from aboue indifferently euery mans gift: neither is the office of preaching granted, saue to such as are called, and especiallie by the church admitted thereunto: we doe admonish and require you all and singuler clerks aforesaid, and doe straitly enioyne you all in the vertue of holie obedience, that you nor any of you doe admit any man to preach or to teach the catholike faith, saiing such as the same office of preaching shall by the authoritie apostolicall, or else your bishop bee specially committed vnto: but that as much as in you shall lie, you doe by word and deed, labour to let those that would attempt the contrarie. And you lords, ladies, knights, barons, esquires, and all and singuler persons, of what estate, degree, preheminence, or condition soeuer ye be, remaining within the citie and diocesse of Hereford, wee doe beseech and exhort in our Lord, that following the words of our Sauiour, you beware of the leauen of the Pharisies.

Would God both they and all men did beware of that leauen.

Item, according to the saying of the Apostle, be not yee caried away with diuers and strange doctrines: and that in the meane while (as saith the Apostle) you be not remoued from the sense of the holy ancient fathers, lest that any man by any meanes should seduce you; but you agreeing together in one minde, see that you honour God with one mouth. But if any man to whom that thing is not speciallie (as is aforesaid) committed, shall attempt to instruct, or in this your life to direct you into the catholike faith, do ye denie to giue them audience, and refuse you to be present at their assemblies, and shun ye their teachings, because they be wicked and peruerse. And as for vs, we will not omit to proceed according to the sacred canons and precepts of the holy fathers, against such as doe the contrarie. Dated at London in the house of our habitation vnder our seale, the last day saue one of December, in the yeere of our Lord, 1389. and of our consecration the first.

5 Item, the same William in his preaching to the people, on Monday being the first of August, in the yeere of our Lord 1390. in the parish of Whitneie of your diocesse, did hold and affirme, that no prelate of the world of what estate, preheminence preheminence or degree soeuer hee were of, hauing cure and charge of soules, he being in deadly sinne, and hearing the confession of any vnder his hand in giuing him absolution, doth nothing: As who neither doth loose him from his sin, nor in correcting or excommunicating him for his demerits doth bind him by his sentence, except the prelat shall be free himselfe from deadly sinne, as S. Peter was, to whom our Lord gaue power to bind and loose.

That is one of Wickliffs blemishes.

6 Item, the same William in many places said and affirmed in the presence of many faithfull christian people, that after the sacramentall words vttered by the priest hauing the purpose to consecrate; there is not made the very bodie of Christ in the sacrament of the altar.

Bread he meaneth in substance.

7 Item, that accidents cannot bee in the sacrament of the altar without a subiect: and that there remaineth materiall bread there to such as be partakers communicant with the bodie of Christ, in the same sacrament.

8 Item, that a priest being in deadly sinne, cannot bee able by the strength of the sacramentall words, to make the bodie of Christ, or bring to perfection any other sacrament of the church, neither yet to minister it to the members of the church.

9 Item, that all priests are of like power in all things, notwithstanding that some of them, in this world are of higher and greater honour, degree, or preheminence.

10 Item, that onlie contrition putteth away sinne, if so bee that a man shall be dulie contrite: and that, all auricular and outward confession is superfluous, and not requisit of necessitie to saluation.

11 Item, inferiour curats haue not their power of binding and losing immediatly from the pope or bishop, but immediatlie from Christ. And therefore, neither can the pope nor bishop reuoke to themselues such kind of power, when they see time and place at their lust and pleasure.

12 Item, that the pope cannot grant such kind of annuall and yéerely pardons, because there shal not be so many yéeres to the day of iudgement, as are in the popes bulles or pardons contained. Whereby it followeth, that the pardons are not of such like value as they speake of, and are praised to bee.

13 Item, it is not in the popes power to grant vnto any person penitent, forgiuenesse of the punishment or of the fault.

14 Item, that person that giueth his almes to any, which in his iudgement is not in necessitie, doth sin in so giuing it.

15 Item, that it stands not in the power of any prelat, of what religion soeuer hee be of, priuatelie to giue letters for the benefit of his order, neither doth such benefit granted, profit them to the saluation of their soule, to whom they bee granted.

16 Item, that the same William vnmindfull of his owne saluation, hath many and oftentimes come into a certaine desert wood, called Werualwood, of your diocesse, and there in a certaine chapell not hallowed, or rather in a prophane cottage; hath in contempt of the keies, presumed of his owne rashnesse to celebrate, nay rather to prophanate.

17 Item, the same William hath also presumed to doe such things in a certaine prophane chapell, being situate in the parke of Newton nigh to the towne of Leintwarden, of the same your diocesse.

VPon Friday being the last of the moneth of Iune, in the yeere. abouesaid, about 6. of the clocke, in the said parish church of Bodenhone, hath the said William Swinderby personallie appeared before vs. And he willing to satisfie the terme to him assigned, as before specified, hath read out, word by word, before all the multitude of faithfull christian people, many answers made and placed by the same William (in a certaine paper booke of the sheet folded into foure parts) to the said articles, and the same answers for sufficient hath hee alreadie to vs exhibited, auouching them to be agreeable to the law of Christ. Which thing being done, the same William (without any moe with him) did depart from our presence, because that we, at the instance of certaine noble personages, had promised to the same William free accesse, that is to wit, on that day for the exhibiting of those answers, and also free departing without perfixing of any terme, or without citation, or else any other offence or harme in bodie or in goods.

As for the tenour of the same answers, exhibited vnto them by the same William, as is before specified; wee haue here vnder annered word for word, and in the same old language, vsed at that time, when it was exhibited. And followeth in these words.

The protestation of William Swinderby, with his answers to the articles by the promoters laid against him, to the bishop of Herford, taken out of the Registers in the same old English, wherein he wrote it.

The protestation of William Swinderby, with his answers.

IN the name of God, amen. I William Swinderby priest vnworthy, couenting and purposing wholly with al my hart to be a true christian man, with open confession knowledging mine owne defaults and vnwise deeds: making openlie this protestation, cleping God to record here before our worshipfull bishop John, through the sufferance of God bishop of Herford, with witnesse of all this people: that it is not mine intent any thing to say or affirme, to maintaine or to defend that is contrarie to holy writ, against the beleefe of holie Church, or that should offend the holie determination of Christs Church, or the true sentences of holy doctors. And if I haue here before through mine vncunning, been vnordered, or by euill counsell bin deceiued, or any thing said, preached, holden, maintained or taught contrarie to the law of God: whollie and fullie for that time for now and euer with full will I reuoke it and withdraw it, as euerich christen man should: Praying and beseeching ech christen man, to whom this writing shall come to, that gif I ought erre (as God forbid that I doe) or euer erred in any point, contrarie to holie writ, that it bee had and holden of them, as for thing nought said. And all the trothes that I haue said according with the law of God, that mey maintaine them, and stand by them for life or death to Gods worship, as a true christen man should, submitting mee meekelie to the correction of our bishop that héere is, or of any other christen man, after Christes lawes and holy writ; in will euer readie to be amended: and with this protestation I say and answer to these conclusions and articles that heere followen after, the which bene put to mee to answere to.

The first is this: that I William of Swinderby pretending (hee saith) my selfe a priest, was iudiciallie conuented of certaine articles, and conclusions of error, falle, schismaticke and hereste, by mee in diuers places and times preached (hee saith) before multitudes of true christen men: and the same articles and conclusions by néed of law reuoked and forsworne some as hereses, and some as errors and false: and such I affirmed and beleeued them to bee. And that none of them from that time forth I should preach, teach, or affirme, openlie or priuilie, ne that I should make no sermon to the people, ne preach but by lawfull leaue asked and gotten. And if I would presume in doing or affirming the contrary, then to the seueritie of the law, I should bee burom, as by néede of the law I swore.

1. Obiection.

To this I say, witnessing God that is in heauen, to my wit and vnderstanding, that I neuer preached, held, ne taught these conclusions and articles, the which falslie of friers were put vpon mee, and of lecherous priests to the bishop of Lincolne. For I was ordained by procelle * per said, of their law, by the bishop and his commissaries, so as I granted them to bring my purgation of 13. priests of good fame. And so I did, with a letter, and 12. seales thereby, from the Maior of Leicester, and from true Burgesses and 30. men to witnesse with me, as the duke of Lancaster knew and heard, the earle of Darby, and other many great men that were that time in the towne, that I neuer said them, taught them, ne preached them. But when I should haue made my purgation, there stooden forth fiue friers or moe, that some of them neuer saw mee before, ne heard me, and three lecherous priests openly knowne, some liuing in their lecherie xx. yéere (men sayden) or more, as by their childer was openlie knowne. Some of these they clepinden, denunciations, and some weren cleped comprobations, that weren there falslie forsworne, they sung busslie and crying with many another frier, with great instance to giue the dome vpon me, to burne me, and boughten die wood before, as men tolden in that towne: and these sleights, and swearing, and monie giuing, as men saiden, with fauour of the bishop (by what law I wot not, but soothly not by Gods law) they saiden they held me as conuicted, and might not haue forth my purgation. So as I fully forsoke them, and neuer granted y I said them. Duer this they made me sweare, neuer to hold them, teach them, ne preach them, priuilie ne apertlie: and that I would goe to certaine churches to reuoke the conclusions that I neuer said, in slaunder of my selfe, by great instance of the friers. And so for dred of death and for fleshlie counsell that I had, I assented, and so I did. And also they maden me to sweare, that I should not preach (by instance of the friers) within that diocesse, without licence asked and granted; and neuer sithen I did. And now the same conclusions bene rehearsed to me againe: whether by friers counsell I will not deme, God wot, but in slander of me it is: and therefore I will answer now (with Gods helpe) to the conclusions. Of the which the first is this.

* Y said, that is, before said. Witnesses with W. Swinderby 13. priests, and 30. other with the letter of the maior of Leicester and burgesses with 12. seales.

The charitie of votaries to be noted.

That men mowen aske their debts by charitie, but in no maner for debt to prison any man: and that hee so emprisoning, is accursed. 1. Conclusion.

So I said not: but thus I haue said, and yet say with protestation put before, that who so pursues his brother with malice, prisoneth him cruellie for debt without mercie, that faine would pay it if he might; he sinneth against Christs teaching, Estote misericordes, sicut pater vester misericors est. Answer. How debt is to be pursued.

The second conclusion, that false friers and lecherous priests putten vpon me was this: that if the parochiens knowe her Curate to bene a lechour, incontinent, and an euill man; they owen to withdraw from him tithe, and else they bene fautors of his sinnes. 2. Conclusion.

Thus I said not, but on this wise, and yet I say with protestation Answer.

cation put before: that if it be knowne openly to the people, that parsons or curates come to her benefice by simonie, and liuen in notorie fornication, and done not their office and her duties to her parochiens by good ensample of holy life, in true preaching, liuing and residence, wending away from his cure, occupied in secular office: he owes nought to haue of the parochiens, tithes, ne offerings, ne hemolwes, not to hold him for her curate, ny hemolwes, not to geuen him tithes, lest they bin guiltie to God of consent and maintaining of her open sinne. Nemo militans deo, implicat se negotijs secularibus. 1. q. 1. ca. quisquis per pecuniam, & dist. 80. cap. Si quis.

3. Conclusion. The third conclusion was this, that friers and priests putten vpon me, that tithes purely bene almesses: And in case that curates bene euill men, they molwen leefullie bee giuen to other men, by temporall lords, and other temporalties been done away from men of the church, actuallie and openlie trespalling.

Answere. Thus I said not in these termes: but thus I say with protestation made before: that it were medefull and leefull to secular lords by way of charitie, and power giuen to him of God, in default of prelats that amend not by Gods law, cursed curates that openly misusen the goods of holy church, that ben poore mens goods and customablie against the law of God: the which poore men, Lords ben holden to maintaine and defend, to take away and withdraw from such curates, poore mens goods, the which they wrongfully holden in helpe of the poore, and their owne wilfull offerings, and their bodilie almesdeeds, and giue them to such that duly serue God in the church, and beene needie in vpbearing of the charge that prelats shulden doe, and done it not. Alter alterius onera portate, & sic adimplebitis legem Christi. And as anenst taking away of temporalities, I say thus with protestation made before: that it is leefull to kings, princes, dukes, and lords of the world to take away fro popes, cardinals, fro bishops and prelates, possessions in the church, their temporalties, and their almes that they haue giuen them, vpon condition they shoulden serue God the better, when they verelie sene that their giuing and their taking bene contrarie to the law of God, to Christs liuing and his Apostles: and namely in that, that they taken vpon them (that shoulden bee next followers of Christ and his Apostles in poorenesse and meekenesse) to be secular lords: against the teaching of Christ and S. Peter, Luk. xxij. Reges gentium. Et 1. Pet. 5. Neque dominantes in clero. And namely when such temporalties maken them the more proud, both in heart and in aray, then they shoulden bene elsse, more in strife and debate against peace and charity, and in euill ensample to the world more to bee occupied in worldly businesse. Omnem solicitudinem projcientes in eum. And drawes them from the seruice of God, from edifying of Christs Church, in empouerishing and making lesse the state and the power of kings, princes, dukes, and lords that God hath set them in: in wrongfull oppression of commons for vnmightfulnesse of realmes. For Paul saith to men of the church (whose lore, prelats shulden soueraignly followen) Habentes victum & vestitum, hijs contenti simus.

4. Conclusion. The fourth conclusion is this, that friers and priests putten vpon me falslie, that an euill curate cursing his Soget for withholding of tithes, is naught elsse, but to take with extortion wickedlie and vndulie mony from them.

Answere. Here may you see the falshood of the papists gathering articles against good men, which they neuer said nor meant. Thus said I not: but thus I said, and yet doe with protestation made before: that an euill curate cursing his parochiens, vnmightie to pay their tithing, with vengeance without pitie, for his singuler worldlie winning against charitie, and not for heed of their soules, there he is hold by his power reasonablie to helpe his needie parochiens, and doth nought of the goods of the church: wickedly and vndulie hee withholds from them, that which is due to them by the law of God. Dimittite, & dimittetur vobis: date, & dabitur vobis: verùm mihi vindictam, & ego retribuam, dicit dominus.

5. Conclusion. The fifth conclusion is this, that friers and priests falsly putten vpon me: that no man may curse any man, but if he were wete him cursed of God, ne the commers with him rennen not into sentence of cursing in any manner.

Answere. Thus said I not: but thus I said, and say with protestation put before: that no man ought to curse any man, but for charity and with charitie. Omnia vestra cum charitate fiant. And sikerly I say, that no wrongfull cursing of pope or any prelate in earth, binds anenst God, but when they wrongfullie and wittinglie cursen men, for that men will not doe their singuler will, vnreasonable bidding, with highnes of heart and crueltie (standing patience and charity in them that they cursen wrongfully) he is blessed of almightie God, and they themselfe bene cursed: Matth. 5. Beati eritis cum maledixerint homines, &c, Et in Psalmo: Maledicent illi, & tu bene dices. Et Augustinus, xi. q. 3. cap. illud.

6. Conclusion. The sixth conclusion is this, that friers and priests putten vpon me falslie: that ech priest may assoile him that sinneth, contrition had: and notwithstanding forbiddings of the bishop, * is holden to preach to the people the Gospell.

* Holden, that is, bound. Answer. Thus I said not: but thus I said, and yet say with protestation made before: that ech true priest may counsell sinnefull men, that shewen to him her sinnes, after the wit and cunning that God had giuen him, to turne fro sinne to vertuous life. And as touching preaching of the Gospell, I say, that no bishop owes to let a true priest, that God had giuen grace, wit, and cunning to do that office: for both priests and deacons, that God had ordained deatons and priests, ben holden by power giuen him of God to preach to the people the Gospell, and namely and somely, popes, bishops, prelates, and curates: For this is due to the people and parochiens, for to haue and aske of hem, and they duely and freely owen to done it: Matth. 5. Luke 5. Ite, ecce ego mitto vos. Et Marc. 16. Euntes in mundum vniuersum. Et Matth. 5. Euntes autem prædicate. Et dist. 21. ca. In nouo testamento. Et Isidor. de summo bono. 44. Et Chrysost. distinct. 34. ca. Nolite. Et Aug. distinct. 34. ca. Quisquis. Et Greg. in suo pastorali, ca. 38. Et Tollitano. ca. ignorantia. Et Ierom. distinct. 95. ca. Ecce Ego.

7. Conclusion. The 7. conclusion is this, that friers and priests falsly putten vpon me: that a priest taking any thing for annuell, through couenant; in that, he is schismatike and cursed.

Answere. This said I neuer in these termes: but thus I said, and yet say with protestation put before: that no priests owes to sell by bargaining and couenant, his ghostly trauell, ne his masses, ne his prayers, ne Gods word, ne hallowings, baptisme, ne confirming, order giuing, for weddings, for shrift, for housell, or for ennointing, any worldlie mens reward to aske or take for these or for any of these, or for any ghostly thing, he erres and doth simonie. Vt patet 1. q. 2. ca. Nullus. Et ex concilio Triburenti. cap. Dictum est. Et Christus euangelio vendentes, & ementes eiecit de templo. Matth. 22.

8. Conclusion. The viij. conclusion is this, that friers and priests putted vnto me falslie, saying that I beleeue sadly as my sell saies: that yche priest being in deadly sinne, yet he put him to make Christs bodie, rather he does idolatrie then makes it.

Answere. Thus said I not: but thus I said, and yet say with a protestation put before: that what priest that puts himselfe presumptuoustlie and vnworthily in deadly sinne, wittinglie to minister and to receiue that holy Sacrament, and so recordes hit cursedly and damnablie, he receiues his doome. Qui manducat & bibit indigne, iudicium sibi manducat & bibit: 1. Corin. 11.

9. Conclusion. The ix. conclusion is this, that friers and priests falslie putten vpon mee: that no priests entres into any house but euill for to treate the wife, the daughter, or the wench; and therefore they sayden, that I prayed the people that their husbands should beware, that they suffer no priest to entet into her house.

Answere. And if I had said thus, then I had prayed against my selfe, for I come oft into mens houses: But thus I said, and yet I doe, praying christian men to beware that they nourith nor maintaine no lecherous priest in their sinnes: for there bee where (as men well knowne) they ben maintained in many places, continuing homely with her women. And iche man there saine they paine therfore a certaine to the bishops almes. Et ideo ait Isido. 11. q. 4. Qui consentit peccantibus & defendit alium delinquentem, maledictus erit apud deum & homines.

10. Conclusion. The x. conclusion is this, that friers and priests putten vpon me falslie: that a child is not verelie baptised, if the priest that baptiseth, the godfather, or the godmother, bene in deadly sinne.

Answere. God wot in heauen they said full false: but thus I said, and yet I say: that the prayers that an euill priest praies (liuing in lecherie or other deadly sinne) ouer the child when it shall bee hollowed, ben not acceptable to God as ben the prayers of a good priest. And the better and cleuner the priest is, the godfather, and the godmother; the more graciouslie God will heare him, if all they ben not greatest nor most rich in the world. Vnde gg. xiij. q. vij. cap. in grauibus. Cum is qui displicet ad intercedendum peccator admittitur, irati animus proculdubio ad deteriora prouocatur.

11. Conclusion. The xi. conclusion is this, that friers and priests putten vpon me falslie: that no man liuing against the law of God is a priest, how euer he were ordained priest of any bishop.

Answere. Certes this is false, for I said neuer thus in this termes: but thus I said, and thus I say with a protestation put before: that what euery pope, or cardinall, bishop or priest, or any prelate of the Church comes to his state or dignitie by simonie, and in simonie occupies that office, and holy churches goods: I say that hee is a theefe, and that by the doome of God, and comes but to steale and kill: Joh. 10. Fur non venit nisi vt furetur, & mactet, & perdat. And furthermore I say, that what pope, cardinall, bishop, prelate, or priest, in manner of liuing, or teaching, or lawes making contrarie to Christs liuing and his lawes, or any other ground put in ruling of the church of Christ, but by Christ and his lawes: is very Antichrist, aduersarie to Jesus Christ and his Apostles. Aliud fundamentum nemo potest ponere, præter id quod positum est, quod est Christus. Et patet 1. q. 3. c. Si quis. Et 1. q. 6. c. Ego autem. Quicunque.

The true description who was Antichrist.

But this worshipfull father bishop of Hereford, that here is, saies this in his writing: that I William of Swinderby, notwithstanding the forsaid reuocation and abiuration (not setting at heart, but from euill to worse) he sais, peruerted of his his dioces) hee saies I come running about by diuers places: and by mine own follie he saies that I haue presumet to preach many heresies, errours, blasphemies, schismes, and other dikames, and to holy canons and determination of holy Church contrarie and repugnant; which where and when within forth more speciallie it shall be shewed, that yee bee false enformed, that I haue presumed in diuers places in your dioces to preach heresies, errors, blasphemies, schismes and other dikkames. And sir, all the countrie knowes whether this be soth or not: for sir I presume not, sithen it is the office of a priest, by the law of Christ, to preach the gospell: ne nought I did it for presumption, but for the charge that I haue of God by priesthood (if all I be unworthie) and to the worship of God, and helpe of Christen soules, freely without gathering of her goods for my preaching. If I erred in this, I will bee amended. And sir, touching your mandement that ye senden to me, there was sent none. And sir, I made neuer yet disobedience unto you, ne to your ministers: and yef all I had, me owes more to obeyche to God then to you, in that that ye bidden contrarie to Christs bidding. And sir as ye saine, that I had no mind of my hele, it is too lightly demet: for God forbid, but yef there lie hele more then in your bidding. For God wot for hele I did it, of mine and of the people, and that was in my mind. But sir, it semes me that ye charge not by euidence of the punishing so greatly the breaking of Gods hests, as ye done of your owne. And sir, if it be your will, in default that the people wanted, you to teach hem (and her curats did not) by the desire of the people that weren hungrie and thirstie after Gods word, ichone to beare up others charge as Gods law bids: I preached not for disobedience to you: but sir in fulfilling of the obedience that Gods law bids me doe, in excusing of my selfe to you of that ye blame me of, in open shewing to holy church, with the protestation that I first made, I answere thus to the articles that ye haue put to me.

1. Article. Anno 1390

The first is this, that I William of Swinderby, the Monday the first of August, the yeere of our Lord, 1390. preaching to the people in the Church of Whitney of your dioces, held and affirmed (as ye saine) that no prelate of the world, of what state or degree that he be, hauing cure of soules, being in deadly sinne, and hearing confession of his suget, does nought in assoiling him, ne he assoiles him not of his sinne: and also in amending his suget openlie sinning and him for his deserts cursing, his sentence binds not, but if that prelat be as cleane out of deadly sinne as was saint Peter, to whom our Lord gaue power of binding and unbinding.

Note here how the papists vse falslie to wrest good mens sayings and articles.

Answere.

I neuer thought this ne spake this, ne heard it to the time that I saw it written in our booke; and that will witnesse the Lord of the towne that has the same sermon written, and many gentiles and other that hearden me that day. But thus I said, and thus I say with protestation put before: that there is no man, pope, ne bishop, prelate ne curate, that binds soothlie, verilie and ghostly, but in almuch as his binding or unbinding accords with the keies of heauen that God gaue to Peter. And as S. Gregories saies, that power han they only, that hold together the ensample of the Apostles with here teaching. Illi soli in hac carne positi ligandi atque soluendi potestatem habent, sicut sancti Apostoli qui eorum exempla simul cum doctrina tenent: gg. li. quarto sententiarum.

The popes binding how far it extendeth.

Greg. lib. 4. Sent.

2. Article. And what if he had said it?

The second article that is put upon mee, is this: that I should haue said, preached, and affirmed in many places before many true men of Christ; that after the Sacramentall words said of the priest, hauing intention of consecration: That in the Sacrament of Gods bodie, is not very Gods bodie.

Answer.

This said I neuer God wote, and true men that haue heard mee.

3. Article.

The third article is this, that our bishop put upon me; that I should haue said in many places, and affirmed, that accidents mow not be in the sacrament of the aultar without subiect, and that materiall bread leues not there with Gods bodie in the Sacrament.

Answere.

This conclusion I haue not holden, ne taught, ne preached, for I haue not medled me of that matter, my wit sufficeth not thereto. But here I tell my beleefe with protestation put before: that the sacrament of the aultar made by vertue of heauenlie words, that Christ himselfe said in the Cene, when hee made this sacrament, that it is bread and Christs bodie, so as Christ himselfe saies in the gospell, and S. Paul saies, and as Doctors in the common law haue determined to this sentence. Mat. 26. Mar. 14. Luk. 22. Pa. 1. Cor. 10. & 11. de con. distinct. 2. panis: & de consecr. dist. 2. Corpus. Io. 6. verus panis.

Bread and Christs body in the Sacrament.

4. Article.

The fourth article is this, that our bishop accuseth mee of, that I should haue preached about and said: that a priest being in deadlie sinne, may not by the strength of the Sacramentall words make Gods bodie, or none other Sacrament of the church, either performe to minister them to members of the same.

Answere. The wickednes of the priest impaireth no Sacrament.

Thus I neuer said, thought it, preached it, ne taught it, for well I wot, the wickednesse of a priest may appaire no verie Sacrament: but the wickednesse of the priests appaires himselfen, and all that boldnesse and example of his sinne causen the people to liuen the worse against Gods law. Vnde Greg. Et si sacerdos in peccatis fuerit, totus populus ad peccandum conuertitur.

The 5. article is this, that our bishop puts unto me: that all priests ben of euen power in al things, notwithstanding that some of this world bene of higher dignitie or more passing in highnesse of degree. 5. Article.

Answere. Equalitie of priests.

Certes no man would say thus as I suppose, no more did I, ne neuer heard it that I wot of: But this I say with protestation made before; that what priest liues most holilie next following the law of God, he is most louer of God, and most profitable to the church. If men speaken of worldlie power and lordships and worships, with other vices that raignen therein, what priest that desires and has most hereof (in what degree so he be) he is most Antichrist of all the priests that ben in earth. Vnde Augustinus ad Valerium scribens ait: Nihil est in hac vita, & maximè hoc tempore facilius & leuius, & hominibus acceptabilius, Episcopi, presbyteri, aut decani officijs: sed si perfunctoriè aut adulatoriè, nihil apud Deum miserabilius aut tristius & damnabilius.

Aug. ad Valerium.

The sixth article is this, that only contrition does away sin, if a man be duly contrite: and all outward confession by word is superfluous and not requiret of need of health. 6. Article.

Answere.

This conclusion said I neuer that I know of. But thus I say with protestation put before; that very contrition of heart, that is neuer without charitie and grace, does away all sinnes before done of that man that is verilie contrite. And all true confession made by mouth outward to a wise priest, and a good, profiteth much to man, and it is needfull and helping that men shew their life to such, trusting full to Gods mercie, and that he forgiues thy sinne. Vnde August. de conse. distinct. 4. Nemo tollit peccata mundi nisi solus Christus, qui est agnus tollens peccata mundi.

Confession.

God forgiueth sinne.

Aug. de conse. dist.

The 7. Article is this, that I should say that lower curats haue not here power of binding and assoiling, by meane of pope and bishop, but of Christ without mony. And therefore neither pope ne bishop may reuoke such maner power for time and place at her will. 7. Article.

Answere.

Thus said I not, but * not for thy it semes me thus, that no man should grant any thing after his owne will, ghostlie, ne bodilie. But euerich man should be well aduiset, that hee grant nothing but if it be the will of God that hee so grant it. And it is no doubt that ne God grants * by meane persons, as does Antichrist to torment Christs people. Vnde & Ioh. 19. ait Pilatus, Nescis quia potestatem habeo dimittere te? Et Christus: Non haberes potestatem aduersum me vllam, nisi esset tibi datum desuper.

* Not for thy, that is, notwithstanding.

* Some thing here lacketh in the copie.

The 8. Article that our bishop puts me to, is this, that I should say that the pope may not grant such manner indulgence of yeeres, for there shall not bee so many yeeres unto the day of doome, as bene contained in his buls, or in the popes indulgences: whereof it followes that indulgences been not so much worth as they semen and bene preached. 8. Article.

Answere.

This article I said not thus: but I say, that the pope may grant indulgences written in his letter of yeeres, all so farre forth that he may grant him in Gods law, so farre to grant, and farther not: yeeres may he grant no mo then God hath set. If indulgence ben forgiuenesse of sinne, I wot well all onelie God forgiues sinne. If it bee releasing of paines in purgatorie ordeinet of God, if God haue bidden him release so many, or ordeined that he should release so many, hee may then releasen him: if it be in his owne disposing to releasen whom him likes, and how much, then he may destroy purgatorie and let none come there and release his owne paine, as charities wots. So it seemes he may be siker to be saued, if himselfe lick. If any goe to purgatorie, then it seemes hee full failes charity. If buls ben the indulgence that men bringen from the Court, then ben they not so much worth, as they costen there: for lightly they might be lost, drenched, or brend, or a rat might eaten them: his indulgence then were lost. Therefore sir haue me excuset, I know not these termes: teach me these termes by Gods law, and truly I will learne hem.

Against pardons.

The 9. Article is this, that I should haue said: that it is not in the popes power to grant to any man (doing penance) remission from paine, ne from blame. 9. Article.

Leaud I am, but this article said I not thus leaudly; But thus I say, that sithen it is onelie due to God to giue and to grant plenarie remission from paines and from blame: that what euer he be, pope or other, that presumptuouslie mistakes upon him that power that is onely due to God: in that (in as much as in him is) he makes himselfe Christ, and blasphemeth in God, as Lucifer did, when he said: Ascendam, & ero similis altissimo. Farther I say, if the pope hold men of armes, in maintaining his temporalties and lordship to benge him on hem that gilten and offenden him, and geues remission to fight and to slay hem that contrarien hem, as men sayden hee did by the bishop of Norwich, not putting his sword into his sheath, as God commanded Peter, Mitte, &c. he is Antichristus; for he does contrarie to the commandements of Jesus, that bad Peter forgiue to his brother seuentie sithe seuen sithe. Si peccauerit in me frater meus, quoties dimittã ei? Septies? &c. Et Christus: non dico tibi septies, sed septuagesies septies.

The pope pronued a blasphemer.

Of this Bearle Spenser bishop of Norwich, see the pag. 394.

The

10. Article. The 10. article is this, that our bishop puts to me, that I should haue said: that a man geuing his almes to anie man after his dome (not hauing need) sinnes, in so giuing.

Answere. This article soothlie I said not in these termes: But of this matter I haue spoken, and will with protestation made before on this wise: that it is meedfull to giue almes to ich man that asketh it bodily or ghostlie, but not to giue to ich shameleslie begger, strong and mightie of bodie, to get his liflode leuefull and will not, and in what degree so he be, meri owen not to giue it to such a one, that hes vnreasonablie asketh, for if he giue it to him wittinglie, he sinnes as fautor of his idlenes. Vnde Sap. 12. Si beneferceris, scito cui beneferceris, & erit gloria in bonis tuis multa.

He meaneth of begging friers.

11. Article. The 11 article is this, that is put to me, that I should haue said, that it is not in the power of anie prelate of what euer priuate religion, to grant letters of the good deedes of her order, ne such benefices grauntet profits not to hele of soules to hem that they ben grauntet to.

Answere. I said neuer thus in these termes: but thus I say with protestation, that prelates of priuate religion mowen graunt, letters of the good deedes of her order: But the ghostly mede that comes of good deedes, they mow not grant, for that is onelie propriet to God. And if they blinde the people in misbeliefe for her worldlie wining, wittinglie behetting hem of her owne graunt ghostly medes in heauen by her letters and her seale (vncertaine, who shall be damned) but make the people bolder to sinne by trust of her praiers: hit is none heal to the soules, but harmes to that one and to that other. For God shall yeld to echone after here werks. Ipse reddet vnicuique secundum opera sua.

Good deedes of the order profit nothing.

12. Article. The 12. article is this: that our bishop puts to me, that I many times and oft haue come (he sates) to a desert wood, cleped, Derwalswode of his Dioces: and there in a chappell not hallowed, but accurset * shepheardes hulke, by mine owne follie he sates haue presumed to sing (but rather to curse) in contempt of the keies.

Of sheepcote.

Answere. Hereto I say, that this is falsly put vpon me of hem that told you this. For it is a chappell where a priest sings certaine daies in the yeare, with great soleinnitie: and certes I neuer long therin seth I was borne into this world.

The accusers proued with a lie.

13. Article. The 13. article is this, that I should also presume to sing in an vnhallowet chappell, that stonds in the parke of Newton, besides the towne of Leyntwardy of this same Dioces.

Another lie. Answer. Truely I wot not where the place stonds.

14 Article. The 14 article is this, that I should say that no man owes to sweare for anie thing, but simply without other to affirme or to denie, and if he sweare he sinnes.

Answere. This article said I not that I haue mind of, in this maner: But oft I haue said and yet will, that men should not sweare by anie creature by the law of God, and that no man should sweare in idel, as welnigh all the people vseth, and therefore me thinkes it is no neede to comfort the people in swearing. For from the old vnto the yong, and namely men of holie Church, breken his hest, and few bishops pursuen hem therefore.

To sweare by no creature.

15. Article. The 15. article is this, that I should haue taught to true men of Christ, that on no manner they should worship the Image of him that was done on the crosse, or the Image of the blessed mayd his mother, or of other Saints into honour and worship of the same ordeinet in ỹ mind of them. And oft sithes the worshipper of such image, he has repronet, saying and stroglie affirming, that churchmen sinnen and done Idolatrie.

Answere. This conclusion haue I not said in these termes. But this I say with protestation, that God commaundes in his lawe in diuers places: Exod. 20. Leuit. 19. & 26. Deut. 5. & 7. Tobiæ 1. Baruc. 6. 2. ad Corin 10. Esay 45. Ierc. 2. 6. 8. & 10. 22. & vltimo, Sapient. 13. & 14. & 15. Mac. 5. & Threnorum 4. & postremo: that men should not worshippen grauen Images that ben werkes of mens hands: And also he bids that men should not make to hem grauen Images in likenesse of the things that ben in heauen, to that end to worshippen hem: sethen neither God ne Christ by his manhood gaue neuer commandement to make these Images, ne eyrpesse counsell, ne his Apostles in all his lawe, ne to worship such that bene made. But well I wote, that by mens owne relation that haue misbeleuet in hem, that many men sinnen in maumetrie worshipping such dead Images: * Not for thy, to tho men bene Images good to whom they haue bene but kalendars, & through the sight of hem they knowen the better and worshippen oft God and his Saints. And to such men they done harme that letten her hope and trust in hem or done any worship to hem against Gods law and his hest. Vnde ait Gregorius in Registro libro 10. in Epistola ad Serenum Episcopũ: Si quis imagines facere voluerit, minimè prohibe: adorare omnino prohibe. Sed hoc solicitè fraternitas tua admoneat, vt ex visione rei gestæ, ardorem compunctionis percipiant, vt in adoratione totius trinitatis prosternantur.

Images not to be worshipped.

* Not for thy, that is, notwithstanding.

Greg. Regist. lib. 10.

These conclusions, points, and articles that I haue vnder protestation, in this booke affirmed; I will stand by hem, and maintaine hem (with the grace of almighty God) to the time that the contrarie be proued duelie by Gods law: And this protestation I make for my faith & my beliefe as I did at the beginning: that whensoeuer this worshipfull or any other christen man shewes me verily by Gods lawe the contrarie of this, I will holy forsake hem, and take me to the veray trouth and better vnderstanding of wiser men, readie to be amended by the law of Jesu Christ, and be a true christen man and faithfull sonne of holy church: And of these I beseech you all beare witnesse where ye commen.

Will. Swinderby keeping himselfe from the Bishop was cited as followeth.

¶ The citation.

The tenor of the citation.

IOhn by Gods permission bishop of Hereford, to his deare sonnes our deane of Leamster, to the parsons of Croft, Almaly, and Whitney, and also to the vicars of Kyngston, Lardersley, Wiggemore, and Monmouth Clifford, and of S. Iohns aultar in our cathedrall church of Hereford, and to the rest of the deanes, parsons, vicars, chapleines, parish priests, and to other, whosoeuer in any place are appointed through our citie and dioces of Hereford: sendeth greeting, grace, and benediction.

We bid and commaund, charging you straitly, in the vertue of holy obedience, that you cite or cause to bee cited peremptorily (and vnder the paine of excommunication) William Swinderby, pretending himselfe to be a priest: That he appeare before vs, or our Commissaries the 26. day of this present moneth of Iuly, at North Lodebury, within our dioces, with the continuance of the dayes following in other places also to be assigned vnto him if it be expedient, till such things as haue bene and shalbe laid against him be fully discussed, to answere more at large to certaine positions and articles, touching the catholike faith, and the holy mother churches determination, that haue been exhibited and ministred vnto the said William. And to see and heare also many things that haue openly in iudgement before vs, and a great number of faithful christians by him bene euen in writing confessed, to be condemned as hereticall, false, schismaticall and erroneous. And to see and heare positions and articles denied by the said William, to be proued by faithfull witnesses and other lawfull trials against the said William. And to receiue for his false, hereticall, erroneous and schismaticall doctrine that iustice shall appoint, or els to shewe causes why the premisses should not be done.

And if the said William lieth priuily, or els cannot be so cited in his proper person: we will that in your churches when most people shall then come togither to diuine seruice, you openly with a loud voice, and that may be vnderstanded, cause the said William peremptorily to be cited vnto the premisses, certifying the same William, that whether hee shall appeare the day and place appointed or no, wee notwithstanding will proceede vnto the premisses against the said William according to the canonicall decrees by forme of law, in the absence or contumacie of the said William notwithstanding. We will moreouer if the said William shal appeare at the said day and place, as is aforesaid, before vs, friendly heare him, and honestly, and fauourably, as farre as we may with Gods leaue, deale with him; graunting free licence to come and to go for his naturall libertie without any hurt either in bodie or goodes. And see that you fully certifie vs of the things that you or any of you shall doe about the execution of this our commandement, and that by your letters patents signed with your seale autenticall, giuing also faithfully to the said William or to his lawfull Proctor, if he require it, a copie of this our present commandement.

Giuen at our house of Whitburne vnder our seale the fift day of the moneth of Iuly, in the yeare of our Lord 1391.

The first sitting against William Swinderby. {Anno 1391}

On Thursday, the 11. of Julie, in the yeare of the Lord aforesaid: We in the parish Church of North Lideburie aforesaid, about 6. of the clocke, sitting in iudgement, after that it was reported vnto vs how the aforesaid William was personallie taken and lawfullie cited: Caused the same Wil. then and there openly in iudgement to be called out, to do, heare & receiue such things, whereto he was afore cited, and to do otherwise that which iustice should perswade. And the said William appeared neither by himselfe, nor by proctor: but onely by a seruant (whose name we know not) he sent a certaine schedule of paper, made like an indenture vnto vs to excuse him. After which schedule seen, read and with right deliberation waighed, and in any wise notwithstanding, we adiudged the said William, after he was often called, and long euen to the due houre taried for, and by no meanes appearing, worthily for his obstinacie, & for his stubbornnesse, assigned vnto him the 29. date of Julie in ỹ church of Ponsley, to appeare before vs with the foresaide sauegarde, to answere more fully to such articles and otherwise to heare, receiue, and doe as before is noted.

The second dayes act.

The second sitting against William Swinderby.

Vpon Saturday being the 29. of Julie, and in the yeare of the Lord aforesaid, we John by Gods permission the fore remembred bishop in the church of Pontesburie, of our Dioces, at sixe of the clocke, or thereabout, sitting in iudgement; made the said William of Swinderby to be openlie called, that (as was to him appointed and assigned) he should appeare before vs, to answere to the foresaid articles more fully, and to declare the said articles as the darknesse of his answeres did worthilie require. And that the said William being called, and long for a due time looked for, did make no meanes to appeare: and so we pronounced him to be obstinat, and for his obstinatenesse (to ouercome his malice, and of our exceeding fauour) thought good to appoint, and did appoint the 8. of August, then next following, at Cleobury Mortemere of the same our dioces, vnto the said William for the same thing.

The third daies act.

The third sitting against William Swinderby.

Vpon Twesday, the 8. of August, the yeare aforesaid, I John by Gods permission Bishop of Hereford aforesaid, in the church of Cleoburie Mortemere, about sixe of the clocke, sitting in iudgement, caused ẏ foresaid William Swinderby, to be called manie times openlie, to doe and receiue about the premisses, according to the appointment of the same daie that iustice should aduise; which William did not appeare at all. Whereupon, we after that the said William was called, and often proclaimed, and long looked for, but not appearing at all, did iudge him worthilie (as of right apperteined) obstinate: and for his obstinatenesse assigned him the 16. day of the same moneth of August next following, in the parish Church of Whithorne of the same our dioces, to bring forth, or to see brought forth, all lawes, muniments, and other kindes of proofes, and to see all witnesses brought forth, admitted and sworn, by whom and which things we intend to proue the foresaid articles, or at leastwise some of the same.

The fourth dayes act.

The fourth sitting against William Swinderby.

Vpon Wednesday the 16. day of the moneth of August the yeare aforesaid, we John the bishop in the parish church of Whithorne aforesaid of our dioces, sitting in iudgement, caused the said William Swinderby oftentimes to be called; who (as is aforesaid) appeared not at all: whom after that he was so called, proclaimed and long looked for, and yet by no meanes appearing, we pronounced to be obstinate. We receiued also by certaine faithfull christians, and zealous men for the catholicke faith of our dioces a certaine proces made and had at another time against the same William, before the reuerend father in God and Lord, Lord John by the grace of God, Bishop of Lincolne, confirmed by the hanging on of the seale of the same reuerend father, the Lord Bishop of Lincolne. The tenor whereof word for word is contained before. And these faithfull christians moreouer against the obstinatenesse of the said William Swinderby brought forth discreete men, M. William Leuiet, parson of the parish Church of Kynersly, and also Edmund Waterdon, parish Chaplaine of the Chapell of S. and Roger Newton, and Hugh Sheppert, lay men of the dioces of Lincolne, asking instantlie that they might be receiued for witnesses, to proue some of the foresaid articles, whom against the obstinatenesse of the said William Swinderby, we thought good to receiue and did receiue, and their oathes to the holy Gospels of God, being layd hands on corporally in our hand. And did diligently examine them in proper person seuerallie in forme of law: whose sayings and depositions are afterward brought in, and at the instance of the same faithfull christians, we assigned the second day of September then next following to the said William Swinderby, to saie and alledge against the said proceese, witnesses, and their sayings, in the said church of Whithorne: decreeing that a copie should be made for him of these things that were brought forth, and of the depositions of the witnesses.

Of this processe mention is made before pag. 428

7. Conclusion.

* To the second conclusion that he saieth is errour or heresie, that toucheth taking away of the temporalities and of Lordships of priests that bene euill liuers.

Declaration.

I say, me seemeth that the conclusion is true, and is this: that it were needefull and leefull to secular Lordes by way of charity, and by power giuen to them of God, in default of Prelates that amend naught by Gods lawe: Cursed curates that openlie misuse the goods of the holy church, that ben poore mens goods: and customably ayens the law of God, (the wich poore men, Lordes ben holden to maintaine and defend) to take awaie and to draw from such curates, poore mens goods in helpe of the poore, and their owne wilfull offerings, and their bodily almes deedes of worldly goods, and giue them to such as duelie seruen God in the church: and ben readie in vpbearing of the charge that prelates shoulden doe, and done it not. And as anences taking away of temporalities: I say thus, that it is leefull to kings, to princes, to dukes, and to lords of the world to take away from popes, from cardinals, from bishops, prelates, and possessioners in the church, their temporalties, and their almes that they haue giuen them vpon condition, that they shoulden serue God the better: when they verily seene that their giuing and taking bens contrarie to the law of God, contrarie to Christes liuing, and his Apostles, and namely in that they taken vpon them, that they shoulden be next followers of Christ and his apostles, in poorenesse and meekenesse, to be secular lords against the teaching of Christ and of Saint Peter. Truelie me seemeth that all christen men and namelie Priestes shoulden take keepe, that their doing were according with the law of God, either the old law, either the new. The Priestes of the olde law weren forbidden, to haue lordships among their brethren: for God said, that he would be their part and their heritage. And Christ that was the highest Priest of the new Testament forsooke worldlie lordship, and was here in fourme of a seruant, and forbad his priests such lordships, and said, Reges gentium dominantur eorum, &c. vos autem non sic. That is: the kings of the heathen, beare dominion and rule, &c. But you shall not do so. And as Saint Peter saith: Neque dominantes in clero, &c. Not bearing rule and dominion of the clergie, &c. So it seemeth me, that it is against both lawes of God, that they haue such lordships, and that their title to such lordships is not full good: And so it seemeth me, that if they haue bene therto of euill liuing, it is no great petill to take away from them, such lordships, but rather needfull, if the taking awaie were in charitie, and not for singular couetousnesse ne wrath. And I suppose that if friers, that bene bounden to their founders, to liue in pouertie, would breake their rule and take worldlie lordships: might not men lawfullie take from them such Lordships, and make them to liue in pouertie as their rule would: And forsooth it seemeth me, that Priestes oughten also well to keepe Christes rule, as friers owen to keepe the rule of their founder. Jeremie witnesseth, how God commended Rachabs children, for they would not breake their fadersbidding in drinking of wine. And yet Jeremie proffered them wine to drinke. And so I trowe, that God would commend his Priests, if they woulden forsake worldlie lordships, and holden them apayed with lifelot, and with clothing: and busie them fast about their heritage of heauen. And God saith, Numer. 18. In terra eorum nihil possidebitis, nec tenebitis partem inter eos: Ego pars & hæreditas vestra in medio filiorum Israel, &c. Et Deut. 18. Non habebitis sacerdotes & Leuitæ & omnes qui de eadem tribu estis, partem & hæreditatem cum reliquo Israel, quia sacrificia Domini & oblationes eius comedent, & nihil accipient de possessione fratrum suorum. Dominus enim ipse hæreditas ipsorum, sicut locutus est illis. Et Lucæ 14. Sic ergo omnis ex vobis, qui non renunciauerit omnibus quæ possidet, non potest meus esse discipulus. Et Ieronymus in Epistola 34. Et Bernardus libro 20. ad Eugenium Papam. Et Hugo de Sacramentis, parte 2. libri Secundi cap. 7. Et 12. q. pri. cap. duo sunt: Et cap. clericus. Et Bernardus in Sermone de Apostolis, super illud: Ecce nos reliquimus omnia. Et Chrysost. super Matth. Et vetus Testamentum. That is: You shall haue no inheritance in their land, nor haue no part amongst them: I will bee your part and inheritance amongst the children of Israel, &c. Deut. 18. The Priests and Leuites, and all that bee of the same tribe shall haue no part nor inheritance with the rest of Israel: because they shall eate the sacrifices of the Lord and his oblations, and they shall take nothing of the possession of their brethren. The Lord himselfe is their possessions, as he spake vnto them. And the 14. chapter of Luke: Euen so euery one of you, which forsaketh not all that he possesseth, cannot be my disciple. And Jerome in his 14. Epistle hath the like words. And Bernard in his 20. Booke to Eugenius the Pope. And also Hugo in his Booke De Sacramentis, the second part of his second booke the 7. chapter. And also in the 12. q. first chapter, Duo sunt, and in the chapter Clericus. And againe, Bernard in his booke De sermone de Apostolis, vpon this place: Ecce nos reliquimus omnia: Behold we leaue all, &c. Chrysostome vpon the Gospell of S. Matth. &c.

Query gift giuen vpon condition is frustrate vpon the breach of euery such condition.

If the Pope may take from the Friers to cause them keep Saint Francis rule, may not the Emperour take from the Pope to cause him keepe Christs rule?

3. Conclusion.

* The third conclusion toucheth the matter of preaching of Priests, without leaue of Bishops, and is this, that such true Priests may counsell sinfull men; that shewen to them their sinnes, after the wit and cunning that God hath giuen, to turne hem from sinne to vertuous life, and as touching preaching of the Gospell.

Declaration.

I say that no Bishop oweth to let a true Priest, that God hath giuen grace, wit and cunning to doe that office. For both Priests and Deacons that God hath ordained Deacons or Priests bene holden by power geuen to them of God, to preach to the people the Gospell: and namely, and soverenlie popes, bishops, prelats and curats: for this is due to the people and the parishners, to haue it and aske it. And hereto seemeth me, that Christ said generally to his Disciples: Ite & prædicate Euangelium omni creaturæ, Goe and preach the Gospell to all creatures, as well as he said, Ite & baptizate omnes gentes, Goe and baptise all nations, that also as well longeth preaching

A priest admitted ought to preach, though the prince and bishop forbid, so that he preach the word.

thing to priests without leaue of a bishop, as doth baptising; & then why may he not preach Gods word without a bishops leaue? And sithen Christ bod his Priests preach, who should forbidden them preach? The Apostles were forbidden of a bishop at Jerusalem, to speake more of the name of Jesus; but Peter said: Si iustum est in conspectu Dei, vos potiùs audire quàm Dominum, iudicate. That is, whether it be iust in the sight of God to heare and obey you before the Lord; be your selues iudges. A bishop may not let a priest of giuing bodilie almes in his diocesse: much more may he not let the doing of spirituall almes in his diocesse by Gods law. A priest may say his Mattins without the bishops leaue: for the pope that is aboue the bishop, hath charged priests therewith: And me thinketh that Christs bidding should be all so much of charge as the popes. The fourth conclusion.

Declaration.

✻ The fourth conclusion toucheth the Sacrament of the altar, and is this.

That wholly I beléeue that the sacrament of the altar made by vertue of heauenly words, is bread and Christs bodie: so as Christ himselfe saith in the Gospell, and as Saint Paul saith, and as Doctors in the common law haue determined: To this sentence John 6. Moses hath not giuen you bread from heauen, but my Father will giue you bread from heauen. Hée is the true bread that came downe from heauen, and giueth life vnto the world. My Father giueth vnto you bread in déed: the verie true bread of God is that, which came downe from heauen and giueth life vnto the world. I am the bread of life: The bread which I will giue is my flesh. And in the canon of the Masse, Panem sanctum vitæ æternæ, the holie bread of life. And Corinthians the tenth chapter and first epistle: The bread which we breake, is it not the communicating of the bodie of the Lord? Let a man proue himselfe, and so eat of that bread, &c. And Canon De consecratione, distinction 2. vnder the authoritie of Hilarius the pope: Corpus Christi quod sumitur de altari, &c. And Augustine in the foresaid distinction: That which is séene, is bread, &c. That which faith requireth, is bread and is the bodie of Christ. And in the foresaid distinction, cap. Omnia quæcunque, &c. By these two sentences it is manifestly declared, that that bread and this, be not two, but one bread and one flesh. Note the words for that he saith, the bread and flesh. And the author, De diuinis officijs, and also Augustine in his booke De remedijs pœnitentiæ: Why prepareſt thou thy téeth? &c. And Ambrose, De Sacramentis: de consecratione, dist. 2. Reuera mirabile est, &c. This meate which you receiue, and this bread of one which descended from heauen, doth minister the substance of eternall life, and whosoeuer shall eat the same shall not die euerlastingly, and is the bodie of Christ. Note how he saith, and is the bodie of Christ.

The fifth conclusion.

Declaration.

✻ The fifth article telleth of forgiuenesse of sinnes, and is this. That verie contrition without charitie and grace, do away all sins before done of that man, that is verilie contrite; and all true confession made by mouth outwardly to a wise priest and a good, profiteth much to a man, and it is néedfull and helping, that men shew their life to such, trusting fully to Gods mercie, that he forgiueth the sinne.

And hereto I say, that there béen two remissions of sins: one that belongeth only to God: And that remission is the clensing of the soule from sin. And the other remission, a certifying that one man certifieth another, that his sinnes bene forgiuen of God, if he be sorie with all his heart for them: and is in full will to leaue them for euer: and this manner of forgiuenesse longeth to priests. Of the first manner of forgiuenesse, Dauid saith: And I said I will confesse my vnrighteousnesse vnto the Lord, and thou forgauest me my mis déed. And Zacharie saith, And thou O child shalt be called the Prophet of the highest, &c. To giue knowledge of saluation vnto his people for the remission of their sinnes, by the bowels of Gods mercie. And John Baptist, Behold the Lambe of God that taketh away the sins of the world. And Saint John the Euangelist saith in his epistle: If we confesse our sinnes, he is faithfull and iust to forgiue vs our sinnes, and cleanse vs from all our iniquitie. And it followeth: If any man sinne, we haue an aduocat with the Father, euen Jesus Christ, and he it is, that is the propitiation for our sins. And of the other remission of sinnes Christ speaketh in the Gospell, and saith: Whose sinnes ye forgiue, they shall be forgiuen. And mans forgiuenesse auaileth little, but if God forgiue our sinnes through his grace.

The sixth conclusion.

✻ The sixth conclusion teacheth indulgences and pardons, that the pope granteth in his Buls, and men callen it an absolution, A pœna & culpa.

Declaration. Either there is purgatorie, or else the pope is cruell and vncharitable.

Of this manner of speech I cannot find in the Gospell, ne in no place of holie write, ne I haue not read that Christ vsed this manner of remission, ne none of his Apostles. But as me séemeth, if the pope had such a power sithen the paines after a mans death bene much greater then any bodilie paines of the world: me thinketh he should of charitie keepe men out of such paines, and then men néeded not to find so many vicious priests after their life, to bring their soules out of purgatorie. Another thing me thinketh, that sith the popes power ne may not keep vs in this world fro bodily paines, as from cold, from hunger, from dread, from sorow and other such paines, how should his power helpe vs from spirituall paines, when we bene dead? But for that no man commeth after his death to tell vs the soth in what paine they bene, men mow tell therof what him lust. Saint John saith in his Apocalyps, that hée saw vnder the altar, the soules of them which were slaine for the word of God, and for the testimonie which they had. And they did crie with a loud voice, saying: how long Lord holy and true, doest not thou reuenge our blod of them which dwell on the earth? And white stoles were giuen to euerie of them, to rest a while, till the number of their fellow seruants and brethren should be fulfilled, which also remained to be slaine as they were, &c. Hére séemeth it, that these soules were not assoiled à pœna, that is, from paine: for their desire is not fulfillen. And they were bidden abide a while, and that is a paine. And if Martyrs were not assoiled from paine, it is hard for anie man to say, that he assoileth other men à pœna. Also good mens soules haue not but spirituall blisse, and they want bodilie blisse, vntill their resurrection in the day of dome. And after they desiren to haue that blisse, and abiden it, and that is paine to them. And I cannot see that the pope hath power to bring him from this paine. But if any man can shew me, that he hath such a power granted in the troth of holy write, I will gladly lésen it.

The popes power can keep none from bodilie paine. Ergo much lesse from spirituall.

If the martyrs being dead, be not assured from griefe of tarying, much lesse can they assoile other from paines of purgatorie.

The pope hath no power grounded vpō Scripture, to bring from paine of purgatorie.

The seuenth conclusion.

✻ The seuenth point speaketh of the pope, and is this: Sith it is only due to God, as I haue said before, to geue and to grant plener remission, from paine, and from blame: that whatsoeuer he be pope or other that presumptuously mistaketh vpon him the power that only is due to God, in that, in as much as in him is, he maketh himselfe euen with Christ, and blasphemeth God, as Lucifer did, when he said: Ascendam, & ero similis altissimo: That is, I will ascend, and be like the highest, &c.

The pope maketh himselfe euen with Christ.

Declaration.

For that I say, if the pope hold men of armes in maintaining of his temporall lordship, to benge him on them that gilten and offenden him, and geueth remission to fight and to slay them, that contrarien him, as men sayden he did by the bishop of Norwich, not putting his sword in his sheath, as God commanded to Peter: hée is Antichrist. For hée doth the contrarie of the commandement of Jesus Christ, that bad Peter forgiuen to his brother seuentie sithe seuen sithe. Well I find in the Gospell, that when Christ sent his disciples to Samaria, the Samaritans would not receiuen them. And some of them bidden Christ, that he should make a fire come downe from heauen, to destroy the citie. And he blamed them and said: Nescitis cuius spiritus estis: Filius hominis non venit animas perdere, sed saluare. That is, ye know not of what spirit ye are: The Sonne of man is not come downe to destroy, but to saue the liues and soules of men, &c. If Christ then come to saue men, and not to slea them: who that doth the reuers hereof, is against Christ, and then he is Antichrist. Christ bad Peter put his sword in his sheath, and said: Omnes qui gladium acceperint, gladio peribunt. That is: All which take the sword, shall perish with the sword. And I cannot find that Peter drew out his sword after that time, but suffered as Christ said: Cum senueris, alius cinget te, & ducet quò tu non vis. That is, when thou shalt wax old, another shall gird thée and lead thée whither thou wilt not. And therefore said Peter, Christ suffered for vs, leauing vs example that we should follow his steps. And Paul saith, Not defending your selues, but giue place to anger: leaue reuenging to me, and I shall reward them, &c. And therefore it séemeth to me, that it is much against Christs lore, that his vicar should be a fighter, sithen that he mote be a shepheard, that should go before his shéepe, and let them come after him, and not with swords to driue them away from him. For as Christ saith, a good shepheard shall put his life for his shéepe. And sith all that Christ had two swords when that he was taken of the Jewes, he said himselfe, it was for that the Scriptures moten sit be fulfilled: Quoniam cum iniquis deputatus est: that is, he was reputed among the wicked, and not to figure two swords, that men sayen the pope hath to gouerne with the church. And when I see such doings of the pope, and many other that accordin rozden not with Chziſts loze, ne his liuing: And when I reade diuers Scriptures of holy writte, I am foule aſtonied whether they ſhoulden be vnderſtanded of him, oz of any other. And I pray you foz Gods loue tell me the ſoth. Chziſt ſaith: Manie ſhall come in my name, ſaying: I am Chziſt, and ſhall ſeduce manie, &c. Chziſt (I wot well) is as much to ſay, as he that is anntomted, and two annointings there weren in the law, one of kings, another of prieſts. And Chziſt was both king and prieſt, and ſo the pope ſaith that he is. And if all that haue bene emperours of Rome, and other heathen kings haue bene Antichziſts, they come not in Chziſts name. But who ſo commeth in Chziſts name, and faineth him Chziſts friend, and he be priuilie his enemie, he may lightlie beguile manie. Saint Paul ſaith: before there commeth a defection firſt and the ſonne of perdition ſhall be reuealed, which is the aduerſarie, and is extolled aboue all that is named God, oz which is wozſhipped: ſo that he ſhall ſit in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelfe as God. And it followeth in the ſame place: And now ye know what holdeth till he be reuealed in his time, foz he wozketh alreadie the myſterie of iniquitie. Only he that holdeth, let him hold till he come abzoad, and then that wicked one ſhall be reuealed, whom the Lord Jeſus ſhall ſlay with the ſpirit of his mouth, &c. And Saint John ſaith in the Apocalyps: I ſaw another beaſt aſcending out of the earth, and two hornes like to the lambe. He ſpake like the dzagon, and had the power of the firſt beaſt. Manie ſuch authozities aſtonieth me oft ſithes: And therefoze I praie you foz the loue of God, to tell mee what they meane.

The ſentence.

Mention was made of this ſchedule before in the firſt daies Act. Act. pag. 433.

THe which ſchedule afoze mentioned, with the contents thereof diligently of vs peruſed, we conſidering the diſeaſes which be not eaſily cured with gentle remedie, muſt haue harder plaiſters. Conſidering mozeouer theſe his articles with his anſweres to the ſame, and to other articles alſo laſtly againſt him pzoduced, firſt mature deliberation had before vpon the whole matter, with the fozeſaid maſters and doctozs, as well ſecular as regular, to a great number, obſeruing in the ſame all things to be obſerued in this behalfe, haue giuen ſentence againſt the ſaid William in fozme as followeth.

The ſentence giuen againſt him.

The naime of Chziſt being innocated, we John by the permiſſion of God, biſhop of Hereford, ſitting in tribunall ſeat, hauing God before our eies, waighing and conſidering the articles by the foreſaid faithfull chziſtians put vp againſt the ſaid Swinderby, pretending himſelfe to be prieſt, with his anſweres vpon the ſame, Actis & Actitatis before vs in the cauſe of hereticall peruerſitie, with mature deliberation had before in this behalfe, with maſters and doctozs of diuinitie, and alſo of other faculties, with their counſell and conſent: Do pronounce, decree, and declare the ſaid William to haue bene and to be an heretike, ſchiſmatike, and a falſe informer of the people, and ſuch as is to be auoided of faithfull chziſtians. Wherefoze we admoniſh, vnder the paine of the law, all and ſinguler chziſtians, of what ſere, ſtate, condition, oz preeminence ſoeuer: that neither they noz any of them within our dioceſſe, oz any other, do beleeue, receiue, defend, oz fauour the ſaid William, till he ſhall deſerue fully to be reconciled to the boſome againe of holy church.

The appeale of William Swinderby from this ſentence of the biſhop prefixed, vnto the king and his counſell.

The appeale of William Swinderby from the biſhop to the king and his counſell.

IN nomine patris, & filij, & ſpiritus ſancti, Amen. I William Swinderby prieſt, knowledge openly to all men, that I was before the biſhop of Hereford, the third day of October, and before many other good clerkes, to anſwere to certaine concluſions of the faith that I was accuſed of. And mine anſwere was this, that if the biſhop oz any man couthe ſhew me by Gods law, that my concluſions oz my anſweres were errour oz hereſie, I would be amended, and openly reuoke them before all the people. * Knowes in any of my concluſions, but ſayden ſingly with wozd, that there was errours in them, and bidden me ſubiect me to the biſhop, and put me into his grace and reuoke mine errour, and ſhewed me nought by Gods law ne reaſon, ne pzoued which they weren. And foz I would not knowledge me guiltie, ſo as I knew no errour in them, of which I ſhould be guiltie, therefoze the biſhop ſate in dome in mine abſence, and deemed me an heretike, a ſchiſmatike, and a teacher of errours, and denounced me accurſed, that I come not to cozrection of the church. And therefoze foz this vnrightfull iudgement, I appeale to the kings Juſtices foz many other cauſes.

* Something there lacketh in the copie.

The kings court about the biſhops court.

One cauſe is, foz the kings court, in ſuch matter is aboue the biſhops court: Foz after that the biſhop has accurſed, hee may no feare by his law, but then mote hee ſech ſuccour of the kings law, and by a writte of Significauit, put a man in priſon.

The ſecond cauſe is, for in cauſe of hereſie there liggeth iudgement of death, and that dome may not be giuen without the kings Juſtices. Foz the biſhop will ſay: Nobis non licet interficere quenquam: That is, It is not lawfull foz vs to kill anie man: as they ſaiden to Pilat, when Chziſt ſhould be deemed. And foz I thinke that no Juſtice will giue ſodainly and vntrue dome, as the biſhop did, and therefoze openly I appeale to hem, and ſend my concluſions to the knights of the Parliament, to be ſhewed to the lozds, and to be taken to the Juſtices, to be well auiſet oz that they geuen dome.

What is an heretike.

The third cauſe is, foz it was a falſe dome: foz no man is an heretike, but he, that maſterfully defends his errozs oz hereſie, and ſtiffely maintaines it. And mine anſwere has bene alway conditionall, as the people openly knowes, foz euer I ſay, and yet ſay, and alway will: that if they cannen ſhew me by Gods law that I haue erred, I will gladly bene amended, and reuoke mine errours, and ſo I am no heretike, ne neuermoze in Gods grace will ben en no wiſe.

The biſhops law of condemnation full of hereſies and errours.

The fourth cauſe is: Foz the biſhops law, that they deme men by, is full of errozs and hereſies, contrarie to the truth of Chziſts law of the Goſpell.

Foz there as Chziſts law bids vs loue our enemies, the popes law giues vs leaue to hate them and to fley them, and grants men pardon to werren againe heathen men, and ſley hem. And there as Chziſts law teach vs to be mercifull, the biſhops law teaches to be wzetchfull. Foz death is the greateſt wzetch that men mowen done on him that guiltie is.

There as Chziſts law teaches vs, to bleſſen him that diſeazen vs, and to pzay foz him: the popes law teacheth vs to curſe them, and in their great ſentence that they vſen, they pzeſume to damme hem to hell that they curſen. And this is a foule hereſie of blaſphemie: there as Chziſts law bids vs be patient, the popes law iuſtifies two ſwozds, that wherewith he ſmiteth the ſheep of the church. And he has made lozds and kings to ſweare to defend him and his church.

There as Chziſts law fozbiddeth vs lechery, the popes law iuſtifies the abominable whozedome of common women, and the biſhops in ſome place haue a great tribute oz rent of whozedome.

The contrarie tie betweene the pope and Chziſt.

There as Chziſts law bids to miniſter ſpirituall things freely to the people: the pope with his law ſels foz money, after the quantitie of the gift, as pardons, ozders, bleſſing, and Sacraments, and pzayers, and benefices, and pzeaching to the people, as it is knowne amongſt them.

There as Chziſts law teaches peace: the pope with his law aſſoiles men foz money to gader the people, prieſts, and other to fight foz his cauſe.

There as Chziſts law fozbids ſwearing: the popes law iuſtifieth ſwearing, and compels men thereto.

Whereas Chziſts law teacheth his prieſts to be poze, the pope with his law, iuſtifies and maintaines prieſts to bee lozds.

And yet the fifth cauſe is, foz the popes law that biſhops demen men by, is the ſame vnrightfull law that Chziſt was demet by of the biſhops, with the Scribes and with the Phariſies. Foz right as at that time they gauen moze credens to the two falſe witneſſes that witneſſed againſt Chziſt, then they deden to all the people that witneſſeden to his true pzeaching and his miracles: ſo the biſhops of the popes law geuen moze leuen by their law to two heretikes and apoſtates, oz two comen wymen that woulden witneſſeden againes a man in the cauſe of hereſie, than to thouſands of people that were true and good. And foz the pope is this Antichziſt, & his law contrarie to Chziſt his law, fully I foꝛſake this law, and ſo I reed all chriſten men. Foz thus by another point of this law, they mighten conquer much of this wozld: Foz whan they can by this law pzeſent a man an heretike: his goods ſhulen be foꝛfet from him and from his heires, and ſo might they lightly haue two oz three falſe witneſſes to recozd an hereſie againe what true man ſo hem liked. Herefoze me thinkes, that whatſoeuer that I am a chriſten man I may lawfull appeale from a falſe dome of the law, to be righteouſly demet by the trouth of Gods law. And if this appeale will not ſerue, I appeale openly to my Lozd Jeſu Chziſt that ſhall deme all the wozld, foz he, I wot well, will not ſpare foz no man to deeme a trouth. And therefoze I pzay God almightie with Dauid in the Sauter booke, Deus iudicium tuum regi da, & iuſtitiam tuam filio regis: iudicare populum tuum in iuſtitia & pauperes tuos in iudicio. That is, O God giue thy iudgement to the king, and thy iuſtice to the kings ſonne: to iudge thy people in iuſtice, and thy pooze ones in iudgement, &c.

helpe about you. Constantes estote & videbitis auxilium Domini super vos: This land is full of ghostly cowards, in ghostlie battell few dare stand. But Christ that comforter of al that falleth (to that his heart brast for our loue) against the fiend the doughtie duke comforteth vs thus: Estote fortes in bello, &c. Be ye strong in battel, he saies, and fight ye with the old adder. State in fide, viriliter agite, &c. Wake ye and pray ye, stond yee in beleeue, doe yee manly and bee yee comfortet, and let all your things be done with charitie: For S. Paul bids thus in his epistle, that saw the priuities of God in heauen: Euigilate iusti, &c. Awake ye that been righteous men, be ye stable and vnmoueable: Awake yee quickly and sleepe nought, and stond now strongly for Gods law. For S. Iohn in the Apocalypse saies, blessed be hee that awakes: for nought to sleepers but to wakers God has behite the crowne of life. For the houre is now as Paul saith to vs, from sleepe for to rise, for he that earely awakes to me, he shall find me, saith Christ himselue. This waking ghostly is good liuing out of sinne: this sleepe betokens that which cowardeth a mans heart from ghostly comfort, and to stand in the same thorough a deceiueable sleepe is this that lets a man of the blisse of heauen: the fiend makes men bold in sin, and ferd to do worship to God: death is a likening to a theefe that priuilie steales vpon a man that now is rich, and full of wele, anon he makes him a needie wretch: therefore said God by S. Iohn in in the Apocalyps in this wise, Be thou waking, for if thou wake nought, I shall come to thee as a theefe, and thou shalt not wit what houre. And if the husbandman (saies Christ) wist what houre the theefe should come, he would wake and suffer him not to vndermine his house. Saint Peter therefore warneth and saith, wake and be ye ware, suffer ye no man (he saies) as a theefe, but willinglie for Gods loue, for it is time (as Peter saies) that dome begin from the house of God. Yee bene the bodie of Christ (saieth Poul) that needs must suffer with the head, or else your bodies bene but dead and departed from Christ that is the head. And therefore curset be he (saies Poul) that loues not Iesu Christ. And who it is that loues him, Christ himselfe tels in the Gospell, he that has my hests, and keepes them, he it is that loues me. Cursed he be therefore (saies Poul) that doth Christs workes deceiueablie. Be ye not therefore (saies Poul) ashamed of the true witnesse of Iesu Christ, for Christ our God saies in his Gospell, he that shames me and my words, him shall mans sonne ashame when he shall come for to set in the siege of his Maiesty. And each man, he saies, that knowes me and my words before men, in this sinfull generation and whorish, mans sonne shall knowledge him before my father, saies Christ himselfe, when he shall come with his Angels in the glorie of his father. Sith ye therefore bene christen men, that is to say, Christs men, shew in deed that ye been such as ye daren shew you the kings men, for hit had bene, as Peter saies, better not to haue knowen the way of trueth, then after the knowing thereof to bee conuerted backward there from. Wee knowen Christ, that is trought, we sain all through our beliefe, if we turne from him for dred, truly we deny the troth. And therefore sith our time is short, how short no man knowes but God, do we the good that we may to Gods worship, when wee haue time. Bee true (saies God) to the death, and you shall haue the crowne of life. And thinke on Iudas Machabeus, that was Gods true knight, that comforted heartily Gods true people, to be the followers of his law. And geue ye, he said, your liues for the Testament of your fathers. And ye shullen win, he said, great ioy, and a name for euermore. Was not Abraham, he said, in temptation founden true, and was *arectet vnto him euermore to righteousnes: Ioseph in time of his anguish hee kept truly Gods hest, he was made by Gods prouidence lord of Egypt, for his trouth. Phinees our fadure louing, he saith, the zeale of God tooke the testament of euerlasting Priesthood. Iosue for he fulfillet the word of God was domes man in Israel. Caleph that witnessed in the church, he tooke therefore the heritage, he saith: Dauid in his mercie he gate the siege of the kingdome in worlds: Hely for that he loued the zeale of Gods law, was taken vp into heauen. Ananie, Azarie, and Misael, hee saies, weren deliuered thoore through true beliefe out of the hoat flame of fire. True Daniel in his simplenes was deliueret from the lions mouth. Bethinke ye therefore, he saies, by generation and generation, and thou shalt neuer find that he failed that man that truly trusted in him. And therefore dread you nought, he saies, of the words of a sinfull man: his glorie is, he saies, but wormes and tords: he is to day, he saith, y made hie, to morrow he saies he is not founden, for he is turned, he saies, into his earth againe, and the mind of him is perishet. Sonnes therefore, he saies, be ye comfortet, and die manly in the law: for when ye han done that that God commands you to do, ye shullen be glorious in him. And Dauid the king saies also on this wise in the Psalter booke: blessed be they (Lord) that keepen thy law, in worlds of worlds they shall praise thee. And in Leuiticus saies God thus, gif that ye wenden in mine hests and keepen my commandements, and done hem, I shall bring forth their fruit, and trees shall be fulfilled with apples. And ye shallen eat your bread in fulnesse, yee shoulen dwell in your land without drede, I shall giue peace in your costes, ye shall sleepe and no man shall feare you. Euill beasts I shall done away from you, and sword shall not passe your termes, ye shulne pursue your enemies, and they shal fall before you, fiftie of yours shulne pursue an hundreth of heren, an hundret of yours, a thousand of theirs: your enemies, he saith, shulen fall through sword, and your sute. I shall, he saies, behold you and make you to wax, and ye shall be multipliet: And I shal strength with you my couenant, ye shall eat the aldest, and the new shull come in thereon. And ye shulne cast forth the old: I shall dwell in the midst of you. And I shall wend amonges you, and shall be your God, and ye shulne be my people. If that ye heare me not, ne done nought all my hests but dispisen my law and my domes, and that yee done not tho things that of me bene ordenet, and breaken my commandements and my couenant: I shall do these things to you. I shall visit you surely in hede and brenning, which shall dimme your eghenen, and shall waste your liues about nought: Ye shulne sow your sede, for hit shal be deuouret of enemies, I shal put my face against you, and ye shall fall before your enemies. And ye shullen be vnderlings to them that han hatet you, ye shall flee, no man pursuing. And if ye will not be buxome to me, I shall adde thereunto thornes and seuenfold blame. And I shall all to brast the hardnes of you, I shall geue the heauen aboue you as iron, and the earth as brasse. About nought shall your labour be, for the earth shall bring you forth no fruit, ne tree shall geue none apples to you. If that ye wenden against me, and will not heare me, I shall adde hereto, seuenfold wounds for your sins. I shall send amongest you beasts of the field that shall deuour you and your beasts, I shall bring you into a field, and waies shulne be desart. And if that ye will not receiue lore, but wenden against me, I will also wenden against you, and I shall smite you seuen sithes for your sinnes. I shall lead in vpon you, sword, venger of my couenant: and vpon the fleen into cities, I shall send pestilence in the middest of you. So that ten women shall bake their bread in one furnace, and yeld them againe by waight, and ye shall eat, and be not fillet. If that ye heare me not by these things, but wenden against me, I shall wend in against you in a contrarie woodnesse, and blame you with seuen plagues for your sins, so that they shoulen eat the flesh of your sonnes and of your daughters. And insomuch my soule shall loth you, that I shall bring your cities into wilderneesse, and your sanctuaries I shall make desart, ne I shall not ouer that receiue sweet oder of your mouth. And I shall disperkle your land, and enemies shullen maruell thereon, when they shulen inhabit it, I shall disperkel you among Heathen, and draw my swotd after you. These vengeances and many mo, God said should fall on them that breake his bidding, and dispiseth his lawes, and his domes. Than sith Christ become man, and bought vs with his heart blood, and has shewed vs so great loue, and giuen vs an easie law, of the best that euer might be made, and to bring vs to the ioy of heauen, and we dispise it and louen it nought: what vengeance will be taken hereon, so long as he has suffered vs, and so mercifully abidden, when he shall come that righteous iudge in the clouds to deme this world? Therefore turne we vs to him, and leaue sinne that he hates, and ouer all things maintaine his law that he confirmed with his death. For other lawes that men had made, should be demed at that day by the iust law of Christ, and the maker that them made, and then we wonne that long life and that ioy that Paul speaketh of, that eye ne see not, ne eare heard not, ne into mans heart ascended not, the blisse and ioy that God hath ordained to them that louen him and his lawes.

Daniel 14.

Psalm. 119. Leuit. 26.

Deare worshipfull sirs in this world I beseech you for Christs loue, as ye that I trow louen Gods law and trouth (that in these daies is greatly borne abacke) that they wollon vouchsafe these things that I send you written to Gods worship, to let them be shewed in the Parliament as your wits can best conceiue, to most worship to our God, and to shewing of the trouth and amending of holy church. My conclusions and mine appeale and other true matters of Gods law (gif any man can find therin error, falsenes, or default, prouet by the law of Christ clearely to christen mens knowledge) I shall reuoke my wrong conceit, and by Gods law be amendet; euer readie to hold with Gods law openly and priuily with Gods grace, and nothing to hold, teach, or maintaine that is contrarie to his law.

The faithfull requett of William Swinderby.

¶ Of this processe, answeres, and condemnation of this worthie Priest and true seruant of Christ, William Swinderby, you haue heard. What afterward became vpon him, I haue not certainlie to say or affirme, whether hee in prison died, or whether hee escaped their hands, or whether hee was burned, there is no certaine relation made. This remaineth out of doubt, that during the time of king Richard the second no great harme was done vnto him. Which was to the yeere 1401. at what time king Richard being wrongfullie deposed, Henrie the fourth inuaded the kingdome of England. About the beginning of whose raigne we reade of a certaine Parliament holden at London, mentioned also of Thomas Walden (as is aboue specified) in which Parliament it was decréed: that whosoeuer shewed themselues to be fauourers of Wickliffe they should be apprehended, who at that time were called Lollards, and if so be they did obstinately perseuere in that doctrine, they should be deliuered ouer vnto the bishop of the diocesse, and from him should be committed to the correction of the secular Magistrate. This law (saith the storie) brought a certaine Priest vnto punishment the same yeere, who was burned in Smithfield in the presence of a great number. This we haue drawen out of a piece of an old storie: and it is most certaine that there such a priest was burned for the affirmation of the true faith, but it doth not appeare by the storie, what the priests name was. Notwithstanding by diuers coniectures it appeareth vnto me that his name was Swinderby that was forced to recant before by the bishop of Lincolne. Whereby what is to be coniectured by the premisses, let other men iudge what they thinke. I haue nothing hereof expresly to affirme. This is plaine for all men to iudge (which haue heere seene and read his storie) that if he were burned, then the bishops, friers and priests, which were the causes thereof, haue a great thing to answere to the Lord, when he shall come to iudge the quicke and the dead, & seculum per ignem.

The storie and processe against Walter Brute.

The storie of Walter Brute a Writon.

AFter the storie of William Swinderby, I thought good and conuenient, next to adioyne the acts and doings of Walter Brute his ioynt fellow and companion, being a lay man, and learned: brought vp as it seemeth in the Vniuersitie of Oxford, being there also graduat. The tractation of whose discourse as it is something long, so therein may appeare diuers things worthie to be read and considered.

First, the mightie operation of Gods Spirit in him, his ripe knowledge, modest simplicitie, his valiant constancie, his learned tractations and manifold conflicts sustained against Gods enemies. On the contrarie part in his aduersaries may appeare, might against right, mans authoritie against plaine veritie; against which they hauing nothing directly to answere, proceed in condemnation against whom they are able to bring forth no confutation. The chiefest occasion that seemed to stir vp the heart and zeale of this Walter against the pope: was the impudent pardons and indulgences of pope Vrbane, granted to Henrie Spenser bishop of Norwich: to fight against pope Clement, mentioned before pag. 410. Secondlie, the wrongfull condemnation of the articles and conclusions of William Swinderby, the whole order whereof, in the processe heere following more plainlie may appeare.

Ex registro Epis. Hereford.

The processe had by Iohn bishop of Hereford, against Walter Brute lay man, and learned, of the dioceese of Hereford, touching the cause of heresie, as they called it, set forward by the way of the bishops office, &c. at the instruction of certaine faithfull christians, as he termed them, but indeed cruell and false promoters.

Wurdring hearts lurking vnder louing words.

IN the name of God, Amen. To all maner of faithfull christian people, that shall see and heare this our present processe, Iohn by the sufferance of God bishop of Hereford sendeth greeting and continuall charitie, in the Lord. We would that you all should know, that of late by many faithfull christian people, and specially zealous followers of the catholike faith, it was lamentablie done vs to vnderstand by way of complaint: that a certaine son of ours going out of kind, named Walter Brute lay person, learned, of our dioceese, hath vnder a cloked shew of holines, damnablie seduced the people; and setting behind him the feare of God, doth seduce them as much as he can, from day to day, informing and teaching openly and priuily, as well the nobles as the commons, in certaine conclusions, heretical, schismatical, and erroneous, and also heretofore condemned. And they haue also probablie exhibited against the same Walter, articles vnderwritten, in maner and forme as followeth.

Articles exhibited and denounced to the bishop, against Walter Brute.

Articles denounced against William Brute by priests and friers.

REuerend father and lord, we the faithfull people of Christ, and zealous louers of the catholike faith, and also your humble and deuout children: do minister and exhibit to your reuerend fatherhod, the articles vnder written, touching ỹ catholike faith contrarie and against malicious persons, and detractours of the same faith, and the determinations of holy mother church, and namely against the child of Belial, one Walter Brute, a false teacher and seducer amongst the people. Humblie beseeching, that you would vouchsafe to haue regard to the correction of the enormities vnder written, according vnto the canonicall constitutions, euen as to your office pastorall doth lie and belong.

The first article.

In primis, we do giue and exhibit and intend to proue, that the same Walter Brute being vnmindfull of his saluation, hath been by many and diuers faithfull christian people sundrie times accused of the cursednesse of heresie: As by the swift report, slander, and rumour of the people, proceeding before the most reuerend father and lord, lord William archbishop of Canturburie, and also before the reuerend father and lord, lord John late bishop of Hereford, your predecessor, and now bishop of S. Asse, hath been testified, and also hath been many and diuers times cited to answere vnto articles by him against the catholike faith auouched, and openly and publikely taught: But he in this matter of heretical cursednesse (so grieuouslie and shamefullie spoken of) hath neuer regarded to purge his innocencie, but lurkingly and running into corners, hath many and sundrie yeeres laboured to aduance things erroneous, schismaticall, and also heresies, and to imprint them in the harts of faithfull people.

The second article.

Item, the foresaid Walter Brute hath openly, publikely, and notoriouslie auouched, and commonly said and taught, and stubbornely affirmed; that euerie christian man (yea and woman) being without sin, may make the bodie of Christ so well as the priest.

The third article.

Item, the same Walter hath notoriously, openly and publikely auouched and taught, that in the Sacrament of the altar there is not the verie bodie, but a signe and a memoriall only.

The fourth article.

Item, the foresaid Walter hath said commonly and auouched, and also hath laboured to informe men and companies, that no man is bound to giue tithes, nor oblations: and if anie man will needs giue, he may giue his tithes, and oblations to whom he will, excluding thereby their curats.

The fifth article.

Item, that such as do preach and preser croised matters, and pardons (granted by the high bishop to them that helpe the purpose of the reuerend father lord Henrie by the grace of God bishop of Norwich, when as he toke his iourney vpon him to fight for the holy father the pope) are schismatikes and heretikes, and that the pope cannot grant such maner of pardons.

The sixth article.

Item, the said Walter hath oftentimes said, and commonlie auouched, that the pope is Antichrist, and a seducer of the people, and vtterly against the law and life of Christ.

The seuenth article.

Item, whereas of late your reuerence did (at the instance of faithfull christian people) proceed in forme of law against William Swinderby, and that the said William Swinderby had vnto the said articles obiected against him, giuen vp his answeres in writting, containing in them errors, schismes and heresies, euen as you with the mature counsell of maisters and doctors in Diuinitie, and other faculties haue determined and giuen sentence, and haue pronounced the same William Swinderby to be an heretike, and a schismatike, and an erroneous teacher of the people: Neuertheless the forenamed Walter hath openly, publikely, and notoriously said, auouched, and stubbornely affirmed, that the said Williams answeres (whereof notice hath been giuen before) are good, righteous, and not able to be conuinced, in that they containe none error, and that your sentence beforesaid, giuen against the same William, is euill, false and vniust: And that your assistants haue wickedly, naughtily, peruerslie, and vniustly condemned the answeres aforesaid.

Otherwise bloodie promoters.

Now thereupon immediatly, those same faithfull christian people haue instantly required that we would vouchsafe that other articles giuen by the same faithfull christians against the said William Swinderby, together with the writings and answeres of the same William thereunto: should be admitted against Walter Brute, mentioned of in this matter of cursed heresie: of which articles and answeres, the tenors do follow in these words.

These conclusions and articles of William Swinderby heere repeated, and obiected to Walter Brute are to be found before, pag. 429. and 430.

In primis, that one William Swinderby pretending himselfe priest, was of certaine articles and conclusions erroneous, false, schismaticall and heretical, by him preached, at diuers places and times, before a great multitude of faithfull christians, iudicially conuinced: and the same articles and conclusions did he (inforced by necessitie of law) reuoke and abiure, some as heretical, and other as erroneous and false: and for such did he auouch them euer afterward, promising so to take and beleeue them, and that from thenceforth he would openly or priuily preach, teach, or affirme none of them: nor that he should make sermon or preach within your dioceese without licence demanded and obtained. And in case he should to the contrarie presume, by preaching or auouching, that then he should be subiect to the seueritie of the canons, euen as he iudiciallie sware accordingly as the law inforced. Also the conclusions abiured by the said William do follow, and are such.

1. Conclusion.

1 In primis, that men by the rule of charitie, may demand debts, but by no meanes imprison any man for debts: and that the partie so imprisoning a bodie, is excommunicated, before pag. 428.

2 Item, that if the parishioners shall know their curat to be incontinent and naughtie; they ought to withdraw from him their tithes, &c. pag. 428.

3 Item, that tithes are meere almes, and in case that the curats shall be ill, that they may be lawfully bestowed vpon others by the temporall owners, &c. pag. 428.

4 Item, that an euill curat to excommunicat any vnder his iurisdiction for withholding of tithes, is nought else, &c. pag. 428.

5 Item, that no man may excommunicat any bodie, except that first he know him excommunicat of God: Neither do those that communicat with such a one, incur the sentence of excommunication by any maner of meanes: ibid.

6 Item, that euery priest may absolue euery sinner being contrite, and is bound to preach the Gospell vnto the people, notwithstanding the prohibition of the bishops: pag. 428.

7. Item,

7 Item, that a priest receiuing by bargaine any thing of yeerely annuitie, is in so doing a schismaticke, and excommunicate: pag. 428.

8 Item, he doth assuredly beleeue (as hee auoucheth) that euery priest being in deadly sin, if hee dispose himselfe to make the bodie of Christ, doth rather commit idolatrie, then make Christs bodie, ibid.

9 Item, that no priest doth enter into any house, but to handle ill the Wife, the daughter, or the maid, and therefore, &c. pag. 428.

10 Item, that the child is not rightly baptised, if the priest, &c. ibid.

11 Item, that no manner of person if he liue against Gods law, &c. ibid.

12 Item, the same William against the things premised, and his reuocation and abiuration (not to his heart conuerting, but from euill to worse peruerting) did turne aside into our diocesse: where running to and fro in diuers places, hath of his owne rash head presumed to preach, or rather to peruert, &c. pag. 429.

13 Item, after that we had heard diuers rumors, and slanders of very many, wee directed diuers monitions and commandements comminatorie, to be sent abroad by our commissaries to sundrie places of our diocesse: that no person of what estate, degree, or condition soeuer he were of, should presume to preach, or to teach the sacred scripture to the people in places holy or prophane, within our dioces, &c. pag. 429.

14 Item, that the same sort of monitions, inhibitions and precepts confirmed by our seale, came to the true and vndoubted knowledge of the said William.

Infandum facinus scilicet.

15 Item, the same William vnmindful of his owne saluation hath sithence and against those monitions, inhibitions, and precepts, and (that which is more abominable to bee spoken) in contempt of the high bishops dignitie, and to the slander and offence of many people, presumed in diuers places of our said diocesse, to preach or rather to peruert and to teach the forementioned, and other hereticall, erroneous and schismaticall deuices.

16 Item, the same William in preaching to the people, on monday, to wit, the first of August, in the yeere of our Lord 1390. in the Church of Whitney in our diocesse, held and affirmed; that no prelate of the world, of what state, prehemminence or degree soeuer hee were of, hauing cure of soules and being in deadly sinne, &c. pag. 429.

A perilous booke to open.

17 Item, the same William in many places said and affirmed in the presence of many faithfull Christian people, after the sacramentall words vttered by the priest, hauing the intent to consecrate, there is not made the very bodie of Christ in the sacrament of the Eucharist: pag. 430.

18 Item, that accidents cannot bee in the sacrament of the altar without their subiect: and that there remaineth materiall bread Concomitanter with the bodie of Christ in the Sacrament. Vide supra, pag. ibid.

19 Item, that a priest being in deadly sinne cannot by the power of the sacramentall words, make the bodie of Christ: pag. 430.

20 Item, that all priests are of like power in all points, notwithstanding that some of them are in this world of higher dignitie, degree, or preheminence: pag. 430.

21 Item, that contrition onely putteth away sinne, if a man shall be duly contrite: and that all vocall confession and exercise, is superfluous, and not requisite of necessitie to saluation: ibidem.

22 That inferiour curates haue not their power of binding and loosing mediatly from the pope or bishop, but immediately of Christ, &c. pag. 430.

23 Item, that the pope cannot grant such a kind of annuall pardons, because there shall not bee so many yeeres to the day of iudgement as is contained in the popes bulles or pardons. Whereby it followeth, that pardons are not so much worth as they are noised and praised to be: ibid.

24 Item, that it is not in the popes power to grant to any penitent body forgiuenesse of the paine, or of the trespasse: pag. 430.

25 Item, that one giuing his almes to any bodie which as he iudgeth hath no need thereof, doth sin in so giuing it: pag. ibi.

26 Item, that it stands not in the power of any prelate, of what priuate religion soeuer he bee, to giue by letters benefits of their order. Neither doe such kind of benefits giuen profit them to whom they be giuen for the saluation of soules. Vide supra, pag. ibid.

A foule fault forsooth.

27 Item, that the same William vnmindefull of his owne saluation, hath many times and often resorted to a certain desert wood called Derwallswood of our diocesse, and there in a certaine vnhallowed chapell (nay a prophane cottage) hath presumed of his owne proper rashnesse, to celebrate, &c. pag. 430.

28 Item, the same William hath also presumed to doe the like things in a certaine prophane chapell, situate in the park of Newton, nigh to the towne of Leyntwardyn, in the same our diocesse: pag. ibid.

¶ Which things being done, the same faithfull christian people, and specially sir Walter Pride the penitentiarie of our cathedrall Church of Hereford, personallie appearing before vs, sitting in our iudgement seat in the parish church of Whiteborne of our dioces: brought forth and exhibited two publike instruments against the same Walter Brute, in the case of cursed heresie aforesaid, of which instruments heere followeth the tenors and articles in this sort.

Walter Pride promoter, or rather a prond promoter.

The first instrument exhibited by certaine chanons of Hereford against Walter Brute.

IN the name of God, Amen. Be it euidently knowne to all persons by this present publike instrument: that in the yeere from the incarnation, after the course and computation of the Church of England 1391. the indition xv. of the pontificall office of our most holy father and lord in Christ, lord Boniface the ninth, by Gods wisdome pope, the second yeere, the xv. day of the moneth of October, in the dwelling house of the worshipfull man, master John Godemestone, canon of the Cathedrall Church of Hereford, in the presence of mee the publike Notarie vnder written, and of witnesses subscribed: Walter Brute lay man, learned, of Hereford dioces, personallie appearing said, auouched, and stiffely maintained: that the said bishop of Hereford and his assistances, which were with him the third day of the foresaid month of October, the yeere of our Lord aforesaid, in the church of Hereford; did naughtilie, wickedly, peruerslie, and vniustlie condemne the answeres of sir William Swinderby chaplaine, giuen by the same sir William to the same lord bishop in writing, and also the articles ministred by the same sir William.

Bishop of Hereford vniustly condemned the articles of sir Wil. Swinderby.

And furthermore he said, held, and auouched, that the same conclusions giuen by the same sir William, euen as they were giuen, are true and catholike.

Item, as touching the matters obiected against him by them that stood by, concerning the sacrament of the altar: hee said, that after the sacramentall words, there doth remaine very bread, and the substance thereof after the consecration of the bodie of Christ, and that there doe not remaine accidents without substance or subiect after the consecration of the bodie of Christ. And as touching this matter, the doctors hold diuers opinions.

Matters obiected against Walter Brute.

Furthermore, as concerning the pope, he said, held, and auouched: that hee is the very antichrist, because that in life and maners he is contrarie to the lawes, doctrines and deeds, of Christ our Lord.

The pope antichrist.

All and euery of these things were done, euen as they be aboue written and rehearsed in the yeere of our Lord, pontificall office, month, day and place aforesaid, at supper time of the day aforenamed, then and there being present the worshipfull and discreete men, sir Walter Ramsburie, chiefe chaunter of the said cathedrall Church of Hereford, Roger Hore Chanon of the same church, Walter Wall, chaplaine of the said Church of Hereford, being a vicar of the chorall, and certaine other worthie witnesses of credit, that were specially called and desired to the premisses: Ex Regist. Hereford.

Witnesses against Walter Brute.

And I Richard Lee wheeler, clerke of Worcester, being a publike notarie, by the authoritie Apostolike; was personally present at all and singuler the premisses, whilest that (as is before rehearsed) they were done and a doing in the yeere of our Lord 1391. pontificall office, month, day, place, and the houre aforesaid: and I did see, write, and heare all and singuler those things thus to bee done, and haue reduced them into this publike manner and forme: and being desired truely to testifie the premisses, haue sealed the said instrument, made hereupon, with mine accustomed seale and name.

Richard Lee Register and writer hereof.

The forme of the second instrument.

In the name of God, Amen. Be it plainely knowne to all persons, by this present publike instrument: that in the yeere from the incarnation of the Lord, after the course and computation of the Church of England, 1391. the indition fiftéene, in the third yeere of the pontificall office of the most holy Father in Christ, and our lord, lord Boniface pope by the prouidence of God the ninth, and in the 19. day of the moneth of Januarie: Walter Brute layman, of Hereford dioces, personally appearing before the reuerend father in Christ and Lord, lord John by Gods grace bishop of Hereford, in the presence of me being a publike notarie, and one of the witnesses vnder written: did say, hold, publish, and affirme, the conclusions hereafter written, that is to say: that christian people are not bound to pay tithes neither by the law of Moses, nor by the law of Christ.

Matters and conclusions ministred against Walter Brute.

Item, that it is not lawfull for Christians for any cause in any case, to sweare by the Creator neither by the creature.

This conclusion seemeth to be falsly collected, as were before the articles of Wil. Swinderby.

Item, he confesseth openly and of his owne accord: that within the same moneth of Januarie, he did eate, drinke, and communicate with William Swinderby, not being ignorant of the sentence of the said reuerend father: whereby the same William Swinderby was pronounced an heretike, schismatike, and a false seducer of the common people. Which conclusions, the same reuerend father caused to bee written, and in writing to bee deliuered to the same Walter. Which when he had seene and read, he said also that he did maintaine and iustifie them according to the lawes aforesaid. These things were done in the chamber of the said bishop of Hereford, at his manour of Whiteborne of the said diocesse of Hereford: then being there present the same bishop aboue said, master

This conclusion also is not rightly gathered.

Witnesses against Walter Brute.

Reynold

Reynold of Wolsten, Canon of Hereford, sir Phillip Dieske, parson of the parish church of Blamurin, Thomas Guldefeld parson of the Church of Englishyknore, John Crefket parson of the Church of Whiteborne, and Thomas Walleswaine houshold seruant, for witnesses specially called and desired to the premisses of the diocesse of Hereford and saint Alle.

Benedict Come register, witnes and writer of this instrument against Walter Brute.

And I Benedict Come clerk of the diocesse of S. Alle, publike notarie by the apostolike authoritie of the diocesse of saint Alle, was personally present together with the witnesse before named, at all and singuler these and other things here premised, whilest they were so done and a doing, and did see, heare, and write those things so to be done, as is before mentioned: and did write the same and reduce them into this publik forme, and with my wonted and accustomed seale and name haue sealed it, being desired and required truely to testifie the premisses.

At the last, the aforesaid Walter Brute, did present and cause to be presented to vs (at diuers places and times assigned by vs to the same Walter, to answere to the former cõclusions and articles) diuers scroules of paper, written with his owne proper hand, for his answers to the same articles and conclusions aboue written: he partly appearing by his owne selfe, before vs sitting in our iudgement seate, and partly by his messengers, specially appointed to that purpose: of which scroules, the tenors doe follow in order word by word, and be on this manner.

Certaine exhibits of Walter Brute in writing presented to the bishop for his defence.

Walter Brute a Briton borne.

In the name of the father, and of the son, and the holy ghost, Amen. I Walter Brute, sinner, layman, husbandman, and a Christian (hauing mine offspring of the Britons, both by my fathers and mothers side) of the Britons, haue been accused to the bishop of Hereford, that I did erre in many matters concerning the catholike Christian faith: by whom I am required, that I should write an answere in Latine to al those matters. Whose desire I will satisfie to my power, protesting first of all, before God and before all the world: that like as it is not my mind through Gods grace, to refuse the knowne truth, for any reward greater or smaller, yea bee it neuer so big, nor yet for the feare of any temporall punishment: euen so it is not my mind to maintaine any erroneous doctrine for any commodities sake. And if any man, of what state, sect or condition soeuer he be, will shew me that I erre in my writings or sayings, by the authoritie of the sacred scripture, or by probable reason grounded on the sacred scripture, I will humblie and gladly receiue his information. But as for the bare words of any teacher (Christ only excepted) I will not simplie beleeue, except he shall be able to stablish them by the truth of experience, or of the Scripture: for because, that in the holy Apostles elected by Christ, there hath been found errour by the testimonie of the holy Scripture, because that Paul himselfe doth confesse that he rebuked Peter, for that he was worthie to be rebuked, Galath. the 2. chapter. There haue been errours found in the holy doctors, that haue been before vs, as they themselues confesse of themselues. And oftentimes it falleth out, that there is errour found in the teachers in our age: who are of contrarie opinions among themselues, and some of them doe sometimes determine one thing for truth, and others do condemne the selfesame thing to be heresie and errour. Which protestation premised, I will heere place two suppositions or cases for a ground and a foundation of all things that I shall say, out of which I would gather two probable conclusions stablished vpon the same, and vpon the sacred Scripture. By which conclusions, when as they shall be declared after my maner and fashion, it shall plainlie appeare what my opinion and iudgement is concerning all matters that I am accused of. But because I am ignorant and vnlearned, I will get me vnder the mightie defences of the Lord. O Lord I will remember thine only righteousnesse.

Protestation made.

No writer or doctor without his errour, the Scripture only excepted.

Errour in the Apostles.

Errour in the Doctors.

Errours and contrarieties among the papish writers.

Brute modestly excuseth his learning.

The first case or supposition.

God the Father almightie vncreate, the maker of heauen and earth, hath sent his Sonne (that was euerlastinglie begotten) into this world: that he should be incarnated, for the saluation and redemption of mankind, who was conceiued by the holy Ghost, euerlastingly proceeding from the Father and the Sonne, and was borne of Marie the virgin, to the end that we might be borne anew. He suffered passion vnder Pontius Pilate for our sinnes, laying downe his life for vs, that we should lay downe our life for our brethren. He was crucified, that we should be crucified to the world, and the world to vs. He was dead, that hee might redeeme vs from death, by purchasing for vs forgiuenesse of sinnes. He was buried, that we being buried together with him into death by Baptisme, and that we dead to sinnes, should liue to righteousnesse. He descended into hell, thereby deliuering man from thraldome, and from the bondage of the diuell, and restoring him to his inheritance, which he lost by sinne. The third day he rose from the dead, through the glorie of his Father, that we also should walke in newnesse of life. He ascended vp to the heauens, to which no bodie hath ascended, sauing he that descended from heauen, euen the Sonne of man which is in heauen. He sitteth at the right hand of God the Father almightie, vntill his enemies be made his footstole. Hee being in verie deed so much better then the Angels, as he hath obtained by inheritance a more excellent name then they. From thence hee shall come to iudge the quicke and the dead, according to their workes, because the Father hath giuen all iudgement to the Sonne. In whose terrible iudgement we shall rise againe, and shall all of vs stand before his iudgement seat, and receiue for as well bodily as spiritually, for euer to endure, if we be of the theepe placed at the right hand; or else punishment both of bodie and soule, if we shall be found amongst goates, placed on the left hand, &c.

The second case or assertion.

Jesus Christ the Sonne of God, very God and very man a king for euer, by stablishing an euerlasting kingdome, breaking to powder all the kingdomes of the world, Daniel 2. a Priest for euer after the order of Melchisedech, whereby also he is able euermore to saue such as by him come vnto God, and alwaies liueth to intreat for vs, Heb. 7. He offering one sacrifice for our sinnes, hath made perfect for euer by one oblation, those that be sanctified, Heb. 10. Being the wisedome that cannot be deceiued, and the truth that cannot be vttered: he hath in this world taught the will of the Godhead of his Father, which will hee hath in worke fulfilled, to the intent that hee might faithfully instruct vs, and hath giuen the law of charitie to be of his faithfull people obserued, which he hath written in the hearts and minds of the faithfull with the finger of God, where is the Spirit of God, searching the inward secrets of the Godhead. Wherefore his doctrine must be obserued aboue all other doctrines, whether they be of Angels or of men, because that he could not nor would not erre in his teaching. But in mens doctrine there chanceth oftentimes to be error, and therefore we must forsake their doctrines, if clokedly or openly they be repugnant to the doctrine of Christ. Mens doctrines being made for the peoples profit must be allowed and obserued, so that they be grounded vpon Christs doctrine, or at least be not repugnant to his words.

The first conclusion.

If the high bishop of Rome calling himselfe the seruant of the seruants of God, and the chiefe vicar of Christ in this world, do make and maintaine many lawes contrarie to the Gospell of Jesu Christ: then is he of those that haue come in Christs name, saying I am Christ, and haue seduced manie a one, by the testimonie of our Sauiour in Math. chap. 24. and the idoll of desolation sitting in the Temple of God, and taking away from him the continuall sacrifice for a time, times, and halfe a time. Which Idoll must be reuealed to the christian people by the testimonie of Daniel. Whereof Christ speaketh in the Gospell: When you shall see the abomination of desolation that was told of by Daniel the Prophet, standing in the holy place: let him that readeth, vnderstand, and he is the pestiferous mountaine infecting the whole vniuersall earth, as witnesseth Jeremie, chapter 51. and not the head of Christs bodie. For the ancient person in yeeres, and honorable in reuerence, he is the head, and the Prophet teaching lies is the taile, as Esay alleageth chapter 9. And he is that wicked and sinfull captaine of Israel, whose foreappointed day of iniquitie is come in time of iniquitie, who shall take away Cidarim, and take away the crowne, Ezechiel chapter 21. to whom it was said: For so much as thy heart was exalted, and diddest say, I am a god, and sittest in the seat of God, in the heart of the sea, seeing thou art a man and not God, and hast giuen thine heart, as if it were the heart of God: therefore behold I will bring vpon thee the most strong and mightie strangers of the nations, and they shall draw their swords vpon the beautie of thy wisedome, and shall defile the commandements and kill thee, and pull thee out, and thou shalt die in the destruction of the slaine, and it followeth:

The pope an idoll of desolation sitting in the temple of God.

The pope if his lawes be contrarie to Christ, is the pestiferous mountaine infecting the whole earth. Jeremie 51.

The pope, the sinfull captaine of Israel, spoken of Ezechiell 21.

In the multitude of thine iniquities, and of the iniquities of thy merchandize, thou hast defiled thy sanctification. I will therefore bring forth a fire, from the middest of the whole earth, and will make thee as ashes vpon earth. Thou art become nothing, and neuer shalt thou be any more, Ezech. chap. 28. Furthermore he is the idle shepheard forsaking his flocke, hauing a sword on his arme, and another sword on his right eye, Zach. 11. and sitting in the temple of God, doth aduance himselfe aboue all thing that is called God, or whatsoeuer is worshipped, by the testimonie of Paul to the Thessal. 2. epist. 2. chap. And in the defection or falling away shal the man of sinne be reuealed, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth. For euery kingdome diuided in it selfe shall be brought to desolation. He is also besides, the beast ascending vp out of the earth, hauing two hornes like vnto a lambe, but he speaketh like a dragon, and as the cruell beast ascending vp out of the sea, whole power shall continue 42. moneths. He worketh the things that he hath giuen to the image of the beast. And he compelled small and great, rich and poore, freemen and bondslaues, to worship the beast, and to take his marke in their forehead or their hands, Apocal. 13. chap. And thus by the testimonie of all these places is he the chiefe Antichrist vpon the earth, and must be slaine with the sword of Gods word, and cast with the dragon, the cruell beast and the false prophet that hath seduced the earth, into the lake of fire and brimstone to be tormented world without end.

The beast horned like the lambe.

The pope signifieth the beast ascending out of the earth.

Terrible scriptures against the pope. Apocal. 13.

If the citie of Rome do allow his traditions, and do disallow Christ holy commandements, and Christs doctrine, that it may confirme his traditions: then is the Babylon the great, or of the daughter of Babylon, and the great whore sitting vpon manie waters, with whom the kings of the earth haue committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth are become drunken with the wine of her harlotrie lying open to bawdrie. With whose spirituall whoredome, enchantments, witchcrafts, & Simon Magus marchandises, the whole round world is infected and seduced: saying in her heart, I sitte as a Quéene, and widow I am not, neither shall I see sorow and mourning. Yet is thée ignorant that within a little while shall come the day of her destruction and ruine by the testimonie of the Apoc. chap. 17. Because that from the time that the continuall sacrifice was taken away, and the abhomination of desolation placed, there be passed 1290. dayes by the testimonie of Daniel, and the Chronicles added doe agrée to the same. And the holy citie also hath bin troden vnder foot of the heathen, for 42. moneths, and the woman was nourished vp in the wildernesse (vnto which thée fled for feare of the face of the serpent) during 1260. dayes, or else for a time, times, and halfe a time, which is all one. All these things be manifest by the testimonie of the Apocalyps, and the Chronicles thereto agréeing. And as concerning the fall of Babylon aforesaide, it is manifest in the Apocalyps, where it is said: In one day shall her plagues come, death, lamentation, and famine, and she shall bee burned with fire. For strong is the Lord which will iudge her. And againe, Babylon that great citie is fallen, which hath made all nations to drinke of the wine of her whordome. And thirdly, one mightie angell tooke vp a mill stone that was a very great one, and did cast it into the sea, saying: With such a violence as this is, shall that great citie Babylon be ouerthrowen, and shall no more be found. For her marchants were the princes of the earth, and with her witchcraft all nations haue gone astray, and in her is there found, the blood of the saints & prophets. And of her destruction speaketh Esay in the 13. chapter: And Babylon that glorious citie, being so noble amongst kingdomes in the pride of the Caldeans, it shall be that like as the Lord did ouerturne Sodome and Gomorre, vpside downe, it shall neuer more be inhabited, nor haue the foundation laid in no age, from generation to generation. Ieremie saith: Your mother that hath borne you, is brought to very great confusion and made euen with the ground. And againe: The Lord hath deuised and done as he hath spoken against the inhabiters of Babylon, which dwell richly in their treasures vpon many waters, thine end is come. And thirdly: Drouth shall fall vpon her waters, and they shall begin to bee drie, for it is a lande of grauen images, and boasteth in her prodigious wonders: It shall neuer more be inhabited, neither be builded vp in no age nor generation. Verily, euen as God hath subuerted Sodome and Gomorre with her calues.

Pardon me (I beseech you) though I bee not plentifull in pleasant words: For if I should runne after the course of this wicked world, and should please men, I should not bee Christes seruant. And because I am a poore man, and neither haue nor can haue notaries hired to testifie of these my writings: I call vpon Christ to be my witnes, which knoweth the inward secrets of my heart, that I am ready to declare the things that I haue written after my fashion, to the profit of all Christen people, and to the hurt of no man liuing, and am readie to be reformed if any man will shew me where I haue erred: being readie also (miserable sinner though I be) to suffer for the confession of the name of Christ & of his doctrine, as much as shall please him by his grace and loue to assist me a miserable sinner. In witnesse of all these things, I haue to this writing set the seale of our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ; which I beseech him to imprint vpon my forehead, and to take from me all manner of marke of Antichrist: Amen.

¶ These two suppositions (as they are termed in the schooles) written by Walter Brute, and exhibited vnto the Bishop, although they conteined matter sufficient either to satisfie the bishop if he had béene disposed to learne, or else to haue prouoked him to replie againe, if his knowledge therein had beene better then his: yet could they worke neither of them effect in him. But he receiuing and perusing the same, when he neither could confute that which was said, neither would replie or answere by learning to that which was truth, finding other by-cauillations, said that this his writing was too short & obscure, and therefore required him, to write vpon the same again more plainelie and more at large. Whereupon the saide maister Walter (satisfying the bishops requell, and readie to giue to euerie one an account of his faith) in a more ample tractation renewelth his matter againe before declared, writing to the bishop in words and forme as followeth:

An other declaration of the same matter before, after a more ample tractation exhibited by M. Brute to the B.

REuerend father, forsomuch as it séemeth to you that my motion in my two suppositions or cases, and in my two conclusions, is too short and somewhat darke: I will gladlie now satisfie your desire, according to my small learning, by declaring the same conclusions. In opening whereof, it shall plainelie appeare, what I doe iudge in all matters, that I am accused of to your reuerence, desiring you first of all that your discretion would not beléeue that I doe enterprise of any presumption to handle the secrets of the scriptures, which the holie, and iust, and wise doctors haue left vnerpounded. It is not vnknowen to manie, that I am in all points farre inferior to them, whose holinesse of life and profoundnesse in knowledge, is manifolde wayes allowed. But as for mine ignorance, and multitude of sinnes, are to my selfe and others sufficiently knowen: wherefore, I iudge not my selfe worthie to vnlose or to carrie their shoes after them. Doe you therefore no otherwise deeme of me, then I doe of mine owne selfe. But if you shall finde any goodnesse in my writings, ascribe it to God onely: who according to the multitude of his mercy doth sometimes reueale those things to Idiots and sinners, which are hidden from the holie and wise, according to this saying: I will praise and confesse thée O father, for that thou hast hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and hast disclosed them to the little ones. Euen so O father, because it hath thus pleased thée. And in another place: I am come to iudgement into this world, that they which see not, may see, and that they which see, may be made blind. And Paul saith: that God hath chosen the weake things of the world, to confounde the mightie, that no man shall boast in himselfe, but that all men should giue the honour to God.

They that so humbly iudge of themselues and doe not so carelesly carrie, ars of God.

It was commanded to Esaie, bearing the type of Christ: Go and say to this people: Heare yee with your hearing, and doe not vnderstand? Behold ye the vision, and yet knowe yee not the thing that yee see? Make blinde the heart of this people, and make dull their eares, & shut their eyes, lest that perchance with their eyes they should see, and with their eares they should heare, and with their hearts they should vnderstand, and be conuerted, and I should heale them. And I said, how long Lord? And he said, vntill that the cities be made desolate, without inhabitants, and the house without any person within it. Also in Esay thus it is written: And the multitude of all nations, which shall fight against Ariel, and all persons that haue warred, and besieged and preuailed against it, shall be as a dreame that appeareth in the night, and as the hungrie person dreameth that he eateth, but when hee shall awake out of sleepe, his soule is emptie. And like as the hungry person dreameth that he eateth, and yet after that he shall awake, hee is still wearie and thirstie, and his soule voide of nourishment: euen so shall it be with the multitude of all nations that haue fought against the mount Sion. Be you amazed, and haue great wonder: reele ye to and fro, and stagger yee: be yee drunken, and not with wine: stagger, but not through drunkennesse: for the Lord hath mingled for you the spirit of drousines. He shall shut your eyes, he shall couer your Prophets and Princes that see visions. And a vision shall bee to you altogether like the wordes of a sealed booke, which when he shall giue to one that is learned, he shall say: Reade here, and he shall answere, I cannot, for it is sealed. And the booke shall be giuen to one, that is vnlearned and knoweth not his letters, and it shall bee saide vnto him, Reade, And he shall answere, I know not the letters, I am vnlearned. Wherefore the Lord saith: Forasmuch as this people draweth nigh me with their mouthes, and glorifieth me with their lippes, but their heart is farre from me, and they haue rather feared the commandements of men, & haue cleaued to their doctrines: Behold therefore I will adde besides, & bring such a muse and maruell vpon this people which shall make men amazed with maruelling. For wisedome shall perish from their wise men, and the vnderstanding of their prudent persons shall be hidden. And soone after it followeth in the same place, yet a little while and Libanus shall bee turned into Charmell, and Charmell counted for a cops or groue, and in the same day shall the deafe folkes heare the word of this booke, and the eyes of the blinde (changed from darkenes and blindnesse) shall see.

Nabuchodonosor enquiring of Daniel said: Thinkest thou that thou canst truely declare me the dreame that I haue seen, and the meaning thereof? And Daniel said: As for the mysterie whereof the king doth aske, neither the wise men, magicians, soothsayers, nor enchanters can declare to the king: But there is a God is heauen, that discloseth mysteries, who will declare to thee (O king Nabuchodonosor) what things shall come to passe in the last times of all. To me also is this sacrament or mysterie disclosed (not for any wisedome that is in me more then in all men liuing) but to that the interpretation might be made manifest to the king, and that thou shouldest know the cogitations of thy minde.

Daniel. 2.

It was also said to Daniel: And thou Daniel, shut vp the words, seale vp the booke, vntill the time appointed. Verely many people shall passe ouer, and manifold knowledge shall there be. And Daniel sayde to the man that was clothed with linnen garments, who stood vpon the waters of the floud; How long will it be before the ende shall come of these maruellous things? And I heard the man that was clothed in linnen apparell, who stood vpon the waters of the flouds, when hee had lift vp his right hand and his left hand vnto heauen, and had sworne by him that liueth for euermore, that for a time, times, and halfe a time. And when the scattering abroad of the hand of the holy people shall bee accomplished; then shall all these things be finished. And I heard and vnderstood not, & I said: O my Lord, what shall bee after these things? and he said: Go thy wayes Daniel, for this talke is shut and sealed vp, vntill the time that is before appointed.

Daniel 12.

All

All theſe things haue I written, to ſhew, that hee that hath the key of Dauid, who openeth and no man ſhutteth, ſhutteth and no man openeth: doth (when and how long it pleaſeth him) hide the myſteries, and the hid ſecrets of the Scriptures from the wiſe, prudent, and righteous: and otherwhiles at his pleaſure, reuealeth the ſame to ſinners and lay perſons, and ſimple ſoules, that hee may haue the honor and glorie in all things. Wherefore as I haue before ſaid, if you ſhal find any good thing in my writings, aſcribe the ſame to God alone: If you ſhall find otherwiſe, thinke yée the ſame to be written of ignorance, and not of malice. And if any doubt of errour be ſhewed me in all my writings, I will humbly allow your information and fatherly correction.

* In ſigno Gemini.

But why that ſuch maner of matters are moued touching the diſcloſing of antichriſt in this kingdome, more then in other kingdomes, and in this time alſo more then in time paſt: the anſwere, as concerning the time of the motion, is, that it is the laſt coniunction of Saturne and Iupiter in the ſigne of the * Twinnes, which is the houſe of Mercurie, being the ſignifer of the Chriſtian people: which coniunction ſeemeth to me to betoken the ſecond comming of Chriſt, to reforme his Church, and to call men againe by the diſcloſing of Antichriſt, to the perfection of the Goſpell, from their heathenith rites and waies of the Gentiles. By whom the holy citie was trampled vnder foote; for 42. moneths, euen as the coniunction of the ſaid two planets being incloſed in the ſigne of the Virgine, which is alſo the houſe of Mercurie: did betoken the firſt comming of Chriſt, for the ſaluation of all people that were periſhed of the houſe of Iſrael, whereby to call them through the ſame comming, to the full perfection of the Goſpell. As touching this calling of the Heathen, ſpeaketh Chriſt in the Goſpell, I haue alſo other ſheepe, that are not of this fold, and thoſe muſt I bring, and they ſhall heare my voice, and there ſhall bee one ſheepefold, and one ſhepeheard. For although the Gentiles be conuerted from the infidelitie of their idolatrie, to the faith of Chriſt: yet are they not conuerted to the perfection of the law of Chriſt. And therefore did the Apoſtles in the primitiue Church, lay no burthen vpon the Gentiles, but that they ſhould abſtaine from hainous things, as from things offered to Idols, and from bloud, and ſtrangled, and fornication. As touching this ſecond comming, ſpeaketh Eſay: On that day the roote of Ieſſe which ſtandeth for a ſigne, or marke to the people, to him ſhall the heathen make their homage and ſupplication, and his ſepulchre ſhall be glorious: and in that day ſhal it come to paſſe, that the Lord ſhall the ſecond time put to his hand, to poſſeſſe the remnant of his people, &c. And hee ſhall lift vp a token toward the nations, and he ſhall aſſemble the runnagate people of Iſrael that were fled, and thoſe that were diſperſed of Iuda ſhall he gather together from the fower quarters of the earth. And the zealous emulation of Ephraim ſhall be broken to peeces, and the enemies of Iuda ſhall come to nought. Paul to the Theſſalonians ſaith: Wee beſeech you brethren, by the comming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and of our gathering together before him, that you bee not ſoone remooued from your vnderſtanding, neither that you be put in feare, as though the day of the Lord were at hand, neither, as it were, by letter ſent by vs, neither by ſpirit, nor yet by talke. Let not any bodie by any meanes bring you out of the way, or ſeduce you. For except there ſhall firſt come a departing, and that the man of ſinne, the ſonne of perdition ſhall be diſcloſed, which maketh reſiſtance, and is aduanced aboue all thing that is called God, or that is worſhipped: ſo that he doth ſit in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelfe as if hee were God. Do ye not remember that whileſt I was as yet with you, I told you of this? and now ye know what keepeth him backe, that he may be vttered in his due time: For euen now doth he work the myſterie of iniquitie, only that he which holdeth, may hold ſtill vntill he be come to light: and then ſhall that wicked one be diſcloſed, whom the Lord Ieſus ſhall ſlay with the breath of his mouth, and ſhall deſtroy with the brightneſſe of his comming, euen him, whoſe comming is according to the working of Satan, in al power, with ſignes and lying wonders, and in all deceitful leading out of the truth towards thoſe that do periſh, becauſe that they receiue not heartily the loue of truth, that they might be ſaued.

Marke here (good Reader) by this aſtronomicall coniunction of theſe two planets in Gemini, he meaneth couertly the ſchiſme betweene the two popes which laſted 39 yeeres: by the which coniunction, his meaning is, that God would haue antichriſt to be diſcloſed and his Church to be reformed. By this perfection (I ſuppoſe) he meaneth the reformation of the Church being out of the way.

Eſay 11.

The reuealing of antichriſt.

Chriſt being demanded of the Apoſtles what ſhould be the token of his comming, and of the end of the world; ſaid vnto them: There ſhall come many in my name, ſaying, I am Chriſt, and they ſhall ſeduce many. Alſo he telleth them of many other ſignes, of battels, famine, peſtilence, and earthquakes. But the greateſt ſigne of all he teacheth to bee this: When you ſhall ſee (ſaith he) the abomination of deſolation ſtanding in the holy place, he that readeth, let him vnderſtand. But Luke 21. in his goſpell ſpeaketh more plainely hereof: When you therefore ſhall ſee Ieruſalem to bee compaſſed about with an armie, then know yee, that the deſolation thereof ſhall draw nigh. And afterward it followeth: And they ſhall fall by the face of the ſword, and ſhall be led away captiue to all nations, and Ieruſalem ſhall bee troden vnder foote of the heathen, vntill the times of the Nations bee fulfilled. Now in Daniel thus it is written of this matter: And after 72. weekes, ſhall Chriſt be ſlaine, neither ſhall that be his people, that will deny him. And as for the citie and ſanctuarie, ſhall a people (with his captaine that will come with them) deſtroy the ſaid citie and ſanctuarie, and his end ſhall be to bee waſted vtterlie, till it bee brought to nought, and after the end of the warre, ſhall come the deſolation appointed. In one weeke ſhall hee confirme the couenant to many, and within halfe a weeke ſhall the offering and ſacrifice ceaſe. And in the temple ſhall there bee the abomination of deſolation, and euen vnto the end ſhall the deſolation continue. And elſe where in Daniel, thus it is written: From the time that the continuall ſacrifice ſhall be offered, and that the abomination ſhall bee placed in deſolation, there ſhall be one thouſand, two hundred, and ninetie daies.

Deſtruction of the Iewes temple.

1290. daies, in Daniel expounded.

The abomination of deſolation. Luke 21.

Now, if any man will behold the Chronicles, he ſhall find, that after the deſtruction of Ieruſalem was accompliſhed, and after the ſtrong hand of the holie people was fully diſperſed, and after the placing of the abomination, that is to ſay, the Idoll of deſolation of Ieruſalem, within the holy place, where the temple of God was before, there had paſſed 1290. daies, taking a day for a yéere, as commonly it is taken in the Prophets. And the times of the heathen people are fulfilled, after whoſe rites and cuſtomes God ſuffered the holy city to be trampled vnder foot for fortie and two moneths. For although the Chriſtian Church, which is the holy citie, continued in the faith from the Aſcenſion of Chriſt, euen till this time: yet hath it not obſerued and kept the perfection of the faith all this whole ſeaſon. For ſome after the departure of the Apoſtles, the faith was kept with the obſeruation of the rites of the Gentiles, and not of the rites of Moſes law, nor of the law of the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt. Wherefore ſéeing that this time of the error of the Gentiles is fulfilled: it is likely that Chriſt ſhall call the Gentiles from the rites of their gentilitie, to the perfection of the Goſpell, as hee called the Iewes from the law of Moſes to the ſame perfection, in his firſt comming: that there may be one ſheepefold of the Iewes and Gentiles, vnder one ſhepheard. Séeing therefore that Antichriſt is knowne which hath ſeduced the nations: then ſhall the elect after that they haue forſaken the errors of their gentilitie come through the light of Gods word, to the perfection of the Goſpel, and that ſame ſeducer ſhall be ſlaine with the ſword of Gods word. So that by theſe things it doth partly appeare vnto me, why at this time rather then at any other time, this matter of antichriſt is moued.

For theſe 42. moneths looke pag. 365.

Why rather at this time, then any other, the matter of antichriſt is moued: and why rather in this kingdom then in another.

And why that this motion is come to paſſe in this kingdom rather then in other kingdomes: me thinkes there is good reaſon, becauſe that no nation of the Gentiles was ſo ſone conuerted to Chriſt as were the Britons, the inhabitants of this kingdome. For to other places of the world, there were ſent preachers of the faith, who, by the working of miracles and continuall preaching of the word of God, and by grieuous paſſion and death of the bodie, did conuert the people of thoſe places: but in this kingdome, in the time of Lucius king of the Britons, and of Eleutherius biſhop of the Romans, did Lucius heare of the Romans that were Infidels (by the way of rumors and tales) of the Chriſtian faith, which was preached at Rome. Who beléeued ſtraightwaies, and ſent to Rome, to Eleutherius for men ſkilfull to informe him more fully in the very faith it ſelfe: at whoſe comming hee was ioyfull, and was baptiſed with his whole kingdome. And after the receiuing of the faith, they neuer forſoke it, neither for any manner falſe preaching of other, neither for any manner of torments, or yet aſſaults of the Painims, as in other kingdomes it hath come to paſſe. And thus it ſéemeth to me the Britons amongſt other Nations, haue been, as it were by the ſpeciall election of God, called and conuerted to the faith of Chriſt.

The firſt receiuing the faith in this realme by the Britons.

Britons by the ſpeciall election of God called to faith.

Of them as me ſéemeth, did Eſay prophecie, ſaying: For they did ſée to whom there was nothing told of him, and they did behold, that had not heard of him. And againe, Behold, thou ſhalt call a nation which thou kneweſt not: and nations that haue not known thée, ſhall run vnto thée: for the Lord thy God, and the holy one of Iſrael, ſhall glorifie thée.

The calling of the Gentiles to faith.

Of this kingdom, did ſaint Iohn in the Apocalyps prophecie (as me ſéemeth) where hee ſaid, The Dragon ſtood before the woman, which was about to bee deliuered of child, to the intent that when ſhée had brought it forth into the world, hee might deuoure vp her ſonne: and ſhée brought forth her child which was a manchild, who ſhould gouerne all nations with an iron rod. And the ſame ſonne was taken vp to God, and to his throne. And the woman fled into the wildernéſſe, whereas ſhe had a place prepared of God, that they may féed her 1260. daies. And againe in the ſame chapter, after that the Dragon ſaw that he was caſt out vpon the earth, hee did perſecute the woman, which brought forth the manchild. And there were giuen to the woman two wings of a great Egle, that ſhée might flée into the Wilderneſſe into her place, where as ſhe is foſtred vp for a time, times, and halfe a time, from the face of the Serpent. And the Serpent did caſt as it were a flood of water after the Woman, to the intent that he might cauſe her to be drowned by the flood: and the earth opening her mouth, did helpe the woman, and did ſwallow vp the flood which the Dragon did caſt out of his mouth. Let vs ſée how how theſe ſayings may be applied vnto this kingdome rather then to other kingdomes. It is well knowne that this kingdome is a wildernelle or a deſert place, becauſe that the philoſophers and wiſe men did not paſſe vpon it, but did leaue it for a wildernelle and deſert, becauſe it is placed without the climates.

This place of the deſert in the Scripture ſeemeth here ſome thing hardly expounded.

Vnto this place fled the woman, that is to ſay, the Church, (which by faith did ſpiritually bring forth Chriſt into the world) where as ſhe was fed with the heauenly bread, the fleſh and bloud of Jeſus Chriſt, for one thouſand, two hundred and ſixtie daies, ſeeing that for ſo many daies, taking a day for a yeere, the Britons continued in the faith of Chriſt, which thing cannot be found ſo of any chriſtian kingdome, but of this deſert: and well is it ſaid, that ſhee flew to this place. For from the Eaſt came the faith into Britaine, not by walking in iourney, nor yet by ſailing: for then ſhould it haue come by Rome, Italie, Almaine, France, which cannot bee found: and therfore ſhe flew ouer thoſe places, and reſted not in them, euen as a bird flying ouer a place, reſteth not in the ſame: but reſted in this wildernelle for a time, times, and halfe a time, that is, 1260. yeeres, from the firſt comming of the faith into Britaine vntill this preſent.

Faith came into Britaine from the Eaſt, not from Italie, or Rome.

A time, times, and halfe a time expounded.

In ſaying for a time, times, and halfe a time, there is a going forward from the greater to the leſſe. The greateſt time that we name, is a 1000. yeeres, there is a time: and the next time that is leſſe in the ſinguler number, is one 100. yeere. In the plurall number, times ſignifie that there be no hundreds then one, at leaſt 200. yeeres. Wherefore if they be put vnder a certaine number, it muſt needs be that they be two, but the ſame two cannot fitly be called ſome times, except they be hundreds. For in that, that there is a going downe from the greater to the leſſe, when as it is ſaid a time, times, and halfe a time, and that the number of a 1600. is likely aſſigned for a time: it muſt needs follow that times muſt be taken for hundreds, and halfe a time for 60. becauſe it is the greater halfe of a hundred yeeres, though that 50. be the euen halfe.

And when that the ſerpent ſent the water of the perſecution after the woman to cauſe her to be drowned of the floud: then did the earth, that is to wit, the ſtablenelle of faith helpe the woman, by ſupping vp the water of tribulation. For in the moſt cruell perſecution of Dioclelian and Maximian againſt the Chriſtians, when as chriſtianitie was almoſt euery where rooted out: yet did they in this kingdome ſtand continuallie in the faith vnmoueable. And ſo, conſidering that the Britons, were conuerted to the faith of Chriſt, as you would ſay, by an election, and picking out amongſt all the nations of the heathen, and that after they had receiued the faith, they did neuer ſtart backe from the faith for no manner of tribulation: it is not to bee maruelled if in their place, the calling of the Gentiles be made manifeſt, to the profiting of the Goſpell of Jeſus Chriſt, by the reuealing of Antichriſt.

Perſecution in Dioclelians time ſwallowed vp, looke pag. 70.

But beſides this, me ſeemeth that Ezechiel doth ſpecially ſpeake of them, whereas he ſpeaketh of the fall of the prince of Tyre, ſaying: foraſmuch as thy heart is lifted vp as if it were the heart of God, therefore behold: I will bring vpon thee ſome of the ſtrongeſt of the heathen, and they ſhall draw their naked ſwords vpon the beautie of thy wiſedome, and they ſhall defile thy comlineſſe, and they ſhall ſlay thee, and pull thee out, and thou ſhalt die in the ſlaughter of the ſlaine perſons, in the heart of the ſea.

This prince who ſaith, that he himſelfe is God, and doth ſit in Gods chaire in the heart of the ſea, doth ſignifie (as moſt likely it ſeemeth to mee) that Antichriſt ſhall bee deſtroyed by the moſt mightie perſons of the gentiles folke, through the ſword of the word of God. Becauſe that amongſt the other gentils, there haue been none more ſtrong then the Britons, either in their bodie or their faith, and in their bodilie warres there haue been none more mightie then they. For neuer in warres haue they been vanquiſhed, but by their owne ſeditiō or treaſon. But how many kingdomes haue they conquered? Yea, and neither by the moſt mightie citie of Rome, could they be driuen out of their kingdome, vntill that God ſent vpon them peſtilence and famine: whereby they being waſted, were compelled to leaue their countrie, which thing I haue not heard of any other people. Now, in the faith, haue they been amongſt all the people, the ſtrongeſt, as is before ſaid, becauſe that by no tribulation, could they be compelled to forſake the faith.

A friend to the Welchmen.

The ſtrong faith of the Britons.

Wherefore of them, this ſeemeth to mee to bee vnderſtood: Then I will bring vpon thee ſome of the moſt ſtrongeſt people, and they ſhall draw their naked ſwords, &c. By theſe things it may plainely appeare, why at this time (rather then in time paſt) this matter is ſtirred vp: and why in this kingdome (rather then in other kingdomes) the calling of the gentiles is intreated of, to the verifying of the Goſpell, through the diſcloſing of Antichriſt.

Tales of antichriſt.

But foraſmuch as many tales and fables are told of Antichriſt and his comming, and many things which doe rather ſeduce then inſtruct the hearers, are applied to him out of the Scriptures of the Prophets: wee will briefly write thoſe things which are ſpoken of him, and wee will ſhew that the ſame fable ſpring from the error of people imagining, and from no truth of the ſcriptures prophelying. Now then they doe ſay, that antichriſt ſhall be borne in Babylon of the tribe of Dan, and conceiued of the mixture of man and woman in time, becauſe that Chriſt was borne of a virgin, and conceiued of the holy Ghoſt. They ſay, that he ſhall bee an ill fauoured perſonage, becauſe that it is written of Chriſt: Comlie and beautifull is he, beyond the ſons of men. They ſay that he ſhall preach three yeeres and an halfe where Chriſt preached, and that he ſhall circumciſe himſelfe, and ſay that he is Chriſt, and the Meſſias ſent for the ſaluation of the Jewes. And they ſay, that he ſhall three manner of waies ſeduce the people, by falſe miracles, gifts, and torments. So that whom he ſhall not bee able to ouercome with miracles nor with gifts, thoſe ſhall he goe about to ouercome with diuers kinds of torments. And thoſe that he ſhall ſeduce, will he marke with his tokens in their forehead or hands. He ſhall ſit in the temple of God, and cauſe himſelfe to be worſhipped as God. He ſhall fight (as they ſay) with the two witneſſes of Chriſt, Enoch and Helie, and ſhall kill them, and he himſelfe ſhall finallie be ſlaine with lightning. To this imagined man of their owne imagination, but of none of the prophets foreſhewed (at leaſt in no ſuch wiſe as this is) doe they apply the Prophets, as this of Daniel: When that continuall ſacrifice ſhall be taken away, and abomination ſhall bee placed to deſolation: That is (ſay they) when the worſhipping of God ſhall be taken away, and deſolation (to wit, antichriſt) ſhall abominable ſhew forth himſelfe to be worſhipped, then ſhall there bee 1290. daies: that is to ſay, three yeeres and a halfe. And this time doe they ſay is the time, times, and halfe a time. And when it is ſaid in Daniel: Bleſſed is he that loketh for, and commeth to 1335. daies: This doe they ſay, is thus to bee vnderſtood, 45. daies of repentance to ſuch as haue worſhipped antichriſt: which 45. daies added to the 1290. make 1335. daies. Which daies they that ſhall reach vnto, ſhall be called bleſſed.

A falſe imagination of antichriſt.

The Scripture and Prophets not rightly vnderſtood touching antichriſt.

They apply alſo to this antichriſt, this ſaying of the Apocalyps: I ſaw a beaſt riſing vp out of the Sea, hauing 7. heads, and 10. hornes, who had power giuen him to make 42. moneths. Which moneths (as they ſay) doe make 3. yeeres and a halfe, in which antichriſt ſhall raigne. And many other things there are told, and applied vnfitly to this imagined antichriſt, that are not truly grounded vpon the ſcriptures.

Touching theſe 42. moneths, ſee aboue pag. 365.

Now, let vs ſhew the errors of this fable. Firſt of all, if there ſhall come ſuch one (ſaying expreſſlie that hee is Chriſt) that Chriſtian would be ſeduced by him, though he ſhould do neuer ſo many miracles: neither ſhall he come after the maner of a ſeducer, which ſhall ſhew himſelfe an expreſſe aduerſarie. Neither is it likelie that the Jewes can be ſeduced by ſuch a one, ſeeing that Chriſt is not promiſed vnto them of the ſtocke of Dan by any of the prophets, but of the ſtocke of Juda: nor yet is he promiſed to them to be a king warlike, but peaceable, taking warre away, and not making warre. For of Chriſt ſaith Eſay: And in the laſt daies, ſhall there be prepared the mountaine of the houſe of the Lord, in the top of the mountaines, and it ſhall be exalted aboue the hils: and to it, ſhall all the nations haue great recourſe, and many people ſhall goe and ſay: Come, let vs goe vp to the mountaine of the Lord, and to the houſe of the God of Iacob, and he ſhall teach vs his waies, and we ſhall walke in his pathes. For out of Sion ſhall there goe a law, and the word of the Lord from Ieruſalem, and he ſhall iudge the nations, and reproue much people. And they ſhal turne their ſwords into plowſhares, and their ſpeares into ſithes. There ſhall not a nation lift vp it ſelfe againſt another nation, nor yet ſhall they be any more exerciſed to war. And againe, A little babe is borne to vs, and a ſonne is giuen to vs, and his imperiall kingdome vpon his ſhoulder, and his name ſhall be called, The great counſellour, The mighty God, The father of the world to come, The prince of peace. His empire ſhall be multiplied, and there ſhall be no end of his peace. He ſhall ſit vpon the ſeat of Dauid, and vpon his kingdom: that he may make it ſtedfaſt and ſtrong in iudgement, and in iuſtice, from henceforth and for euermore. Zacharie doth ſay of Chriſt: Reioyce thou greatly, O thou daughter Sion, bee thou exceeding merrie, O daughter Ieruſalem: Behold thy king ſhall come a righteous perſon, and a Sauior vnto thee, and yet he a poore man, and getting vp vpon an aſſe, euen vpon a young colt of the ſhee aſſe. And I wil ſcatter abroad the chariot of Ephraim, and the horſe of Ierulalem: And the bow of war ſhall diſperſed, and he ſhall ſpeake peace to the nations, and his power ſhall be from the ſea to the ſea, and from the floud vnto the borders of the earth.

The old imagination touching antichriſt confuted.

Antichriſt commeth not ſo groſſely as the papiſts imagine.

Zach. 9.

By which things it is manifeſt, that the wiſe Jewes knew wel enough, Chriſt to be promiſed to them of the ſtock of Juda; and not of the ſtocke of Dan; and that he was giuen, all to peace, and not to warre: Therefore it is not likelie, that they can be ſeduced by ſuch a one. But if there ſhould haue been in time to come ſome ſuch ſinguler antichriſt, then would Chriſt (ſeeing he loued his) haue ſaid ſomewhat vnto them of him. Now, of one ſingulerly doth he not ſpeake: but of many, ſaying: Many ſhall come in my name, and ſay, I am Chriſt, and they ſhall ſeduce many perſons. But now let vs ſee, how the prophecies in Daniel, and the Apocalyps (aforeſaid) be Antichriſt cannot come of the tribe of Dan.

Daniel 9.

be fallly and erroneoullie applied to the ſame imagined Anti-Chriſt. For in Daniel the 9. chap. thus it is written: And after 72. weekes ſhall Chriſt be ſlaine, and they which will deny him ſhall not be his people. And the citie and ſanctuarie, ſhall a people, with their captaine that ſhall come with them deſtroy, whoſe end ſhall be vtter deſolation, and after the end of the warre a determined deſtruction. Now, hee ſhall in one weeke confirme his couenant towards many, and in the halfe weeke ſhall the offering and ſacrifice ceaſe, and in the temple ſhall there be an abomination of deſolation, and euen to the fulfilling vp of all, and to the end, ſhall the deſolation continue. It is plaine and manifeſt that this prophecie is now fulfilled. For the people of Rome with their captaine, deſtroyed Jeruſalem euen to the ground, and the people of the Jewes was ſlaine and ſcattered. And the abomination, that is, the Idol of deſolation was placed of Adrian, in the laſt deſtruction, in Jeruſalem in the holy place, that is to ſay, in a place of the temple. And from that time hitherto haue paſſed neere about 1290. daies, taking a day for a yeere, as Daniel takes it in his prophecies, and other prophets likewiſe. For Daniel ſpeaking of 62. weekes, doth not ſpeake of the weekes of daies but of yeeres. So therefore when hee ſaith: From the time that the continuall ſacrifice was taken away, &c. 1290. daies muſt be taken for ſo many yeeres, from the time of the deſolation of Jeruſalem, euen vnto the reuealing of antichriſt: and not for three yeeres and a halfe, which, they ſay, antichriſt ſhall raigne. And againe, whereas Daniel ſaid, How long till the end of theſe maruellous matters: it was anſwered him: For a time, and times, and halfe a time. Behold alſo, how vnfitly they did aſſigne this time, by three yeeres and a halfe, which, they ſay, Antichriſt ſhall raigne. For when as it is ſaid, a time, times, and halfe a time; there is a going downeward from the greater to the leſſe, from the whole to the part, becauſe it is from a time to halfe a time. If therefore, there be a going downeward from the whole to the part, by the middeſt (which is greater then the whole it ſelfe) the going downeward is not meet nor agreeing. And this is done when as it is ſaid, that a time, times, and halfe a time, is a yeere, two yeers, and halfe a yeere. Wherefore more fitly it is ſaid, that a time, times, and halfe a time, doth ſignifie 1290. yeeres, as is before ſaid in the chapter preceding. Thus therefore is the prophecie of Daniel falſlie applied to that imagined Antichriſt.

The abomination or idoll of deſolation ſtanding in the holy place.

Antichriſt to raigne only 3. yeeres and a half, is falſe.

Looke before in the ſtory of the ten firſt perſecutions.

Likewiſe is the proceſſe of the Apocalyps applied to the ſame imagined Antichriſt, too much erroneouſlie. Becauſe that the ſame cruell beaſt which came vp out of the ſea, hauing ſeauen heads and ten hornes, to whom there was power giuen ouer euery tribe, people, and tongue, and the power giuen for the ſpace of 42. moneths: This beaſt doth note the Romane Emperors, which moſt cruellie did perſecute the people of God, aſwell Chriſtians as Jewes. For when as the condemnation of the great whore ſitting vpon the many waters was ſhewed to John: he ſaw the ſame woman ſitting vpon the purple coloured beaſt full of the names of blaſphemie, hauing 7. heads and 10. hornes: and hee ſaw a woman being drunken with the bloud of the ſaints and martyrs of Jeſu. And the angell expounding and telling him the myſterie of the woman and the beaſt that carried her, ſaid: That 7. heads are 7. hilles, and are 7. kings: Fiue are fallen, one is, the other is not yet come: and when hee ſhall come, hee muſt raigne a ſhort time. And the ten hornes which thou ſaweſt, are 10. kings, who haue not yet taken their kingdome, but ſhall receiue their power as it were in one houre, vnder the beaſt. And finallie hee ſaith, the woman whom thou ſaweſt, is the great citie, which hath the kingdome ouer the kings of the earth. And it is manifeſt that the citie of Rome, at the time of this prophecie, had the kingdome ouer the kings of the earth. And this citie was borne vp and vpholden by her cruell and beaſtlie Emperors: who by their crueltie and beaſtlines, did ſubdue vnto themſelues in a manner, all the kingdomes of the world, of a zeale to haue lordſhip ouer others, and not vertuouſlie to gouerne the people that were their ſubiects, ſeeing that they themſelues did lacke all vertue, and drew backe others from the faith and from vertue.

The beaſt in the 13. of the Apocalyps expounded.

The purple beaſt in the Apocalyps meaneth Rome.

For theſe 42. moneths, looke before pag. 397.

Wherefore that cruell beaſt comming vp out of the ſea, doth rightly note the Roman Emperours, who had power ouer euery language, people, and countrie. And the power of this beaſt was for 42. moneths, becauſe that from the firſt Emperor of Rome, that is to ſay, Julius Ceſar, vnto the end of Fredericke the laſt emperour of Rome there were 42. moneths, taking a moneth for 30. daies, as the moneths of the Hebrewes and Grecians are, and taking a day alwaies for a yeere, as commonly it is taken in the prophets. By which things it may plainely appeare, how vnfitlie this prophecie is applied to that imagined Antichriſt, and the 42. moneths taken for three yeeres and a halfe, which (they ſay) he ſhall raigne in, againſt the ſaying of the prophets, becauſe that daies are taken for yeeres. As in the 1. of the Apocal. They ſhall be troubled 10. daies. Which doe note the moſt cruell perſecution of Diocleſian againſt the chriſtians that endured 10. yeeres. And in another place of the Apocalyps, it is written of the ſmoake comming vp out of the bottomleſſe pit: Out of which pit there came forth grashoppers into the earth: and to them was power given, as Scorpions haue power, to vexe and to trouble men 5. moneths. Now it is manifeſt, that from the beginning of the friers minors and preachers, to the time that Armachanus began to diſcloſe and vncouer their hypocriſie, and their falſe foundation of valiant begging vnder the pouertie of Chriſt, were 5. moneths, taking a moneth for 30. daies, and a day for a yeere. And to Ezechiel were daies giuen for yeeres. Wherefore it is an vnfit thing to aſſigne the 42. moneths being appointed to the power of the beaſt, vnto 3. yeeres and a halfe for the raigne of that phantaſticall and imagined Antichriſt: ſpecially ſeeing that they doe applie to his raigne the 1290. daies in Daniel, which make 42. moneths, and in the Apocalyps they aſſigne him 42. moneths. It is plaine that the Pſaltery and the harp agree not. And therefore ſeeing that it is ſufficiently ſhewed, that the ſame fabling tale of that imagined antichriſt to come, is a fable and erroneous: let vs goe forward to declare whether antichriſt be alreadie come, and yet is he hid from many, and muſt bee opened and diſcloſed within a little while, according to the truth of the holy ſcripture, for the ſaluation of the faithfull.

And becauſe that in the firſt concluſion of mine anſwer, I haue conditionallie put it, who is that antichriſt lying priuie in the hid ſcriptures of the prophets: I will paſſe on the declaration of that concluſion, bringing to light thoſe things which lay hid in darkeneſſe, becauſe nothing is hid which ſhall not be diſcloſed, and nothing couered that ſhall not bee knowne: And therefore, the thing that was ſaid in the darkeneſſe, let vs ſay in the light: and the thing that wee haue heard in the eare, let vs preach vpon the houſe tops. I therefore as I haue before ſaid, ſo ſay, that if the high biſhop of Rome, calling himſelfe the ſeruant of God, and the chiefe vicar of Chriſt in this world, doe make and inſtitute many lawes contrarie to the Goſpel of Jeſu Chriſt: then is hee the chiefe of many, which comming in the name of Chriſt, haue ſaid, I am Chriſt, who haue ſeduced many. Which is the firſt part of the firſt concluſion, and is manifeſt. For Chriſt is called of the Hebrues the very ſame that we call anointed. And amongſt them there was a double ſort of legall annointing by the law, the one of kings and the other of prieſts. And aſwell were the kings as the prieſts, called in the law, Chriſts. The kings, as in the Pſalme: The kings of the earth ſtood vp together, and the princes aſſembled themſelues in one againſt the Lord and againſt his Chriſt or annointed. And in the books of the kings very often are the kings called Chriſts. And our Saviour was Chriſt, or annointed king, becauſe hee was a king for euermore vpon the throne of Dauid, as the Scriptures doe verie oftentimes witneſſe. The prieſts alſo were called annointed, as where it is written, Doe not yee touch my Chriſts, that is, mine annointed ones, and bee not yee ſpitefull againſt my prophets. And ſo was our ſautor Chriſt, a prieſt for euer according to the order of Melchiſedech.

Seeing then, that the biſhops of Rome doe ſay, that they are the high prieſts: they ſay alſo therein that they are kings, becauſe they ſay that they haue the ſpiritual ſword pertaining to their prieſthood, and the corporall ſword, which agreeth for a kings ſtate. So is it plaine, that really and in very deed, they ſay that they are Chriſts, albeit that expreſſie they bee not called Chriſts. Now, that they come in the name of Chriſt, it is manifeſt, becauſe they ſay that they are his principall vicars in this world, ordained of Chriſt ſpecially for the gouernment of the chriſtian Church. Therfore, ſeeing they ſay, that really and in very deed they are Chriſts, and the chiefe friends of Chriſt: If they make and inſtitute manie lawes contrarie to the Goſpell of Jeſu Chriſt, then is it plaine that they themſelues in earth are the principall Antichriſts, becauſe there is no worſe plague and peſtilence, then a familiar enemie. And if in ſecret they be againſt Chriſt, and yet in open appearance they ſaie that they are his friends, they are ſo much the more meet to ſeduce and deceiue the chriſtian people, becauſe that a manifeſt enemie ſhall haue much adoe to deceiue a man, becauſe men truſt him not: but a priuie enemie pretending outward friendſhip, may eaſile ſeduce, yea thoſe that be wiſe.

But that this matter may the more fullie be knowen, let vs ſee what is the law and doctrine of Chriſt, that ought to be obſerued of all faithfull people: which being knowne, it ſhall bee an eaſie thing to ſee, if the biſhop of Rome doe make or maintain anie lawes contrarie to the law of the goſpel of Jeſu Chriſt.

I ſay then, that the law of Chriſt is charitie, which is the perfect loue of God and of Chriſt. This thing is plaine and manifeſt. For Chriſt being demanded of a certain doctor of the law; What is the greateſt commandement in the law? anſwered: Thou ſhalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoule, and with all thy minde: That is the principal and greateſt commandement. And as for the ſecond, it is like vnto this: Thou ſhalt loue thy neighbour as thine owne ſelfe. In theſe two commandements, doth the whole law and prophetes depend. And in another place Chriſt ſaith: All manner of things therefore, that you would that men ſhould doe to you, the ſame alſo do ye vnto them. For this is the law and the prophets. And in Iohn the thirteenth chapter ſaith Chriſt: And now doe I ſay vnto you, I giue you a new commandement, that you should loue each other as I loued you, in like maner that you also should loue one an other. In this shall all men know that you are my disciples, if you shall haue loue one towards an other. And Iohn 15. chapter: This is my commandement, that you loue together as I haue loued you. Greater loue then this hath no body, that a man should giue his life for his friends. The apostle Peter saith in his first Epistle 4. chapter: Aboue all things hauing continually charitie one towards an other, for charitie coufereth the multitude of sinnes. Be ye harbourers, and entertaine yee one an other without grudging; euery one as hee hath receiued grace, so let him bestow it vpon an other man, as the good stewards of the manifold graces of God. If any man speake, let him speak as the word of God. If any man doe ought for an other, let it be done with singlenes and vnfeined veritie, ministred of God to vsward, that in all things God may bee honoured through Iesus Christ our Lord. Iames in his Epistle the 2. chapter: If ye performe the royall law accordingly to the Scriptures (thou shalt loue thy neighbour) ye doe well: But if ye be partiall in receiuing and preferring mens personages, ye worke wickednes, being blamed of the law as transgressors. And againe, So speake ye, and so do ye, as ye should now begin to be iudged by the law of libertie. What shall it auaile (my brethren) if a man say he haue faith, and haue no workes? neuer shall the faith be able to saue him. For if a brother or sister bee naked, and haue need of daily fode, and some of you say to them, go ye in peace, bee ye made warme and satisfied: and if ye shall not giue those things that are necessarie for the body, what shall it auaile? Euen so faith, if it haue not works, is dead in it selfe.

Iohn in his first epistle the 3. chapter: This is the tidings which you haue heard from the beginning, that you should loue one an other. And againe, we know that we are translated from death to life, if we loue the brethren: He that loueth not, abideth in death. And againe, Herein do we know the loue of God, because that he hath laid downe his life for vs, and wee ought to lay downe our liues for the brethren. Hee that shall haue the substance of this world, and shall see his brother haue need, and shall shut vp his bowels from him, how abideth the loue of God in him? My little children, let vs not loue in word, nor tongue, but in deed and truth. And againe 4 chapter: Most dearely beloued, let vs loue together. For loue is of God, hee that loueth not, knoweth not God, for God is loue. In this thing hath the loue of God appeared in vs, that God hath sent his onely begotten sonne into the world, that wee should liue by him. Herein is loue: not that we haue loued God, but that he hath first loued vs, and hath sent his sonne an attonement for our sinnes. Most dearely beloued, if God haue loued vs, we so ought to loue together. No man hath seene God at any time: if wee loue together, God abideth in vs, and his loue is perfect in vs. And againe, Let vs loue God, for he hath first loued vs. If a man shall say, I loue God, & do hate his brother, he is a liar. For he that loueth not his brother whom he seeth, how can he loue God whom he seeth not? And this commandement haue we of God, that who so loueth God, should loue his brother also. Paul the apostle in his epistle to the Romans the 13. chapter: Owe yee nothing to no body, sauing that yee should loue together, for hee that loueth his brother hath fulfilled the law. For thou shalt not commit adulterie, thou shalt not murther, thou shalt not steale, thou shalt not beare false witnesse, thou shalt not couet thy neighbours good: and if there bee any other commandement, it is plentifully fulfilled in this word, Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. Wherefore the fulfilling of the law is loue.

Paul to the Corinths the 13. chap. saith: If I should speake with the tongues of men and angels, and yet haue not charitie, I am become as it were a piece of sounding mettall or tinkling cymball. And if I shall haue all prophecie, and know all mysteries, and all knowledge, and shall haue all faith, so that I might remoue mountaines, and yet shall not haue charitie; I am nothing. And if I shall giue abrode all my goods to feede the poore, and shall giue vp my body to be burned, and yet haue not charitie, it profits me nothing. To the Galanthians 5. saith Paul: For you my brethren, are called vnto libertie: do ye not giue your libertie for an occasion of the flesh, but by charitie of the spirit serue ye one an other. For all the law is fulfilled in one saying; Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thine owne selfe. To the Ephesians 4. chapter he saith: I therefore that suffer bonds in the Lord, doe beseech you, that you would walke worthie of the calling wherewith yee are called, with all humblenesse and mildnes, with patience, forbearing one another in loue, being carefull to keepe the vnitie of the spirit, in the bond of peace: that you be one body, and one spirit, euen as you bee called in one hope of your calling. And againe in the 5. chap. Be ye followers of me, as most deere children, and walke yee in loue, as Christ also hath loued vs, and hath deliuered vp himselfe for vs, an offering and sacrifice to God of a sweete sauour. To the Philip. thus he speaketh in the first chap. Onely let your conuersation be worthie of the Gospell of Christ, that either when I shall come and see you, or else in mine absence I may heare of you, that you stand stedfast in one spirit labouring together with one accord for the faith of the Gospell. And in nothing be ye afraid of the aduersaries, which is to them a cause of damnation, but to you of saluation, and that of God. For to you it is giuen, not onely that you should beleeue in him, but also that you should suffer with him, you hauing the like fight and battell that both you haue seene in mee, and also now do heare of me. If therefore there be any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of charitie, if any fellowship of the spirit, if any bowels of compassion, fulfill you my ioy, that you may be of one iudgement, hauing one and the selfe same charitie, being of one accord, of one maner of iudgement, doing nothing of contention, nor of vaine glory, but in humblenes, accounting other amongst you, euery one better then your selues; not euery bodie loking vpon the things that bee his owne, but those that belong vnto others. And to the Colos. 3. chap. thus he writeth; You therefore as the elect of God, holy, and beloued, put vpon you the bowels of mercy, gentlenesse, humblenesse, lowlinesse, modestie, patience, bearing one with an other, and giuing place to your selues (if any haue a quarrell against any body;) euen as the Lord forgaue you, so doe you also. Aboue all things haue yee charitie, which is the bond of perfection, and let the peace of Christ triumph in your hearts, in which peace you also are called in one body. And be ye kind and thankefull. And to the Thessalonians thus Paul writeth in the 4. chapter; As concerning brotherly charitie, wee haue no need to write vnto you: for you your selues haue learned of God, that you should loue one an other. And the same thing ye do towards all the brethren throughout all Macedonia.

Colos. 3.

1. Thes. 4.

Out of all these and many other places of the holy Scripture it sufficiently appeareth, that the law of Christ is charitie, neither is there any vertue commanded of Christ, or any of his apostles, to be obserued of the faithfull people, but that it commeth out of charitie, or else doth nourish charitie.

The law is giuen by Moses, and the truth by Christ. Christ came not to vnloose the law & the prophets, but to fulfill them. But yet many things were lawfull and might haue beene obserued in the time of the law, which in the time of grace must not be obserued. And many things were vnlawfull to them that were vnder the law, which in the time of grace are lawfull enough. After what sort then he did not loose the law, but did fulfill it, it is necessarie to declare, for those things which hereafter must be said. For amongst christians, many things are iudged to be lawfull, because in the former testament in the law, they were lawfull; and yet they bee expresslie contrarie to Christs Gospell. But the authors of such things do argue and reason thus: Christ came not to loose the law or the prophets. Now after what sort he did not vnloose them, it is manifest by the holy Scripture: that the law giuen by Moses, was written in tables of stone, to declare the hardnes of the peoples heart towards the loue of God, or of Christ. But Christ hath written his law in the hearts and in the minds of his, that is to say, the law of perfect loue of God, and of Christ. Which law whosoeuer obserueth, hee doth obserue the law of Moses, and doth much greater workes of perfection, then were the workes of the law. Thus therfore were the morals of the old law fulfilled in the law of the charitie of Christ, and not vnlooſed: because they are much more perfectly obserued, then of ỹ Iewes. This I say, if the christians doe obserue the commandements of Christ in such sort, as he commanded the same to bee obserued. Christ hath fulfilled the lawes morall of the old testament, because that the morals & iudicials were ordained, that one person should not do iniurie to an other, & that euery man should haue paid him that is his. Now they that are in charitie, will do no iniurie to others, neither doe they take other mens goods away from them. Nay, it seeketh not her owne things. For charitie seeketh not the things that be her owne. Wherefore, much lesse by a stronger reason it ought not to seeke for other mens goods. And when as the iudicials and morals were ordained, Christ did not by the workes of the law iustifie the beleeuers in him, but by grace iustified them from their sins. And so did Christ fulfill that by grace, that the law could not by iustice.

Many things obserued in the old law, which be not obserued now.

Many things vnlawfull in the old law, which be lawfull now.

How Christ did loose, and not loose the law.

Paul to the Romans declareth in a godly discourse, and to the Galathians likewise, that none shall bee iustified by the workes of the law, but by grace, in the faith of Iesu Christ. As for the morals & ceremonies of the law, as circumcision, sacrifices for offences and for sinnes, first fruits, tenths, vowes, diuers sorts of washings, the sprinkling of blood, the sprinkling of ashes, abstaining from vncleane meates, which are ordered for the sanctifying and clensing of the people from sinne, no nor yet the praiers of the priests, neither the preachings of the prophets, could clense a man from his sin. For death reigned euen from Adam to Moses, and sinne from Moses to Christ, as Paul declareth to the Romans in the fifth chapter. But Christ, willing to haue mercy, and not sacrifice, being a priest for euer after the order of Melchisedech, and an high priest of good things to come, did neither by the blod of goats or calues, but by his owne blod enter in once vnto the holy places, when as euerlasting redemption was found: neither did Iesus enter into the holy places that were made with hands, which are the examples of true things, but into the verie heauen, that now he may appeare before the countenance of God for vs. Nor yet he did so, that he should offer vp himselfe oftentimes, as the high bishop entred into the holy place euery yeer with strange blod (for otherwise hee must needs haue sufsacred oftentimes sithence the beginning of the world) but now in the latter end of the world hath he once appeared by his owne sacrifice, for the destruction of sinne. And like as it is decreed for men once to die, and after that commeth iudgement: euen so was Christ once offered vp to consume away the sinnes of many. The second time shall he appeare without sin to the saluation of such as looke for him. For the law hauing a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image or substance it selfe of the things, can neuer, by those sacrifices which they offer (of one selfe same sort continually yeare by yeare) make them perfect that come vnto her. Otherwise men would leaue off offering, because that those worshippers being once cleansed, should haue no more pricke of conscience for sinne afterwards. But in them is there remembrance made of sins euery yeare. Hebr. 10. For it is impossible, that by the blood of goats and buls, sins should be taken away. Wherefore, he entring into the world, doth say; As for sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not haue, but a body hast thou framed vnto me. And sacrifices for sinne haue not pleased thee: then said I, behold I come: In the head, or principall part, of the booke it is written of me, that I should doe thy will O God. Wherefore he said before, that sacrifices, oblations and burnt offerings, and that for sin thou wouldest not haue: neither were those things pleasant to thee which are offered according to the law: then said I, behold I come, that I may doe thy will O God: He taketh away the first, that hee may stablish that that followed. In which will, wee are sanctified and made holy by the offring vp of the body of Jesus Christ once. And verily euery priest is readie euery day ministring, and oftentimes offering the selfe same sacrifices, which neuer can take away sinnes. But this man offering one sacrifice for sins, doth for euer and euer sit at Gods right hand, looking for the rest to come till that his enemies bee placed to be his footstoole. For with one offering hath he for euer made perfect those that be sanctified. By which things it plainely appeareth, that Christ by one offering hath cleansed his from their sinnes: who could not be cleansed from the same, by all the ceremonies of the law, and so did fulfill that which the priesthood of the law could not. Wherefore onely the morals and iudicials he fulfilled by the law of charitie, and by grace; and the ceremonials, by one offering vp of his body on the altar of the crosse. And so it is plaine, that Christ fulfilled the whole law.

All shadowes ought to cease among christians.

Wherefore sithence that the holy things of the law, were a shadow of those things that were to come in the time of grace, it were meet that all those things should vtterly cease amongst christians, which should either bee against charitie or the grace of Christ. Although in the time of the law they were lawfull, and not vtterly contrarie to it, but were figures of perfections in Christs faith: yet it were meet that they should cease at the comming of the perfection which they did prefigurate: as circumcision, the eating of the paschall Lambe, and other ceremoniall points of the law. Whereupon also Paul to the Hebrues the 7. chapter saith thus: If therefore the making vp of the perfection of all was by the Leuiticall priesthood (for the people receiued the law vnder him) why was it necessarie besides, that an other priest should rise vp after the order of Melchisedech, and not be called after the order of Aaron? For when the priesthood is remoued, it must needs be, that the law also be remoued. For hee in whom these things are spoken, is of an other tribe, of which, none stood present at the altar: because it is manifest that our Lord had his offspring of Juda, in which tribe Moses spake nothing of the priests. And besides this, it is manifest: if according to the order of Melchisedech there doe rise vp an other priest, which was not made according to the law of the carnall commandement, but according to the power of the life ỹ cannot be loosed. For thus he beareth witnes, that thou art a priest for euer, after the order of Melchisedech: so that the commandement that went before, is disallowed for ỹ weaknes and vnprofitablenesse thereof. For the law hath brought no body to perfection. By which things it appeareth, that Christ making an end of the priesthood of Aaron, doth also make vp a full end of the law belonging to that priesthood. Whereupon I maruell that your learned men doe say, that christian folkes are bound to this small ceremony of the payment of tithes, and care nothing at all for other, as well the great as the small ceremonies of the law.

Heb. 7. Where the priesthood is remoued, there also the law is remoued.

Bound, as a matter of religion, or as by the necessitie of Gods law and not mans: but now tithes stand by mans law, and not by the old law.

The cause ceasing, the effect also ceaseth. He meaneth that necessitie of tithes, which standeth by the necessitie of the old law to cease.

If tithes be claimed by force of the old law, by the same law priests are bound to haue no temporalties.

It is plaine, that the tithes were giuen to the sonnes of Leui, for their seruing in the tabernacle and in the temple of the Lord, as the first fruits were giuen to the priests, and also part of the sacrifices, and so were the bowes of their ministerie, as it appeareth in the booke of Numbers the 22. chapter. But forasmuch as the labour of those sacrifices did cease at the comming of Christ, how should those things bee demanded, which were ordained for that labour? And seeing that the first fruits were not demanded of christians, which first fruites were then rather and sooner demanded then the tithes: why must the tithes be demanded, except it be therefore peraduenture, because that the tithes be more worth in value then be the first fruits?

Secondly, why are the lay people bound to the paiment of tithes, more then the Leuites and the priests were to the not hauing of possessions of realties and lordships amongst their brethren, seeing that the selfe same law in the selfe same place (where he saith that the tithes ought to be giuen to Leuites) saith also to the Leuites, You shall bee contented with the offering of the tithes, and haue none other thing amongst your brethren. Wherefore seeing that the priests bee bound, to the not hauing of temporall lordships, how are the lay people bound by that law (of God he meaneth, and not of man) to the paiment of tithes?

He proueth not contrarie, but that tithes be due by the positiue law of man: Although not by the ceremoniall law of Moses.

Thirdly, as touching circumcision, which is one of the greater ceremonies of the law, and was giuen before the law, and was an vniuersall ceremonie, concerning the couenant betweene God and his people, and was so much regarded in the law, that thereof it was said: The soule, whose flesh shall not be circumcised in the foreskin, shall perish from amongst his people: yet did this ceremonie vtterly cease at the comming of Christ, although that certaine of the Jewes did say in the primitiue church, that the christians must needs keepe the commandement of circumcision with the faith: whom Paul reproueth, writing thus to the Galathians the fourth chapter, where he speaketh of the children of the bondwoman and of the Galath. 4. freewoman, which doe signifie the two Testaments. But we (O brethren) are the children of the promise after Jsaac: but like as at that time he that was borne after the flesh, did persecute him which was after the spirit, euen so it is now alls. But what saith the Scripture? Throw out the bondwoman and her sonne. The sonne of the bondwoman shall not be heire with the sonne of the freewoman. Wherefore brethren, we are not the sonnes of the bondwoman, but of the free. Stand ye stedfast in the libertie wherewith Christ hath deliuered you, and be not ye holden againe vnder the yoke of slauerie. Behold, I Paul say vnto you, if you be circumcised, Christ shall nothing profit you. For I testifie againe to euery man that circumciseth himselfe, that he is bound to keepe all the whole law. Ye are vtterly void of Christ: whosoeuer will bee iustified in the law, are fallen from grace.

Christian libertie from the bondage of the law.

In like maner we may reason, if wee be bound to tithing, we are debters, and bound to keepe all the whole law. For to say that men are bound to one ceremony of the law, and not to the others, is no reasonable saying. Either therefore wee are bound to them all, or to none. Also, that by the same * old law, men are not bound to pay tithes, it may bee shewed by many reasons, which we needs not any more to multiplie & increase, because the things that be said are sufficient. Whereupon some doe say, that by the Gospell wee are bound to pay tithes, because Christ said to the Pharisies, Matth. 23. chap. Woe be to you Scribes and Pharisies, which pay your tithe of Mint, of Anise seed, and of Cummin: and leaue iudgement, mercy, and truth vndone, being the waightier things of the law; both should ye haue done these things, and also not haue left the other vndone. O yee blind guides, that straine out a gnat, and swallow vp a camell. This word soundeth not as a commandement or maner of bidding, whereby Christ did command tithes to be giuen: but it is a word of disallowing the hypocrisie of the Pharisies, who of couetousnesse did rather weigh and esteeme tithes, because of their owne singuler commoditie, rather then other great and weightie commandements of the law. And me seemeth that our men are in the same predicament of the Pharisies, which do leaue off all the ceremonies of the old law, keeping onely the commandement of tithing. It is manifest and plaine enough by the premisses, and by other places of the Scripture, that Christ was a priest after the order of Melchisedech, of the tribe of Juda, not of the tribe of Leui: who gaue no new commandement of tithing of any thing to him and to his priests, whom hee would place after him: but when his apostles said to him: Behold, we leaue all things and haue followed thee, what then shall wee haue; hee did not answere them thus: Tithes shall bee paid you; neither did he promise them a temporall, but an euerlasting reward in heauen. For hee, both for food, and also apparell, taught his disciples not to bee carefull: Bee ye not carefull for your life, what ye shall eate, or for your body what ye shall put on: Is not the life of man more worth then the meate: and the body more worth then apparell: Behold ye the birds of heauen, which doe not sow, nor reape, neither yet lay vp in barnes, and yet your heauenly father feedeth them. And as for apparell, why should you bee carefull: Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow, they labour not, neither doe they spinne, &c. In conclusion hee saith, Be not yee carefull, saying, what shall we eate, or what shall we drinke, or wherewithall shall we bee couered: For all these things doe the Gentiles seeke after: For your father knoweth, that you haue neede of all these things. First therefore seeke ye for the kingdome of God and the righteousnes thereof, and all these things shall bee cast vnto you. And Paul right well remembring this doctrine, instructeth Timothie and saith thus: But we hauing 1. Tim. 6. foode, and wherewithall to be couered, let vs therewith be contented. And as the Acts of the apostles doe declare; in the first conuersion of the Jewes at Jerusalem, they had all things common, and to euery one was diuision made, as neede required. Neither did the priests make the tithes their owne proper goods. For like as it was not meet that the lay people being conuerted, should haue propriette of goods: euen so neither that priests should haue propriete of tithes. So that if if the priests started backe from feruent charitie in challenging to themselues the proprietie of tithes: it is no maruell of departing backward (as doe the priests from the perfection of charitie) also of the laitie to be willing to appropriate to themselues, the nine parts remaining after tithes. Wherefore seeing that neither Christ, nor any of the apostles, commanded to pay tithes: it is manifest and plaine, neither by the law of Moses, nor by Christs law, christian people are bound to pay tithes: but by the tradition of men, they are bound.

Tithes due to be paid by the positiue law of men.

By the premisses now it is plaine, that Christ did not vndo the law, but by grace did fulfill it. Notwithstanding, in the law many things were lawfull, which in the time of grace are forbidden; and many things were then vnlawfull, which now are lawfull enough. For nothing that is contrarie to charitie, is lawfull to a christian.

Let vs now heare what maner of commandements Christ hath giuen vs in the Gospell, without the obseruation of which commandements, charitie shall not perfectly bee kept. By which commandements, Christ did not vndoe the old law, but did fulfill it. By the obseruation also of which commandements, he teacheth vs to passe and goe beyond the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharisies, who most perfectly thought themselues to keepe the law. This absolute and perfect righteousnesse, which we are bound to haue beyond the righteousnesse of the Pharisies and the Scribes, he teacheth in Matthew 5. 6. and 7. chap. Which being heard, and compared to the traditions made and commanded by the Romane prelats, it shall plainely appeare, whether they be contrarie or no. Christ therefore saith, You haue heard, that it was said to them of the old time, Thou shalt not kill. For he that killeth shall be guiltie of iudgement. But I say vnto you, that euery one that is angrie with his brother, shall be in danger of iudgement. In this he doth teach, that wee ought not to bee angrie with our brethren: not that he would vndoe this old commandement (Thou shalt not kill) but that the same should bee the more perfectly obserued. Againe hee saith; You haue heard that it was said, thou shalt loue thy friend, and hate thine enemie. But I say vnto you, Loue your enemies, doe well to them that hate you, pray for them that persecute and slander you, that you may be the children of your father which is in heauen: Which maketh his sunne to arise vpon the good and the euill people, and raineth vpon the iust and vniust. For if you loue them which loue you, what reward shall you haue? Doe not the Publicans thus? And if you shall salute your brethren onely, what great thing doe ye? Doe not the heathen thus also? Be you therfore perfect, as also your heauenly father is perfect.

The doctrine of Christ, whether it be contrarie to the traditions of the pope or not. Matth. 5.

Againe Christ saith, You haue heard that it is said; an eie for an eie, a toth for a toth. But I say vnto you, see that you resist not euill. But if any man shall strike you vpon the right cheeke, giue him the other to. And to him that will striue with thee for thy coate in iudgement, let him haue thy cloke also. And whosoeuer shall constraine thee one mile, goe with him also two other. He that asketh of thee, giue him: and he that will borrow of thee, turne not thy selfe from him.

The doctrine of Christ and of the pope compared.

By these things it may plainely appeare, how that Christ the king of peace, the Sauiour of mankind, who came to saue, and not to destroy, who gaue a law of charitie to bee obserued of his faithfull people; hath taught vs not to be angrie, not to hate our enemies, not to render euill for euill, nor to resist euill. For all these things doe foster and nourish peace and charitie, and doe proceed and come forth of charitie, and when they bee not kept, charitie is losed, and peace is broken. But the bishop of Rome approueth and alloweth warres, and slaughters of men in warre, as well against our enemies, that is, the infidels, as also against the Christians for temporall goods. Now, these things are quite contrarie to Christs doctrine, and to charitie, and to peace.

The glosse of Gratianus vpo the cap. Paratus 23. q. 1. dis. proued.

In the decrees 23. q. 1. cap. Paratus, it is taught, that the precepts of patience must alwaies be retained in purpose of the heart, so that patience with benenolence must bee kept in the mind secret. But apparantly and manifestly, that thing should be done, which seemeth to doe good to those, whom wee ought to wish well vnto. Wherein they giue to vnderstand, that a christian may freely defend himselfe. And for confirmation of this saying, they do say: That Christ when he was stricken on the face of the high bishops seruant, did not fulfill (if wee looke vpon the words) his owne commandement: because hee gaue not to the smiter the other part, but rather did forbid him, that he should not doe it, to double his iniurie. For he said, If I haue spoken euill, beare witnes of the euill; but if well, why doest thou strike mee? I doe maruell of this saying; for first if those commandements of patience must bee kept in secret in the mind: and seeing the body doth worke at the motion of the mind, and is and ought to be moued and ruled by the same: it must then needs be, that if patience be in the mind, it must appeare also outwardly in the body.

Christ in answering to his striker, did not breake his rule of patience outwardly.

The precept of Christ to tuene the other cheek, hath a priuie comparison: as if he would say, rather be you cõtent to suffer two blowes, then to reuenge one.

This article of Brute must haue a relation euer to the doctrine of the clergie.

Secondly, I maruell that it is said, that Christ did not fulfill his owne precept of patience. For it is manifest, that albeit he teaching alwaies as a good schoolemaster, those things which were fit for the saluation of soules, speaking the wholesome word of instruction to the high bishops seruant, smiting him vniustly; did neither by word forbid an other stroke to bee giuen on the other cheeke, neither did hee defend himselfe bodily from striking on the same cheeke: But speaking to him, it is likely that hee gaue him the other cheeke, hee meaneth, that he turned not the other cheeke away. For a man turneth not away from him whom he speaketh to, or whom hee informeth, but layeth open before him all his face: Euen so do I beleeue that Christ did, that he might fulfill in very deed that, which before he had taught in word. Neither yet did Christ by his word or by his deed, shew any thing of defence, or of bodily resistance.

Thirdly, I maruell why wise men leauing the plaine and manifest doctrine of Christ, whereby hee teacheth patience, doe seeke corners of their owne imagining, to the intent they may approue fightings and wars. Why marke they not after what maner Christ spake to Peter striking the high bishops seruant, saying: Put vp thy sword into the sheath, for euerie one that shall take the sword, shall perish with the sword: But in an other case wee must make resistance: which case may bee so righteous, as it is for a mans lord and master being a most righteous man, and yet suffering iniurie of mischieuous persons.

The cause heere against of Christ was priuate, and his doctrine is to be vnderstood in priuat cases. Warre in case allowed of M. Brute.

Fourthly, I maruell, seeing that we are bound of charitie and by the law of Christ to giue our liues for our brethren, how they can allow such maner of dissensions, and resisting. For when thy brother shall maliciously strike thee, thou maiest be sure, that he is manifestly fallen from charitie, into the snare of the diuell. If thou shalt keepe patience, hee shall be ashamed of his doing, and thou mayest bow and bend him to repentance, and take him out from the snare of the diuell, and call him backe againe to charitie. If thou resist, and perchance by resisting doest strike againe, his furie shall bee the more kindled, and hee being stirred vp to greater wrath, peraduenture shall either slay thee, or thou him. Touching thy selfe, thou art vncertaine if thou goe about to make resistance, whether thou shalt fall from charitie, and then shalt thou goe backward from the perfection of Christs commandement: Neither doest thou know but that it may happen thee so greatly to be moued, as that by the heate and violence of wrath, thou shalt slay him. Whereas if thou wouldest dispose thy selfe to patience (as Christ teacheth) thou shouldest easilie auoide all these mischieues, as well on the behalfe of thy brother, as also of thine owne part. Wherefore the obseruing of charitie, as the precept of patience, is to be obserued.

He meaneth resistance for priuate causes, or for worldly goods.

Patience commended in priuate causes among Christian brethren.

The inconuenience of priuate resistance among Christian brethren.

Fifthly, I doe maruell why that for the allowing of this corporall resistance, he doth say in the same chapter, that Paul did not fulfill the precept of the patience of Christ, when as hee being stricken in the place of iudgement by ỹ commandement of the high priest, did say, God strike thee, O thou painted wall: Doest thou sit to iudge me according to the law, and doest thou command me to be stricken against the law? It is manifest that Paul made resistance in nothing, though he spake a word of instruction to the priest, who against the law commanded him to be stricken. And if Paul had ouerpassed the bounds of patience, through the griefe of the stroke, what of that? Must the deed of Pauls impatiencie for this cause bee iustified, and the commandement of patience taught by Christ, bee left vndone for Pauls deed, and corporall resistance bee allowed? God forbid. For both Paul and Peter might erre. But in the doctrine of Christ there may be found no errour. Wherefore we must giue more credence and beleefe to Christs sayings, then to any liuing mans doings. Wherefore, although Paul had resisted, which I doe not perceiue in that Scripture, it followeth not thereof, that corporall resistance must be approued, which is of Christ expressie forbidden. I much maruell that alwaies they seeke corners and shadowes to iustifie their deeds. Why doe they not marke what great things Paul reciteth himselfe to haue suffered for Christ? And where I pray you haue they found, that he after his conuersion, stroke any man that did hurt him? Or where doe they find that hee in expresse word doth teach such a kind of corporall resistance? But as touching patience, hee saith in plaine words to the Romans: Be not wise in your owne conceits: Render ill for ill to no bodie: prouiding good things not onely before God, but also before all men, if it be possible: Be at peace with all folkes as much as in you lieth: not reuenging your selues, my most dearely beloued, but giue you place vnto anger. For it is written, Vengeance is mine, and I will recompence them, saith the Lord. But if thine enemie shall be an hungred, giue him meate; if hee bee a thirst, giue him drinke. For thus doing, thou shalt heape coales of fire vpon his head. Bee not ouercome of euill, but ouercome thou euill with good.

The fact of thee of Paul do of any other, doth not derogate to the doctrine of our Sauiour.

Paul being stricken, did not breake the rule of Christs patience, neither made any bodily resistance.

Rom. 12. Rules of Christs patience.

To the Corinthians the 5. as touching iudgement and contention, which are matters of lesse weight then are fightings, thus he writeth: Now verily there is great fault in you, that you be at law amongst your selues. Why rather take yee not wrong? Why rather suffer ye not deceit? And generally in all his epistles hee teacheth, that patience should bee kept, and not corporall resistance by fighting, because charitie is patient, it is courteous, it suffreth all things. I maruell how they iustifie and make good the warres by Christians, sauing onely the warres against the diuell and sinne. For seeing that it is plaine, that those things which were in the old Testament, were figures of things to bee done in the new Testament; Therefore we must needs say, that the corporall wars being then done, were figures of the christian warres against sinne and the diuell, for the heauenly countrey, which is our inheritance. It is plaine that it was written thus of Christ: The mightie Lord, and of great power in battell, hath girded himselfe in force and manlinesse to the warre: and hee came not to send peace into the earth, but warre. In this warre ought christian people to bee souldiers, according to that manner which Paul teacheth to the Ephesians the last: Put vpon you the armour of God, that you may bee able to stand against the deceits of the diuell. For wee haue not to wrastle against flesh and blood, but against princes and potestates, against the rulers of the darknesse of the world, against spirituall wickednesse in heauenly things, which are in the high places. Wherefore take yee the armour of God, that yee may bee able to resist in the euill day, and to stand perfectly in all things. Stand ye therefore girded about in truth vpon your loynes, hauing put vpon you the brest-plate of righteousnesse, and your feet shod in a readinesse to the Gospell of peace; in all things taking the shield of faith, wherewith you may quench all the fierie darts of that wicked one. And take vnto you the helmet of saluation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God.

Corporal wars in the old Testament, be figures of the spirituall wars in the new Testament, against sinne, and the diuell.

Ephes. 6.

What be the warres most proper to Christians.

By these things it is plaine, what are the warres of Christians, and what are the weapons of their warfare. And because it is manifest, that this Testament is of greater perfection then the former, wee must now fight more perfectly then at that time. For now spiritually, then corporally: now for an heauenly euerlasting inheritance, then for an earthly and temporall: now by patience, then by resistance. For Christ saith, Blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousnes, for theirs is the kingdome of heauen. He saith not, blessed are they that fight for righteousnesse. How can a man say, that they may lawfully make warre, and kill their brethren for the temporall goods, which peraduenture they vniustly occupie, or vniustly intend to occupie: For he that killeth an other to get these goods which an other body vniustly occupieth, doth loue more the very goods then his owne brother. And then hee falling from charitie, doth kill himselfe spiritually. If he goe forward without * charitie to make warre, then doth he euill, and to his owne damnation. Wherefore he doth not lawfully nor iustly in proceeding to the damnation of his owne selfe and his brother, whom, though hee see vniustly to occupie his goods, yet hee doth intend to kill. And what if such kind of warres were lawfull to the Iewes: this argueth not, that now they are lawfull to christians, because that their deeds were in a shadow of imperfection, but the deeds of christians in the light of perfection. It was not said vnto them, All people that shall take the sword, shall perish with the sword. What if Iohn the Baptist disallowed corporall fightings, and corporall warfare, at such time as the souldiers asked him saying, And what shall we do? Who saith to them, See that you strike no man, neither picke ye quarrels against any, and bee ye contented with your wages. This saying of Iohn alloweth not corporall warfare amongst christians. For Iohn was of the Priests of the old Testament, & vnder the law, neither to him it appertained to follow the law, but to warne the people to the perfect obseruation of the law: for hee being likewise demanded of the Publicans what they should do, said vnto them, Doe no other thing then is appointed vnto you. But Christ the author of the new testament and of greater perfection, then was the perfection of the old law, which gaue new things, as it plainely appeareth by the Gospell. So that christians ought to receiue information of Christ, not of Iohn. For of Iohn also doth Christ speake: Verily I say vnto you, there hath not risen amongst the children of women, a greater then Iohn Baptist; but he that is least in the kingdome of heauen, is greater then he. In which saying, Christ sheweth, that those that be least in the kingdome of heauen in the time of grace, are placed in greater perfection then was Iohn, which was one of them that were the elders, and he liued also in the time of the law in greater perfection. And when as certaine of Iohns disciples said vnto him: Master, hee that was beyond Iordan, to whom thou gauest witnesse, behold he baptizeth, and all people come vnto him; Iohn answered and said: A man cannot take vpon him, vnlesse it shall bee giuen him from aboue. You your selues doe beare me record, that I said I am not Christ, but that I was sent before him. Hee that hath the bride, is the bridegroom; as for the bridegroomes friend, who standeth and heareth him, he reioyceth with great ioy to heare the voice of the bridegroome. This therefore my ioy is fulfilled: he must increase, and I must bee diminished. Hee that commeth from an high is aboue all. Hee that is of the earth is earthy, and speaketh of the earth: Hee that commeth from heauen, is aboue all folkes; that which he hath seene and heard, the same doth hee witnesse, and yet his witnessing doth no body receiue. But he that receiueth his witnessing, hath put to his Seale, that God is true. For hee whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God.

All this taketh not away the lawfulnes of warres, in case of publike necessitie, but only in priuate case for temporall goods.

* Note this word, without charitie.

Such kind of warres, that is, such kind as be for priuate reuenge of temporall goods.

How Iohn Baptist alloweth no warre.

Thy that be least in the kingdome of heauen, greater then Iohn Baptist, expounded.

By which things it plainely appeareth, that credence is to be giuen neither to Iohn, nor yet to Angell, if hee teach any thing that is not agreeable to Christs doctrine. For Christ is aboue the Angels, because that God infinitely passeth them in wisedome. Now if Moses the seruant of God, a minister of the old Testament was so much to bee beleeued, that nothing could be added, nor yet any thing diminished, from the commandements that were giuen by him, (for so Moses had said, The thing that I command thee, that doe thou onely to the Lord, neither adde thou any thing, nor diminish;) how much more ought wee not to adde nor to take away from the commandements giuen by God himselfe, and also the sonne of God? In the primitiue church because the christians had feruent loue & charitie, they obserued these precepts as they were giuen: but their feruent charitie afterward waxing lukewarme, they inuented glosses by drawing the commandements of God backe to their owne deeds, which they purposed to iustifie and maintaine: that is to say, warres against the infidels. But that these by warres should be conuerted to the faith, is a fact faithlesse enough: because, that by violence or vnwillingly, no body can beleeue in Christ, nor bee made a christian, neither did hee come to destroy them by battell, that beleeued not in him: for he said to his disciples, You know not what spirit you are of. The sonne of man came not to destroy mens liues, but to saue them. Then to grant pardons and forgiuenes of sinnes to those that kill the infidels, is too much an infidels fact, seducing many people. For what greater seducing can there be, then to promise to a man forgiuenesse of sinnes, and afterward the ioy of heauen, for setting himselfe against Christs commandements in the killing of the infidels, that would not be conuerted to the faith: whereas Christ doth say, Not euery one that saith to me Lord, Lord, shal enter into the kingdome of heauen; but he that doth the will of my father which is in heauen, this person shall enter into the kingdome of heauen. Now the will of the father is, that wee should beleeue in his onely sonne Iesus Christ, and that we should obey him by obseruing of those things which hee himselfe hath commanded. Wherefore Christs precepts of patience must bee fulfilled. Warres, fightings, and contentions must be left, because they are contrarie to charitie.

He meaneth of those wars against infidels stirred vp and procured by the pope vpon blind superstition, to fight for the holy land, and not taken by princes in the necessary defence of themselues and of their country.

But peraduenture some man will thus reason against Christ: The saints by whom God hath wrought miracles, do allow warres against the faithfull people, as als against the infidels. And the holy kings were warriers, for whose sakes miracles also haue beene shewed, as well in their death, as also in their life, yea in the very time wherein they were at warfare. Wherefore it seemeth that their facts were good and lawfull. For otherwise, God would not haue done miracles for them.

Obiection.

To this againe I say; that we for no miracles must do contrarie to the doctrine of Christ; for in it can there be no errour: but in miracles there oftentimes chanceth errour, as it is plaine as well by the old as by the new Testament. God forbid then, that a Christian should for deceiueable miracles, depart from the infallible doctrine of Christ. In Exodus the 7. chapter it is manifest, how that the wicked wise men of the Egyptians, through the inchantments of Egypt, and certaine secret workings, threw their wands vpon the earth, which were turned into Dragons, euen as Aaron beforetime in the presence of Pharao threw his wand vpon the earth, which by the power of God was turned into a serpent. In the third of the Kings, the 22. chap. Micheas did see the Lord sitting vpon his throne, and all the host of heauen standing about him on the right hand, and on the left. And the Lord said, who shall deceiue Achab the king of Israel, that he may goe vp and bee slaine in Ramoth Gilead? And one said this way, and an other otherwise: now, there went forth a spirit, and stood before the Lord and said, I will deceiue him. To whom the Lord spake: by what meanes? And he said, I will goe forth, and bee a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And the Lord said, thou shalt deceiue him and preuaile, goe thy waies forth, and doe euen so. Thus also is it written in Deuteronomium: If there shall arise a prophet amongst you, or one that shall say he hath seene a dreame, and shall foretell a signe and a wonder: and if that shall come to passe that he hath spoken, and hee shall say vnto thee, let vs goe and follow strange Gods (whom thou knowest not) and let vs serue them: thou shalt not hearken vnto the words of that prophet or dreamer, for the Lord your God tempteth you, to make it knowne whether yee loue him or no, with all your heart and with all your soule.

an angell of light, therefore it is no great thing, though his ministers transforme themselues, as though they were the ministers of righteousnesse, whose end shall bee according to their workes.

Apoc. 13. In the Apocalypse the 13. chapter, John saw a beast ascending vp out of the earth, and it had two hornes like a lamb, but he spake like the dragon, and hee did all that the first beast could doe before him: and he caused the earth, and the inhabitants thereof to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed, and did great wonders, so that he made fire come downe from heauen on the earth, in the sight of men, and deceiued them that dwelt on the earth, by meanes of the signes which were permitted him to do in the sight of the beast.

Miracles are to be tried. By these things it is most manifest and plaine, that in miracles this manifold errour oftentimes happeneth through the working of the diuell, to deceiue the people withall. Wherefore, we ought not for the working of miracles, to depart from the commandements of God: I would to God that they which put confidence in miracles, would giue heede vnto the Matth. 7. word of Christ, in the 7. chap. of Matth. thus speaking: Many shall say vnto mée in that day, Lord, Lord, haue we not in thy name prophecied? and in thy name cast out diuels? and in thy name done many great workes? &c. I will professe vnto them, I neuer knew you, depart from me all yée which worke iniquitie.

The seruants of Christ discerned by working not of miracles, but of vertues. By this saying it is most manifest, that the seruants of Christ are not discerned by the working of miracles, but by the working of vertues, departing from iniquity, and obaying the commandements of God. Wherefore it is wonderfull, that any in this life dare presume to preuent the day of the iudgement of God, to iudge by meanes of miracles, that some are Saints whom men ought to worship, who peraduenture God will in the last iudgement condemne, saying: depart from mée all yée which worke iniquitie. If any man could here on earth iudge sinners to be condemned, then if this iudgement were certaine, Christ should not iudge the second time, and whatsoeuer such iudges bind in earth, the same ought to be bound in heauen. But if such a iudgement bée vncertaine, then it is perillous and full of deceit, when as by it men on earth may in stead of saints worship such as are damned with the fellowship of the diuels, and in prayer require their aide, who euen like as the diuels their companions are more readie and more of might to euill then to good, more to hurt then to profit. I wonder they marke not what Christ said, when his kinswoman came vnto him, desiring and requiring something of him, and saying: Command that these my two sonnes may sit, one vpon thy right hand and the other vpon thy left hand, in thy kingdome. But Jesus answering, said: Ye know not what yée aske, can ye drinke of the cup which I shall drinke of? they said vnto him, wee can. Hée said vnto them, Of my cup indeed yée shall drinke, but to sit at my right hand or at my left, it is not mine to giue, but vnto whom it is prepared for, of my father, Christ, being equall vnto the father according to his Godhead, exceeding all manner of men, according to his manhood, namely in goodnes and wisdome, said, to sit at my right hand, or at my left, is not mine to giue, but vnto whom it is prepared of my father. If it were none of his to giue to sit at the right hand, or at the left, &c. how then is it in the power of any sinfull man to giue vnto any man a seate either on the right hand, or on the left in the kingdome of God? which sinfull man knoweth not whether such haue any seat prepared for them of the father in his kingdome. They much extol themselues which exercise this iudiciall power in giuing iudgement; that there are some saints, which ought to bée honoured of men, by reason of the euidencie of dreames, or of deceitfull miracles, of which men they are ignorant whether God in his iudgement will condemne them or not, together with the diuels for euer to bee tormented. Let them beware, for the vnfallible truth saith, that euery one that exalteth himselfe, shall be brought low.

This proposition of Walter Brute, concerning the war of Christians not to be lawfull, is not to be taken vniuersally, but in particular case as he meaneth, which is this: that such warres allowed of the pope, not for the necessarie defence of publike peace, libertie, and safegard of our countries, or against publike iniuries offred: but only to goe and kill the infidels, because they beleeue not hauing no other cause: those warres of the pope he liketh not.

By these things is gathered, that the wars of Christians are not lawfull, for that by the doctrine and life of Christ they are prohibited, by reason of the euidencie of the deceitfull miracles of those, which haue made warres amongst the Christians, as well against the Christians, as also against the infidels. Because Christ could not erre in his doctrine, for as much as he was God: And forasmuch as heauen and earth shall passe away, but the words of Christ shall not passe away: Hee therefore which establisheth his lawes, allowing warres and the slaughter of men in the warre, as well of Christians, as of infidels, doth he not fulfille those things which are contrarie vnto the gospell and law of Christ? Therefore in this hée is against Christ, and therefore Antichrist: seducing the people, making men beléeue that to be lawfull and meritorious vnto them, which is expressedly prohibited by Christ.

¶ And thus much concerning the first part, touching peace and warre, wherein hee declareth Christ and the pope to bee contrarie, that is, the one to be giuen all to peace, the other all to warre, and so to proue in conclusion the pope to bee Antichrist. Where in the meane time thou must vnderstand (gentle reader) his meaning rightly: not that he so thinketh, no kind of warres among the Christians in any case to bee lawfull, for he himselfe before hath openly protested the contrary. But that his purpose is to proouue the pope in al his doings and teachings, more to be addicted to warre then to peace, yea in such cases, where is no necessitie of warre. And therein proueth hee the pope to be contrary to Christ, that is, to be Antichrist. Now he proceedeth further to the second part, which is of mercie.

Doctrine of christian mercie declared. In the which part he sheweth how Christ teacheth vs to bee mercifull, because mercie (as he saith) proceedeth from charitie, and nourisheth it. In which doctrine of mercie, he breaketh not the law of righteousnes, for hée himselfe by mercie hath clensed vs from our sinnes, from which wee could not by the righteousnesse of the law, be clensed. But whom he hath made cleane by mercie, vndoubtedly it behoueth those same to bee also mercifull. For in the fifth chapter of Matthew, hee saith: Matth. 5. Blessed are the mercifull, for they shall obtaine mercie. And againe in the sixth of Matthew: If yée forgiue vnto men their Matth. 6. sinnes, your father will forgiue vnto you your sinnes. And againe, in the seuenth chapter of Matthew: Judge not, and yee Matth. 7. shall not be iudged, condemne not, and ye shal not be condemned, and with what measure ye measure, with the same shall it be measured vnto you againe. In the 18. chap. of Math. Peter Matth. 18. asked the Lord, saying: Lord, how often shall my brother sinne against me, and I shall forgiue him, seuen times? Jesus said vnto him: I say not vnto thee seuen times, but seuentie times seuen times. Therefore is the kingdome of heauen likened vnto a certaine King, which would take account of his seruants. And when he had begun to recken, one was brought vnto him which ought him ten thousand talents: And because he had nothing wherewithall to pay, his master commanded him to be sold, and his wife and his children, and all that he had, and the debt to be paid. The seruant therefore fell downe, and besought him, saying, haue patience with me, and I will pay thee all. And the Lord had pitie on that seruant, and loosed him, and forgaue him the debt. But when that seruant was departed, he found one of his fellow seruants, which ought him an hundred pence, and hee laied hands on him, and tooke him by the throte, saying, pay me that thou owest: and his fellow fell downe, and besought him, saying; Haue patience with me, and I will pay thee all. But he would not, but went and cast him into prison, till hee should pay the debt. And when his other fellowes saw the things that were done, they were very sorie, and came and declared vnto their master all that was done: Then his master called him, and said vnto him: O thou vngracious seruant, I forgaue thée all that debt when thou desiredst me: Oughtest thou not then also to haue such pitie on thy fellow, euen as I had pitie on thée? And his lord was wroth, and deliuered him vnto the iaylers, till hee should pay all that was due vnto him. So likewise shall my heauenly father do vnto you, except yée forgiue from your hearts each one to his brother their trespasses.

Mercie and compassion necessary to all christians. By this doctrine it is most plaine and manifest, that euery Christian ought to bee mercifull vnto his brother, how often soeuer hee offendeth against him. Because we so often as we offend, do aske mercie of God. Wherefore, forasmuch as our offence against God is farre more grieuous then any offence of our brother against vs: it is plaine, that it behooueth vs to be mercifull vnto our brethren, if we will haue mercy at Gods hand. But contrarie to this doctrine of mercie, the Romish bishop maketh and confirmeth many lawes, which punish offenders, euen vnto the death. As it is plaine by the processe of the decrees, Distin. 23. quest. 5. It is declared and determined, 23. q. 5. that to kill men ex officio, that is, hauing authority and power so to doe, is not sinne. And againe: The souldier which is obedient vnto the higher power, and so killeth a man, is not guiltie of murther. And againe, He is the minister of the Lord, which smiteth the euill in that they are euill and killeth them. And many other such like things are throughout the whole processe of that question determined: That for certaine kinds of sinnes men ought by the rigour of the law to bee punished euen vnto death. But the foundation of their saying, they take out of the old law, in which for diuers transgressions were appointed diuers punishments. It is very much wonderfull vnto me, why that wise men being the authors and makers of lawes, do alwaies for the foundation of their sayings, look vpon the shadow of the law, and not the light of the gospell of Jesus Christ, for they giue not héed vnto the figure of perfection, nor yet vnto the perfection figured. Is it not written in the third of John, God sent not his son into the world to iudge the world, but to saue the world by him? In John the 8. chap. The scribes and pharisies bring in a woman taken in adulterie, and set her in the midst, & said vnto Christ: Master, euen now this woman was taken in adulterie. But in the law, Moses hath commanded vs to stone such, what saist thou therefore? This they said to tempt him, that they might accuse him. But Jesus stouped downe, and with his finger wrote on the ground. And while they continued asking him: hee lift himselfe vp, and said vnto them, let him that is among you without sinne, cast the first stone at her. And againe hee stouped and wrote on the ground. And when they heard it, they went out one by one, beginning at the eldest: so Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst. When Jesus had lift vp himselfe againe, he said vnto her: where be they which accused thée, hath no man condemned thée? She said, no man Lord. And Jesus said vnto her: Neither doe I condemne thée. Goe thy way and sinne now no more.

It is manifest by the scriptures, that Christ was promised he should be king of the Iewes, and vnto the kings pertained the iudgements of the law: but because he came not to iudge sinners according to the rigor of the law, but came according to grace, to saue that which was lost, in calling the sinner to repentance: it is most plaine, that in the comming of the law of grace, he would haue the iudgement of the law of righteousnesse to cease: for otherwise hée had dealt vniustly with the foresaid woman, forasmuch as the witnesses of her adulterie, bare witnes against her. Wherefore séeing the same king Christ was a Iudge, if it had been his will that the righteousnesse of the law should bee obserued, hée ought to haue adiudged the woman to death, according as the law commanded: which thing forasmuch as hee did not, it is most euident that the iudgements of the righteousnesse of the law are finished in the comming of the king, being king of the law of grace: euen as the sacrifices of the priesthod of Aaron, are finished in the comming of the priest, according to the order of Melchisedech, who hath offered himselfe vp for our sinnes: because, as it is before said, neither the righteousnes of the law, nor sacrifices for sinne, brought any man to perfection. Wherefore it was necessary that the same, by reason of their imperfection, should cease. And séeing among all the lawes of the world, the law of Moses was most iust, forasmuch as the author thereof was God, who is the most iust iudge: and by that law alwaies loke, what manner of iniurie one had done vnto another, contrarie to the commandement of the law, the like iniurie he should receiue for his transgression, according to the vpright iudgement of the law: As death for death, a blow for a blow, burning for burning, wound for wound, eie for eie, tooth for tooth, and most iust punishments were ordained according to the quantitie of the sinnes. But if this law of righteousnesse be cleane taken away in the comming of the law of grace, how then shall the law of the Gentiles remaine among Christians, which was neuer so iust? Is not this true, that in them, which are conuerted vnto the faith, there is no distinction betweene the Iew and the Grecian? For both are vnder sinne, and are iustified by grace in the faith of Christ, being called vnto faith and vnto the perfection of the Gospell.

Here is meant, and to be vnderstood, not what publike magistrates may do, in cases of righteousnes, but what ecclesiasticall persons according to the office of their profession should doe, in not reuenging by death, as they doe by offices. Whether the iudiciall law of Moses, fully (now after the comming of Christ) standeth in force, or not. The law of Moses of all lawes most iust.

If therefore the Gentiles conuerted, are not bound to play the Iewes, to follow the law of the Iewes: why should the Iewes conuerted, follow the lawes of the Gentiles which are not so good? * Wherefore it is to bee wondred at, why thefues are among Christians, for theft put to death, where after the law of Moses they were not put to death. Christians suffer adulterers to liue, Sodomits, and they which curse father and mother, and many other horrible sinners: And they which according to the most iust law of God were condemned to death, are not put to death: So wee neither kéepe the law of righteousnes giuen of God, nor the law of mercie taught by Christ.

* His maruell is not so much, why theeues are put to death: but why the Iudiciall law of Moses in this point is broken, and in other points is straitly kept. Marke his meaning.

Wherefore the law makers and Iudges, doe not giue héed vnto the foresaid sentence of Christ vnto the Scribes and Pharisies, who said: * He which amongst you is without sinne, let him cast the first stone at her. What is hee that dareth be so bold as to say hee is without sinne? Yea, and without a grieuous sinne, when as the transgression of the commandement of God is a grieuous sinne? And who can say that hee neuer transgressed this commandement of God, Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe: Or the other commandement which is of greater force: Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart, &c. Wherefore thou what soeuer thou art that iudgest thy brother vnto death, thinkest thou that thou shalt escape the iudgement of God, which peraduenture hast offended more grieuously then hath hee whom thou iudgest? How séest thou a mote in thy brothers eie, and séest not a beame in thine owne eie? Knowest thou not that with what measure thou measurest, that same shall bee measured to you againe? Doth not the scripture say: Vnto mee belongeth vengeance, and I will render againe, saith the Lord? How can any man say that these men can with charitie kéepe these iudgements of death? Who is it that offendeth God, and desireth of God iust iudgement for his offence? Hee desireth not iudgement, but mercie. If hee desire mercie for himselfe, why desireth he vengeance for his brother offending? How therefore loueth hee his brother as himselfe? Or how doest thou shew mercy vnto thy brother (as thou art bound by the commandement of Christ) which séekest the greatest vengeance vpon him that thou canst inferre vnto him? For death is the most terrible thing of all, and a more grieuous vengeance then death, can no man inferre. Wherefore, they which will kéepe charitie, ought to obserue the commandements of Christ touching mercie: and * they which liue in the law of charitie ought to leaue the law of vengeance and iudgements. Ought we to beléeue, that Christ in his comming, by grace abrogated the most iust law which he himselfe gaue vnto the children of Israel by Moses his seruant, and established the lawes of the Gentiles being not so iust to bee obserued of his faithfull? Doth not Daniel expounding the dreame of Nabuchodonozer the king concerning the image, whose head was of gold, the brest and armes of siluer, the bellie and thighes of brasse, the legges of iron, one part of the feet was of iron, and the other part of clay. Nabuchodonozer saw that a stone was cut out of a mountaine without hands, and strake the Image in his feet of iron and of clay, and brake them to péeces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brasse, the siluer and gold broken altogether, and became like the chaffe of the sommer flower, which is caried away by the wind, and there was no place found for them: and the stone that smote the image, became a great mountaine, & filled the whole earth. He applieth therefore 4. kingdoms vnto the foure parts of the image, namely; the kingdome of the Babylonians vnto the head of the gold; the kingdom of the Medes and Persians vnto the brest and armes of siluer; the kingdome of the Grecians vnto the belly and thighes of brasse: But the fourth kingdome, which is of the Romans, hee applieth vnto the feet and legges of iron. And Daniel addeth: In the dates of their kingdomes, shall God raise vp a kingdome which shall neuer be destroyed: And his kingdome shall not be deliuered vnto another, but it shall breake and destroy those kingdomes: and it shall stand for euer, according as thou sawest, that the stone was cut out of the mountaine without hands, and brake in péeces the clay and iron, brasse, siluer and gold. Séeing therefore it is certaine, that this stone signifieth Christ, whose kingdome is for euer: it is also a thing most assured, that he ought to raigne euery where, and to breake in péeces the other kingdomes of the world. Wherefore if terrestriall kings and the terrestriall kingdome of the Iewes, and their lawes and iudgements haue ceased by Christ the king, calling the Iewes vnto the perfection of his Gospell, namely, vnto Faith and Charitie: it is not to be doubted, but that the kingdome of the Gentiles which is more imperfect and their lawes, ought to cease among the Gentiles, departing from their Gentilitie vnto the perfection of the Gospell of Iesus Christ. For there is no distinction betweene the Iewes and Gentiles being conuerted vnto the faith of Christ, but all of them abiding in that eternall kingdome, ought to bee vnder one law of charitie and of vertue. Therefore they ought to haue mercie, and to leaue the iudgements of death, and the desire of vengeance. Wherefore they which do make lawes marke not the parable of Christ, saying: The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a man which sowed good séed in his field: but when men were on slépe, the enemy came and sowed tares in the midst of the wheate, and went his way. But when the herb was growne and brought forth fruite, then appeared the tares. And the seruants came vnto the good man of the house, and said vnto him, Lord, didst not thou sowe good séed in thy field? from whence then come these tares? And hee said vnto them: The enemie hath done this. And the seruants said vnto him: Wilt thou that wee goe and gather them vp? And hée said, no, lest peraduenture gathering vp the tares ye plucke vp the wheate by the rootes: Suffer them both to grow vntill the haruest, and in the time of the haruest, I will say vnto the haruest men, gather first the tares and bind them in bundels that they may bee burnt, but gather the wheate into my barne. Christ himselfe onely expoundeth this parable in the selfesame chapter, saying: Hée which soweth the good séed is the sonne of man, but the field is the world, and the good séed, those are the children of the kingdome. But the tares are the naughtie children. And the enemie which soweth them is the diuell. And the haruest is the end of the world, and the haruest men are the Angels. Euen as therefore the tares are gathered and burnt with fire, so shall it bee in the end of the world. The sonne of man shall send his Angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdome all offenders, and those which commit iniquitie, and shall put them into a furnace of fire, there shal be weeping and gnashing of téeth.

Sarie law done by magistrates.

The dreame of Nabuchodonozor, concerning the image expounded by Daniel.

The Iudaicall necessitie of those lawes, he meaneth to cease, notwithstanding Christian princes may borrow both out of those lawes, and out of all other, what they think good and expedient for their common weale.

By which plaine doctrine it is manifest, that Christ will haue mercie shewed vnto sinners, euen vnto the end of the world, and will haue them to remaine mingled with the good: Lest peraduenture when a man thinketh that hee doth right well, to take away the tares, he taketh away the wheate. For how great a sinner soeuer a man be, we know not whether his end shall be good, and whether in the end he shall obtaine mercy of God: Neither are we certaine of the time, wherein God will by grace iudge him whom we abhorre as a sinner. And peraduenture such a one shall more profit after his conuersion in the Church, then he who we thinke to be iust, as it came to passe in Paul. And if God iustifieth a man by grace (although at his end) why dareth thou be so bold to be his iudge, and to condemne him? Yea rather, although a man séeme to bee obstinate and hardned in his euill, so that he is not corrected by a secret correction (correct him before one alone;) if hée doe not receiue open correction being done before two or three witnesses, neither passeth vpon a manifest correction when his sinne is made knowne vnto the Church: Christ doth not teach to punish such a one with the punishment of death. Yea rather he saith, If hée harken not vnto the church, let him bee vnto thée as an Ethnicke and Publican. And Paul following this doctrine in the 1. Corinth. 5. chapter, saith: There goeth a common saying, that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not once named among the Gentils, that one should haue his fathers wife. And yee are puffed vp, and haue not rather sorrowed, that he which hath done this deed, might be

His purpose is not that no euill doer should be punished in a common wealth, but his relation is to the 23. & 5. aforesaid, noting causes of religion, which the pope and his prelats are wont to punish with death, taking many times for tares, that which indeed is pure wheat.

be put from among you. For I verilie as absent in bodie, but present in spirit, haue alreadie determined, as though I were present: that he which hath done this thing, when yee are gathered together and my spirit, in the name of our lord Iesus Christ, that such one by the power of our lord Iesus Christ, be deliuered vnto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may bee saued in the day of the Lord Iesus. Paul teacheth not to kill this man (as some gather by this text) but to separate him from the other faithfull, & so from Christ, which is the head of the church of the faithfull, and so is hee deliuered vnto Satan, which is separated from Christ: that the flesh may be killed, that is, that that carnall concupiscence, whereby he luxuriouslie lusted after the wife of his father, may bee destroyed in him, by such a separation, that the spirit may be saued; and not that his bodie should bee killed, as some say, as it is most manifest in the selfesame chapter, where hee saith: I wrote vnto you an epistle, that yee should not keepe companie with fornicators, and I meant not of all the fornicators of this world, either of the couetous, or extortioners or idolaters, for then must yee needs haue gone out of the world. But now I haue written vnto you, that ye keepe not companie together: if any that is called a brother be a fornicator, or couetous person, or a worshipper of images, either a cursed speaker, or drunkard, or an extortioner; with him that is such, see that ye eate not.

By which it is manifest, that Paul would haue the foresaid fornicatour separated from the fellowship of the faithfull: that his carnall concupiscence might be mortified, for the health of the spirit, and not that the bodie should be killed. Wherefore, they doe ill vnderstand Paul, which by this saying doe confirme the killing of men. And forsomuch as heresie is one of the most grieuous sinnes (for an heretike leadeth men in errors, whereby they are made to stray from faith, without which they cannot be saued) it doth most great hurt in the church.

Hereby it appeareth, that all his relation in this matter, toucheth only the cases of heresie and opinions in religion. By this it appeareth againe, that his respect is only to the pope and his prelates of the Church, and not to ciuill magistrates.

Further as concerning such a wicked man, Paul thus speaketh, flee from the man that is an heretike after the first and second correction, knowing that such a one is subuerted and sinneth, forsomuch as hee is by his owne iudgement condemned. Behold Paul teacheth not to kill this man, but with Christ to separate him from the fellowship of the faithfull. But some say, that Peter in the primitiue church slew Ananias and Saphira for their sinnes, wherefore they say it is lawfull for them, to condemne wicked men to death. We will declare in shewing the whole processe how falslie they speake in alleaging of Peter, for to iustifie their errour.

In the fourth chapter of the Acts it is written, that as many as were possessors of lands or houses, they sold them and offered the prices of that which they sold, and laid it before the feet of the apostles: and it was diuided vnto euery one as he had need thereof. But a certaine man called Ananias with Saphira his wife sold a peece of land, and kept backe a part of the price of the field, his wife being priuie vnto it, and bringing a certaine part thereof, he laid it at the feet of the Apostles. But Peter said vnto Ananias: Ananias, why hath Satan tempted thy heart that thou shouldest lie vnto the holy Ghost, to keepe backe a part of the price of the land? Did it not whilest it remained, remaine vnto thee: and being sold, was it not in thine owne power? why hast thou conceiued this thing in thine heart? Thou hast not lied vnto men, but vnto God. And when Ananias heard these words, hee fell downe and gaue vp the ghost, and great feare came on all them that heard these things. And the young men rose vp and tooke him vp, and caried him out and buried him. And it came to passe about the space of three houres after, that his wife came in being ignorant of that which was done. And Peter said vnto her, Tell me woman, sold ye the land for so much? And she said, yea for so much. But Peter said vnto her, why haue yee agreed together to tempt the spirit of the Lord? Behold, the feet of them which buried thy husband are at the doore, and shall carrie thee out. And straightway she fell downe before his feet, and gaue vp the ghost, and the young men entring in, found her dead, and they caried her out, and buried her by her husband. And great feare came on all the church, and all those which heard these things. It is maruell that any man that is wise, will say that by this processe Peter slew Ananias or his wife. For it was not his act but the act of God, who made a wedding to his son, and sent his seruants to call them, that were bidden vnto the wedding, and they would not come. The king then sent forth his seruants, to the outcorners of the high waies, to gather all that they could find, both good and euill: And so they did. And the mariage was full furnished with ghests: Then came in also the king to view and see them sitting. Among whom he perceiued there one sitting hauing not a wedding garment, and saith vnto him, friend how camest thou hither? And he being dumbe had not a word to speake. Then said the king to the seruitors, take and bind him hand and foot, and cast him into the outward darkenesse, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Many there be called, but few chosen, &c.

The example of Peter slaying Ananias and Saphira falslie wrested of the papists.

Peter not the cause of the death of Ananias and Saphira.

It is manifest, that this wedding garment is charitie, without which, because Ananias entred into the mariage of Christ, he was giuen to death, that by one many might be enformed to learne and vnderstand: that they which haue faith and not charitie, although they appeare to men to haue, yet it cannot be priuie to the spirit of God, that they do faine. Such there are no doubt, but they shall be excluded from the mariage of Christ, as we see this here exemplified in the death of Ananias and his wife by the hand of God, and not by the hand of Peter. And how should Peter then haue iudged Ananias (albeit he had iudged him) worthie of death by the rigor of the old lawe? For why? by the lawe he had not been guiltie of death, for that part, which they fraudulently and dissemblinglie did reserue to themselues. Yea, and if they had stolne as much from another man, which was greater: neither yet for his lie committed, he had not therefore by that law of iustice been found guiltie of death. Wherefore if he did not condemne him by the law of iustice, it appeareth that he condemned him by the law of grace and mercie, which he learned of Christ. And is consequently it followeth much more apparant, that Peter could not put him to death. Furthermore, to say that Peter put him to death by the meere motion of his owne will, and not by the authoritie of the olde lawe, nor by the new, it were derogatorie and slanderous to the good fame and name of Peter. But if Peter did kill him, why then doth the bishop of Rome which pretendeth to be successor of Peter, excuse himselfe and his priests from the iudgement of death against heretiques and other offenders, although they themselues be consenting to such iudgements done by lay men? For that which was done of Peter without offence, may reasonablie excuse him and his fellow priests from the spot of crime: Acts 5. It is manifest that there was another which did more greeuouslie offend then Ananias, and that Peter rebuked him with more sharpe words: but yet he commanded him not so to be put to death. For Simon Magus also remaining at Samaria, after that he beleeued and was baptised, he ioyned himselfe with Philip: And when he sawe that the holy spirit was giuen by the Apostles (laying their hands vpon men) hee offered them money, saying: Giue vnto me this power, that vpon whomsoeuer I shall lay my hand, he shall receiue the holy Ghost. Acts 5. To whom Peter answered: Destroyed be thou and thy money together: And for that thou supposest the gift of God to bee bought with money, thou shalt haue neither part nor fellowship in this doctrine. Thy heart is not pure before God; therefore repent thee of thy wickednesse, and pray vnto God that this wicked thought of thy heart may be forgiuen thee: for I perceiue thou art euen in the bitter gall of wickednesse and band of iniquitie. Behold here the grieuous offence of Simon, Peters hard and sharpe rebuking of him, and yet thereupon he was not put to death. Whereby it appeareth that the death of Ananias aforesaid, proceeded of God and not of Peter. Of all these things it is to be gathered, seeing the iudgements of death are not grounded vpon the expresse and plaine Scriptures, but onely vnder the shadow of the old law: that they are not to be obserued of Christians because they are contrarie to charitie. Ergo, the bishop of Rome approuing such iudgements alloweth those that are contrarie to the lawe and doctrine of Christ, as before is said of warres, where he approueth and iustifieth that which is contrarie to charitie. The order of priesthod, albeit it doth iustifie the iudgements to death of the laitie, whereby offenders are condemned to die, yet are they themselues forbidden to put in execution the same iudgements. The priests of the old law being vnperfect, when Iohn 8. late said vnto them concerning Christ (whom they had accused worthy death) take him vnto you, and according to your lawe iudge him, answered: that it was not lawfull for them to put to death any man.

The death of Ananias and his wife, what information it giueth to the Church.

Peter not the cause of Ananias death.

Whereby it appeareth that our priests being much more perfect, may not lawfully giue iudgement of death against any offenders: yet notwithstanding, they claime vnto them the power iudiciall vpon offenders: Because, say they, it belongeth vnto them to know the offences by the auricular confession of the offenders, and to iudge vpon the same being knowne, and to inioyne diuers penances vnto the parties offending, according to the quantitie of their offences committed, so that the sinner may make satisfaction, say they, vnto God for the offences which he neuer committed. And to confirme vnto them this iudiciall power, they alleage the scriptures in many places, wresting it to serue their purpose.

First they say that the bishop of Rome (who is the chiefe priest and iudge among them) hath full power and authoritie to remit sinnes. Whereupon they say, that hee is able fullie and wholle to absolue a man à pœna & culpa, so that if a man at the time of his death had this remission, hee should straightwaies flie vnto heauen without any paine of Purgatorie. The other Bishops (as they say) haue not so great authoritie. The priests constituted vnder euery Bishop, haue power, say they, to absolue the sinnes of them that are confessed, but not all kind of sinnes: because there are some grieuous sinnes reserued to the absolutions of the Bishops: and some againe to the absolution onely of the chiefe and high Bishop. They say also that it behoueth the offenders, for the necessitie of their soules health, to call to remembrance their offences, and to manifest the same with all the circumstances thereof, vnto the priest in auricular confession, supplying the place of God, after the maner of a Iudge: and afterward himbly to fulfill the the penance enioyned vnto him by the priest for his sinnes, except the said penance so enioyned, or any part thereof bee released by the superior power. All these things (say they) are manifestly determined, as well in the decrees, as decretals. And although these things haue not expressely their foundation in the plaine and manifest doctrine of Christ, nor any of the Apostles: yet the authors of the decrees and decretals concerning this matter, haue grounded the same vpon diuers places of the Scriptures, as in the processe of Christ in the Gospell of S. Mat. the 16. chapter. Whereupon they ground the popes power iudiciall, to surmount the powers of other priests, as where Christ said vnto his disciples: whom doe men say that I am? And they answered: some say that thou art John Baptist, some Elias, and some Jeremie, or one of the Prophets. To whom he said: but who say you that I am? Simon Peter making answere, said: Thou art Christ, the sonne of the liuing God. And Jesus answered and said vnto him: Blessed art thou Simon the sonne of Jonas, for flesh and bloud hath not opened this vnto thee: but my father which is in heauen. And I say vnto thee, that thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke will I build my church: and hell gates shall not preuaile against it. And I will giue thee the keies of the kingdome of heauen. And whatsoeuer thou shalt bind vpon earth, shall also be bound in heauen: and whatsoeuer thou shalt lose vpon earth, shall be loosed also in heauen.

Matth. 16.

The popes vsurped power falsly founded vpon Scriptures.

Out of this text of Christ, diuers expositions haue drawne diuers errors. For when Christ said: And I say vnto thee, that thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke will I build my Church: Some thereupon affirme, that Christ meant he would build his church vpon Peter by authoritie of that text, as it is written in the first part of the decrees, Dist. 19. cap. Ita dominus noster. The exposition hereof is ascribed to pope Leo: the errour whereof is manifestly knowne. For the church of Christ is not builded vpon Peter, but vpon the rocke of Peters confession, for that he said: Thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God; and for that Christ said singularlie vnto Peter: I will giue vnto thee the keies of the kingdome of heauen, and whatsoeuer thou shalt bind, &c. By this saying they affirme, that Christ gaue vnto Peter specially, as chiefe of the rest of the Apostles, a larger power to bind and to lose, then he did vnto the rest of the Apostles or disciples. And because Peter answered for himselfe and all the Apostles, not only confessing the faith which he had chiefly aboue the rest, but also the faith which the rest of the Apostles had euen as himselfe, by the reuelation of the heauenly father: it appeareth that as the faith of all the Apostles was declared by the answer of one: so by this that Christ said vnto Peter, whatsoeuer thou shalt bind, &c. is giuen vnto the rest of the Apostles the same power and equalitie to bind and to lose, as vnto Peter. Which Christ declareth in the gospell of S. Matthew, the 18. chapter, in these words: Verely I say vnto you, what things soeuer you shall bind vpon earth, shall be bound in heauen, and whatsoeuer you shal lose vpon earth, shall be also loosed in heauen. And further hee addeth: And againe, I say vnto you, That if two of you shall consent vpon earth, and request whatsoeuer it be: it shall bee granted vnto you of my father which is in heauen. For when two or three be gathered together in my name, I am there in the midst of them. And in John the twentith chapter, he saieth generally vnto them: Receiue ye my spirit. Whose sinnes yee shall remit, shall be remitted vnto them: and whose sinnes you shall retaine, shall be retained.

Dist. 9. cap. Ita Dominus noster.

The place of Christ giuing the keies to Peter, Mat. 16. aptly expounded.

Matth. 18.

John 20.

By this it appeareth, that the power to bind and to lose is not speciallie granted to Peter, as chiefe and head of the rest: and that by him the rest had their power to bind and to loose; for that the head of the body of the church is one, which is Christ, and the head of Christ is God. Peter and the rest of the Apostles, are the good members of the bodie of Christ, receiuing power and vertue of Christ: whereby they doe confirme and glew together the other members (as well the strong and noble, as the weake and vnable) to a perfect composition and seemelinesse of the bodie of Christ: that all honour from all parts and members may bee giuen vnto Christ as head and chiefe, by whom as head, all the members are gouerned. And therefore Paul, 1. Corinthians chap. 3. When one man saith, I hold of Paul, and another saith, I hold of Apollo, are yee not carnall men? For what is Apollo? what is Paul? The minister of him in whom ye haue beleeued, and hee as God giueth vnto euery man. I haue planted, Apollo hath watered, but God hath giuen the increase. Therfore neither he that planteth is any thing, neither hee that watereth, but God that giueth the increase. And Paul to the Gal. 2. God hath no respect of persons. Those that seemed to be great, and doe much, auailed or profited me nothing at all: But contrariwise, when they saw that the Gospell of the vncircumcision was committed vnto me, as the circumcisiō vnto Peter (for he that wrought with Peter in the Apostleship of the circumcision, wrought with me also among the Gentils) & when they knew the grace which was giuen me, Peter, Iames and Iohn straightwaies ioyned thēselues with me and Barnabas: ỹ we among the Gentils, and they in circumcision only might be mindfull of the poore, the which to doe, I was very carefull. Hereby it appeareth, that Paul had not his authoritie of Peter to conuert the Gentils, to baptise them, and to remit their sinnes, but of him which said vnto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the pricke. Here is Paul of the head of the Church, and not of Peter: By which head they say, that all the members are sustained and made liuely.

Christ only the head of the Church.

Galath. 2.

Acts 9.

The third errour.

The third error (which the authors of the canons conceiue in the said text of Christ) which was said to Peter: Vnto thee will I giue the keies, &c. is this: They say that in this sentence which was said to Peter of the authoritie to bind and lose, was meant: that as Christ gaue vnto Peter aboue all the rest of the Apostles a speciall, and as it were an excellent power aboue all the Apostles: euen so say they, hee gaue vnto the bishops of Rome (whom they call Peters chiefe successors) the same spectall power and authoritie, exceeding the power of all other bishops of the world.

Other Apostles had like power to bind and to loose as Peter had.

The first part of this similitude and comparison, doth appeare manifestly by the premisses to be erroneous: wherein is plainely shewed, that the other Apostles, had equall power with Peter to bind and lose. Wherefore consequently it followeth, the 2. part of the similitude, grounded vpon the same text, to be also erroneous. But and if the first part of the said similitude were truth, as it is not, yet the second part must needs be an errour, wherein is said, that the bishops of Rome are Peters chiefest successors. For although there be but one Catholicke Christian Church, of all the faithfull sort converted: yet the first part thereof, and first conuerted was of the Iewes, the second of the Grecks, and the third part was of the Romans or Latines. Whereof, the first part was most perfectly conuerted vnto the faith, for that they faithfully obserued the perfection of charitie, as appeareth in the Acts of the Apostles by the multitude of the beleeuers. They were of one heart, and one soule, neither called they any thing that they possessed their owne, but all was common amongst them.

Acts 2.

Rom. 1.

Hereupon Paul to the Romans: Salutation to euery beleeuer, first to the Iew, and to the Grecks after the Iewes. The Grecks were the second, and after the Iewes, next conuerted, and after them the Romans, taking their information of the Grecks, as appeareth by the Chronicles, although indeed some Romans were conuerted vnto the faith, by Peter and Paul. And as Christ said thrice vnto Peter, feed my sheepe, so Peter ruled these three Churches, as witnesseth the Chronicles. But first he reformed the church of the Iewes in Jerusalem and Judea, as appeareth by the testimonie of the Acts of the Apostles: For Acts 1. it is manifest how Peter standing vp amongst his brethren, spake vnto them concerning the election of an Apostle in the place of Judas the traitor, alleaging places vnto them out of the Scripture, that another should take vpon him his Apostleship. And so by lot was Matthias constituted in the 12. place of Judas, Acts 2. After that the holy Ghost was come vpon the Apostles, and that they spake with the tongues of all men, the hearers were astonied at the miracle. And some mocked them, saying: these men are full of new wine: But Peter stood vp and spake vnto them, saying: that it was fulfilled in them that was prophecied by Joel the Prophet, and hee preached Christ vnto the people, whom they of ignorance had put to death. To whom was a sauiour promised by the testimonie of the Prophets. And when they heard the words of Peter, they were pricked at the heart, saying vnto him and the rest of the Apostles: What shall wee then doe? And Peter said vnto them, repent: and let euery one of you be baptised in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of your sinnes, and yee shall receiue the holy Ghost. And there were ioyned vnto them the same day about three M. soules. And Acts 3. 4. 5. it appeareth, that Peter aboue the rest did those things which belonged to the ministerie of the Apostleship, as well in preaching as in answering. Whereupon some Chronicles say, that Peter gouerned the church of the Iewes at Jerusalem 4. yeeres, before he gouerned Antioche. And by the testimonie of Paul to the Gal. as before is said: The Gospell of the vncircumcision is committed to Paul, euen as the circumcision to Peter. And he that wrought with Peter in the Apostleship of circumcision, wrought with Paul amongst the Gentiles. Whereby it appeareth that the Church of the Iewes was committed to the gouernement of Peter. And in the processe of the Acts of the Apostles, it appeareth, that Peter beleeued that the faith of Christ was not to be preached vnto those Gentiles, which alwaies liued in vncleanesse of Idolatrie. But when Peter was at Ioppe, Cornelius a Gentile sent vnto him, that hee would come and shew him the way of life: But Peter (a little before the comming of the messengers of Cornelius) being in his chamber, after he had prayed, fel in a trance, and saw heauen open, and a certaine vessell descending euen as a great sheete, letten downe by foure corners from heauen to earth. In the which, were all manner of foure footed beasts, serpents of the earth, and foules of the aire. And a voice spake vnto him, saying: Arise Peter, kill and eate, and Peter said: Not so Lord, because I haue neuer eaten any common or vncleane thing. This was done thrice. And Peter descended (not knowing what the vision did signifie) and found the messengers of Cornelius.

Galath. 2.

As concerning the authoritie iudiciall of the clergie, many things are written thereof in the canons of decrees, greatlie to to be marueiled at, and farre from the truth of the Scripture. The authors of the canons say; That Christ gaue vnto the priests, power iudiciall ouer sinners that confessed their sinnes vnto them. And this they ground vpon the text of Christ: I will giue vnto thee the keies of the kingdome of heauen, and whatsoeuer thou loosest, &c. And these keies of the kingdome of heauen, they call the knowledge to discerne, and the power to iudge, which they say onely belongeth to the priests, except in case of necessitie; then they say a lay man may absolue a man from sinne. And as touching absolution, they say there are three things to be required on the sinners part: first, hearty contrition, whereby the sinners ought to bewaile their offending of God through sinnes: the second is, auricular confession, whereby the sinner ought to shew vnto the priest his sinnes, and the circumstances of them: the third is satisfaction, through penance inioined vnto him by the priest for his sinnes committed. And of his part that giueth absolution, there are two things (say they) to be required: that is to say, knowledge to discerne one sinne from another, whereby hee ought to make a difference of sinnes, and appoint a conuenient penance, according to the quantitie of the sinnes. The second is, authority to iudge, whereby he ought to inioine penance to the offender. And further they say, that he that is confessed, ought with all humilitie to submit himselfe to this authoritie, and wholly and voluntarily to doe those penances which are commanded him by the priest, except the said penance bee released by a superior power: for all priests (as they say) haue not equall authoritie to absolue sinnes. The chiefe priest, whom they call Peters successor, hath power fully and wholly to absolue. But the inferior priests haue power, some more, some lesse. The more as they are nere him in dignitie, the lesse as they are farther from the degree of his dignitie. All this is declared by processe in the decrees, but not by the expresse doctrine of Christ, or any of his Apostles. For although Christ absolued men from their sinnes, I doe not finde that hee did it after the manner of a iudge, but of a Sauiour. For Christ saith: God sent not his Sonne into the world to iudge sinners, but that the world should be saued by him: John chap. 3. Whereupon he spake vnto him whom he healed of the palsie: Behold thou art made whole, goe thy waies and sinne no more. And to the woman taken in adultery Christ said: Woman, where be thy accusers? hath no man condemned thee? who said, No man Lord. To whom then Jesus thus said: No more will I condemne thee, goe, and now sinne no more.

Iohn 3.

Iohn 5.

By which words and deeds of Christ, and many other places of the Scripture, it appeareth he was not as a iudge at his first comming, to punish sinners according to the quantitie of their offences: but that day shall come hereafter, wherein he shall iudge all men according to their works, as in Matth. 25. where he saith: When the Sonne of man shall come in his maiestie, and all his Angels with him; then shall hee sit vpon the seat of his maiestie, and all nations shall be gathered together before him, and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepheard separateth the sheep from the goats, &c. Neither shal he iudge alone, but his saints also with him. For he saith: You that haue followed me in this generation, when the sonne of man shal sit in the seat of his maiesty, shall sit also vpon twelue seats, and iudge the twelue tribes of Israel. If then sith Christ came not as a iudge, why doe the priests say that they supply the roome of Christ on earth, to iudge sinners according to the quantity of their offences? And yet not onely this, but it is more to be marueiled at, how the bishop of Rome dareth to take vpon him to be a iudge before the day of iudgement, and to preuent the time, iudging some to be saints in heauen, and to be honored of men, and some againe to be tormented in hell eternally with diuels: Would God these men would waigh the saying of S. Paul, 1. Corinth. 4. Iudge ye not before the time, vntill the comming of the Lord, who shall make light the darke and secret places, and disclose the secrets of hearts, and then euery one shall haue his praise. Let the bishop of Rome take heed, lest that in Ezekiel be spoken by him; Because thy heart is eleuate, & thou saidst vnto thy selfe I am God, I haue sitten in the seat of God, and in the heart of the sea; when thou art but man and not God. It is manifest, that the remission of sinnes principally belongeth to God, who through grace washeth away our sinnes. For it is said; The lambe of God taketh away the sinnes of the world. And vnto christians it belongeth as the ministers of God. For in the 20. of John Christ saith: Receiue vnto you the holy Ghost: whose sinnes you shall remit, they are remitted vnto them; and whose sinnes you shall retaine, they are retained. Seeing therefore that all christians that are baptised in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the holy Ghost, receiue the holy Ghost; it appeareth that they haue power giuen to them of Christ, to remit sinnes ministerially. Hath not euery christian authoritie to baptise? and in the baptisme all the sinnes of the baptised are remitted. Ergo, they that doe baptise, doe remit sinnes. And thus ministerially all such haue power to remit sinnes. Therefore, to say that one man hath more authority to remit sinnes then all other christians haue, is too much to extoll him, and to place him euen in Gods seat. I pray you how are the sinnes remitted him that is baptised of the priest (yea although he were of the pope himselfe baptised) more then if he were baptised of another christian? Surely I thinke no more. For seeing that before baptisme he remaineth a sinner, and of the kingdome of the diuell by sinne, after baptisme he entreth into the kingdome of heauen; it appeareth that he that doth baptise, openeth the gate of the kingdome of heauen to him that is baptised: the which he cannot doe, without the keies of the kingdome of heauen. Therefore euery one that doth baptise, hath the keies of the kingdome of heauen, as well the inferior priest as the pope. But these keies are not the knowledge to discerne, and power to iudge, because these doe nothing auaile in baptisme: Ergo, there are other keies of the kingdome of heauen then these. Wherefore it seemeth, that the authors of the canons erred in mistaking the keies, whereupon they ground the authority iudiciall of the clergy.

Iohn 20.

The saints shal iudge with Christ.

Matth. 25.

1. Cor. 4.

The keies of the kingdome of heauen.

The keies mistaken in the popes canons.

Now a little error in the beginning granted, groweth to great inconuenience in the end. Wherefore in my iudgement it seemeth, that the keies of the kingdome of heauen are faith and hope. For by faith in Jesus Christ, and hope in him for the remission of sinnes, we enter the kingdome of heauen. This faith is a spirituall water, springing from Jesus Christ the fountaine of wisdome, wherein the soule of the sinner is washed from sinne. With this water were the faithfull Patriarks baptised before the law, and the faithfull people of the Hebrewes, and the faithfull christians after the law. Wherefore I greatly marueil of that saying in the Decrees, which is ascribed vnto Augustine: that little children that are not baptised, shall bee tormented with eternall fire, although they were borne of faithfull parents that wished them with all their hearts to haue been baptised: as though the sacrament of baptisme in water, were simply necessary to saluation, when nevertheless many christians are saued without this kinde of baptisme, as Martyrs. If that kind of Sacrament bee not necessarie, to one of elder yeeres, how then is it necessary to an infant borne of the faithfull? Are not all baptised with the holy Ghost and with fire? But yet not with materiall fire: no more is the lotion of water corporally necessary to wash away sinnes, but onely spirituall water, that is to say, the water of faith. Are not the quicke baptised for them that are dead: as witnesseth Paul 1. Corinth. 15. If the dead arise not at all, why are the liuing then baptised for them? If the liuing be baptised for the dead, why then is not the infant saued by the baptisme of his parents; seeing the infant it selfe is impotent at the time of death, and not able to require baptisme? Christ saith; He that beleeueth and is baptised, shall be saued. Hee saith not, he that is not baptised: but hee that beleeueth not shall be damned. Wherefore in the 12. chap. of John, Christ saith; I am the resurrection and life; he that beleeueth in me, yea although he were dead, shall liue. The faith therefore is necessary which the infant hath in his faithfull parents, although he be not washed with corporall water. How then is the infant damned and tormented with eternall fire? Were not they that were before the comming of Christ, and dead before his death by a thousand yeeres, saued also by his death and passion? All that beleeued in him, were baptised in his bloud, and so were saued and redeemed from sinne and the bondage of the diuell, and made partakers of the kingdome of heauen. How then in the time of grace shall the infant be damned that is borne of faithfull parents, that doe not despise, but rather desire to haue their children baptised? I dare not consent to so hard a sentence of the decrees; but rather beleeue, that hee is saued by vertue of the passion of Christ in faith of his faithfull parents, and the hope which they haue in Christ. Which faith and hope, are the keies of the heauenly kingdome. God were not iust and mercifull, if hee would condemne a man that beleeueth not in him, except he shewed vnto him the faith which he ought to beleeue. And therefore Christ saith: If I had not come and spoken vnto them, sinne could not haue beene laid vnto their charge; but now they haue no excuse of sinne. Therefore seeing the faith of Christ is not manifest vnto the infant departing before baptisme, neither hath he denied it; how then shall he be damned for the same? But if God speaketh inwardly by way of illumination of the intelligence of the infant, as he speaketh vnto Angels; who then knoweth (saue God alone) whether the infant receiueth or not receiueth the faith of Christ?

Faith and hope be the keies of heauen.

Children departing before baptisme not condemned.

What is he therefore that so rashly dare take vpon him to iudge the infants begotten of faithfull parents, dying without baptisme, to be tormented with eternall fire? Now let vs consider the three things which the canons of decrees affirme to be requisite for the remission of the sinnes of those that sinne after baptisme: that is to say, contrition of heart, auricular confession, and satisfaction of the deed through penance enioined by the priest for the sinnes committed. I cannot finde in any place in the Gospell, where Christ commanded that this kinde of confession should be done vnto the priest: nor I cannot finde that Christ assigned any penance vnto sinners for their sinnes, but that he willed them to sinne no more. If a sinner confesse that hee hath offended God through sinne, and sorroweth heartily for his offences, minding no more hereafter to sinne; then is he truly repentant for his sinne, and then is he conuerted vnto the Lord. If hee shall then humbly and and with good hope craue mercy at God and remission of his sinnes: what is he that can let God to absolue that sinner from his sinne? And as God absolueth a sinner from his sinne, so hath Christ absolued many, although they confessed not their sinnes vnto the priests, and although they receiued not due penance for their sinnes. And if Christ could after that manner once absolue sinners; how is hee become now not able to absolue? Except some man will say that he is aboue Christ, and that his power is minished by the ordinances of his owne lawes. How were sinners absolued of God in the time of the Apostles, and alwaies heretofore, vnto the time that these Canons were made? I speake not these things as though confession to priests were wicked; but that it is not of necessitie requisite vnto saluation. I beléeue verily that the confession of sinnes vnto good priests, and likewise to other faithfull christians, is good, as witnesseth Saint James the Apostle: Confesse ye your selues one to another, and pray yee one for another, that ye may be saued: for the continuall praier of the iust auaileth much. Elias was a man that suffered many things like vnto you, and he praied that it should not raine vpon the earth, and it rained not in three yéeres and six months. And againe he praied, and it rained from heauen, and the earth yéelded forth her fruit. This kind of confession is good, profitable and expedient: for if God peraduenture heareth not a mans own praier, he is helped with the intercession of others. Yet neuertheless the praiers of the priests séeme too much to bee extolled in the decrées, where it treateth of penitence, and that saying is ascribed vnto pope Leo, Cap. multiplex misericordia Dei, &c. And it followeth: So is it ordained by the prouidence of Gods diuine will, that the mercy of God cannot be obtained but by the praier of the priests, &c. The praier of a good priest doth much auaile a sinner, confessing his faults vnto him. The counsell of a discréet priest is very profitable for a sinner, to giue the sinner counsell to beware hereafter to sinne, and to instruct him how he shall punish his body by fasting, by watching, and such like acts of repentance, that hereafter hee may be better preserued from sinne.

Iames 5.

De pœnit. d. ſt. 1. cap. Multiplex misericordia dei.

After this manner I esteéme confession to priests very expedient and profitable to a sinner. But to confesse sinnes vnto the priest, as vnto a iudge, and to receiue of him corporall penance for a satisfaction vnto God for his sinnes committed; I sée not how this can be founded vpon the truth of the scripture: For before the comming of Christ, no man was sufficient or able to make satisfaction vnto God for his sinnes, although he suffered neuer so much penance for his sinnes. And therefore it was néedfull that he that was without sinne, should be punished for sinnes, as witnesseth Esay, chap. 53. where he saith: He tooke our griefes vpon him, and our sorrowes he bare. And againe: He was wounded for our iniquities, and vexed for our wickednesse. And againe: The Lord put vpon him our iniquitie. And againe: For the wickednes of my people haue I stricken him. If therefore Christ through his passion, hath made satisfaction for our sinnes, whereas we our selues were vnable to doe it; then through him haue we grace and remission of sins. How can we say now, that we are sufficient to make satisfaction vnto God, by any penance inioined vnto vs by mans authority, séeing that our sins are more grieuous after baptisme, then they were before the comming of Christ? Therefore, as in baptisme the paine of Christ in his passion was a full satisfaction for our sins: euen so after baptisme, if we confesse that we haue offended, and be heartily sory for our sins, and mind not to sinne againe afterwards.

1. Iohn 1.

Hereupon John writeth in his first epistle, chap. 1. If we say we haue no sinne, wee deceiue our selues, and the truth is not in vs. If we confesse our sinnes, God is faithfull and iust, hee will remit them, and clense vs from all our iniquities. If we say we haue not sinned, wee make him a lier, and his word is not in vs. My welbeloued children, this I write vnto you that ye sinne not: but if any man sinne, wee haue an aduocat with the Father Iesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sinnes, and not for our sinnes onely, but for the sinnes of the whole world. Therefore we ought to confesse our selues chiefly vnto God euen from the heart, for that he chiefly doth remit sinnes, without whose absolution little auaileth the absolution of man. This kind of confession is profitable and good. The authors of the canons say, that although auricular confession made vnto the priest, bee not expressly taught by Christ, yet (say they) it is taught in that saying which Christ said vnto the diseased of the leprosie, whom hee commanded: Go your waies, and shew your selues vnto the priests: because, as they say, the law of clensing leapers, which was giuen by Moyses, signified the confession of sinnes vnto the priest. And whereas Christ commanded the lepers to shew themselues vnto the priests, they say that Christ meant, that those that were vncleane with the leprie of sinne, should shew their sinnes vnto the priests by auricular confession. I maruell much at the authors of the canons; for euen from the beginning of their decrées vnto the end, they ground their sayings vpon the old law, which was the law of sinne, and death, and not (as witnesseth Paul) vpon the words of Christ, which are spirit and life. Christ saith: The words which I speake vnto you, are the spirit and life. They ground their sayings in the shadow of the law, and not in the light of Christ. For euery euill doer hateth the light, and commeth not into it, that his déeds be not reproued: but he that doth the truth, commeth into the light, that his works may be openly séene, because they are done in God: Ioh. 3.

Confession vnto God.

Auricular confession not truly grounded vpon the scripture. Luke 17.

The authors of the canon law reproued.

Iohn 3.

Now let vs passe to the words that Christ spake to the leper: Lord if thou wilt, thou canst make me cleane. And Iesus stretching forth his hand, touched him, saying: I will, be thou cleane: and straightwaies hee was clensed of his leprey. And Iesus said vnto him: See thou tell no man, but goe and shew thy selfe to the priests, and offer the gift that Moyses commanded for a witnesse of these things. This Gospell witnesseth plainly, that the diseased of the lepers were clensed onely by Christ, and not by the priests; neither did Christ command the leper to shew himselfe vnto the priests, for any helpe of clensing that hee should receiue of the priests: but to fulfill the law of Moyses, in offering a sacrifice for his clensing, and for a testimonie vnto the priests, who alwaies of enuie accused Christ as a transgressor of the law. For if Christ after hee had clensed the leper, had licensed him to communicat with others that were cleane, before he had shewed himselfe clensed vnto the priests, then might the priests haue accused Christ as a transgressor of the law: because it was a precept of the law, that the leper after he was clensed, should shew himselfe vnto the priests. And they had signes in the booke of the law, whereby they might iudge whether he were truly clensed or no. And if hee were clensed, then would the priests offer a gift for his clensing: and if hee were not clensed, then would they segregate him from the company of others that were cleane. Séeing euery figure ought to be assimuled vnto the thing that is figured; I pray you then what agréement is there betweéne the clensing of lepers by the law, and the confession of sinnes? By that law the priest knew better whether hee were leprous then hee himselfe that had the leprey. In confession, the priest knew not the sinnes of him that was confessed, but by his own confession. In that law the priest did not clense the leprous. How now therefore ought the priests to clense sinners from their sinne, and that without them they cannot bee clensed? In this law the priest had certaine signes, by the which hee could certainly know whether a man were clensed from his leprey or not. In confession, the priest is not certaine of the clensing of sinnes, because he is ignorant of his contrition. Hee knoweth not also whether he will not sinne any more; without the which contrition and granting to sinne no more, God hath not absolued any sinner. And if God hath not absolued a man, without doubt then is he not made cleane. And how then is confession figured vnder that law? Doubtlesse so it séemeth to me (vnder the correction of them that can iudge better in the matter) that this law beareth rather a figure of excommunication, and reconciliation of him that hath béen obstinat in his sinne, and is reconciled againe. For so it appeareth by the processe of the Gospell, that whenas the sinner doth not amend for the priuat correction of his brother, nor for the correction of two or three, neither yet for the publike correction of the whole church; then is he to be counted as an Ethnicke and a publican, and as a certaine leper to be auoided out of the company of all men. Which sinner notwithstanding, if he shall yet repent, is then to be reconciled, because he is then clensed from his obstinacie.

Luke. 5

The story of the lepers expounded, to make nothing for auricular confession.

The clensing of the leprey, and the clensing of the priest in auricular confession agree not.

But he which pretendeth himselfe to be the chiefe vicar of Christ, and the high priest, saith; that hee hath power to absolue A pœna & culpa. Which I doe not finde how it is founded in the Scripture, but that of his owne authority hee inioyneth to sinners penance for their sinnes. And grant that from their sinnes hee may well absolue them; yet from the paine (which they call à pœna) he doth not simply absolue, as in his indulgences he promiseth. But if hee were in charitie, and had such power as he pretendeth, he would suffer none to lie in purgatory for sinne, forsomuch as that paine doth farre exceed all other paine which here wee suffer. What man is there being in charitie, but if hee see his brother to be tormented in this world, if he may, he will helpe him and deliuer him? Much more ought the pope then, to deliuer out of paines of purgatory, indifferently as well rich as poore. And if he sell to the rich his indulgences, double wise, yea triple wise he seduceth them. First, in promising them to deliuer them out of the paine from whence he doth not, neither is able to deliuer them: and so maketh them falsly to beléeue that which they ought not to beléeue. Secondly, he deceiueth them of their mony, which he taketh for his indulgences. Thirdly, hee seduceth them in this, that hee promising to deliuer them from paine, doth induce them into grieuous punishment indeed, for the heresie of simonie, which both of them doe commit, and therefore are worthy both of great paine to fall vpon them: for so we reade, that Iesus cast out buyers and sellers out of his Temple. Also Peter said vnto Simon, the first author of this heresie: Thy money, said hee, with thée bee destroied, for that thou hast thought, the gift of God to bee possessed for money. Moreouer, whereas Christ saith, Freely you haue receiued, freely giue: and whereas contrary the pope doth sell that thing, which he hath taken: what doubt is there, but that he doth grieuously deserue to be punished, both he that selleth and he that buyeth: for for the crime of simony which they commit. Diuers and besides, by many reasons and authorities of the scripture it may be proued, that he doth not absolue a man, contrite for his sinne, although he doe absolue him from the guilt.

The pope can absolue none from punishment.

Deadly sinne and debt. The pope saith, he can remit the debt to God: and yet cannot remit the debt to man.

But this marueileth me, that he in his indulgences promiseth to absolue men from all manner of deadly sinnes, and yet cannot absolue a man from debt: forasmuch as the debt which we owe to God, is of much more greater importance then is the debt of our brother. Wherefore if he be able to remit the debt due to God, much more it should seeme that he is able to forgiue the debt of our brother.

The pope harder to pardon a priest leauing his mattens vnsaid, then for breaking the commandement of God.

Another thing there is that I marueil at: for that the pope sheweth himselfe more strait in absoluing a priest for not saying, or negligently saying his mattens, then for transgressing the commandement of God; considering that the transgression of the commandement of God, is much more greeuous then the breach of mans commandement.

Absolution to be sought at the hands of God only.

For these and many other errors concurring, and in this matter of the popes absolutions, blessed be God, and honour be vnto him for the remission of our sinnes. And let vs firmely beleeue and know, that he doth and will absolue vs from our sinnes, if we be sorie from the bottome of our hearts that wee haue offended him, hauing a good purpose and will to offend him no more. And let vs bee bold to resort vnto good and discreet priests, who with wholsome discretion and sound counsell can instruct vs, how to auoid the corruption of sinne hereafter. And which, because they are better then wee, may pray to God for vs; whereby wee may both obtaine more soner the remission of our sinnes past, and also may learne better how to auoid the danger of sinne to come. Notes.

And thus much concerning the iudgement and doctrine of this Walter for Christian patience, charitie and mercy: which as they be true and infallible notes and markes of true Christianity; so the said Walter Brute making comparison herein betweene Christ and the pope, goeth about purposely to declare and manifest, whereby all men may see, what contrariety there is betweene the rule of Christs teaching, and the proceedings of the Pope; betweene the examples and life of the one, and the examples of the other. Of which two, as one is altogether giuen to peace: so is the other on the contrary side as much disposed to warres, murther, and bloudshed, as is easie to be seen; whoso looketh not vpon the outward shews and pretenced words of these Romish popes, but aduising & considering the inward practises and secret works of them, shall easilie espie vnder the vizour of peace, what discord and debate they worke. Who bearing outwardly the meeke hornes of the Lambe mentioned in the Apocalypse, within doe beare the bowels of a wolfe, full of cruelty, murther, and bloudshed. Which if any do thinke to be spoken of me contumeliously, would God that man could proue as well the same to be spoken of me not truly. But truth it is, I speake it sincerely, without affection of blind partialitie, according to the truth of histories both old and new. Thus vnder in Dei nomine, Amen, how vnmercifully doth the pope condemne his brother! And while he pretendeth not to be lawfull for him to kill any man, what thousands hath he killed of men? And likewise in this sentence, pretending in visceribus Iesu Christi, as though he would be a mediator to the magistrate for the party: yet indeed will he be sure to excommunicat the magistrat, if he execute not the sentence giuen. Who be true heretikes, the Lord when hee commeth shall iudge. But giue them to be heretikes, whom he condemneth for heretikes: yet what bowels of mercy is here, where is nothing but burning, faggoting, drowning, prisoning, chaining, famishing, racking, hanging, tormenting, threatning, reuiling, cursing, and oppressing, and no instructing, nor yet indifferent hearing of them, what they can say? The like cruelty also may in their wars appeare, if we consider how pope Vrban 5. beside the racking and murdering of seuen or eight cardinals, set vp Henry Spencer bishop of Norwich, to fight against the French pope. Innocentius 4. was in war himselfe against the Apulians. Likewise Alexander 4. his successour, stirred vp the sonne of king Henry 3. to fight against the sonne of Frederike 2. emperour, for Apulia. Boniface 8. moued Albertus (which stood to be emperour) to driue Philip the French king out of his realme. Gregorius 9. excited Ludouicke the French king three sundry times, to mortall warre against the earle Raimundus and citie of Tholouse, and Auinion, where Lewes the said French king died. Honorius 3. by strength of warre many waies resisted Fredericke 2. and sent out 35. gallies against the coasts of the emperors dominions. The same pope also besieged Ferraria: to passe ouer the warre at Ticinum; with many other battels and conflicts of popes against the Romans, Venetians, and diuers other nations. Innocentius 3. set vp Philip the French king to warre against king Iohn. What stirre pope Gregory the 7. otherwise named Hildebrand, kept against the emperor Henricus 4. it is not vnknowne. And who is able to recite all the warres, battels, and fields fought by the stirring vp of the pope? These with many other like examples considered, did cause this Walter Brute to write in this matter so as he did, making yet thereof no vniuersall proposition: but that Christian magistrates in case of necessitie might make resistance, in defence of publike right. Now hee proceedeth further to other matter of the Sacrament.

Examples, declaring what wars haue bin stirred vp by popes.

Touching the matter (saith hee) of the Sacrament of the body and bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ, diuers men haue diuers opinions, as the learned doe know. As concerning my iudgement vpon the same, I firmely beleeue whatsoeuer the Lord Iesus taught implicitely or expressly to his Disciples and faithfull people to be beleeued. For he is (as I beleeue and know) the true bread of God which descended from heauen, and giueth life to the world. Of which bread whosoeuer eateth, shall liue for euer: as it is in the sixth of John declared. Before the comming of Christ in the flesh, although men did liue in body, yet in spirit they did not liue; because all men were then vnder sinne, whose soules thereby were dead: from the which death, no man by the law, nor with the law was iustified: For by the workes of the law shal no flesh be iustified: Galat. 2. And againe in the same epistle, cap. 3. That by the law no man is iustified before God it is manifest: for the iust man shall liue by his faith: the law is not of faith; but whosoeuer hath the workes thereof, shall liue in them. And againe in the same chapter: If the law had beene giuen, which might haue iustified, then our righteousnesse had come by the law. But the Scripture hath concluded all vnder sinne, that the promise might bee sure by the faith of Iesu Christ to all beleeuers. Moreouer, before that faith came, they were kept and concluded all vnder the law, vntill the comming of that faith which was to bee reuealed. For the law was our schoolemaster in Christ Iesu, that we should bee iustified by faith. Also the said Paul, Rom. 5. saith: That the law entred in the meane time, whereby that sinne might more abound. Where then sinne hath more abounded, there hath also grace superabounded: that like as sinne hath raigned vnto death, so that grace might raigne also by righteousnesse vnto eternall life, through Iesus Christ our Lord. Whereby it is manifest, that by the faith which we haue in Christ, beleeuing him to be the true Sonne of God, which came downe from heauen to redeeme vs from sinne: we are iustified from sinne, and so doe liue by him, which is the true bread and meat of the soule. And the bread which Christ gaue, is his flesh giuen for the life of the world: John 6. For hee being God, came downe from heauen; and being truly carnall man, did suffer in the flesh for our sinnes, which in his diuinitie he could not suffer. Wherefore like as wee beleeue by our faith that hee is true God: so must wee also beleeue, that he is a true man. And then doe wee eat the bread of heauen, and the flesh of Christ. And if we beleeue that he did voluntarily shed his bloud for our redemption, then doe we drinke his bloud.

Gal. 2. Iustification by faith, and not by the law.

Rom. 5.

John 6.

True eating of Christ is true believing in him.

And thus except we eat the flesh of the Sonne of man, and shall drinke his bloud, wee haue not eternall life in vs; because the flesh of Christ verily is meate, and his bloud is drinke indeed: and whosoeuer eateth the flesh of Christ, and drinketh his bloud, abideth in Christ and Christ in him: John chap. 6. And as in this world the soules of the faithfull liue, and are refreshed spiritually with this heauenly bread, and with the flesh and bloud of Christ; so in the world to come, the same shall liue eternally in heauen, refreshed with the deitie of Iesus Christ, as touching the most principall part thereof, that is to wit, intellectum: for as much as this bread of heauen, in that it is God, hath in it selfe all delectable pleasantnesse. And as touching the intelligible powers of the same (as well exterior as interior) they are refreshed with the flesh (that is to say) with the humanitie of Iesus Christ; which is as a Queene standing on the right hand of God, decked with a golden robe of diuers colours: for this queene of heauen alone by the word of God, is exalted aboue the company of all the angels; that by her, all our corporall power intellectiue, may fully be refreshed, as is our spirituall intelligence, with the beholding of the deitie of Iesus Christ, and euen as the Angels shall wee bee fully satisfied. And in the memory of this double refection, present in this world and in the world to come, hath Christ giuen vnto vs (for eternall blessednesse) the sacrament of his body and bloud, in the substance of bread and wine: as it appeareth in Matthew chapter 26. As the Disciples sate at supper, Iesus tooke bread and blessed it, brake it, and gaue it vnto his disciples, and said: Take, eate, this is my body. And he tooke the cup, and thanked, and gaue it them, saying: Drinke ye all of this, this is my bloud of the new Testament, which shall bee shed for many for the remission of sinnes. And Luke in his Gospell, chapter 22. of this matter thus writeth: And after hee had taken the bread, hee gaue thanks, he brake it, and gaue it vnto them, saying: This is my body which shall be giuen for you: doe you this in my remembrance. In like manner he tooke the cup after supper, saying: This is the cup of the new Testament in my bloud, which shall bee shed for you. That Christ said, this my body, in shewing to them the bread: I firmely beleeue, and know that it is true: That Christ (forasmuch as he is God) is the very truth it selfe; and by consequence, all that hee saith is true. And I beleeue that the very same was his body, in such wise as he willed it to be his body: for in that he is almightie, he hath done whatsoeuer pleased him. And as in Cane of Galile, he he changed the water into wine, really: so that after the transubstantiation, it was wine and not water. So when he said; This is my body: if he would haue had the bread really to be transubstantiated into his very body, so that after this changing it should haue bẽn his naturall body, and not bread as it was before; I know that it must nẽds haue bẽn so. But I finde not in the Scripture, that his will was to haue any such reall transubstantiation or mutation.

And as the Lord God omnipotent in his perfection essentiall being the Sonne of God, doth exceed the most pure creature, and yet when it pleased him, hee toke vpon him our nature, remaining really God as he was before, and was really made man; so that after this assumpting of our substance, he was really very God and very man: euen so, if he would when he said; This is my body: hee could make this to be his body really, the bread still really remaining as it was before. For lesse is the difference of the essence, betwẽn bread and the body of a man, then betwẽne the deitie and humanitie, because that of the bread, is naturally made the body of a man. Of the bread is made blood; of the blood, naturall seed; and of naturall seed, the naturall substance of man is ingendred. But in that that God became man; this is an action supernaturall. Wherefore hee that could make one man to be very God and very man; could, if hee would, make one thing to be really very bread, and his very body. But I doe not finde it expressly in the Scripture, that he would any such Identitie or coniunction to be made. And as Christ said, I am very bread; not changing his essence or being into the essence or substance of bread, but was the said Christ which he was before really, and yet bread by a similitude or figuratiue speech: so if he would, it might be, that when he said, This is my body; that this should really haue bẽne the bread as it was before, and sacramentally or memorially to be his body. And this seemeth vnto me, most neerly to agree to the meaning of Christ, forasmuch as he said; Doe this in remembrance of me. Then forasmuch as in the Supper it is manifest, that Christ gaue vnto his disciples the bread of his body which he brake, to that intent to eat with their mouthes: in which bread, he gaue himselfe also vnto them, as one in whom they should beleeue (as to be the food of the soule) & by that faith they should beleeue him to be their Sauiour which toke his body, wherein also he would it to be manifest, that he would redeeme them from death: so was the bread eaten with the disciples mouthes, that hee being the true bread of the soule, might be in spirit receiued and eaten spiritually by their faith, which beleeued in him.

Bread by similitude.

Bread substantially, and the body sacramentally.

The bread which in the disciples mouthes was chewed, from the mouth passed to the stomacke. For as Christ saith; Whatsoeuer commeth to the mouth, goeth into the belly, and from thence into the priuie: Matth. chap. 15. But that true and very bread of the soule, was eaten of the spirit of the disciples, and by faith entred their mindes, and abode in their intrailes through loue. And so the bread broken, seemeth vnto me to be really the meat of the body, and the bread which it was before; but sacramentally to bee the body of Christ, as Paul, 1. Corinth. 10. The bread which we breake, is it not the participation of the body of the Lord? So the bread which wee breake, is the participation of the Lords body. And it is manifest, that the heauenly bread is not broken, neither yet is subiect to such breaking. Therefore Paul calleth the materiall bread which is broken, the body of Christ which the faithfull are partakers of. The bread therefore changeth not to his essence, but is bread really, and is the body of Christ sacramentally. Euen as Christ is the very vine, abiding really and figuratiuely the vine: so the temple of Ierusalem was really the materiall temple; and figuratiuely it was the body of Christ: because he said; Destroy you this temple, and in three daies I will repaire the same againe. And this spake he of the temple of his body: whereas others vnderstood it to bee the materiall temple, as appeared by their answere. For said they, 47. yeeres hath this temple bẽne in building, and wilt thou build it vp in three daies?

The bread which the Lord gaue entreth not into the bodies, but the body which he gaue entreth into the minds of the disciples. Paul calleth it material bread.

Note Reader.

Euen so may the consecrated bread be really bread, as it was before, and yet figuratiuely the body of Christ. And if therefore Christ would this bread to be onely sacramentally his bodie, and would not haue the same bread really to be transubstantiated into his body, and so ordained his priests to make this sacrament as a memorial of his passion: then do the priests grieuously offend, which beseech Christ in their holy masse, that the bread which lieth vpon the altar, may be made really the body of Christ, if he would not haue the same to be but a sacrament of his body. And then both be they greatly deceiued themselues, and also doe greatly deceiue others. But whether the bread be really transubstantiated into the body of Christ, or is only the body of Christ sacramentally; no doubt but that the people are marueilously deceiued. For the people beleeue that they see the body of Christ, nay rather Christ himselfe betwẽne the hands of the priests (for so is the common oth they sweare,) By him whom I saw this day betweene the priests hands. And the people beleeue that they eat not the body of Christ but at Easter, or else when they lie vpon their death bed, and receiue with their bodily mouth the sacrament of the body of Christ. But the body of Christ (admit the bread be transubstantiated really into the body) is in the sacrament, indiuisibiliter, that is, not able to be diuided; and so immensurabiliter, that is, not able to be measured: Ergo, inuisibiliter, that is, not able to be seene. To beleeue therefore that he may be seene corporally in the sacrament, is erroneous. And forasmuch as the body of Christ is the soules food, and not the food of the body in this world, for that whosoeuer beleeueth, doth eat spiritually and really, at at any time when he so beleeueth: it is manifest, that they doe greatly erre which beleeue that they eat not the body of Christ, but when they eat with their teeth the sacrament of the body of Christ.

The bread thereforo changeth not to his essence, but is bread really, and is the body of Christ sacramentally.

The vaine prayer of the priests at their masse.

The people greatly deceiued in the sacrament.

And although it should be to the great honor of priests that the bread really were changed into the body of Christ, by the vertue of the sacramentall words pronounced: yet if Christ would not haue it to be so, then they desiring to do this cõtrary to the wil of Christ, and informing the people that is to be done, so contrary to the will of Christ; are in great perill, most dangerously seducing both themselues and the people. And then, although that hereby they get a little worldly and transitory honor for a short time; it is to be feared, lest perpetuall shame finally shall follow and ensue vpon the same. For Christ saith; Euery one that exalteth himselfe shall be brought low. Let them therefore take heed, lest they extolling themselues for this Sacrament, aboue the company of Angels which neuer sinned, for the error which they be in, for euermore be placed with the sinfull angels vnder the earth.

The priests seek their owne honor in their transubstantiation.

Marke here ye good priests.

Let euery man therefore thinke lowly of himselfe in what state or degree soeuer he be; neither let him presume to do that which he is not able to doe: neither desire to haue that thing done, which God would not haue done.

I greatly marueil at those which were the makers of the canons, how variably and contrary one to another they write of this sacrament of the body of Christ. In the last part of the decrees where this matter is touched, not only in the text, but also in the processe of the matter, diuers doe diuerly write, and one cõtrary to another. For in the chapter that thus beginneth, Prima inquit hæresis, it is thus written: You shall not eat this body which you see, nor shall drinke this bloud which they shall shed which shall crucifie me: I will commend vnto you a certaine Sacrament spiritually vnderstood that quickneth you; for the flesh profiteth you nothing at all. And in the end of the same chapter it is thus written: Till the world shall haue an end, the Lords place is in heauen: yet notwithstanding the veritie of the Lord is here abiding with vs. For the body wherewith he rose, ought to be in one place, but his verity is in euery place diffused and spread abroad. And in the chapter following, which thus beginneth; Omnia quæcunq; voluit, &c. it is written: Although the figure of the bread and wine seeme to be nothing; yet notwithstanding they must after the words of consecration be beleeued, to be none other thing then the very flesh of Christ, and his bloud. Whereupon the veritie himselfe said vnto his disciples: This is (saith he) my flesh, which is giuen for the life of the world: and to speake yet more marueilously, this is none other flesh, then that which was borne of the virgin Mary, and suffered vpon the crosse, and rose out of the sepulchre.

The makers of the canon law, contrary to themselues.

De consec. 2. cap. Prima quidem inquit.

De consec. dist. 2. cap. Omnia quæcunque vobis. Contrariety in the popes canons.

See how far this chapter differeth from the first. And in the chapter which beginneth, Ego Berengarius, &c. this is the confession which Berengarius himselfe confessed touching this Sacrament, and his confession is of the church allowed: I confesse (saith Berengarius) that the bread and wine which is laid vpon the altar after the consecration, is not only a sacrament, but also that it is the very body and bloud of our Lord Jesus Christ: and the same not only sensually to be a sacrament, but also verily to be handled with the priests hands and to be broken, and chewed with the teeth of faithfull men. This confession doubtlesse is heretical: for why? if the body of Christ be in the sacrament, as of the church it is so determined; it is there then Multiplicatiue, and so indiuisibiliter, therefore not sensualiter. And if it be there indiuisibiliter, that is, in such sort as it cannot be diuided or separated, then can it not be touched, felt, broken, nor with the teeth of men chewed.

De consecrat. dist. 2. cap. Ego Berengarius.

The retractation of Berengarius is heretical.

The writers of this time and age doe affirme, that if by the negligence of the priest, the sacrament be so negligently left, that a mouse, or any other beast or vermin eat the same; then they say, that the sacrament returneth againe into the nature and substance of bread. Whereby they must nẽds confesse, that a miracle is as well wrought by the negligence of the priest, as first there was made by the consecration of the priest in making the sacrament. For either by the eating of the mouse, the body of Christ is transubstantiated into the nature of bread, which is a transubstantiation supernaturall; or else of nothing by creation is this bread produced: and therefore either of these operations is miraculous and to be marueiled at. Now considering the disagreeing opinions of the doctors, and for the absurdities which follow, I beleeue with Paul, that the bread which we breake, is the participation of the body of Christ: and as Christ saith; that the bread is made the body of Christ for a memoriall and remembrance of him. And in such sort as Christ willed the same to be his body, in the same manner and sort do I beleeue it to be his body.

The sacrament left by the priests negligence to be eaten of a mouse, returneth againe from bodie to bread.

But whether we men may make the body of Christ, and minister minister vnto the people: or whether that priests bee diuided from the lay people, for their knowledge, preeminence, and sanctitie of life, or else by externall signes onely: Also whether the signe of tonsure and other externall signes of holinesse in priests, be signes of Antichrist and his characters, or else introduced and taught by our Lord Jesus Christ: consequently it remaineth next to speake of vnto the faithfull sort (according to the processe of the holy Scripture) first of the three kinds of the priests. I remember that I haue read, the first of them to be Aaronicall, legall, and temporall: The second to bee eternall and regall according to the order of Melchisedech: The third to be christian. The first of these ceased at the comming of Christ: for that, as saint Paul to the Hebrues saith, The priesthod of Aaron was translated to the priesthod of the order of Melchisedech. The legall sort of priests of Aaron, were separate from the rest of the people, by kindred, office, and inheritance. By kindred, for that the children of Aaron onely were priests. By office, for that it onely pertained to them to offer sacrifice for the sinnes of the people, and to instruct the people in the precepts and ceremonies of the law. By inheritance, because the Lord was their portion of inheritance; neither had they any other inheritance amongst their brethren, but those things which were offred vnto the Lord, as the first fruits, parts of the sacrifices, and vowes, except places for their mansion houses for them and theirs, as appeareth by the processe of Moses law. The priesthod of Christ did much differ from this priesthod, as Paul doth witnesse to the Hebrues, chapter, 1.8, 9.10.

Three orders or sorts of priests: 1. Aaronicall. 2. Eternall. 3. Christian.

Leuiticall priests diuided from the people by kindred, office, and inheritance.

The priesthood of Christ differeth from the Leuiticall priesthood, how and wherein. 1. In kindred.

First, in kindred, because that our Lord and Sauiour Jesus Christ, came of the stock and tribe of Juda: of which tribe none had to doe with the altar, and in which tribe nothing at all was spoken of the priests of Moses.

2. In oth taking.

The second, for that other were made priests without their oth taken: but hee by an oth, by him which said: The Lord swore, and it shall not repent him: Thou art a priest for euer according to the order of Melchisedech.

3 In durabilitie.

Thirdly, by durabilitie, for that many of them were made priests but during the terme of their liues: but he for that hee remaineth for euer, hath an eternall priesthod. Wherefore he is able to saue vs for euer, hauing by himselfe accesse vnto God, which euer liueth to make intercession for vs.

The law made also such men priests as had infirmities; but Sermo (that is, the word, which according to the law is the eternall sonne and perfect) by an oth.

4. In matter of sacrifice.

The priesthod of Christ also did differ from the priesthod of Aaron and the law, in the matter of the sacrifice, and in the place of sacrificing. In the matter of the sacrifice, because they did vse in their sacrifices strange bodies of the matter of their sacrifices, and did shed strange blod for the expiation of sinnes: But he, offering himselfe vnto God his father for vs, shed his owne blod for the remission of our sinnes.

5. In place of sacrificing.

In the place of sacrificing, because that they did offer their sacrifice in the tabernacle or temple: but Christ suffering death without the gates of the city, offered himselfe vpon the altar of the crosse to God his father, and there shed his precious blod. In his supping chamber also hee blessed the bread and consecrated the same for his body, and the wine which was in the cup, he also consecrated for his blod; deliuering the same to his apostles to bee done, for a commemoration and remembrance of his incarnation and passion. Neither did Jesus enter into the sanctuarie made with mans hands, which bee examples and figures of true things; but entred into heauen it selfe, that he might appeare before the maiestie of God for vs. Neither doth he offer himselfe oftentimes, as the chiefe priest in the sacctuarie did euery yeare with strange blod (for then should he oftentimes haue suffered from the beginning) but now once for all, in the latter end of the world, to destroy sinne by his peace offering, hath he entred. And euen as it is decreed, that man once shall die and then commeth the iudgement: so Christ hath beene once offered, to take away the sins of many. The second time he shall appeare without sinne to them that looke for him, to their saluation. For the law hauing a shadow of good things to come, can neuer by the image it selfe of things (which euery yeare without ceasing they offer by such sacrifices) make those perfect that come thereunto, for otherwise that offering should haue ceased: Because that such worshippers being once clensed from their sinnes, should haue no more conscience of sinne. But in these, commemoration is made euery yeare of sinne; for it is impossible that by the blod of gotes and calues, sinnes should bee purged and taken away. Therefore comming into the world hee said: Sacrifice and oblation thou wouldest not haue, but a body hast thou giuen me, peace offerings for sinnes haue not pleased thee: Then said I, behold I come: In the volume of the booke it is written of mee, that I should doe thy will O God: Saying, as aboue; because thou wouldest haue no sacrifices nor burnt offerings for sinne, neither doest thou take pleasure in those things that are offered according to the law: Then said I; Behold I come, that I may do thy will O God. He taketh away the first to stablish that which followeth. In which will we are sanctified by the oblation of the body of Jesus Christ, once for all. And euery priest is ready daily ministring, and oftentimes offering like sacrifices, which can neuer take away sins. But this Jesus offering one sacrifice for sinne sitteth for euermore on the right hand of God, expecting the time till his enemies be made his footstoole. For by his owne onely oblation, hath he consummated for euermore those that are sanctified. All these places haue I recited which Paul writeth, for the better vnderstanding and declaration of those things I meane to speake. By all which it appeareth manifestly, how the priesthod of Christ differeth from the legall priesthood of Aaron: and by the same also appeareth, how the same differeth from all other priesthood christian, that imitateth Christ. For the properties of the priesthood of Christ, aboue recited, are found in no other priest, but in Christ alone. Of the third priesthood, that is, the christian priesthood; Christ by expresse words speaketh but little, to make any difference betweene the priests and the rest of the people, neither yet doth vse this name of Sacerdos or presbyter in the Gospell. But some he calleth disciples, some apostles, whom hee sent to baptise and to preach, and in his name to do miracles. He calleth them the salt of the earth, in which the name of wisedome is meant: and he calleth them the light of the world, by which, good liuing is signified. For hee saith, Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good workes, and glorifie your father which is in heauen. And Paul speaking of the priests to Timothie, and Titus, seemeth not to me to make any diuersitie betwixt the priests and the other people, but in that he would haue them to surmount other in knowledge and perfection of life. But the fourth priesthood, is the Romane priesthood, brought in by the church of Rome: which church maketh a distinction betweene the clergie and the lay people: and after that the clergie is diuided into sundrie degrees, as appeareth in the decretals.

The priesthood of Christ differeth from all other priesthood christian.

The third priesthood. The name of Sacerdos or priest not vsed in the new Testament of Christ.

The 4. priesthood, which is the Romane priesthood.

This distinction of the clergie from the laity, with the tonsure of clerkes, began in the time of Anacletus, as it doth appeare in the chronicles. The degrees of the clergie were afterward inuented and distinted by their offices, and there was no ascension to the degree of the priesthood, but by inferior orders and degrees. But in the primitiue church it was not so: for immediatly after the conuersion of some of them to the faith and baptisme receiued; they were priests and bishops made, as appeareth by Ananias, whom Marcus made of a taylor or shoomaker, to be a bishop. And of many other it was in like case done, according to the traditions of the church of Rome. Priests are ordained to offer sacrifices, to make supplication and praiers, and to blesse and sanctifie. The oblation of the priesthood, onely to priests (as they say) is congruent: whose duties are, vpon the altar to offer for the sinnes of the people the Lords body, which is consecrated of bread. Of which saying I haue great maruell, considering saint Pauls words to the Hebrues before recited. If Christ offering for our sinnes one oblation for euermore, sitteth on the right hand of God, and with that one oblation hath consummated for euermore those that are sanctified: If Christ euermore sitteth on the right hand of God, to make intercession for vs; what neede he to leaue here any sacrifice for our sinnes, of the priests to be daily offered? I doe not find in the Scriptures of God, nor of his apostles, that the body of Christ ought to be made a sacrifice for sinne: but onely as a sacrament and commemoration of the sacrifice passed which Christ offered vpon the altar of the crosse for our sinnes. For it is an absurditie to say that Christ is now euery day really offered as a sacrifice vpon the altar by the priests: for then the priests should really crucifie him vpon the altar, which is a thing of no christian to be beleeued. But euen as in his supper, his body and his blod he deliuered to his disciples, in memoriall of his body that should be crucified on the morrow for our sinnes: So after his ascension, did his apostles vse the same (when they brake bread in euery house) for a Sacrament, and not for a sacrifice, of the body and blod of our Lord Jesus Christ. And by this meanes were they put in remembrance of the great loue of Christ, who so entirely loued vs, that willingly he suffered the death for vs, and for the remission of our sinnes. And thus did they offer themselues to God by loue, being readie to suffer death for the confession of his name, and for the sauing health of their brethren, fulfilling the new commandement of Christ, which said vnto them: A new commandement doe I giue vnto you, that you loue one another, as I haue loued you. But when loue began to wax cold, or rather to bee frosen for cold, through the anguish and anxietie of persecution for the name of Christ; then priests did vse the flesh and blod of Christ, in stead of a sacrifice. And because many of them feared death, some of them fled into solitary places, not daring to giue themselues a sacrifice by death vnto God through the confession of his name, and sauing health of their brethren: some other worshipped Idols fearing death, as did also the chiefe bishop of Rome, and many other moe in diuers places of the world. And thus it came to passe, as that which was ordained and instituted for a memoriall of the one and onely sacrifice, was altered (for want of loue) into the realitie of the sacrifice it selfe.

The office of priests after the popes order.

The body of Christ not left to be a sacrifice for sin, but onely for a sacrament.

How the memoriall of the sacrament came to the reality of the sacrifice it selfe.

After these things thus discussed, he inferreth consequentlie vpon the same, an other briefe tractation of women and laymen, whether in defect of the other, they may exercise the action of praier, and administration of Sacraments belonging to priests: wherein he declareth the vse receiued in the popes church for women to baptise, which, saith he, cannot be without remission of sinnes; wherefore seeing that women haue power by the pope to remit sinne, and to baptise, why may they not as well be admitted to minister the Lords supper, in like case of necessitie? Wherin also he maketh relation of pope Ioane the 8. a woman pope, mouing certaine questions of her. All which for breuitie I pretermit, proceeding to the ministration of praier, and blessing of sanctification, appropriate to the office of priests, as followeth.

The order and office of praier. The Lords praier.

Furthermore, as touching the function and office of praying and blessing, whereunto priests seeme to be ordained (to omit here the question whether women may pray in churches, in lacke of other meet persons) it remaineth now also to prosecute. Christ being desired of his disciples to teach them to pray, gaue them the common praier both to men and women, to the which praier in my estimation, no other is to be compared. For in that, first, the whole honour due vnto the deitie is comprehended. Secondly, whatsoeuer is necessarie for vs, both for the time present, or past, or for time to come, is there desired and prayed for. He informeth vs besides to pray secretly, and also briefly: secretly to enter into our close chamber, and there in secrecie he willeth vs to pray vnto his father. And saith moreouer, When ye pray, vse not much babling, or many words as doe the heathen. For they thinke in their long and prolixe praying to be heard. Therefore be you not like to them. By the which doctrine he calleth vs away from the errours of the heathen Gentiles: from whom proceed these superstitious maner of arts (or rather of ignorances) as Necromancie, the art of diuination, and other spices of coniuration; not vnknowne to them that bee learned: for these necromancers beleeue, one place to be of greater vertue then another, there to be heard sooner, then in another. Like as Balaam being hired to curse the people of God by his art of soothsaying, or charming, when hee could not accomplish his purpose in one place, he remoued to another: but he in the end was deceiued of his desire. For he intending first to curse them, was not able to accurse them whom the Lord blessed, so y his curse could not hurt any of all that people. After like sort the necromancers turne their face to the East, as to a place more apt for their prayers. Also the necromancers beleeue, that the vertue of the words of the praier, and the curiositie thereof, causeth them to bring to effect that which they seeke after; which is also another point of infidelitie, vsed much of charmers, sorcerers, inchanters, soothsayers, and such like. Out of the same art (I feare) proceedeth the practise of exorcising, whereby diuels and spirits be coniured to doe that, whereunto they are inforced by the exorcist. Also whereby other creatures likewise are exorcised or coniured, so that by the vertue of their exorcisme, they may haue their power and strength exceeding all naturall operation.

Matth. 6.

The arts of Necromancie, Soothsaying & witchcrafts, how and from whom they came.

Against exorcising of priests.

In the church of Rome, many such exorcismes and coniurations be practised, and are called of them benedictions, or hallowings. But here I aske of these exorcisers, whether they beleeue the things and creatures so exorcised and hallowed, haue that operation and efficacie giuen them, which they pretend: If they so beleeue, euery child may see that they are far beguiled. For holy water being of them exorcised or coniured; hath no such power in it, neither can haue, which they in their exorcisme doe command. For there they enioyne and command, that wheresoeuer that water is sprinkled, all veration or infestation of the vncleane spirit should auoide, and that no pestilent spirit there should abide, &c. But most plaine it is, that no water, be it neuer so holy, can haue any such power so to doe, as it is commanded, to wit, to be an vniuersall remedy to expell all diseases.

Conjuring or hallowing in the popish church.

Holy water coniured.

Exorcista.

This I would aske of these exorcists; whether in their commanding, they doe coniure or adiure the things coniured, to be of an higher vertue and operation, then their owne nature doth giue: Or else whether they in their praiers desire of God, that he will infuse into them that vertue, which they require: If they in their commanding doe so beleeue, then do they beleeue that they haue that power in them to the which the inferior power of the thing exorcised must obey, in receiuing that which is commanded. And so doing, are much more deceiued, forasmuch as they see themselues, that they which are so authorised to the office of exorcising, say to the diuell being coniured; Go, and he goeth not, and to another, come, and he commeth not, and many things else they command the inferiour spirit their subiect to doe, and he doth not. So in like case, when they pray to God to make the water to be of such vertue, that it may be to them health of mind and body, and that it may be able to expulse euery vncleane spirit, and to chase away all maner of distemperature and pestilence of the aire (being an vnreasonable petition aske, and sore displeasing to God) it is to bee feared lest their benediction, their hallowing and blessing is changed into cursing, according to that saying that followeth: And now O you priests, I haue a message to say vnto you: If you will not heare and beare well away in your minds, to giue the glorie vnto my name, saith the Lord God of hosts, I will send scarsitie amongst you, and I will curse your blessings. What things and how many are blessed, or hallowed in the church, that in hallowing therof displease God, and are accursed? And therefore according to the saying of S. Iames, they aske and are not heard, because they aske not as they should, that they in their owne desires may perish. Let a man behold the blessing or hallowing of their fire, water, incense, waxe, bread, wine, the church, the altar, the churchyard, ashes, belles, copes, palmes, oile, candles, salt, the hallowing of the ring, the bed, the staffe, and of many such like things: and I beleeue that a man shall find out many errours of the heathen Magicians, witches, soothsayers and charmers. And notwithstanding the ancient & old Magicians in their bookes, command those that bee coniurers, that they in any wise liue deuoutly (for otherwise, as they say, the spirits will not obey their commandements, and coniurations) yet the Roman coniurers do impute it to the vertue of the holy words, because they be they which worke, and not the holinesse of the coniurers. How commeth it to passe that they say, the things consecrated of a cursed and vitious Iauell, should haue so great vertue in pronouncing (as they say) the holy and mysticall words, as if they were pronounced of a priest neuer so holy? But I maruell that they say so, reading this saying in the Acts of the apostles: because the charmers pronouncing the name of Iesus (that is aboue all names) would haue healed those that were possessed with diuels, and said: In the name of Iesus whom Paul preacheth, goe ye out of the men. And the possessed with diuels answered, Iesus we know, and Paul we know, but what are ye? and they all to be beate the coniurers.

Iames 4.

Romish coniurers.

The good life of a priest, a great matter, to deale in Gods matters.

And now considering this and many such like things, I maruell wherefore the vicious priests, doe sell their praiers and blessings deerer (as also their masses and trentals of masses) then those that bee deuout lay men, and holy women: which with all their heart desire to flee from vices, and take hold of vertue. For asmuch as God in diuers places of the Scripture doth promise that hee will not heare sinners and wicked persons: Neither should hee seeme to bee iust, if he should soner heare the praiers of his enemies, then of his faithfull friend. How I pray you shall a sinnefull priest deliuer another man from sinne by his praiers, or else from the punishment of sinne, when he is not able to deliuer himselfe by his praier from sin? What then doth God so much accept in the masse of a vitious priest; that for his masse, his praier or oblation, he might deliuer any man either from sin, or from the paine due for sinne? No, but for that that Christ once offred himselfe for our sinnes, and now sitteth on the right hand of God the father, alwaies shewing vnto him what and how great things hee hath suffered for vs. And euery priest alwaies maketh mention in his masse of this oblation. Neither doe we this, that wee might bring the same oblation into the remembrance of God, because that he alwaies in his presence seeth the same: but that wee should haue in remembrance this so great loue of God, that he would giue his owne son to death for our sins, that he might cleanse and purifie vs from all our sinnes. What, doth it please God, that the remembrance of so great loue is made by a priest, which more loueth sinne then God? Or how can any praier of such a priest please God, in what holy place soeuer he be, or what holy vestiments soeuer he put on, or what holy praiers soeuer he maketh? And wheras Christ and his apostles doe command the preaching of the word of God; the priests be now more bound to celebrate the masse, and more straitly bound to say the canonicall houres: whereat I cannot but greatly maruell. For why? to obey the precepts of men more then the commandements of God, is in effect to honor man as God, and to bestow the sacrifice vpon man, which is due vnto God, and this is also spirituall fornication. How therefore are priests bound at the commandement of man to leaue the preaching of the word of God, at whose commandement they are not bound to leaue the celebration of the masse, or singing of Mattens? Therefore as it seemeth, priests ought not at the commandement of any man to leaue the preaching of the word of God, vnto the which they are bound both by diuine and apostolicall precepts. With whom agreeth the writing of Hierome vpon the Decretals, saying in this wise: Let none of the bishops swell with the enuie of diuellish tentation; let none be angrie, if the priest doe sometime exhort the people, if they preach in their church, &c. for to him that forbiddeth mee these things, I will say, that he is vnwilling that priests should do those things which be commanded of God. What thing is there aboue Christ? or what may be preferred before his body and his blood, &c.

Remembrance of Christs passion, needeth not to God, but to man.

Priests more bound to say Masse commanded by man, then to preaching commanded of God.

Spirituall fornication.

Hieronymus.

Whether priests may bargaine to sing for soules departed.

Doe priests therefore sin or not, which bargaine for money to pray for the soule of any dead man? It is well knowne that Iesus did whippe those that were buyers and sellers out of the temple, saying: My house shall bee called the house of praier, but you haue made the same a den of theeues: Truely hee cast not out such merchants from out of the church, but because of their sins. Whereupon Hierome vpon this text saith; Let the priest be diligent and take good heede in this church, that they turne not the house of God into a den of theeues. Hee doubtlesse is a theefe which seeketh gaine by religion, and by a shew of holinesse studieth to find occasion of merchandise. Hereupon, the holy canons do make accursed, Simoniacall heresie, and and do command that those should be depriued of the priesthood, which for the passing or marueilous spirituall grace, do seeke gaine or money. Peter the apostle said to Simon Magus, Let thy money and thou goe both to the diuell, which thinkest that the gifts of God may be bought for money. Therefore the spirituall gifts of God ought not to be sold.

Selling of praier abominable.

Verilie praier is the spirituall gift of God, as is also the preaching of the word of God, or the laying on of hands, or the administration of other sacraments. Christ sending forth his disciples to preach, said vnto them: Heale ye the licke, cast out diuels, raise the dead, freely haue ye receiued, freely giue yee againe. If the priests haue power by their praiers to deliuer soules being in purgatorie, from grieuous paines: without doubt, he hath receiued that power freely from God. How therefore can hee sell his act, vnlesse hee resist the commandements of God, of whom he hath receiued that authority? This truely cannot bee done without sin, which is against the commandement of God. How plainely spake Christ to the Pharisies and priests saying; Woe be vnto you Scribes and Pharisies hypocrites, because yee haue eaten the whole houses of such as be widowes, by making long praiers, and therfore haue you receiued greater damnation? Wherein I pray you doe our Pharisies and priests differ from them? Doe not our priests deuoure widowes houses and possessions, that by their long praiers they might deliuer the soules of their husbands from the grieuous paines of purgatorie? How many Lordships I pray you haue beene bestowed vpon the religious men and women to pray for the dead, that they by their praier might deliuer those dead men from the paine (as they said) that they suffer in purgatorie, grieuously tormented and vexed? If their praiers and speaking of holy words, shall not be able to deliuer themselues from paine, vnlesse they haue good workes; how shall other men be deliuered from paine, by their praiers, which whilest they liued here, they gaue ouer themselues to sin? Yea peraduenture those lordships or lands which they gaue vnto the priests to pray for them, they themselues haue gotten by might from other faithfull men, vniustly, and violently. And the canons doe say, that sinne is not forgiuen, till the thing taken away wrongfully, bee restored: How then shall they bee able (which doe vniustly possesse such lordships or lands) to deliuer them by their praiers from paine, which haue giuen to them these lordships or lands, seeing God from the beginning hath hated all extortion in his burnt sacrifices? Not euery one that saith vnto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdome of heauen: but he which doth the will of my father which is in heauen. And againe, Not the hearers of the law, but the doers of the law shall be iustified.

Religious men and women, deuourers of widowes houses: Praying for soules in purgatorie. Euill gotten lands, as euill bestowed, for praying for soules in purgatorie.

If therefore the words of him that praieth, doe not deliuer himselfe from sinne, nor from the paine of sinne: how doe they deliuer other men from sinne or from the paine of sinne, when no man prayeth more earnestly for another man then for himselfe? Therefore many are deceiued in buying or selling of praiers, as in the buying of pardons that they might bee deliuered from paine; when as commonly they pay deerer for the praiers of the proud and vitious prelats, then for the praiers of deuout women and deuout men of the lay people. But out of doubt, God doth not regard the person of him that prayeth, neither the place in which he prayeth, nor his apparell, nor the curiousnes of his praier, but the humilitie and godly affection of him that prayeth. Did not the Pharisie and the Publican go vp into the Temple to pray? The Publicans praier for his humilitie and godly affection is heard. But the Pharisies praier for his pride and arrogancie is contemned. Consider that neither the person, nor the place, nor the state, nor the curiousnes of his praier doth helpe the Pharisie: Because the Publican not thinking himselfe worthie to lift vp his eyes vnto heauen, for the multitude of his sinnes, saying (O God be mercifull vnto me a sinner) is iustified by his humilitie, and his praier is heard. But the Pharisie boasting in his righteousnes is despised, because God thrusteth downe the proud, and exalteth the humble and those that be meeke. The rich glutton also that was clothed with purple and silke, and fared euery day daintilie, prayed vnto Abraham, and is not heard, but is buried in paines and torments of hell fire. But Lazarus which lay begging at his gate (being full of sores) is placed in the bosome of Abraham. Behold that neither the riches of his apparell, nor the deliciousnesse of his bankets, nor the gorgiousnesse of his estate, neither the abundance of his riches, doth helpe any thing to prefer the praiers or petitions of the rich glutton, nor yet diminish his torments, because that mightie men in their mightinesse shall suffer torments mightilie. How dare any man by composition demand or receiue any thing of another man for his praiers? If hee beleeue that he can by his praier deliuer his brother from grieuous paine, he is bound by charitie to releeue his brother with his praiers although hee be not hired thereunto: but and if he will not pray vnlesse he be hired, then hath he no loue at all. What therefore helpeth his praier, which abideth not in charitie? Therefore let him first take compassion of himselfe by praier, that he may come into charitie, and then he shall be the better able to helpe others. If he beleeue not, or that hee standeth in doubt to be able to deliuer his brother by his praier: wherefore doth he make with him an assured bargaine, and taketh his money, and yet knoweth not whether he shall releeue him euer whit the more or not, from his paine? I feare lest the words of the prophet are fulfilled, saying: From the least to the most all men applie themselues to couetousnesse, and from the prophet to the priest all worke deceitfully. For the poore priests excuse themselues of such bargaining and selling of their praiers, saying: The yong cocke learneth to crow of the old cocke. For, saith he, thou maist see that the pope himselfe in stalling of bishops and abbats, taketh the first fruits: In the placing or bestowing of benefices, he alwaies taketh somewhat, and specially if the benefices be great. And he selleth pardons or buls, and to speake more plaine, he taketh money for them. Bishops in giuing orders, in hallowing churches and churchyards, doe take money: In ecclesiasticall correction they take money for the mitigation of penance: In the grieuous offences of conuict persons, money is required, and caused to be payed. Abbats, monks, and other relgious men that haue possession, will receiue no man into their fraternitie, or make them partakers of their spirituall suffrages, vnlesse he bestow somewhat vpon them, or promise them somewhat. Curats and vicars hauing sufficient liuings, by the tithes of their parishioners, yet in dirges & yeers minds, in hearing confessions, in weddings and burying's, doe require and haue money. The friers also of the foure orders of beggers, which thinke themselues to bee the most perfect men of the church, do take money for their praiers, confessions, and burying's of the dead: and when they preach, they beleeue that they shall haue either money or some other thing worthie money. Wherfore then be the poore priests blamed? ought not they to bee held excused, although they take money for their praiers by composition? Truely (me thinketh) that this excuse by other mens sinnes, doth not excuse them: forasmuch, as to heape one mischiefe vpon anothers head, is no sufficient discharge: I would to God that all the buyers and sellers of spirituall suffrages, would with the eyes of their heart behold the ruine of the great citie, and the fall of Babylon, and that which they shall say after that fall. Doth not the prophet say: And the merchants of the earth shall weepe and mourne for her, because no man shall buy any more their merchandise, that is, their merchandise of gold and siluer, and of pretious stone, and of pearle, and of silke and purple? And againe he saith: And the merchants which were made rich by her, shall stand aloofe, for feare of her torments, weeping, mourning, and saying, Alas, alas, that citie Babylon, that great citie, which was wont to weare purple, white silke, crimsin, gold, pearle, and pretious stone, because that in one houre all those riches are come to nought. And againe: And they cast dust vpon their heads, and cried out weeping and mourning, and saying: Alas, alas, that great and mightie citie Babylon, by whom all such as had ships vpon the sea were made rich by her rewards: Because that in one houre she is become desolate.

Selling of pardons. Selling of orders. Selling of church hallowings. Selling of discipline. Selling of fraternitie. Selling of Dirges, yeers minds, confessions, weddings, burying's. Selling of sermons, &c.

Example to be taken by the fall of Babylon.

Buying and selling of praiers in the popes church. Buying and selling of pardons. Person, place, apparell, curiositie or eloquence of praier not regarded of God.

This Babylon, this great citie, is the citie of Rome, as it appeareth by the processe of the apostle. Because the angell which shewed vnto saint John the destruction of the mightie harlot sitting vpon many waters, with whom the kings of the earth haue committed fornication, and all they which dwell vpon the earth are made drunke with the wine of her whoredome, said vnto him: And the woman which thou sawest, is the great citie which hath dominion aboue kings, &c. And indeed in the daies of saint John, the whole world was subiect to the temporall empire of the citie of Rome, and afterwards it was subiect to the spirituall empire or dominion of the same. But touching the temporall gouernment of the citie of Rome, it is fallen alreadie: and so that the other also, for the multitude of her spirituall fornication shall fall. The emperours of this citie gaue themselues to idolatrie, and would haue that men should honour them as Gods, and put all those to death that refused such idolatrie, and by the crueltie of their torments all infidels gat the vpper hand.

The citie of Rome, Babylon. Apoc. 18.

The temporall dominion of the citie of Rome.

The spirituall dominion of the citie of Rome.

Hereupon, by the image of Nabuchodonosor, the empire of the Romans is likened to iron, which beateth together, and hath the maistrie of all mettals. And in the vision of Daniel, wherein he saw the foure winds of heauen to fight in the maine sea, and foure very great beasts comming out of the sea: the kingdome of the Romans is likened to the fourth terrible and marueilous beast, the which had great iron teeth; eating and destroying, and treading the rest vnder his feete: and this beast had ten hornes, and as Daniel saith, hee shall speake words against the most highest, and shall teare with his teeth the saints of the most highest: and he shall thinke, that he may be able to change times and lawes, and they shall be deliuered into his power, vntill a time, times, and a halfe time. In the Apocalyps, saint John saw a beast comming out of the sea, hauing seuen heads and ten hornes, and power was giuen to him to make moneths 42. So long time endured the empire of the Romans, that is to say, from the beginning of Julius Cesar, which was the first emperor of the Romans, vnto the end of Fridericus, which was the last emperour of the Romans. Vnder this empire Christ suffered, and other martyrs also suffered for his names sake. And here is fallen Rome as Babylon (which is all one) according to the maner of speaking in the Apocalyps, as touching the temporall and corporall power of governing. And thus shall she fall also touching the spirituall power of governing, for the multitude of the iniquities and spirituall fornication and merchandise that are committed by her in the church.

The feet of the image in the dreame of Nabuchodonozor signifieth Rome.

The feet of the image which Nabuchodonozor saw, did betoken the empire of Rome, and part of them were of iron, and part of clay and earth. The part that was of iron fell, and the power thereof vanished away, because the power therof was at an end after certaine moneths. That part of clay and earth yet endureth, but it shall vanish away by the testimonie of the prophets: whereupon saint John in the Apocalyps: After that, he saw the part made of iron rising out of the sea, to which each people, tribe, and tongue submitted themselues. And he saw another beast comming out of the earth, which had two hornes, like to the hornes of a Lambe, and he spake like a Dragon, and he vanquished the first beast in his sight.

The beast with two hornes like the lambe, signifieth the spirituall dominion of Rome.

This beast as seemeth me, doth betoken the clay and earthen part of the feet of the image, because he came out of the earth. For that by terrene helpe he is made the high and chiefe priest of the Romans, in the church of Christ, and so from alow he ascended on high. But Christ from heauen descended, because that he which was God and author of euery creature became man: and he that was Lord of lords, was made in the shape of a seruant. And although that in the heauens the compane of angels minister vnto him, he himselfe ministred or serued in earth, that he might teach vs humilitie, by which a man ascendeth into heauen, euen as by pride a man goeth downe into the bottomlesse pit. This beast hath two hornes most like a lambe, because that he challengeth to himselfe both the priestly and kingly power, aboue all other here in earth. The lambe, that is, Christ, which is a king for euer vpon the kingly seate of Dauid, and he is a priest for euer after the order of Melchisedech, but his kingdome is not of this world: but the kingdome of this beast is of this world, because those that be vnder him, fight for him. And as Iesus is Christ two maner of waies, because that Christus is as much to say as Vnctus: he verily was anointed king and anointed priest: so this beast saith, that he is chiefe king and priest. Wherefore doth he call himselfe Christ: because that Christ knowing that afore, said: Many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceiue many. And thus because that he is both king and priest, he challengeth to himselfe the double sword, that is, the corporall sword and the spirituall sword. The corporall sword is in his right hand, and his spirituall sword is in his right eie, by the testimonie of Zacharie. But he speaketh subtillie like a Dragon, because that by the testimony of Christ he shall deceiue many, as the Apoc. witnesseth. Hee did great wonders, that also he might make more fire to come from heauen into the earth in the sight of men, that hee might deceiue those that dwell vpon the earth, because of the wonders that are permitted him to do in the sight of the beast, and he ouercame the first beast which ascended out of the sea. For that beast challenged vnto himselfe authority of gouernment of the whole world: Hee hath put to death and tormented those that resist his commandements, & would be honoured as a God vpon the earth. The bishop of Rome saith, that the whole world ought to be in subiection vnto him; those that bee disobedient vnto his commandements, he putteth in prison, and to death if he can: If he cannot, he excommunicateth them, and commandeth them to be cast into the diuels dungeon. But hee that hath no power ouer the body, much lesse hath he power ouer the soule. And truely his excommunication, nor the excommunication of any priest vnder him, shall at that time little hurt him that is excommunicate, so that the person of him that is excommunicate, be not first excommunicate of God through sin.

and thus it seemeth a troth vnto me, that God thus turneth their blessings into cursings, because they giue not due glorie vnto his name. So when that they vniustly excommunicate and curse, he turneth their cursings into blessings. Also the bishop of Rome doth make men to worship him as God, because that the speciall sacrifice that God doth require of vs, is to be obedient vnto him in keeping of his commandements. But now the popes commandements bee commanded to bee kept, and bee kept in very deede, but the commandements of Christ are contemned and reiected. Thus sitteth the bishop of Rome in the temple of God, shewing himselfe as God, and extolleth himselfe aboue all that which is called God, or worshipped as God. But in his fall hee shall bee reuealed, because that euery kingdome diuided in it selfe, shall bee made desolate. Hee teaching a truth, is the head of the church, but the prophet teaching a lie, is the taile of the Dragon. Hee seducing the world, shall bee acknowledged to bee the veritie of the doctrine of Christ, but after he is knowne, hee shall be reiected and nought esteemed. Hee giueth to small and great, rich and poore, free and bond, markes in their right hands, and in their foreheads: that no man should buy or sell, but those that shall haue the markes of the name of the beast, or that looketh to haue of him some recompence, small, meane, or great, or else the number of his name, which number is 300. The pope saith, that in the administration of euery sacrament, hee doth imprint a certaine character or marke into the soule of him that receiueth. In baptisme he saith that hee doth imprint into the soule of him that is baptised, a marke that cannot be wiped out, and so likewise in other sacraments. And I know that in a sacrament are two things, that is, the sacramentall signe, and spirituall grace represented by the same signe: the sacramentall signe is giuen to man of man, but the spirituall grace is giuen of Christ.

In euery sacrament two things contained.

Wherefore, although a vitious or naughtie priest doth baptise any man, if hee that is baptised or his parents (if hee bee a child) do aske with faithfull meaning baptisme, and doe meane faithfully hereafter to obserue the words of baptisme: is as well baptised, as if he were baptised of neuer so vertuous a priest. So also the sinner which with all his heart is sorie for his sinnes, and doth aske faithfully mercie of God, is as well absolued of a vitious priest, as of a vertuous. Because the lambe of God which taketh away the sinnes of the world, wipeth away inwardly our sinnes by his grace, because that he is the bishop and pastour of our soules. All other priests do outwardly worke absolution, which know not for a certaintie whether they haue absolued or not. So also is it in the other, because that the grace of the sacrament is giuen of God, and the sacramentall signe, of man. In giuing of orders, the chiefe bishop doth imprint the corporall markes, but of the spirituall marks, I know none: vnlesse a man will say, that by receiuing the order he hath some beleefe that he may worke some things pertaining to that order, the which before the receiuing of the order he could not. But this one thing is, that none in the church ought to sell spirituall merchandise (of which things wee haue spoken before) vnlesse he haue the marke of the beast. My counsell is, let the buyer beware of those markes: because that after the fall of Babylon, if any man hath worshipped the beast and her image, and hath receiued the marke vpon his forehead, and vpon his hand, he shall drinke of the wine of Gods wrath, which is mixed with the wine in the cup of his anger, and hee shall be tormented in fire and brimstone in the sight of the holy angels, and in the sight of the lambe: and the smoake of their torments shall euermore ascend, although hee looke for a recompence, small, meane, or great, of the beast, or else the number of his name. The beast doubtlesse doth recompence his friends, with his small reward, that is, with great gifts and benefices corporall: with a meane reward, that is, with great spirituall gifts, in authoritie of blessing, loosing, binding, praying, and erecting other spirituall workes: and with his greatest reward, which after that they be dead, maketh them to be honored in earth, among the saints. The number of his name according to the opinion of some men, is Dux Cleri, the captaine of the clergie, because by that name he is named, and maketh his name knowne, and that name is 666.

Canons Empor.

The rewards of the beast.

The number of the name of the beast Dux cleri.

This is my opinion of the beast ascending out of the earth, and shall be vntill such time, as I shall be of the same beast better instructed. And although that this beast doth signifie the Roman bishops: yet the other cruell beast ascending out of the sea, doth signifie the Roman emperors. And although that the Dragon being a cruell beast, and the false prophet giuing the marke, must be throwne into the lake of fire and brimstone to be tormented for euer: I would haue no man to iudge, but I leaue such things altogether to the finall iudgement of Christ to be determined. But Martine the popes confessor which maketh the chronicle of the emperours and popes, reciteth many errours of the popes, more horrible and abominable then of the emperours. For he speaketh of the idolatrous popes, hereticall, simoniacall, and popes that were murtherers, that vsed necromancie, and witchcraft, that were fornicators, and defiled with all kind of vice. But I haue partly declared how that the popes law is contrarie to Christs law, and how that hee saith, that he is the chiefe vicar of Christ in earth; and in his deeds is contrarie to Christ, and doth forsake both his doctrine and life. I cannot see who else may bee so well Antichrist, and a seducer of the people. For there is not a greater pestilence then a familiar enemie.

Martinus penitentiarius.

More wicked popes then emperors.

The bishop of Rome seeketh to be worshipped as God.

The commandements of the pope more regarded then Christs.

As concerning idols and the worshipping of them, I thinke of them as Moses, Salomon, Isayas, Jeremie, and the rest of the prophets, which all spake against the making of images, as also the worshipping of images. And faithfull Dauid full of the spirit of God, saith: Let all those be confounded that worship images, and that reioyce in idols: And againe hee saith: Let them be made like vnto them that make them, and all such as put their trust in them. Wherefore I pray God that this euill come not vpon me, which is the curse of God pronounced by Dauid the prophet. Nor will I bee by Gods grace, neither a maker, nor else a worshipper of images.

Othes how far they are tolerable.

As concerning othes, I beleeue and obey the doctrine of the Almightie God, and my maister Iesus Christ, which teacheth; that christian men in affirmation of a truth, should passe the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharisies of the old Testament, or else he excludeth them from the kingdome of heauen. For he saith: Vnlesse your righteousnesse exceede the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharisies, yee cannot enter into the kingdome of heauen. And as concerning othes hee saith: It hath been said to them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thy selfe, but shalt performe vnto the Lord those things which thou knowest. But I say vnto you, thou shalt not sweare at all, neither by the heauen, nor yet by the earth, &c. But let your commu-communication be yea, yea, nay, nay, for whatsoeuer shall be more then this, proceedeth of euill. Therefore, as the perfection of the ancient men of the old Testament was, not to forsweare themselues: so the perfection of christian men, is not to sweare at all, because they are so commanded of Christ, whose commandement must in no case be broken, although that the citie of Rome is contrarie to this doctrine of Christ, euen as in many things she is found contrarie to her selfe.

Whether temporall goods may be taken away from ecclesiasticall persons offending.

As touching the taking away of temporall goods from those that are ecclesiasticall persons offending habitualiter: by such as are temporall lords, I will not affirme any thing to be lawfull in this matter (as in other matters before) that is not agreeable to charitie: And that for because it is a hard matter for a man to take another mans goods from him without breaking of charitie, because peraduenture he that taketh away, is the more moued to such maner of taking away by reason of the desire he hath to those goods, which he endeauoureth to take away: or else, because of some displeasure or hatred to the person, from whom hee goeth about to take away those goods, then that hee from whom those goods bee taken, should be amended. Therfore, vnlesse he that taketh away, bee only moued of charity to the taking away of such goods, I dare not affirme that such taking is lawfull. And if such taking away proceed of charitie, I dare not iudge it vnlawfull: because that the bishop of Rome, which receiued his temporall dominion of the emperor, when the emperor rebelled and was not obedient vnto him, he depriued him from his temporall iurisdictions: How much more then may temporall lords do the same, which haue bestowed vpon them many temporall dominions and lordships, only to the intent that they might the better intend to serue God and keepe his commandements: Now if they perceiue that they be against the lawes of God, and that they be ouer busilie occupied about worldly matters: I cannot see but that they may wel enough take from them those temporall goods, which to a good purpose they gaue them. But if in time to come after this, those that be temporall lords shall take from ecclesiastical persons such temporalities: let him that desireth to vnderstand this, reade the prophet Ezechiel, in the chapter of the shepheards of Israel, which fed themselues in stead of their flocke: and also let him reade the Apocalyps of the fall of Babylon. Let him also reade the popes decretals against heretickes; and in those hee shall find, that the taking away of the temporalties from the clergie, shall come to passe for the multitude of their sinnes.

Popes take from emperors their benefactors, temporall dominion, when they offend: Ergo, much more may emperors take from popes temporal dominion when they offend.

A prophecie of Walter Brute, that temporall goods shall be taken away from the clergie for the multitude of their sinnes.

Thus reuerend father haue I made mine answere to the matter whereof I am accused: beseeching you, that as I haue beene obedient to your desire, and that euen as a sonne, declaring vnto you the secrets of my heart in plaine words (although rudely): so I desire to know your opinion, and craue your fatherly benevolence, that now your labour may be for my instruction and amendment, and not to accusation and condemnation. For like as in the beginning I haue promised you, if any man of what state, sect, or condition soeuer hee be, can shew me any errour in any of my writings by the authoritie of holy Scripture, or by any probable reason grounded in the Scriptures; I will receiue his information willingly and humblie.

Walter Brute againe commanded to appeare.

After that all the foresaid things were exhibited and giuen by the foresaid Walter Brute, vnto the foresaid bishop of Hereford; he further appointed to the same Walter, the third day of the moneth of October, at Hereford, with the continuance of the daies following to heare his opinion. Which third day now at hand, being Friday in the yeare of our Lord God 1393. the said Walter Brute appeared before him, sitting in commission in the cathedrall church of Hereford, at six a clocke or thereabout; hauing for his assistants in the same place, diuers prelats and abbats, and twentie bachelers of Diuinitie, therof twelue were monks, & two doctors of ỳ law. Amongst these was Nicolas Hereford accompanied with many other prelats and worshipfull men and wise graduates in sundrie faculties. Now was the foresaid Walter apposed of his writings aforesaid, and the contents therein. Earnest were they in picking out of those writings, his heresies, and in shewing his schismes, sundrie errours, and diuers other things. Now, after that they had continued all that day and the two daies following (that is, friday, saturday and sunday) in their informations and examinations against the same Walter Brute; the same Walter Brute submitted himselfe to the determination of the church, and to the correction of the said Iohn Bishop, as it appeareth word for word in a scroll written in the English tongue: The tenour of which scroll, is as followeth.

Bishops and abbats, with twentie bachelers of Diuinitie, ten monks, two doctors of law sitting vpon Walter Brute. Nicolas Hereford there also present.

The writings of Walt. Brute examined.

The tenor of the submission of Walter Brute.

I Walter Brute submit my selfe principally to the Euangelie of Iesus Christ, and to the determination of holy kirke, and to the generall councels of holy kirke. And to the sentence and determination of the foure Doctors of holy writ, that is, Augustine, Ambrose, Ierome, and Gregorie. And I meekely submit me to your correction, as a subiect ought to his bishop.

Which scroll, as afore is recited, in the English tongue, the foresaid Walter Brute, read with a loud and intelligible voice, at the Croslle in the churchyard on Monday, that is to say, the firth of the said moneth of October, before the sermon made vnto the people in presence of the said bishop of Hereford and other aboue writen, as also other barons, knights and noble men, and clergie, and also a great multitude of people. After which reading of the scroll, the foresaid Thomas Crawlay, bacheler of Diuinitie, made the sermon vnto the people, and tooke for his theame the words of the apostle to the Romans, the eleuenth chapter, that is as followeth: Be not ouer wise in your owne conceits, but stand in feare, &c.

The submission of Walter Brute openly read at Hereford.

Besides them also, William Woodford a frier (who wrote likewise against the articles of Wickliffe) labouring in the same cause, made a solemne and a long tractation, compiling the articles of the said Brute, to the number of 29. All which treatises, as I wish to come to the readers hand, that the slenderues of them might be knowne; so it may happen peraduenture, that the same being in my hands may hereafter bee further published, with other like tractations more, as conuenient time for the profitrie thereof may hereafter better serue then now.

What after this became to this Walter Brute, or what end he had, I find it not registred: but like it is, that hee for this time escaped. Certaine other writings I find moreouer; which albeit they beare no name of this Walter nor of any certaine author: yet because they are in the same register adioyned to the history of him, I thought therfore most fit here to be inserted. Of the which, one was a letter sent to Nicolas Hereford a little aboue specified: who being at the first a great follower of John Wickliffe, as appeareth before, pag. 403. was now in the number of them which sate vpon this Walter, as is in the columne aboue recorded. The copie of this letter, bearing no name of any speciall author, but onely as sent by a certaine Lollard (as the register doth terme him) is written in maner and forme as followeth.

Here followeth the copie of a letter sent to master Nicolas Hereford, by a Lollard, as in the register it is said.

A letter sent to Nicol. Hereford.

FOrasmuch as no man that putteth his hand to the plough and looketh backe, is meet for the kingdome of God, as our Sauiour Christ saith: what maruell is it, although master Nicolas Hereford, which at the first (by the visitation of the spirit of God peraduenture) put his hand, that is, gaue his diligence vnto the plough, that is, to the sowing of the word of God and holy Scripture, as well in preaching as in doing good workes; is now so blind and vnskilfull to expound the Scripture, that he knoweth not what is vnderstood by the kingdom of heauen? Truely it is no maruell, O thou that art master of the Nicolaitans, which like Nicolas the most false Deacon, hast left or forsaken the infallible knowledge of the holy scripture. For the true knowledge of the Theologicall veritie is shut vp as well from thee as from all the other Nicolaitans following thy conditions, forasmuch as thou goest not in by the dore to expound the same Euangelicall veritie. Therefore when thou diddest recite this other day, first, the pharisaicall & hypocriticall woe (nothing at all to any purpose) thou shouldst haue said iustly in this sort, both of thy selfe, and other thy followers and religious Antichrists: Woe be vnto vs Scribes and Pharisies, which shut vp the kingdom of heauen, that is to say, the true knowledge of the holy Scripture, before men by our false glosses and crooked similitudes: and neither we our selues enter into the same kingdome or knowledge, nor suffer others to enter into it. Wherefore, it seemeth vnto the faithfull sort, that wrongfully, falslie, and without any reuerence, ye haue expounded that text of Gregorie, 1.q.1. that is to say, Quicunque studet, &c. For this is the true vnderstanding of the same: Knowing first that there bee some priests after the thing, and name onely, and doth shew that this is true: that whosoeuer studieth to receiue the holy order by giuing of money; he is not a priest, Secundum rem, & nomen. But to say the truth, hee desireth to be called a priest, that is, to be a priest Secundùm nomen tantùm. And such a priest, which is a priest in name only, is no priest. No more then S. Mary painted is S. Mary: Nor a false doctor a doctor, but no doctor: And a mã painted is not a man, but no man. And thus such a priest in name only, is not a priest: Because that all faithfull men doe firmely beleeue with saint Gregory, that no man buying the holy orders, may then be called a priest as he saith, 1.q.1. They that buy or sel holy orders can be no priests. Whereupon is written, Anathema dandi, & Anathema accipiendi: that is, Simoniacall heresie. And it followeth, How therefore if they be accursed and not blessed, can they make others blessed? And when that they bee not in the body of Christ, how can they either receiue or deliuer the body of Christ? He that is accursed, how can he blesse? as though he would ſay: It is vnpoſſible. As pope Vrbanus ſaith, 1.q.1. Si quia Simoniacis, &c. Where he ſaith thus: They that willingly know and ſuffer themſelues to be conſecrated, nay rather execrated, of thoſe that are infected with ſimonie: we iudge that their conſecration is altogether void. Alſo pope Leo in 2.q.1. ſaith in this wiſe: Grace, if it be not freely giuen and receiued, is not grace. Spirituall vſurers doe not receiue freely: Therefore, they receiue not the ſpirituall grace, which ſpecially worketh in the eccleſiaſticall orders. If they receiue it not, they haue it not: if they haue it not freely, they cannot giue it freely. And by this it is more cleere then the light, that they which know ſo much and receiue orders by ſpirituall vſurie of ſimonie, are neither prieſts nor deacons, neither after the maner nor character. For if ſuch character or marke were otherwiſe giuen in giuing orders, it were requiſite alwaies that there ſhould be a certaine grace imprinted in the man; but there is no ſuch grace giuen or imprinted, as afore is manifeſt. Therefore there is no character to be fained. Therefore ſuch character or marke abideth not in him, foraſmuch as he neuer had nor hath the ſame. And yet furthermore in the ſame place; What then doe the ſimoniacall prelats giue? And he maketh anſwere: Truely euen that which they haue, as the ſpirit of lying. How proue wee this? Becauſe that if it be the ſpirit of veritie, as the ſame veritie doth teſtifie from whom it commeth, it is freely receiued. And it followeth for the whole purpoſe no doubt: It is conuicted to be the ſpirit of lying, which is not freely receiued.

1.q.1 ad. Quicunque studet.

1.q.1. Si quis a Simoniacis

Ex Leone Papa. 2.q.1.

By this it appeareth manifeſtly to the faithfull ſort, that thoſe which wittingly and ſimoniacally are made prieſts, for as much as they receiue not the character of the Lord, but only the ſpirit of lying and the marke of Simon Magus, and of Iudas the traitor, that they be not prieſts neither according to the marke nor maners. Nor ſuch do no more make the ſacraments of the church, then other lay men may in the time of neceſſitie, nor yet ſo truely, during their hereticall naughtines. And yet indeed (brother mine) vnioocè natura, but yet æquioocè in moribus; I doe not write thus ſharpely vnto you, through anger, or any vnperfect hate, but through the perfect hate of your horrible hereſie, and denying the faith of Chriſt, that I may ſay with Dauid in the pſalme: Perfecto odio oderam: &c. And I am very ſorie for you, that you which in times paſt haue excellently well, and fruitfully preached the Goſpell in the pulpit, do now as well faile in the congruitie of the Latine tongue, as in the other ſcience naturall. For as it was heard, thrice in one lecture you ſaid appetitis, that is to ſay, pronouncing the middle ſyllable long, which thing not onely the maſters, but alſo the yong ſcholars vnderſtood. And many other faults there were in your Grammar, which for ſhame I dare not recite. I ſend vnto you theſe fiue concluſions.

Brother in nature: in maners no brother.

5. Concluſions ſent.

The firſt concluſion: It is an infallible veritie that the woꝛds of the foure chiefe Doctoꝛs, expounding the holy Scripture accoꝛding to the veritie which the woꝛds doe pꝛetend, are to be holden and kept.

The ſecond: He which impoꝛteth any equiuocation out of any of the Doctoꝛs expounding, foꝛ the colouring of his text, his equiuocation is alwaies to be left.

The third: No peruerſion of any repꝛobate is able to turne the congregation of the elect from the faith, becauſe all things that ſhall come to paſſe, are eternally in God deuiſed, and oꝛdained foꝛ the beſt, vnto the elect chꝛiſtians.

The fourth: Like as the myſticall body of Chꝛiſt is the congregation of all the elect: ſo Antichꝛiſt myſtically is the church of the wicked and of all the repꝛobats.

The fifth: The concluſions of Swinderby, be agreeable to the faith in euery part.

The epiſtle of Luciſer to the proud pꝛelats of the popes clergie.

I Luciſer prince of darkneſſe and profound heauineſſe, emperor of the high myſteries of the king of Acharont, captaine of the dungeon Erebus, king of hell, and controller of the infernall fire: To all our children of pride, and companions of our kingdome, and eſpecially to our princes of the church of this latter age and time (of which our aduerſarie Ieſus Chriſt, according to the prophet, ſaith: I hate the church or congregation of the wicked) ſend greeeting, and wiſh proſperitie to all that obey our commandements, as alſo to thoſe that bee obedient to the lawes of Satan alreadie enacted, and that are diligent obſeruers of our beheſts, and the precepts of our decree. Know ye that in times paſt certaine vicars or vicegerents of Chriſt, following his ſteps in miracles and vertues, liuing and continuing in a beggerlie life, conuerted (in a maner) the whole world from the yoke of our tyrannie vnto their doctrine and maner of life: to the great deriſion and contempt of our priſon houſe and kingdome, and alſo to the no little preiudice and hurt of our iuriſdiction and authoritie, nor fearing to hurt our fortified power, and to offend the maieſtie of our eſtate. For then receiued we no tribute of the world, neither did the miſerable ſort of common people, ruſh at the gates of our deepe dungeon as they were wont to doe, with continuall pealing and rapping, but then the eaſie, pleaſant and brode way, which leadeth to death, lay ſtill without great noiſe of trampling trauellers, neither yet was trod with the feete of miſerable men. And when all our courts were without ſuters, Hell then began to houle. And thus continuing in great heauineſſe and anguiſh, was robbed and ſpoiled. Which thing conſidered, the impatient rage of our ſtomach could no longer ſuffer, neither the vglie rechleſſe negligence of our great captaine generall could any longer endure it. But we, ſeeking remedie for the time that ſhould come after, haue prouided vs of a verie trim ſhift: For in ſtead of theſe apoſtles and other their adherents which draw by the ſame line of theirs, as well in maners as doctrine, and are odious enemies vnto vs: We haue cauſed you to be their ſucceſſors, and put you in their place, which be prelats of the church in theſe latter times, by our great might and ſubtiltie, as Chriſt hath ſaid of you: They haue reigned, but not by me. Once we promiſed vnto him all the kingdomes of the world if he would fall downe and worſhip vs; but he would not, ſaying, My kingdome is not of this world, and went his way, when the multitude would haue made him a temporall king. But to you truly which are fallen from the ſtate of grace, and that ſerue vs in the earth, is that my promiſe fulfilled: and all terrene things by our meanes which we haue beſtowed vpon you, are vnder gouernment. For he hath ſaid of vs as ye know: The prince of this world commeth, &c. and hath made vs to reigne ouer all children of vnbeleefe. Therefore our aduerſaries before recited, did patientlie ſubmit themſelues vnto the princes of the world, and did teach that men ſhould doe ſo, ſaying: Be ye ſubiect to euerie creature for Gods cauſe, whether it be to the king as moſt chiefeſt. And againe: Obey ye them that are made rulers ouer you, &c. For ſo their maſter commanded them ſaying: The kings of the Heathen haue dominion ouer them, &c. But I thinke it long till wee haue powred our poyſon vpon the earth, and therefore fill your ſelues full. And now bee yee not vnlike thoſe fathers, but alſo contrarie vnto them in your life and conditions, and extoll your ſelues aboue all other men. Neither do ye giue to God that which belongeth to him, nor yet to Cæſar that which is his: but exerciſe you the power of both the ſwords, according to our decrees, making your ſelues doers in worldly matters, fighting in our quarrell, intangled with ſecular labours and buſines. And clime ye by little and little from the miſerable ſtate of pouertie, vnto the higheſt ſeats of all honours, and the moſt princelie places of dignitie by your deuiſed practiſes, and falſe and deceitfull wiles and ſubtiltie: that is, by hypocriſie, flatterie, lying, periurie, treaſons, deceits, ſimonie, and other greater wickednesſe then which our infernall furies may deuiſe. For after that ye haue by vs beene aduanced thither where yee would be, yet that doth not ſuffice you, but as greedie ſtaruelings more hungrie then ye were before, ye ſuppreſſe the poore, ſcratch & rake together all that comes to hand, peruerting and turning euerie thing topſie turuey: ſo ſwolne, that readie ye are to burſt for pride, liuing like Lechers in all corporall delicateneſſe, and by fraud directing all your doings. You challenge to your ſelues names of honour in the earth, calling your ſelues lords, holie, yea and moſt holie perſons.

a strumpet. Thou hast left thy first loue and hast cleaued vnto vs, O our beloued Babylon, O our citizens, which from the transmigration of Ierusalem, come hither: wee loue you for your deserts, we reioyce ouer you, which contemne the lawes of Simon Peter, and imbrace the lawes of Simon Magus our friend, and haue them at your fingers ends, and exercise the same publikely, buying and selling spirituall things in the church of God, and against the commandement of God. Ye giue benefices and honours by petition, or else for mony, for fauour, or else for filthy seruice. And refusing to admit those that be worthy, to ecclesiasticall dignities, and preferring those that are vnworthy, you call vnto the inheritance of Gods sanctuary, baudes, liers, flatterers, your nephewes, and your own children, and to a childish boy, ye giue many prebends, the least whereof ye denie to bestow vpon a poore good man: ye esteeme the person of a man and receiue gifts, ye regard mony and haue no regard of soules. Yee haue made the house of God a denne of theeues. All abuse, all extortion, is more exercised, a hundreth fold in your iudgement seats, then with any secular tyrant. Ye make lawes and keep not the same, and ye dispence with your dispensations as it pleaseth you; you iustifie the wicked for rewards, and you take away the iust mans desert from him. And briefly ye perpetrate or commit all kind of mischiefe, euen as it is our will ye should. And ye take much paine for lucres sake in our seruice, and especially to destroy the Christian faith. For now the lay people are almost in doubt what they may beleeue, because if ye preach any thing to them at some times (although it be but seldome seene, and that negligently enough, euen as wee would haue it) yet notwithstanding they beleeue you not, because they see manifestly that ye doe cleane contrarie to that ye say. Whereupon the common people, doing as ye doe, which haue the gouernment of them, and should be an example to them of well doing: now many of them leaning to your rules, doe runne headlong into a whole sea of vices: and so continually a very great multitude flocketh at the strong and well fenced gates of our dungeon. And doubtlesse, ye send vs so many day by day of euery sort and kind of people, that we should not bee able to entertaine them, but that our insatiable Chaos with her thousand rauening iawes is sufficient to deuour an infinit number of soules. And thus the soueraignitie of our empire, by you hath been reformed, and our intollerable losse restored. Wherefore, most specially wee commend you, and giue you most heartie thanks; exhorting all you, that in anie wise ye perseuere and continue, as hitherto ye haue done: neither that you slacke henceforth your enterprise. For why? by your helps we purpose to bring the whole world againe vnder our power and dominion. Ouer and besides this, we commit vnto you no smal authoritie, to supplie our places in the betraying of your brethren; and we make and ordaine you our vicars, and the ministers of antichrist our son, now hard at hand, for whom ye haue made a very trim way and passage. Furthermore, we counsell you which occupie the highest roomes of all other, that you worke subtillie, and that ye (fainedlie) procure peace between the princes of the world, and that ye cherish and procure secret causes of discord. And like as craftilie ye haue destroied & subuerted the Roman empire: so suffer ye no kingdome to be ouermuch inlarged or inriched by tranquillitie and peace; lest perhaps in so great tranquillitie (all desire of peace set aside) they dispose themselues to view and consider your most wicked works, suppressing on euerie side your estate: and from your treasures take away such substance, as we haue caused to be reserued and kept in your hands, vntill the comming of our welbeloued sonne antichrist. We would ye should doe our commendations to our entirelie beloued daughters, pride, deceit, wrath, auarice, bellicheere, and lecherie, and to all other my daughters; and especiallie to ladie Simonie, which hath made you men, and inriched you, and hath giuen you sucke with her owne breasts, and weaned you, and therefore in no wise see that you call her sinne. And be ye loftie and proud, because that the most high dignitie of your estate doth require such magnificence. And also be ye couetous, for whatsoeuer ye get and gather into your fardell, it is for Saint Peter, for the peace of the church, and for the defence of your patrimonie and the crucifix; and therefore ye may lawfully doe it. Ye may promote your cardinals to the highest seat of dignities, without any let in all the world, in stopping the mouth of our aduersarie Iesus Christ, and alleaging againe, that he preferred his kinsfolks (being but of poore and base degree) vnto the Apostleship; but do not you so, but rather call, as ye do, those that liue in arrogãcie, in haughtinesse of mind, and filthy lecherie, vnto the state of wealthie riches and pride; and those rewards and promotions, which the followers of Christ forsook, do ye distribute vnto your friends. Therfore as ye shall haue better vnderstanding, prepare ye vices cloked vnder the similitude of vertues. Alleage for your selues the glosses of the holie Scripture, and wrest them, directlie to serue for your purpose. And if any man preach or teach otherwise then ye will, oppresse ye them violently with the sentence of excommunication, and by your censures heaped one vpon another, by the consent of your brethren; let him be condemned as an heretike, and let him bee kept in most strait prison, and there tormented til he die, for a terrible example to all such as cõfesse Christ. And setting all fauor apart, cast him out of your temple, lest peraduenture the ingraffed word may saue your soules, which word I abhor as I do the soules of other faithfull men. And doe your indeuor, that ye may deserue to haue the place which we haue prepared for you, vnder the most wicked foundation of our dwelling place. Fare ye well with such felicitie as we desire and intend finallie to reward and recompence you with.

Who was the true author of this poesie or epistle aboue written, is not euidently knowne, neither doth it greatly skill. The matter being well considered of their part, which here be noted, may minister vnto them sufficient occasion of wholsome admonition, either to remember themselues what is amisse, or to bethinke with themselues what is to be amended. Diuers other writings of like argument both before and since, haue been deuised: as one bearing the title, Luciferi ad malos principes Ecclesiasticos; imprinted first at Paris in Latin. And vnder the writing thereof, bearing this date: Anno à palatij nostri fractione, consortiumq; nostrorum subtractione, 1351. Which if ye count from the Passion of the Lord, reacheth well to the time of Wickliffe 1385. which was aboue six yeres before the examination of this Walter Brute.

Epist. Lucif. ad prælatos.

There is also another epistle of Lucifer prince of darknes, ad prælatos, mentioned in the epistle of the schole of Prage, to the Vniuersitie of Orford, set forth by Huldericus Huttenus, about the yeere of our Lord (as is there dated) 1370. which seemeth to be written before this epistle.

Vincent. spec. hist. lib. 25. c. 89.

Also Vincentius in Speculo histo. lib. 25. cap. 89. inferreth like mention of a letter of the fiends infernall, vnto the clergy men, as in a vision represented, before 400. yeeres. In which the diuels gaue thanks to the spiritual men, for that by their silence and not preaching the gospel, they send infinit soules to hell, &c.

Diuers other letters also of like deuice, haue been written, and also recorded in authors. Whereunto may be added, that one Iacobus Cartusiensis, writing to the bishop of Woormace, alleageth out of the prophecie of Hildegardis, in these words: Ideo & diabolus in semetipso de vobis sacerdotibus ait: Escas epulantium, conuiuia & omnes voluptates in istis inuenio; sed & oculi, & aures, & venter meus, & venæ meæ, de spumis illorum plenæ sunt, & vbera mea plena sunt diuitijs illorum, &c. i. Therefore, saith he the diuel may say of you priests in himselfe: The meates of banquetting dishes, and feasts of all kind of pleasure, I finde in these men; yea also, mine eies, mine eares, my belly, and all my veines be full of their froathing, and my breasts be full stuffed with their riches, &c. Furthermore, saith hee, they labour euery day to rise vp higher with Lucifer, but euery day they fall with him more deeply.

Ex prophetia Hildegardis.

Hereunto also appertaineth a story written, and commonly found in many old written bookes: In the yeere of our Lord 1228. at Paris in a synod of the clergy, there was one appointed to make a sermon. Who being much carefull in his mind, and solicitous what to say, the diuell came to him, and asking him why he was so carefull for his matter what he should preach to the clergy, say thus, quoth he: The princes of hell salute you. (O you princes of the church) and gladly giue you thanks, because through your default and negligence it commeth to passe, that all soules goe downe to hell. Adding moreouer, that hee was also enforced by the commandement of God to declare the same: yea and that a certaine token moreouer was giuen to the said clerke for a signe, whereby the synod might euidently see that hee did not lie. Ex catal. Illyr. fol. 546.

The diuell giueth thanks to clergy men.

The silence of priests for not preaching the Gospell, damneth many a soule.

The popes letter to the bishop of Hereford.

BOnifacius bishop, seruant of the seruants of God: To the reuerend brother Iohn bishoppe of Hereford, sendeth greeting and apostolicall benediction. Wee meane to write vnto our welbeloued sonne in Christ (Richard the renowmed king of England) in forme inclosed within these presents. Therefore we will and command your brotherhood, that as much as ye may, ye studie and indeuour your selfe to exhort and induce the same king, to doe those things which we haue written vnto him, as it is said before. And notwithstanding, that now manie a day you ought to haue done it of your selfe, and not to look that we should perswade you to that effect by vs written: you may proceed as well by our authoritie, as by your owne, forasmuch as it was giuen you before: that hereafter we may know effectuallie by your diligence, what zeale your deuotion beareth vnto the catholike faith, and to the conseruing of the ecclesiasticall honour, and also to the execution of your pastorall office.

The tenor of the bull, to the renowmed prince, Richard by the grace of God king of England and of France: whereof mention is made aboue, as followeth, and is thus much in effect.

The popes wilie bull set foorth against the seruants of Christ.

TO our welbeloued sonne in Christ, Richard the noble king of England, we send greeting, &c. It greeueth vs from the bottome of our hearts, and our holy mother the church in all places through Christendome lamenteth. We vnderstand that there be certaine heresies sprung, and do without any condigne restraint range at their own liberty, to the seducing of the faithfull people, and doe euery day with ouermuch liberty enlarge their vndiscreet bounds. But how much the more carefully we labour for the preseruation both of you and your famous kingdome, and also the sincerity of the faith, and doe with much more ardent desire couet, that the prosperous state of the same should be preserued and inlarged; the sting of greater sorrow doth so much the more penetrate and molest vs, forasmuch as we see (alas the while) in our time, and vnder the regall presidence of your most Christian gouernment, a certaine craftie, and hairebraine sect of false Christians, in the same your kingdome, to grow and increase; which call themselues, The poore men of the treasury of Christ and his disciples, and whom the common people by a more sounder name, call, Lollards, (as a man would say, withered darnell) according as their sinnes require; and perceiue that they wax strong, and as it were preuaile against the dioceſans of some places, and other gouernours as they meet together, not couragiously addressing themselues against them as they ought to doe (whereof chiefly and not vndeseruedly I giue them admonition) for that they take thereby the more bolder presumption and stomacke among the vnlearned people. And forasmuch as those whom we cannot call men, but the damnable shadowes or ghosts of men, do rise vp against the sound faith, and holy vniuersall church of Rome: and that very many of them being indifferently learned, which (to the confusion and eternall damnation of some of them) they got sitting vpon their mothers lap the said church of Rome, do rise vp or inueigh against the determination of the holy fathers, with too much presumptuous boldnesse, to the subuersion of the whole ecclesiasticall order and estate; haue not bin afraid, nor are not yet afraid, publikely to preach very many erroneous, detestable, & hereticall articles, for that they are not put to silence, reproued, driuen out, rooted out or otherwise punished, by any that hath authority and the feare and loue of God. And also they are not afraid openly to write the same articles, and so being written to deliuer them to your kingly parliament, and obstinatly to affirme the same. The venemous and disdainfull recitall of which articles, vpon good aduisement at this present we passe ouer, lest the sufferance of such sensuality might fortune to renew the wound that reason may heale. Yet notwithstanding, lest so great and contagious an euill should escape vnpunished, and that without deserued vexation, and also that it might not get more heart, and wax more stronger: We therefore (according to that our office and duty is, where such negligence and sluggishnes of our prelats being present, where this thing is) doe commit and giue in commandement to our reuerend brethren, Canturbury and Yorke, archbishops, by other our letters; that they stand vp in the power of God against this pestilent and contagious sect, and that they liuely persecute the same in forme of law: roote out and destroy those, that aduisedly and obstinatly refuse to withdraw their foot from the same stumbling blocke, any restraint to the contrary notwithstanding. But because the assistance, counsell, fauor, and aid of your kingly estate and highnesse are requisit to the execution of the premisses: we require, exhort, and beseech the same your princely highnesse, by the bowels of the mercy of Iesus Christ, by his holy faith, by your owne saluation, by the benefit that to all men is common, and by the prosperity assured to euery man and woman, that not onely your kingly seuerity may readily shew, and cause to be shewed vnto our archbishops and their commissaries (in this behalfe requiring the foresaid due execution) conuenient aid and fauor, as otherwise also to cause them to be assisted: but that also you will inioine your magistrates and Iustices of Assise, and peace, more straitly, that of their own good wils, they execute the authority committed vnto them, with all seuerity against such damned men, according as they are boũd by the office, which they are put in trust with: against those I meane, which haue determined obstinately to defile themselues in their malice and sinnes, those to expell, banish, and imprison, and there so long to keepe them, till condigne sentence shall pronounce them worthy to suffer punishment. For your kingly wisdome seeth, that such as they bee, doe not only deceiue poore simple soules (or at the least doe what they can to deceiue them) but also bring their bodies to destruction, and further prepare confusion and ruinous fall vnto their temporall lords. Go to therefore my sweete sonne, and indeuour your selfe to worke so in this matter, as vndoubtedly we trust you will: that as this firebrand (burning and flaming ouer sore) beganne vnder your presidence or gouernment; so vnder your seuere iudgement and vertuous diligence, might, fauour, and aid; not one sparke remaine hidde vnder the ashes, but that it bee vtterlie extinguished, and speedily put out.

Alacke good heart, what sorrow the pope taketh.

As though no learning were but in the church of Rome.

The dragon here spouteth out his flouds of water to drowne the christians.

Behold the spirit of the popes meek holinesse.

¶ The kings Commission.

RIchard by the grace of God, king of England, and of France, and lord of Ireland. To all those vnto whom these present letters shall come, greeting. Know ye, that whereas lately at the instance of the reuerend father, William archbishop of Canturbury, Metropolitane of all England, and Legat of the apostolicall seate: We for the redresse and amendment of all those which would obstinately preach or maintaine, publikely or priuily, any conclusions of the holy Scripture, repugnant to the determination of our holy mother the church, and notoriously redounding to the subuersion of the catholike faith, or containing any heresie or errour, within the prouince or bishopricke of Canturbury; haue by our speciall letters patents, in the zeale of the faith, giuen authority and licence vnto the foresaid archbishop, and to all and singuler his suffragans, to arrest all and euery of them that will preach or maintaine any such conclusions, whersoeuer they may be found, and to commit them either to their owne prisons, or any others at their owne pleasure, and to keep them in the same, vntill they repent them of the errours and prauities of those heresies; or till that, of such manner of arrests, by vs or by our counsell it should be otherwise determined: that is to say, to euery one of them and their ministers throghout their cities & dioceſe. And now the reuerend father in God, Iohn bishop of Hereford, hath for a certaintie informed vs; that although the same bishop hath according to iustice conuinced a certaine fellow named W. Swinderby, pretending himselfe to be a chaplen, and one Stephan Bell a learned man, and hath pronounced them heretikes & excommunicat, and false informers among the common people, and hath declared the same by the definitiue sentence of the aforesaid bishop, for that they haue presumed to affirme and preach openly in diuers places within the dioceſe of Hereford, many conclusions or naughty opinions notoriously redounding to the subuersion of the catholike sound faith, and tranquillity of our kingdome: The same bishop notwithstanding, neither by the ecclesiasticall censures, neither yet by the force and strength of our commission was able to reuoke the foresaid William and Stephan, nor yet to bridle the malice and indurat contumacie of them: for that they, after that they were vpon such heretical prauity conuict by the same bishop, (to the intent they might delude his iudgement and iustice) conueied themselues by and by vnto the borders of Wales, with such as were their fautors and accomplices, in keeping themselues close, vnto whom the force of our said letters doth in no wise extend. Whereupon the said bishop hath made supplication vnto vs, that we will vouchsafe to prouide a sufficient remedy in that behalfe. Wee therefore, which alwaies (by the helpe of almightie God) are defenders of the faith, willing to withstand such presumptuous and peruerse enterprises by the most safe way and meanes we may, giue and commit full power and authority to the foresaid bishop & to his ministers, by the tenor of these presents, to arrest or take, or cause to be arrested or taken, the foresaid William and Stephan, in any place within the citie and dioceſe of Hereford and our domininion of Wales, with all the speed that may be; and to commit them either to our prison, or else to the prison of the same bishop, or any other prison at their pleasure, if such need be, and there to keep them safe. And afterwards, vnlesse they wil obey the commandemẽts of the church, with diligence to bring them before vs and our counsell, or els cause them to be brought: that we may determin for their further punishment, as we shall thinke it requisite and conuenient to be done by the aduice of our counsell, for the defence and preseruation of the catholike faith. And that the foresaid William and Stephan, being succored by the aid of their fautors or fauorers, should not be able to flie or escape to their accustomed starting holes; and that the sharpnes of their paines so aggrauated, may giue them sufficient cause to returne to the lap againe of their holy mother the church: we straitly charge and command all and singuler our sheriffes, bailiffes, barons, and all other our officers in the citie and dioceſe of Hereford, and in any other places being within our dominion of Wales, by the tenour of these presents: that from time to time (where they thinke it most meet) they cause it openly to bee proclaimed in our name, that none, of what state, degree, preheminence, kind, or other condition he shall be of, doe cherish openly or secretly the foresaid William and Stephan, vntill the time that they repent them of their heresies and errors, and shall be reconciled vnto the holy church of God: Neither that any person or persons, be beleeuers, fauourers, or receiuers, defenders, or in any case wittingly instructers of the said William or Stephan, or any other of the residue of the heretikes that are to be conuinced, vpon the forfeiture of all that euer they haue. And that also they giuing their attendance, bee obedient and answerable to the foresaid bishoppe and his deputies in this behalfe, for the

Another letter of the said king against Walter Brute.

Another letter of king Richard against Walter Brute.

RIchard by the grace of God king of England and of France, and lord of Ireland. To his beloued and faithfull Iohn Chaundos knight, Iohn Eynfore knight, Renold de la Bere knight, Walter Deueros knight, Thomas de la Bare knight, William Lucie knight, Leonard Hakelute knight, and to the maior of the citie of Hereford, to Thomas Oldcastle, Richard Nash, Roger Wygmore, Thomas Waylwayne, Iohn Skydmore, Iohn Vp-Harry, Henry Motton, and to the sheriffe of Hereford, sendeth salutations.

Forasmuch as it is aduertised vs, that one Walter Brute, and other such children of iniquitie, haue dannably holden, affirmed, and preached, certaine articles and conclusions being notoriously repugnant against the holy Scripture (of the which, some of them as heresies, and the rest as errors, are finally by the church condemned) and that in diuers places within the diocesse of Hereford, and parts neere adioining, both priuily, openly, and obstinatly: which thing wee perceiue not onely to redound to the subuersion (in a manner) of the catholike faith, which as well we as other catholike princes ought of duty to maintaine, but also to forewarne vs of the subuersion of our faithful Diocesans. And that the said bishop, vpon the good deliberation and aduisement of a great number of doctors in Diuinity, and other learned and skilfull men in the Scriptures, of speciall deuotion, according to his bounden duty, purposed to begin and make diuers and sundry processes by law to bee sent vnto the foresaid Walter and his accomplices, to appeare personally before him and other the doctors aforesaid, in the cathedral church of Hereford, the morrow after the translation of S. Thomas of Hereford next ensuing; and to proceed in the same place against the same Walter, in the foresaid articles and conclusions, for the amendment of his soule. Now afresh (because that the said Walter and others of their retinew, cleauing and confederating with him, might not suffer condigne paines according to their demerits) indeuor themselues to make void and frustrate the said godly purpose of the same bishop, in such correction and execution as should haue been done, and with force doe resist and let the same with all the power they may, to the great contempt of vs and of our crowne, and to the breaking and hurting of our peace, and pernicious example of others: Do appoint you, and euery of you, immediatly as soone as this our commission shall be deliuered vnto you, in our behalfe and name, to make open proclamation in the diocesse and parts aforesaid, where ye shall thinke it most meet and conuenient: That no man be so hardy henceforth, of what state or condition so euer he shall be, within the diocesse and parts aforesaid, vpon paine of forfaiture of all that euer hee hath, to make or leuie any conuenticles, assemblies, or confederacies, by any colour: or that they presume to attempt or procure any other thing, whereby our peace may be hurt or broken, or that the same bishops and doctors aforesaid, may be by any means molested or let in the execution of such correction as is to be done, according to the canonicall sanctions; and to arrest all those which ye shall finde, or take offending in this behalfe, or that keep themselues in any such conuenticles. And that they being committed to prison, be there kept, till you shall haue other commandement from vs and our counsell for their deliuerance: and that ye distinctly and plainly certifie vs and our said counsell, of all your doing in this behalfe vnder your seales, or else the seales of some of you. And therefore we straitly charge and command you, and euery of you, that ye diligently attend vpon the premisses, and that in your deeds ye execute the same with all diligence and carefull indeuour, in the forme and manner aforesaid. And further, we giue strait charge and commandement to all and singuler sheriffes, maiors, bailiffes, constables, and other our faithfull subiects, by the tenour of these presents; that they be attending vpon you, counselling and aiding you, and euery of you, as is meet and conuenient in the doing and execution of the premisses. In witnesse whereof, we haue caused these our letters patents to be made. Witnesse my selfe at Westminster the 22. day of September, in the 17. yeere of our raigne.

By the same king and counsell.

Walter Brute.

Whether the doctrine of Brute was euer against resistance, how is this like to be true?

King Richard set against the gospellers by the archbishop and the prelats.

Thus king Richard by the setting on of W. Courtney, archbishop of Canturbury and his fellowes, taking part with the pope and Romish prelats, waxed something strait & hard to the poore christians of the contrary side, of Wickliffe, as by these letters aboue prefixed may appeare. Albeit, during all the life of the said king, I finde of none expresly by name that suffered burning. Notwithstanding, some there were which by the foresaid archbishop William Courtney, and other bishops, had been condemned, and diuers also abiured, and did penance as well in other places, as chiefly about the towne of Leicester, as followeth here to be declared out of the archbishops register and records. Ex Regist. W. Courtney, Archiep. Cant.

At what time the said archbishop William Courtney was in his visitation at the towne of Leicester, certaine there were accused and detected to him, by the monks and other priests in the said towne. The names of which persons there detected, were, one Roger Dexter, Nicolas Taylor, Richard Magistaff, Michael Scriuener, William Smith, John Henry, William Parchmenar, and Roger Goldsmith, inhabitants of the same towne of Leicester. These with other mo, were denounced to the archbishop for holding the opinion of the sacrament of the altar, of auricular confession, and other sacraments, contrary to that which the church of Rome doth preach and obserue. All which parties aboue named, and many other mo, whose names are not knowne, did hold these heresies and errors here vnder written, and are of the Romish church condemned. Roger Dexter, Nicolas Taylor, Richard Magistaff, Michael Scriuener, William Smith, John Henry, William Parchmenar, Roger Goldsmith accused.

1. That in the sacrament of the altar, after the words of consecration, there remaineth the body of Christ with the materiall bread.
2. That images ought not to be worshipped in any case, nor that no man ought to set any candles before them.
3. That no crosse ought to be worshipped.
4. The masses and mattens ought not with an high and loud voice to be said in the church.
5. Item, that no curat or priest taken in any crime, can consecrat, heare confessions, nor minister any of the sacraments of the church.
6. That the pope & all prelats of the church cannot binde any man with the sentence of excommunication, vnlesse they know him to be first excommunicated of God.
7. That no prelat of the church can grant any pardons.
8. That euery lay man may in euery place preach and teach the Gospell.
9. That it is sinne to giue any almes or charity to the friers preachers, Minorites, Augustines, or Carmelites.
10. That no oblation ought to be vsed at the funerals of the dead.
11. That it is not necessary to make confession of our sinnes to the priest.
12. That euery good man, although hee be vnlearned, is a priest.

These Articles they taught, preached, and affirmed manifestly in the towne of Leicester, and other places adioining. Whereupon the said archbishop monished the said Roger, and Nicolas, with the rest, on the next day to make answere vnto him in the said monastery to the foresaid articles. But the foresaid Roger and Nicolas, with the rest, hid themselues out of the way, and appeared not. Whereupon the archbishop vpon All hallow day, being the first day of November, celebrating the high masse at the high altar in the said monastery, being attired in his pontificalibus, denounced the said parties with all their adherents, fautors, fauorers, and counsellers, excommunicat and accursed, which either held, taught, or maintained the foresaid conclusions hereticall and erroneous, and that in solemne wise, by ringing the bels, lighting the candles, and putting out the same againe, and throwing them downe to the ground, with other circumstances thereunto belonging. Vpon the morrow after (being All Soulne day) he sent for all the curats and other lay men of the towne of Leicester, to inquire more diligently of the verity of such matter as they knew, and were able to say against any persons whatsoeuer, concerning the foresaid articles, as also against the parties before named and specified vpon their othes, denouncing euery one of them seuerally by their names to be excommunicated and accursed; and caused them also in diuers parish churches in Leicester also to be excommunicat. And further the said archbishop interdicted the whole towne of Leicester, and all the churches in the same, so long as any of the foresaid excommunicat persons should remaine or be within the same, and till that all the Lollards of the towne should returne and amend from such heresies and errors, obtaining at the said archbishop his hands the benefit of absolution. Roger, Nicolas, Richard, Michael, William and Roger accursed with booke, bell, and candle. The whole towne of Leicester interdicted.

At length it was declared and shewed to the said archbishop, that there was a certaine anchoresse whose name was Matilde, inclosed within the churchyard of S. Peters church of the said towne of Leicester, to be infected (as they said) with the pestiferous contagion of the foresaid heretikes & Lollards: whereupon, after that the said archbishop had examined the foresaid Matilde, touching the foresaid conclusions, heresies, and errors, and found her not to answer plainly and directly to the same, but sophistically and subtilly; gaue and assigned vnto her a day peremptory, personally to appeare before him in the monastery of Saint James at Northhampton, more fully to answer to the said articles, heresies, and errors, which was the sixth day of the said month of November; commanding the abbat of the monastery of Peters aforesaid, that the doore of the recluse in which the said Matild was, should be opened, and that till his return he should cause her to be put in safe custody. Matilde an anchoresse cited to appeare.

That

That done, he sent forth his mandat against the Lollards, vnder this forme:

The kings procesle sent by the bishop to arrest the 8. aforenamed.

William by the permission of God, &c. To his welbeloued sonnes, the Maior and Bailiffes of the towne of Leicester diocesse, greeting. We haue lately receiued the kings letters, graciously granted vs for the defence of the catholike faith, in these words following. Richard by the grace of God, king of England and of France, &c. We on the behalfe of our holy mother the church, by the kings authority aforesaid, doe require you, that you cause the same Richard, William, Roger, and the rest, to be arrested, and sent vnto vs; that they with their pernicious doctrine doe not infect the people of God, &c. Giuen vnder our seale, &c.

Margaret Caily a nun, constrained against her will to take againe her habit.

By another instrument also in the same Register, is mention made of one Margaret Caily Nun, which forsaking her order, was by the said archbishop constrained against her will, againe to enter the same, as by this instrument here vnder ensuing may appeare.

William by the grace of God, &c. To our reuerend brother in God, John, by the grace of God bishop of Ely, greeting, &c. In the visitation of our diocesse of Lincolne according to our office, amongst other enormities worthy reformation, we found one sheepe out of our fold straied, and amongst the briers tangled; to wit, Margaret Caily, Nun professed, of the monastery of S. Radegond within your diocesse: who casting off the habit of her religion, was found in secular attire, many yeeres being an apostata, and leading a dissolute life. And lest her bloud should be required at our hands, wee haue caused her to be taken, and brought vnto you, being her pastor; and straitly inioyning you, by these presents doe command, that you admit the same Margaret againe into her foresaid monastery (although returned against her will) or else into some other place, where for her soules health you shall thinke most conuenient: and that from henceforth shee be safely kept, as in the strait examination of the same you will yeelde an account. Giuen vnder our seale, &c.

Matilde reuaneth.

By sundry other instruments also in the same Register recorded, I finde, that the foresaid Matilde the anchoresse, vpon the strait examination and handling of the foresaid archbishop, before whom peremptorily she was enioyned to appeare, and til that day of appearance taken out of the recluse and committed to safe custody, as you heard; retracted and recanted her foresaid articles and opinions. For the which she being enioined forty daies penance, was againe admitted into her foresaid recluse in Leicester. The bishops letter to the magistrates of the towne thus beginneth: Willielmus permissione diuina, &c. dilectis filijs, &c.

Will. Smith, Roger Derter, and Alice his wife abiure.

Also by another letter of the foresaid archbishop to the deane of the cathedrall church of our lady of Leicester being registred, I finde, that of the number of those eight persons before recited, whom the archbishop himselfe at high masse, did in his pontificalibus so solemnly curse with booke, bell, and candle: after certaine processe being sent out against them, or else in the meane time being apprehended and taken, two of them recanted their opinions; to wit, William Smith, and Roger Derter. But in the meane time Alice, the wife of the said Roger Derter, taking hold of the foresaid articles with her husband also, together with the said William Smith, abiured the same. For these be the words of the instrument: Subsequenter verò, præfati Wilielmus, Rogerus, & Alicia reatus suos respicientes, se nostro conspectui præsentarunt, &c. Notwithstanding, whether they presented themselues willingly, or else were brought against their wils (as most like it was) hard penance was enioyned them before they were absolued. These be the words of the instrument.

Sancta mater ecclesia, &c. i. Seeing our holy mother the church denieth not her lap to any penitent child returning to the vnity of her, but rather proffereth to them the same: We therefore do receiue againe the said William, Roger, and Alice to grace. And further haue caused them to abiure all and singuler the foresaid articles and opinions, before they receiued of vs the benefit of absolution, and were losed from the sentence of excommunication, wherein they were snarled, inioyning vnto them penance, according to the quantitie of the crime, in forme as followeth, that is to say: that euery one of them the sunday next after their returning to their proper goods; they the said William, Roger, and Alice, holding euery one an image of the crucifix in their hands, and in their left hands euery one of them a taper of wax, waighing halfe a pound waight, in their shirts (hauing none other apparell vpon them) doe goe before the crosse three times, during the procession of the cathedrall church of our lady of Leicester: that is to say, in the beginning of the procession, in the middle of the procession, and in the latter end of the procession; to the honour of him that was crucified, in the memoriall of his passion, and to the honor of the virgin his mother: who also deuoutly bowing their knees and kneeling, shall kisse the same crucifix so held in their hands. And so with the same procession, they entring again into the church, shall stand during all the time of the holy masse, before the image of the crosse with their tapers and crosses in their hands. And when the masse is ended, the said William, Roger, and Alice, shall offer to him that celebrated that day the masse. Then vpon the saturday next ensuing, the said William, Roger, and Alice, shall in the full and publike market, within the towne of Leicester, stand in like manner in their shirts, without any more clothes vpon their bodies, holding the foresaid crosses in their right hands; which crosses, three times they shall (during the market) deuoutly kisse reuerently kneeling vpon their knees: that is, in the beginning of the market, in the middle of the market, and in the end of the market. And the said William (for that he somewhat vnderstandeth the Latine tongue) shall say this Antheame with the collect, Sancta Katharina: and the foresaid Roger and Alice, being vnlearned, shall say deuoutly a Pater Noster, and an Aue Maria. And thirdly, the sunday next immediatly after the same, the said William, Roger, and Alice, in their parish church of the said towne of Leicester, shall stand and doe as vpon the sunday before they stood and did in the cathedrall church of our lady aforesaid in all things. Which done, the foresaid William, Roger, and Alice, after masse, shall offer to the priest or chaplen that celebrated the same, with all humilitie and reuerence the wax tapers which they shall carry in their hands. And because of the cold weather that now is, lest the foresaid penitents might peraduenture take some bodily hurt standing so long naked (being mindfull to moderate partly the said our rigour) we giue leaue, that after their entrance into the churches abouesaid, whilest they shall bee in hearing the foresaid masses, that they may put on necessary garments to keepe them from cold, so that their heads and feete notwithstanding be bare and vncouered. We therefore will and command you together and apart, that you denounce the said William, Roger, and Alice, to be absolued and restored againe to the vnity of our holy mother the church, and that you call them forth to doe their penance in manner and forme aforesaid. Giuen at Dorchester the seuenteenth day of Nouember, in the yeere of our Lord God 1389. and the ninth yeere of our translation.

The maner of their penance inioined.

Three kisses of the crosse.

The collect of Katharin.

The Pater noster, and Aue Maria.

Cold weather graciously considered.

Unto the narration of these abouesaid, we will adioine the story of one Peter Pateshul, an Austen frier, who obtaining by the popes priuiledge (through the meanes of Walter Dis, confessor to the duke of Lancaster) liberty to change his coat and religion: and hearing the doctrine of John Wickliffe and other of the same sort, began at length to preach openly, and to detect the vices of his order, in such sort as all men wondered to heare the horrible reciting thereof. This being brought to the eares of his order, they to the number of twelue (coming out of their house to the place where he was preaching) thought to haue withstood him perforce. Among whom, one especially for the zeale of his religion, stood vp openly in his preaching, and contraried that which he said, who then was preaching in the church of S. Christopher in London. This when the faithfull Londoners did see, taking grieue hereat, were moued with great ire against the said frier, thrusting him with his other brethren out of the church, whom they not onely had beaten and sore wounded, but also followed them home to their house, minding to haue destroied their mansion with fire also, and so would haue done, had not one of the sheriffes of London, with two of the friers of the said house, well knowne and reported amongst the Londoners, with gentle words mitigated their rage and violence. After this, Peter Pateshul thus disturbed, as is aforesaid, was desired by the Londoners (forsomuch as he could not well preach amongst them) to put in writting that which hee had said before, and other things more that he knew by the Friers: who then at their request writting the same, accused the friers of murther, committed against diuers of their brethren. And to make the matter more apparant and credible, hee declared the names of them that were murthered, with the names also of their tormentors: and named moreouer time and place, where & when they were murthered, and where they were buried. He affirmed further that they were Sodomites and traitors both to the king and the realme: with many other crimes, which mine author for tediousnesse leaueth off to recite. And for the more confutation of the said friers, the Londoners caused the said bill to be openly set vp at S. Pauls church dore in London, which was there read and copied out of very many. This was done in the yeere of our Lord 1387. and in the 10. yeere of king Richard the second. Ex Chron. Monachi Albanensis. Cuius est exordium, Anno gratiæ millesimo, &c.

Ex Chron. D. Albani.

Few or none burned in king Richards time.

Thus it may appeare by this and other aboue recited, how the Gospel of Christ preached by John Wickliffe and others, beganne to spread and fructifie abroad in London, and other places of the realme: and more would haue done no doubt, had not William Courtney, the archbishop and other prelats with the king, set them so forcibly with might and maine, to gainstand the course thereof. Albeit, as is said before, I finde none which yet were put to death therefore, during the raigne of this king Richard the second. Whereby it is to bee thought of this king, that although he cannot be vtterly excused for molesting the godly & innocent preachers of that time, (as by his brieues and letters afore mentioned may appeare) yet neither was he so cruell against them, as other that came after him: and that which hee did, seemed to proceed by the inuigation instigation of the pope and other bishoppes, rather then either by the consent of his parliament, or aduice of his counsell about him, or else by his owne nature. For as the decrees of the parliament in all his time, were constant in stopping out the popes prouisions, and in bridling his authority, as we shall see (Christ willing) anon: so the nature of the king was not altogether so fiercely set, if that he following the guiding thereof, had not stood so much in feare of the bishoppe of Rome and his prelats, by whose importune letters and calling on, he was continually urged to doe contrary to that, which both right required, and will perhaps in him desired. But howsoeuer the doings of this king are to be excused, or not, vndoubted it is, that Quéene Anne his wife, most rightly deserueth singular commendation; who at the same time liuing with the king, had the gospels of Christ in English, with foure doctors vpon the same. This Anne was a Bohemian borne, and sister to Wincclaus, king of Boheme before: who was married to king Richard about the fifth (some say, the sixth) yéere of his raigne, and continued with him the space of eleuen yéeres. By the occasion whereof it may séeme not vnprobable, that the Bohemians comming in with her, or resorting into this realme after her, perused and receiued here the bookes of John Wickliffe, which afterward they conueied into Bohemia, whereof partly mention is made before: pag. 428.

Kings many times brought in too much feare of the pope.

The marriage of Queen Anne to king Richard.

The occasion how the doctrine of Wickliffe came to Bohemia.

The said vertuous Quéene Anne, after she had liued with king Richard about eleuen yéeres, in the seuenteenth yéere of his raigne, changed this mortal life, and was buried at Westminster. At whose funerall Thamas Arundel, then archbishop of Yorke and lord chancellor, made the sermon. In which sermon (as remaineth in the library of Worcester recorded) he intreating of the commendation of her, said these words: That it was more ioy of her, then of any woman that euer he knew. For notwithstanding that she was an alien borne, she had in English all the foure gospels, with the doctors vpon them: affirming moreouer and testifying, that she had sent the same vnto him to examin. And he said they were good and true. And further with many words of praise, did greatly commend her, in that she being so great a lady, and also an alien, would study so lowly so vertuous bookes. And hee blamed in that sermon sharply the negligence of the prelats and other men. Insomuch that some said, he would on the morrow leaue vp the office of chancellor, and forsake the world, and giue him to fulfill his pastorall office, for that hee had séene and read in those bookes. And then it had béene the best sermon that euer they heard. Hæc ex libro Wigo. In the which sermon of Thomas Arundel, three points are to be considered. First, the laudable vse of those old times receiued to haue the Scripture and doctours in our vulgar English tongue. Secondly, the vertuous exercise & also example of this godly lady, who had these bookes not for a shew hanging at her girdle; but also séemeth by this sermon to be a studious occupier of the same. The third thing to be noted, is, what fruit the said Thomas archbishop declared also himselfe to receiue at the hearing and reading of the same bookes of hers in the English tongue. Notwithstanding, the same Thomas Arundel, after this sermon and promise made, became the most cruell enemy that might be against English bookes, and the authors thereof, as followeth after in his story to be séene.

The death of Queene Anne. Ex fragmento libri cuiusdam Wigornensis bibliotheca. Ex accommodato D. Mat. Archb. Cant.

Queen Anne had the foure gospels, with the doctors in English.

Thomas Arundel, archbishop breaketh his owne promise.

For shortly after the death of Quéene Anne, the same yéere (the king being then in Ireland) this Thomas Arundel archbishoppe of Yorke, and bishoppe of London, Robert Braybrooke (whether sent by the archbishop of Canturbury and the clergy, or whether going of their owne accord) crossed the seas to Ireland, to desire the king in all spéedy wise to returne and helpe the faith and church of Christ, against such as holding of Wickliffes teaching, went about (as they said) to subuert all their procéedings, and to destroy the canonicall sanctions of their holy mother church. At whose complaint, the king hearing the one part speake, and not aduising the other, was in such sort incensed, that incontinent leauing all his affaires vncomplete, hee sped his returne toward England. Where he kept his Christmas at Dublin; in the which meane time, in the beginning of the next yéere following, which was anno 1395. a Parliament was called at Westminster, by the commandement of the king. In which parliament, certaine Articles or conclusions were put vp by them of the gospels side, to the number of twelue. Which conclusions moreouer were fastened vp vpon the church dore of Saint Paul in London, and also at Westminster: the copie of which conclusions, with the words and contents thereof here vnder ensue.

Conclusions offered vp in the parliament house.

The booke of Conclusions or Reformations, exhibited to the parliament holden at London, and set vp at Pauls doore and other places, in the 18. yeere of the raigne of king Richard the 2. and in the yeere of our Lord 1395.

Conclusions exhibited in the parliament.

THe first conclusion: when as the church of England began first to dote in temporalities after her stepmother the great church of Rome, and the churches were authorised by appropriations: faith, hope, and charity began in diuers places to vanish and flie away from our church, forsomuch as vside with her most lamentable and dolorous genealogy of mortall and deadly sins, did challenge that place by title of heritage. And this conclusion is generall, and approued by experience, custome, and maner, as ye shall after heare.

The second conclusion: that our vsuall priesthood, which tooke his originall at Rome, and fained to be a power higher then Angels, is not that priesthood which Christ ordained vnto his disciples. This conclusion is thus proued; forsomuch as the Romish priesthood is done with signes and pontificall rites and ceremonies, and benedictions, of no force and effect, neither hauing any ground in Scripture, forsomuch as the bishops ordinall and the new Testament doe nothing at all agrée; neither doe we sée that the holy Ghost doth giue any good gift through any such signes or ceremonies: because that hee together with all noble and good gifts, cannot consist and be in any person with deadly sinne. The corolary or effect of this conclusion is, that it is a lamentable and dolorous mockery vnto wise men, to sée the bishoppes mocke and play with the holy Ghost in the gluing of their orders: because they giue crownes for their characters and markes, in stead of white hearts: and this character is the marke of antichrist, brought into the holy church to cloke and colour their idlenesse.

Papisticall priesthood.

The third conclusion: that the law of chastity enioined vnto priesthood, the which was first ordained to the preiudice of women, induceth Sodomy into the church: but we doe excuse vs by the bible, because the suspect decrée doth say, that wee should not name it. Both reason and experience proueth this conclusion. Reason thus; Forsomuch as the delicate feeding and fare of the clergy, will haue either a naturall purgation, or some worse. Experience thus; forsomuch as the secret triall and proofe of such men is, that they doe delight in women. And whensoeuer thou doest proue or sée such a man, marke him well, for he is one of that number. The corolary of this conclusion is, that these priuat religions with the beginners thereof, ought most chiefly to be disanulled as the originall of that sinne and offence. But God of his might doth of priuie sinnes send open vengeance.

The single life of priests.

He doth very excellently paint out the lecherous clergy.

He prophecieth against monkery.

The fourth conclusion, that most harmeth the innocent people, is this: that the fained miracle of the sacrament of bread, induceth all men, except it be a very few, vnto idolatry: forsomuch as they thinke that the body, which shall neuer be out of heauen, is by the vertue of the priests words, essentially included in the little bread, the which they do shew vnto the people. But would to God they would beléeue that which the Euangelicall doctor teacheth vs in his Trialogue, Quòd panis altaris est accidentaliter Corpus Christi. i. that the bread of the altar is the body of Christ accidentally: forsomuch as we suppose that by that meanes, euery faithfull man and woman in the law of God, may make the sacrament of that bread, without any such miracle. The corolary of this conclusion is, that albeit the body of Christ be endowed with the eternall ioy, the seruice of Corpus Christi, made by frier Thomas, is not true, but painted full of false miracles: neither is it any maruell, forsomuch as frier Thomas at that time taking part with the pope, would haue made a miracle of a hens egge: and wee know it very well, that euery lie openly preached and taught, doth turne to the rebuke and opprobry of him, which is alwaies true without any lacke.

The fained miracle of transubstantiation.

He meaneth here Wickliffe.

The feast of Corpus Christi inuented by Thomas Aquinas.

The fifth conclusion is this: that the exorcismes and hallowings, consecrations, and blessings ouer the wine, bread, water, oile, salt, incense, the altar stone, and about the church walles, ouer the vestiment, chalice, miter, crosse, and pilgrim-staues, are the very practises of Necromancie, rather then of sacred Diuinitie. This conclusion is thus prooued; because that by such exorcismes, the creatures are honoured to be of more force and power then by their owne proper nature; for we doe not sée any alteration or change in any creature so exorcised, except it be by false faith, which is the principall point of diuellish art. The corolary of this is, that if the booke of exorcisation or coniuring of holy water which is sprinkled in the church, were altogether faithfull and true; wee thinke certainly that holy water vsed in the church, were the best medicine for all kind of sicknesse and sores; Cuius contrarium experimur. i. the contrary whereof daily experience doth teach vs.

The exorcismes and blessings of priests.

The sixth conclusion which maintaineth much pride is: that a king and bishop both in one person, a prelat and iustice in temporall causes, a curat and officer in worldly office, doth make euery kingdome out of good order. This conclusion is manifest, because the temporalty and the spiritualty, are two parts of the holy vniuersall church, and therefore hee which addicteth himselfe to the one part, let him not intermeddle with the other, Quia nemo potest duobus Dominis seruire: wherefore to bee called Amphroditæ, which are men of both kindes, or Ambidextri, which is such as can play with both hands, were good names for such men of double estates. The corolary of this conclusion is, that thereupon we the procurators of God in this case, doe sue vnto the Parliament: that it may be enacted, that all such as be of the clergy (as well of the highest highest degrée as of the lowest) should be fully excused, and occupie themselues with their owne cure and charge, and not with others.

The difference betweene the ecclesiasticall and politike estate.

The foundation of masses for the dead.

The seuenth conclusion that we mightily affirme is, that spirituall praiers made in the church for the soules of the dead, (preferring any one by name more then another) is a false foundation of almes, whereupon all the houses of almes in England are fally founded. This conclusion is proued by two reasons. The one is, that a meritorious praier (of any force or effect) ought to be a worke proceeding from meere charitie: and perfect charitie accepteth no person, because thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. Whereby it appeareth, that the benefit of any temporall gift bestowed and giuen vnto priests and houses of almes, is the principall cause of any speciall praiers, the which is not farre different from simonie. The other reason is, that euery speciall praier made for men condemned to eternall punishment, is very displeasant before God. And albeit it be doubtfull, yet is it very likely vnto the faithfull Christian people, that the founders of euery such house of almes for their wicked endowing of the same, are for the most part passed by the broad way. The corolary is, that euery praier of force and effect, proceeding of perfect charity, would comprehend generally all such whom God would haue saued, and to liue. The merchandise of speciall praiers now vsed for the dead, maketh mendicant possessioners and other hireling priests, which otherwise were strong enough to worke and to serue the whole realme: and maintaineth the same in idlenesse, to the great charge of the realme, because it was proued in a certaine booke which the king hath, that a hundred houses of almes, are sufficient for the whole realme. And thereby might peraduenture greater increase and profit come vnto the temporalty.

A hundred houses of almes sufficient for England.

Pilgrimages and oblations.

The eighth conclusion needfull to tell to the people beguiled, is, that pilgrimages, praiers, & oblations made vnto blind crosses or rodes, or to deafe images made either of wood or stone, are very neere of kin vnto idolatry, and farre different from almes. And albeit that these things which are forbidden and imagined, are the booke of error vnto the common people: notwithstanding the vsuall and common image of the Trinitie is most especially abominable. This conclusion God himselfe doth openly manifest, commanding almes to be giuen to the powre and needy man, for hee is the image of God in more perfit similitude and likenesse then any blocke or stone. For God did not say; let vs make a blocke or stone vnto our likenesse and image; but let vs make man; forsomuch as the supreme and highest honour which the clergy calleth Latria, pertaineth onely to the Godhead, and the inferior honor, which the clergy call Dulia, pertaineth vnto men and Angels, and to none other inferior creature. The corolarie is, that the seruice of the crosse celebrat twice euery yeere in our church, is full of idolatry: for if rode, tree, nailes, and speare ought so profoundly to be honoured and worshipped, then were Judaes lippes (if any man could get them) a maruellous godly relike. But thou pilgrime, wee pray thée tell vs when thou doest offer to the bones of the Saints and holy men which are laid vp in any place; whether doest thou releeue thereby the holy man which is already in ioy, or that almes house that is so wel endowed, where as they are canonised (the Lord knoweth how) and to speake more plaine, euery faithfull christian may well iudge and suppose, that the strokes of that same man, whom they call S. Thomas, were no cause of martyrdome, nor yet be.

The image of the Trinity an abominable thing.

A poore man the perfect image of God.

Latria, Dulia.

Judaes lips.

The death of Th. Becket of Cant. is not to be counted for martyrdome.

The ninth conclusion that keepeth the people low, is, that auricular confession which is said to be so necessary for saluation, and the fained power of absolution; exalteth and setteth vp the pride of priests, and giueth them opportunity of other secret talks, which wee will not at this time talke of, forsomuch as both lords and ladies doe witnesse, that for feare of their confessors, they dare not speake the truth: and in time of confession, is good opportunity ministred of wooing, or to play the baudes, or to make other secret conuentions to deadly sinne. They affirme and say, that they are commissaries sent of God to iudge and discerne of all manner of sinne, to pardon and clense whatsoeuer please them. They say also, that they haue the keies of heauen and hell, and that they can excommunicat, curse and blesse, binde and loose at their owne will and pleasure: insomuch, that for a small reward, or for twelue pence, they will sell the blessing of heauen by charter and clause of warrantise, sealed by their common seale. This conclusion is so common in vse, that it needeth not any probation. The corolary hereof is, that the pope of Rome, which fained himselfe to be the profound treasurer of the whole church, hauing that same worthy iewell which is the treasure of the passion of Christ in his owne keeping and custody, together with the merits of all the Saints in heauen, whereby he giueth fained indulgences and pardons, à pœna & culpa: hee is a treasurer almost banished out of charity, whereby he may deliuer all captiues being in purgatory at his pleasure, and make them not to come there. But here euery faithfull Christian may easily perceiue that there is much falshood hid in our Church.

Auricular confession. Confession the minister of lust.

The impudent boldnesse of priests.

The pope treasurer of the church, in stead of treasure laieth vp coales.

The tenth, that manslaughter (either by war or by any pretensed law of iustice for any temporall cause, or spirituall reuelation) is expresly contrary vnto the new Testament, which is the law of grace, full of mercy. This conclusion is euidently proued by the examples of the preaching of Christ here in earth, who chiefly teacheth euery man to loue his enemies, and haue compassion vpon them, and not to kill and murther them. The reason is this, that for the most part whenas men do fight, after the first stroke, charity is broken: and whosoeuer dieth without charity, goeth the right way to hell. And beside that, wee doe well vnderstand and know, that none of the clergy, neither by any other lawfull reason, can deliuer any from the punishment of death for one deadly sinne, and not for another: but the law of mercy, which is the new Testament, forbiddeth all manner of murther. For in the Gospell it is spoken vnto our forefathers, Thou shalt not kill. The corolary is; It is a very robbing of the people, when lords purchase indulgences and pardons, à pœna & culpa, vnto such as doe helpe their armies to kill and murther the christian people in forren countries for temporall gaine, as we doe see certaine souldiers which doe run amongst the heathen people to get themselues fame and renowne, by the murther and slaughter of men. Much more do they deserue euill thanks at the hands of the king of peace, forsomuch as by humility and peace, our faith is multiplied and increased: for murtherers and manquellers, Christ doth hate and menaceth: Yee that striketh with the sword, shall perish with the sword.

How wrels lawfull, ath proofe by experience.

The eleuenth conclusion is, which is shame to tell: that the vow of chastity made in our church by women which are fraile and vnperfit in nature, is the cause of bringing in many great and horrible offences and vices, incident vnto the nature of man. For albeit the murther of their children borne before their time, and before they are christened, and the destruction of their nature by medicine, are filthy and foule sinnes: yet they accompanying amongst themselues, or with vnreasonable beasts, or with any creature not hauing life, doe passe to such an vnseemlinesse, that they are punished by infernall torments. The corolary is, that widowes and such as take the mantell and the ring delitiously fed, we would that they were married, because that we cannot excuse them from priuat offence of sinne.

Nuns and widowes which vow single life.

The twelfth, that the multitude of arts not necessary (vsed in this our church) causeth much sin and offence in waste, curiosity, and disguising in curious apparell: experience and reason partly doth shew the same, forsomuch as nature with a few arts, is sufficient for mans vse and necessity.

This is the whole tenor of our ambassage, which Christ hath commanded vs to prosecute at this time, most fit and conuenient for many causes. And albeit that these matters be here briefly noted and touched; yet notwithstanding they are more at large declared in another booke with many other more in our owne proper tongue, which we would should be common to all christian people. Wherefore, we earnestly desire and beseech God for his great goodnesse sake, that hee will wholly reforme our church (now altogether out of frame) vnto the perfection of her first beginning and originall. Ex Archiuis Regijs.

The verses following were annexed vnto the conclusions.

Plangunt Anglorum gentes crimen Sodomorum,
Paulus fert, horum sunt idola causa malorum:
Surgunt ingrati Gierzitæ Simone nati,
Nomine prælati hoc defensare parati.
Qui Reges estis, populis quicunque præestis,
Qualiter his gestis, gladios prohibere potestis?

The which verses are thus Englished:

The English nation doth lament of Sodomites, their sin,
Which Paul doth plainly signifie by Idols to begin.
But Gierstites full ingrate, from sinfull Simon sprong,
This to defend (thogh Priests in name) make bulwarks great and strong.
Ye princes therefore which to rule the people God hath placed,
With iustice sword, why see ye not this euill great defaced?

After these conclusions were thus proposed in the parliament, the king not long after returned home from Dubline into England, toward the latter end of the parliament. Who at his return, called certain of his nobles vnto him, Richard Sturie, Lewes Clifford, Thomas Lattmer, John Mountacute, &c. whom he did sharply rebuke, and did terribly threaten for that hee heard them to bee fauourers of that side; charging them straitly, neuer to hold, maintaine, nor fauor any more those opinions and conclusions. And namely of Richard Stury, he took an oth, that he should neuer from that day, fauor or defend any such opinions: which oth being taken, the king then answered: And I sweare (saith he) againe to thée, that if thou doest euer breake thine oth, thou shalt die for it a shamefull death, &c. Ex Chron. D. Albani.

R. Stury, Lewes Clifford, T. Lattimer, John Mountacute, good fauorers.

yet pope Urbane the great master of the Catholike sect was dead and buried six yeere before. After whom succeeded in the schismaticall see of Rome pope Boniface the ninth; who nothing inferiour to his predecessour in all kind of cruelties, left no diligence vnattempted to set forward that which Urbane had begun, in suppressing them that were the setters forth of the light of the Gospell: and had written sundrie times to king Richard, as well for the repealing of the acts of parliament against his prouisions, Quare impedit, and præmunire facies: as also that he should assist the prelats of England in the cause of God (as he pretended) against such, whom he falsly suggested to be Lollards and traytours to the church, to the king, and the realme, &c. Thus the courteous pope, whom he could not reach with his sword, at least with cruell slander of his malitious tongue, would worke his poison against them; which letter he wrote to the king in the yeere of our Lord 1396. which was the yeere before the death of William Courtney archbishop of Canturburie. After whom succeeded in that see Thomas Arundell, brother to the earle of Arundell, being first bishop of Elie, afterward archbishop of Yorke, and lord Chancellour of England, and at last made archbishop of Canturburie about the yeere of our Lord 1397. The next yeere following, which was the yeere of our Lord 1398. and the ninth yeere of the pope, I find in certaine records of the bishop of Duresme, a certaine letter of king Richard the second, written to the said pope Boniface, which because I iudged not vnworthie to be seene, I thought heere to annex the same, proceeding in forme as followeth.

The letters of pope Boniface the ninth to king Richard. Anno 1396 The death of M. Courtney archbishop of Canturburie. Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canturbury. Anno 1398

To the most holy father in Christ and lord, lord Boniface the ninth, by the grace of God high pope of the most holy Romish and vniuersall church, his humble and deuout sonne Richard by the grace of God king of England, and France, lord of Ireland, greeting, and desiring to helpe the miseries of the afflicted church, and kissing of that his blessed feet.

A letter of king Richard the second to pope Boniface the ninth.

WHo will giue my head water, and mine eyes streaming teares, that I may bewaile the decay and manifold troubles of our mother, which haue chanced to her by her owne children in the distresse of this present schisme and diuision. For the sheep haue forgotten the proper voice of their shepheards, and hirelings haue thrust in themselues to feed the Lords flock, who are clothed with the apparell of the true shepheard, challenging the name of honor and dignitie, resembling so the true shepheard, that the poore sheepe can scarce know whom they ought to follow, or what pastour as a stranger they ought to flee, and whom they should shun as an hireling. Wherefore we are afraid, lest the holy standard of the Lord be forsaken of his host, and so that citie being full of riches, become solitarie and desolate, and the land or people which was wont to say (flourishing in her prosperities) I sate as a Queen, and am not a widow, lest it be destitute of the presence of her husband, and as it were so bewitched, that she shal not be able to discerne his face, & so wrapped in mazes, that she shal not know where to turne her, that she might more easily find him, and that she shal with weeping speake that saying of the spouse: I sought him whom my soule loueth, I sought him and found him not: For now wee are compelled so to wander, that if any man say, behold heere is Christ, or there, we may not beleeue him so saying: and so many shepheards haue destroyed the Lords vineyard, and made his amiable portion a waste wildernesse.

This multitude of shepheards is become very burdenous to the Lords flocke. For when two striue to be chiefe, the state of both their dignities stands in doubt, and in so doing they giue occasion to all the faithfull of Christ, of a schisme and diuision of the church. And although both parties go about to subdue vnto their power the whole church militant, yet contrarie to both their purpose, by working this way, there beginneth to rise now a diuision in the bodie of the church: Like as when the diuision of the quicke innocent bodie was asked, when the two harlots did striue afore Salomon: like as the ten tribes of Israel followed Ieroboam the intruder, and were withdrawne from the kingdome for Salomons sinne: euen so of old time the desire of ruling hath drawne the great power of the world from the vnitie of the church. Let your selues remember, we beseech you, how that all Greece did fall from the obedience of the Romish church in the time of the faction of the primarch of Constantinople, and how Mahomet with his fellowes by occasion of the supremacie in Ecclesiasticall dignitie, deceiued a great part of christians, and withdrew them from the empire and ruling of Christ. And now in these daies, whereas the same supremacie hath withdrawne it selfe from the obedience of it, in so much that now in verie few realmes the candle that burnes afore the Lord remaineth, and that for Dauids sake his seruant: And although now remaine few countries professing the obedience of Christs true vicar, yet peraduenture if euery man were left to his owne libertie, he would doubt of the preferring of your dignitie, or that is worse, would vtterly refuse it by such doubtfull euidence alleaged on both sides: and this is the subtill craft of the crooked Serpent, that is to say, vnder the pretence of vnitie, to procure schismes, as the spider of a wholesome flower gathers poyson, and Iudas learned of peace to make warre. Wherefore, it is liuely beleeued of wise men, that except this pestilent schisme be withstood by and by, the keyes of the church will be despised, and they shall bind the consciences but of a few: and when either none dare be bold to correct this fault, or to reforme things contrarie to Gods law, so by this meanes at length temporall lords will take away the liberties of the church, and peraduenture the Romanes will come and take away their place, people and lands: they will spoile their possessions, and bring the men of the church into bondage, and they shall be contemned, reuiled and despised, because the obedience of the people and deuotions towards them will almost be taken away, when the greater part of the church left to their owne libertie, shall waxe prouder then they bee wont, leauing a wicked example to them that doe see it. For when they see the prelats studie more for couetousnesse then they were wont, to purse vp money, to oppresse the subiects in their punishings to seeke for gaine, to confound lawes, to stirre vp strife, to suppresse truth, to vexe poore subiects with wrong corrections, in meate and drinke intemperate, in feastings past shame: what maruell is it if the people despise them as the foulest forsakers of Gods law? but all these things doe follow if the church should be left long in this doubtfulnesse of a schisme, and then should that old saying be verified; in those daies there was no king in Israel, but euery one did that that seemed right and straight to himselfe. Micheas did see the people of the Lord scattered in the mountaines as they had been sheepe without a shepheard: for when the shepheard is smitten, the sheepe of the flocke shall be scattered, the great stroke of the shepheard is the minishing of his iurisdiction, by which the subiects are drawne from his obedience. When Iason had the office of the highest priest, hee changed the ordinance of God, and brought in the customes of the heathen, the priests leauing the seruice of the holy altar, and applying themselues to wrastling and other exercises of the Grecians, and despised those things that belonged to the priests, did labour with all their might to learne such things of the Grecians, and by that meanes the place, people, and holy oynting of priests, which in times past were had in great reuerence of kings, were trodden vnder foot of all men, and robbed by the kings power, and was prophaned by thrusting in for money. Therefore, let the highest vicar of Christ looke vnto this with a diligent eye, and let him be the follower of him by whom he hath gotten authoritie aboue others. If you marke well most holy father, you shall find that Christ rebuked sharply two brethren, coueting the seat of honor: he taught them not to play the lords ouer the people, but the more grace they were preuented with, to be so much more humble then other, and more lowly to serue their brethren. To him that asked his coate, to giue the cloake: to him that smote him on the one cheeke, to turne the other to him. For the sheepe that are giuen to his keeping, he must forsake all earthly things, and to shead his owne blood, yea and if need required, to die. These things, I say, be those that adorne the highest Bishop if they be in him, not purple, not his white horse, nor his imperiall crowne, because he among all men is most bound to all the sheepe of Christ. For the feare of God therefore, and for the loue of the flocke which ye guide, consider these things diligently, and do them wisely, and suffer vs no longer to wauer betwixt two: although not for your owne cause, to whom peraduenture the fulnesse of your owne power is knowne: yet in pitying our weaknesse, if thou be he, tell vs openly, and shew thy selfe to the world, that all we may follow one. Be not to vs a bloodie bishop, lest by your occasion mans blood be shead, lest hell swallow such a number of soules, and lest the name of Christ be euill spoken of by infidels, through such a worthie personage. But peraduenture yee will say, for our righteousnesse it is manifest enough, and we will not put it to other mens disputation. If this bald answere should be admitted, the schisme should continue still, seeing neither part is willing to agree to the other: and where the world is as it were equally diuided betwixt them, neither part can be compelled to giue place to the other without much bloudshed. The incarnation of Christ and his resurrection was well enough knowne to himselfe and his disciples, yet he asked of his Father to be made knowne to the world. Hee made also the Gospell to be written, and the doctrine of the Apostles, and sent his Apostles into all the world, to do the office of preaching, that the same thing might be knowne to all men. The foresaid reason is the subtiltie of Mahomet, the which knowing himselfe guiltie of his sect, vtterly forbad disputations. If ye haue so full trust of your righteousnesse; put it to the examinations of worthie persons in a generall councell, to the which it belongeth by right to define such doubts, or els commit it vnto able persons, and giue them full power to determine all things concerning that matter, or at the least by forsaking the office on both parties, leaue the church of God free, speedilie to prouide for a new shepheard.

Desire to rule in the church.

Greece renounced the Romish church.

hurt of the Romish church, and the deuotion of it, and cutting away kingdomes from it. But if you say, it is not requisit that the cause of Gods church should bee called in controuersie, and therefore we cannot so easily go from it, seeing our conscience gain-sayeth it. To the which we answere, if it be the cause of God and the church, let the generall councel iudge of it: but if it be a personal cause (as almost all the world probably thinketh) if ye were the followers of Christ, ye would rather chuse a temporall death, thē to suffer such a wauering, I say not, to the hurt of so many, but to the endlesse destruction of soules, to the offence of the whole world, and to an euerlasting shame of the apostolicall dignity. Did not Clement named (or that I may more truly speake) ordained of S. Peter to the apostolike dignitie and to be bishop, resigne his right, that his deed might be taken of his successours for an example? Also pope Siricius gaue ouer his popedome to bee a comfort of the 11000. Virgins. Therefore much more ought you (if need require) giue ouer your popedome, that you might gather together the children of God which be scattered abroad. For as it is thought a glorious thing to defend the common right, euen to bloodshed: so is it sometimes necessarie for a man to winke at his owne cause, and to forsake it for a greater profit, and by that meanes better to procure peace. Should not he be thoght a diuell, and Christs enemie of all men, that would agree to an election made of him for the apostolical dignitie and popedome, if it should be to the destruction of Christians, diuision of the church, the offence and losse of all faithful people? If such mischiefs should be knowne to all the world by Gods reuelation, to come to passe by such receiuing of the popedome and apostolicall dignitie: then by the like reason, why shall he not bee iudged of all men an apostata, and forsaker of his faith, which chuseth dignitie, or rather worldly honor, then the vnitie of the church? Christ died that he might gather together the children of God which are scattered abroad: but such an enemie of God and the church wisheth his subiects bodilie to die in battell, and the more part of the world to perish in soule, rather then forsaking to be pope, to liue in a lower state, although it were honorable. If the feare of God, the desire of the heauenly kingdome, and the earnest loue of the vnitie of the church do moue your heart, shew in deed that your workes may beare record to the truth.

Answere to a popish obiection.

Hard counsell for the pope.

Vnitie of the church to be preferred before worldly dignitie.

Clement and Siricius most holy popes, not only are not reproued, but rather are reuerenced of all men, because they gaue ouer their right for profitable causes, and for the same cause all the church of holy men shew forth their praise. Likewise, your name should liue for euer and euer, if yee would do the like for a necessarie cause, that is to say, for the vnitie of Gods church. Giue no heed to the vnmeasurable cryings of them that say, that the right chusing of popes is lost, except ye defend your parts manfully: but be afraid, lest such stirrers vp of mischiefe looke for their owne commoditie or honor, that is to say, that vnder your wing they might bee promoted to riches and honor. After this sort Achitophel was ioyned with Absolon in persecuting his owne father, and false vsurping of his kingdome.

The pope will not lose his dignitie, for any publike tranquillitie.

Wicked flatterers about the pope.

Furthermore, there should be no ieopardie to that election, because both parties sticke stiflie to the old fashion of election, and either of them couet the preeminēce of the Romish church, counselling all christians to obey them. And although through their giuing ouer, the fashion of chusing the pope should bee changed for a time, it were to be borne, rather then to suffer anie longer this diuision in Gods church. For that fashion in chusing is not so necessarily required to the state of a pope, but the successour of the apostle as necessarie cause required, might come in at the doore by another fashion of chusing, and that canonicall enough. And this we are taught manifestly by examples of the fathers: for Peter the apostle appointed after him Clement, and that not by false vsurping of power, as wee suppose. And it was thought, that that fashiō of appointing popes, was lawful vnto the time of pope Hilarie: Which decreed that no pope should appoint his successour.

Better that the order of the popes election should cease, then the church should suffer any diuision.

Bishops of Rome appointed their successors to the time of pope Hilarie.

Afterward, the election of the pope went by the clergie and people of Rome, and the emperours counsell agreeing thereto, as it appeareth in the election of the blessed Gregorie. But Martinus pope with the consent of the holy Synode, granted Charles the power to chuse the pope. But of late Nicolas the second was the first whom Martine makes mention of in his counsels, to be chosen by the cardinals. But all the bishops of Lumbardie (for the most part) withstood this election, and chose Cadulus to be pope, saying, that the pope ought not to be chosen, but of the precinct of Italie. Wherefore, we thiuke it not a safe way so earnestly to sticke to the traditions of men, in the fashion of chusing the pope, and so oft to change, lest we be thought to breake Gods traditions concerning the vnitie of the church. Yea rather it were better yet to ordaine a new fashion of his election, and meeter for him as it hath been afore. But all things concerning the same election might bee kept safe, if Gods honor were looked for afore your owne, and the peace of the church were vprightly sought: for such a dishonoring should bee most honor vnto you, and that giuing place should be the getting of a greater dignitie, and the willing deposing of your honor, should obtaine you the entrie of euerlasting honor, and should procure the loue of the whole world toward you, and you should deserue to be exalted continually, as Dauid was in humbling himselfe. O how monstrous a sight and how foule a monster is a mans bodie disfigured with two heads? So if it were possible, the spouse of Christ should be made so monstrous, if she were ruled with two such heads: but that is not possible, shee is euer altogether faire, in whom no spot is found; therefore we must cast away that rotten member, and thruster in of his second head: We cannot suffer any longer so great a wickednes in Gods house, that wee should suffer Gods cote that wants a seame, by any meanes to be torne by the hands of two, that violently draw it in sunder. For if these two should bee suffred to raigne together, they would so betwixt them teare in pieces that little coate of the Lord, that scarse one piece would hang to another. They passe the wickednes of the souldiers that crucified Christ: for they willing to haue the coat remaine whole, said: Let vs not cut it, but let vs cast lots for it, whose it shall be. But these two popes suffring their right and title to be tried by no lot nor way (although not in words yet in deeds) they pronounce this sentēce: It shall neither be thine nor mine, but let it be diuided, for they chose rather, as it appeareth, to be Lords (though it be but in a little part, and that to the confusion of the vnitie of the church) then in leauing that lording, to seek for the peace of the church. We doe not affirme this, but we shew almost the whole iudgemēt of the world of thē, being moued so to think by likely conlectures. We looked for amendment of this intollerable confusion, by the space that these two inuenters of this mischiefe liued. But we looked for peace, and behold trouble: for neither in their liues nor in their deaths, they procured any comfort, but rather dying as it were in a doubt betwixt two waies, left to their successors matters of contention continuall. But now for the space of seuen yeeres of their successors, that which we desired and looked for afore (that is, they should beare good grapes, and they bring forth wilde grapes) in this matter we fall into a deepe despaire. But in as much that we heare the comfort of the Lord, which promised that miserablie he would destroy those wicked men, and let his vineyard to other husband-men which will bring him fruit at their times appointed, hee hath promised faithfully that he will helpe his spouse in her need to the end of the world: and we leaning on the sure hope of this promise, and in hope, contrarie to hope beleeuing, by Gods grace will put our helping hands to the easing of this miserie, when a conuenient time shall serue, as much as our kingly power is able, although our witte doth not perceiue how these things afore rehearsed may be amended: yet we being encouraged to this by the hope of Gods promise, will do our endeuour: like as Abraham beleeued, his son being slaine by sacrifice, that the multitude of his seed should encrease to the number of the stars, according to Gods promise. Now therefore the time drawes neere to make an end of this schisme, left a third election of a schismaticke against the apostles successor make a custome of the doing, and so the pope of Auinion shal be double Romish pope, and he shall say with his partakers, as the Patriarch of Constantinople said vnto Christs vicar when he forsooke him: The Lord be with thee, for the Lord is with vs. And is much to be feared of all christen men: For that Pharisie begins now to be called the pope of Auinion among the people. But peraduenture it would be thought of some men, that it belōgeth not to secular princes to bridle outrages of the pope. To whom we answere, that naturally the members put themselues in ieopardie for to saue the head, and the parts labour to saue the whole. Christ so decked his spouse, that her sides should cleaue together, and should vphold themselues, by course of time and occasion of things, they should correct one another and cleaue together tunablie. Did not Moses put downe Aaron, because he was vnfaithfull? Salomon put downe Abiathar, who came by lineall descent from Anatoth, and remoued his priesthood frō his kindred to the stock of Eliazar in the person of Sadocke which had his beginning frō Elie the priest? 3. Reg. 2. Otho emperour, deposed pope Iohn the 12. because he was lecherous. Henrie the emperour put downe Gratianus, because he vsed Simonie in buying and selling spirituall liuings. And Otho deposed pope Bennet the first, because he thrust in himselfe. Therfore by like reason, why may not kings and princes bridle the Romish pope in default of the church: if the quality of his fault require it, or the necessitie of the church by this compel to helpe the church oppressed by tyrannie? In old time schismes which rose about making the pope, were determined by the power of secular princes, as the schisme betwixt Symmachus & Laurēce was ended in a councell before Theodoricus king of Italy. Henrie the emperour when two did striue to be pope, he deposed them both, and receiued the third being chosen at Rome to be pope, that is to say, Clement the second, which crowned him with the imperiall crowne. And the Romanes promised him that from thenceforth they would promote none to bee pope without his consent. Alexander also ouercame foure popes schismatickes, all which Fredericke the emperour corrected.

Secular princes are to bridle the outrages of the pope.

Popes put downe by princes.

Thus looke on the register of popes and their deeds, and ye shall find that schismes most commonly haue been decided by the powers of secular princes, the schismatickes cast out, and sometimes new popes made, & sometime the old ones cast out of Election of the pope not as was before.

Lawfull that princes should withstand the tyrannie of the pope.

of their dignities, and restored to their old dignities againe. If it were not lawfull for secular princes to bridle the outrages of such a pope lawfully made, and afterward becomming a tyrant: in such a case he might oppresse ouermuch the Church, he might change christendome into heathens, and make the labour of Christ crucified to be in vaine, or else truely God should not haue prouided for his spouse in earth by all meanes as much as is possible by seruice of men to withstand dangers. Therefore we counsell you with such a louing affection as becomes children, that ye consider in your heart well, lest in working by this meanes ye prepare a way to antichrist, through your desire to beare rule, and so by this means as we feare the one of these two shall chance: either ye shall cause all the princes of the world to rise against you to bring in a true follower of Christ to haue the state of the Apostolicall dignitie; or, that is worse, the whole world despising the ruling of one shepheard, shall leaue the Romish church desolate. But God keepe this from the world, that the desire of honour of two men should bring such a desolation into the Church of God: for then that departing away which the Apostle prophecied, should come afore the comming of antichrist were at hand: which should be the last disposition of the world, peaceably to receiue antichrist with honour. Consider therefore the state of your most excellent holinesse, how ye receiued the power from God to the building of the Church, and not to the destruction, that Christ hath giuen you wine and oyle to heale the wounded, and hath appointed you his vicar in these things as pertaine to gentlenesse, and hath giuen vs these things which serue to rigour. For we beare not the sword without a cause to the punishment of euill doers, the which power ordained of God we haue receiued, our selues being witnesse: beseeching you to receiue our counsell effectually, that in doing thus, the waters may returne to the places from whence they came, and so the waters may begin to be made sweete with salt: lest the axe swimme on the water and the wood sinke, and lest the fruitfull Oliue degender into a wilde Oliue, and the leprosie of Naaman that Noble man, cleaue continually to the house of Giezy, and lest the pope and the Pharisies crucifie Christ againe. Christ the spouse of the Church, which was wont to bring the chiefe bishop into the holiest place, encrease your holines, or rather restore it being lost. Written, &c. Ex Fragmento libri cuiusdam Dunelm.

The king reweth here to prophecie of the desolation of the Roman pope.

The pope and Pharisies, new crucifiers of Christ.

¶ This epistle of king Richard the 2. written to pope Boniface the 9. in the time of the schisme, about the yeere as appeareth 1397. as it contained much good matter of wholesome counsell to be followed, so how little he wrought with the pope, the sequell afterward declared. For the schisme notwithstanding continued long after, in which neither of the popes would giue ouer their holde, or yeeld any thing to good counsell giuen them, for any respect of publike wealth. Such a stroke beareth ambition in this apostolicall see, which we are wont so greatly to magnifie. But of this enough, which I leaue and referre to the consideration of the Lord, seeing men will not looke vpon it.

Drawing now toward the latter end of king Richards raigne, it remaineth, that as we did before in the time of king Edward the third, so here also we shew forth a summarie recapitulation of such parliamentall notes and proceedings, as then were practised by publike parliament in this kings time, against the iurisdiction of the bishop of Rome: to the intent, that such (if any such be) that thinke, or haue thought the receiuing of the popes double authoritie to be such an ancient thing within this realme, may diminish their opinion, as euidentlie may appeare by diuers arguments heretofore touched, concerning the election and inuesting of bishops by the king. As where king Oswin commanded Cedde to bee ordained archbishop of Yorke. Also where king Egfride caused Cuthbert to be brought to king Canute, and at his commandement was instituted bishop of the same see. Ex lib. Malmesb. de gestis pontif. Anglorum. And likewise Matth. Parisiensis testifieth, that king Henrie the third gaue the archbishoprick of Canturburie, to Radulphus then bishop of London, and inuested him with staffe and ring. And the same king gaue the bishoprick of Winchester to William Gifford: and moreouer, following the steps both of his father and brother before him, endued him with the possessions pertaining to the said bishoprick (the contrarie statute of pope Urbane, forbidding that clerks should receiue any Ecclesiasticall dignitie at the hand of princes, or of any lay person, to the contrarie notwithstanding, &c.) Innumerable examples of like sort are to be seene in ancient histories of this our realme. As also out of the parliament rolles in the time of king Edward the third, hath sufficiently been touched a little before. Whereunto also may be added the notes of such parliaments as haue been holden in the raigne of this present king Richard the second, the collection whereof in part here followeth.

The popes vsurped iurisdiction neuer receiued in England, before a late yeares.

¶ Notes of certaine Parliaments holden in the raigne of King Richard the second, making against the Pope.

Ex Archiuis parlamentariis. An. 1. Reg. Rich. 2. nu. 66.

IN the first yeere of king Richard the second, in the parliament holden at Westminster, it was requested and granted, that the popes collector bee willed no longer to gather the first fruits of benefices within this realme, being a verie noueltie, and that no person doe any longer pay them.

Item, that no man do procure any benefice by prouision from Rome, on paine to be out of the kings protection. Tit. 67.

Item, that no Englishman doe take to farme of any Alien, any ecclesiasticall benefice or prebend, on the like paine. In which bill was rehearsed, that the Frenchmen had fiue thousand pounds yeerely of such liuings in England. Tit. 68.

Item, that remedie might be had against the popes reseruations to dignities electiue, the same being done against the treatie of the pope, taken with king Edward 3. Tit. 77.

In the second yeere of the said king Richard the second, it was by petition requested, that some order might bee taken touching Aliens, hauing the greatest part of the Church dignities in their hands. Whereunto the king answered, that by aduice of the lords, he would prouide therefore. Ex Anno 2. Tit. 70.

Item, it was enacted, that all the benefices of Cardinals and other rebels to pope Urbane that now is, shall be seased into the kings hands. Tit. 71.

An Act that pope Urbane was true and lawfull pope, and that the liuings of all Cardinals and other rebels to the said pope, should bee seased into the kings hands, and the king bee answered of the profits thereof: And that whosoeuer within this Realme, shall procure or obtaine any prouision or other instrument from any other pope then the same Urbane, shall be out of the kings protection. Tit. 78.

Moreouer, in the third yeere of king Richard the second, the prelats and clergie made their protestation in this Parliament, expressely against a certaine new grant, to wit, their extortions: That the same neuer should passe with their assent and good will, to the blemishing of the liberties of the Church, if by that word extortion, they meant any thing largelie to proceed against Ordinaries and others of the Church. But if they meant none otherwise to passe hereafter therein, then before that time had been done, then would they consent. Whereunto it was replied for the king, that neither for the same their said protestation, or other words in that behalfe, the king would stay to grant to his Iustices in that case, and all other cases, as was vsed to bee done in times past, and was bound to doe by vertue of his oth done at his coronation. Ex 3. Anno Reg. Rich. 2.

Here note well a strange proceeding.

But marke the strange euent.

Furthermore, in the fourth yeere of the said king Richard the second, it was requested, that prouision might be had against the popes collectors, for leuying of the first fruits of ecclesiasticall dignities within the realme. Tit. 44.

Item, that all priors Aliens might bee remooued out of their houses, and licensed to depart, and neuer to reuert. And that English men may be placed in their liuings, answering the king as they did. Tit. 46.

And in the 9. yeere of the foresaid king touching matter of the Staple: the speaker of the Parliament pronounced, that he thought best the same were planted within the realme, considering that Calis, Bruges, and other townes beyond the seas, grew very rich thereby, and good townes here very much decayed, and so much for the common profit. Touching the king, hee affirmed that the subsidie and custome of wooll yeelded more to the king when the staple was kept in England by one thousand markes yeerely, then it did now being holden beyond the seas. Ex 9. Anno eiusdem Regis. Tit. 4.

Item: that inquisition and redresse might bee had against such religious persons, as vnder the licence to purchase 10. li. yeerely, doe purchase 80. li. or 100. li. Tit. 36.

Item, that all clerks aduanced to any ecclesiasticall dignitie or liuing by the king, will grant to the king the first fruits of their liuings, none otherwise then they would haue done to the pope, being aduanced by him. Tit. 44.

In the 11. yeere of king Richard the second, it was put vp by the petitions of the commons, that such impositions as are gathered by the popes bulles of Volumus and imponimus of the translations of B.B. and such like, might bee imployed on the kings warres against the schismatickes of Scotland. And that such as bring into the Realme the like bulles and nouelties, may be reputed for traitors. Tit. 26.

In the 13. yeere of his raigne, followed another Parliament, in which, although the archbishop of Canturburie and Yorke, for them and the whole clergie of their prouinces, made their solemne protestations in open Parliament, that they in no wise meant or would assent to any statute or law made in restraint of the popes authoritie, but vtterly withstood the same, willing this protestation of theirs to be enrolled: yet the said protestation of theirs at that time tooke no great effect. An. 13. Regis Rich. 2. Tit. 24.

Item, in the same Parliament was put vp by publike petition, that the popes collector should bee commanded to auoid the Realme within 40. daies, or else to be taken as the kings enemie, and that euery such collector from henceforth, may be an Englishman, and sworne to execute the statutes made in this Parliament. Tit. 34.

Moreouer, in the said Parliament, the yeere aboue said of the king, the 26. of Januarie, M. John Mandour Clerke was charged openly in the Parliament, that he should not passe, ne send ouer to Rome, ne attempt or do any thing there touching the Archdeaconrie of Durham in preiudice of the King, or of his lawes, or of the party presented thereto by the King, on perill that might ensue.

Exan. 14. Regis Richard. secundi, tit. 6.

The next yeere following, which was the 14. of this Kings raigne, it was enacted first touching the staplers, that after the feast of the Epiphany next ensuing, that the staple should be remoued from Calice into England, in such places as are contained in the statute made in 27. Edw. 3. the which statute should be fully executed: and further, that euery Alien that bringeth merchandise into the Realme, should find sufficient surety to buy and carry away commodities of the Realme, to halfe the value of his said merchandise.

Tit. 24. Against vsury.

Item, in the same Parliament petition was made, that against the horrible vice of vsurie, then termed chifts, practised as well by the clergie as laitie, the order made by John Notte, late Maior of London, might be executed throughout the Realme.

Ex tit. 29.

Moreouer, in the 15 yeere of the raigne of the foresaid King it was accorded, for that Sir William Brian Knight had purchased from Rome a Bull directed from the Archbishops of Canturbury and Yorke, to excommunicate such as had broken vp his house, and had taken away diuers letters, priuilegies, and charters: the same Bull being read in the Parliament house, was adiudged preiudiciall to the Kings crowne, and in derogation of the lawes, for the which he was by the King and assent of the lords committed to the Tower, there to remaine at the Kings will and pleasure.

Vide articulum. Tit. 29.

In the said Parliament also, William Archbishop of Canturbury maketh his protestation in the open Parliament, saying, that the Pope ought not to excommunicate any Bishop, or to entermeddle, for, or touching any presentment to any ecclesiasticall dignity recorded in any the Kings courts. He further protested, that the Pope ought to make no translation to any Bishopricke within the Realme against the Kings will: for that the same was to the destruction of the Realme and crowne of England, which hath alway beene so free, as the same hath had none earthly souereigne, but onely subiect to God in all things touching regalities, and to none other. The which protestation he prayed might be entred.

Ex An. 17. Reg. Rich. 2. Titul. 33.

In the 17. yeere of the raigne of the King aforesaid, it was desired that remedie might be had against such religious persons as caused their villaines or vnderlings to marry free women inheritable, whereby the lands came to those religious mens hands by collusion.

43.

Item, that sufficient persons might be presented to benefices, who may dwell on the same, so as their flocke for want thereof doe not perish.

45.

Item, that remedy might be had against the Abbats of Colchester and Abington, who in the townes of Colchester and Colnham claime to haue sanctuarie.

Ex an. 20. Reg. Rich. 2. Tit. 22.

To come to the Parliament holden in the 20. yeere of this Kings raigne: we find moreouer in the said rolles, how that the Archbishops of Canturbury and Yorke, for themselues and the clergy of their prouinces, declared to the King in open Parliament, that forasmuch as they were sworne to the Pope and see of Rome, if any thing were in the Parliament attempted in restraint of the same, they would in no wise assent thereto, but verily withstand the same; the which their protestation they require to be enrolled.

Here the Archbishop of Canturburie goeth contrary to himselfe.

Titul. 32.

Upon the petition of the begging Friers there at large it was enacted, that none of that order should passe ouer the seas, without licence of his Souereigne, nor that he should take vpon him any order of D. of Diuinitie, vnlesse he were first apposed in his Chapter prouinciall, on paine to be put out of the Kings protection.

Tit. 36.

Item, that the Kings officers for making arrests or attachments in Churchyards, are therefore excommunicated; whereof remedy was required.

Ex 21. an. Reg. Rich. 2. titul. 15.

In the yeere of the same Kings raigne 21. the Parliament being holden at Westminster, we find how the commons in full Parliament, accused Thomas Arundell Archbishop of Canturbury, for that he as Chancellor procured, and as chiefe doer executed the same commission, made traiterously in the tenth yeere of the King. And also that he the said Archbishop procured the Duke of Gloucester and the Earles of Arundell and Warwicke, to encroch to themselues royall power, and to iudge to death Simon de Burley, and sir John Berners without the Kings assent. Whereon, the Commons required that the same Archbishop might rest vnder safe keeping: whereunto, for that the same impeachments touched so great a person, they would be aduised.

Ex tit. 16.

Item, the 25. day of September, the Commons prayed the king to giue iudgement against the said Archbishop, according to his deserts. The king answered, that priuately the said Archbishop had confessed to him, how he mistooke himselfe in the said Commission, and therefore submitted himselfe to the kings mercy: Wherefore the king, lords, and sir Thomas Percy, proctor for the clergie, adiudged the fact of the said Archbishop to be treason, and himselfe a traitour, and therefore it was ordered, that the said Archbishop should be banished, his temporalties seased, his lands and goods forfeited, as well in vse as in possession.

Thomas Arundell Archbishop of Canturbury proued a traytour by Parliament.

Ex tit. 17.

The King further prescribed, that the said Archbishop should take his passing on Friday within fiue weekes of Michaelmas, at Douer, towards the parts of France.

Thus hauing hitherto sufficiently touched and comprehended such things as haue hapned in the raigne of this king, necessarie for the Church to know, by course of storie: we come now to the 22. yeere of king Richards raigne, which is the yeere of our Lord, 1399. In the which yeere hapned the strange and also lamentable deposing of this king Richard the second aforesaid, from his kingly scepter. Strange, for that the like example hath not often beene seene in seates roiall. Lamentable, for that it cannot be but grieuous to any good mans heart, to see him either so to deserue, if he were iustly deposed: or if he were vniustly deprined, to see the kingly title there not able to hold his right, where by force, it is compelled to giue place to might.

Anno 1399. The deposing of king Richard the second. The story strange and lamentable.

As concerning the order and processe of whole deposing, for that it neither is greatly pertinent to my argument, and is sufficiently contained in Robert Fabian, and in the kings records, in the Chronicle of S. Albans, and in other histories at large, it were here tedious and superfluous to intermeddle with repeating thereof: What were the conditions and properties of this king, partly before hath beene touched. In whom, as some good vertues may be noted, so also some vices may seeme to be mixed withall. But especially this, that he starting out of the steps of his progenitors, ceased to take part with them, which tooke part with the Gospell. Whereupon it so fell, not by the blind whéele of fortune, but by the secret hand of him, which directeth all estates: that as he first began to forsake the maintaining of the Gospell of God, so the Lord beganne to forsake him. And where the protection of God beginneth to faile, there can lacke no causes to be charged withall, whom God once giueth ouer to mans punishment. So that to me, considering the whole life and trade of this Prince, among all other causes alledged in stories against him: none seemeth so much to be waighed of vs, or more hurtfull to him, then this forsaking of the Lord and his word. Although to such as list more to be certified in other causes concurring withall, many and sundry defects in that King may appeare in stories to the number of 33. Articles alledged or forced rather against him.

Vices and vertues mixt in king Richard.

What it is to forsake the maintenance of the Gospell.

Articles 33. laid against king Richard.

In which, as I cannot denie, but that he was worthy of much blame, so to be displaced therefore from his regall seat, and rightfull state of the crowne, it may be thought perhaps the causes not to be so rare, or so materiall in a Prince, which either could or else would haue serued: had not he giuen ouer before to serue the Lord and his word, chusing rather to serue the humour of the pope and bloudy prelates, then to further the Lords proceedings in preaching of his word. And then, as I said, how can enimies lacke where God standeth not to friend? or what cause can be so little which is not able inough to cast downe, where the Lords arme is shortned to sustaine? Wherefore, it is a point of principall wisedome in a Prince, not to forget, that as he standeth alwaies in nede of God his helping hand, so alwaies he haue the discipline and feare of him before his eies, according to the counsell of the godly king Dauid, Psalme 2.

Gods speciall fauour necessary for princes. Psal. 2.

And thus much touching the time and race of this King Richard, with the tragicall storie of his deposing. The order and maner whereof purposely I pretermit, onely contented briefely to lay together a few speciall things done before his fall, such as may be sufficient in a briefe summe, both to satisfie the Reader inquisitiue of such stories, and also to forewarne other Princes to beware the like dangers. In such as write the life and acts of this Prince, thus I read of him reported, that he was much inclined to the fauouring and aduancing of certaine persons about him, and ruled all by their counsell, which were then greatly abhorred and hated in the Realme: The names of whom were Robert Vere Earle of Orford, whom the king had made Duke of Ireland, Alexander Neuill Archbishop of Yorke, Michael Delapole Earle of Suffolke, Robert Trisilian lord chiefe Iustice, Nicolas Brembre, with other.

The King led with leaud counsell.

These men, being hated and disdained of diuers of the nobles, and of the commons, the king also by fauouring them, was lesse fauoured himselfe. In so much, that the Duke of Gloucester, named Thomas Woodstocke the Kings Vncle, with the Earle of Warwicke, and Earle of Darby, stood vp in armes against those counsellers and abusers (as they named them) of the king. In so much that the king for feare was constrained against his minde to remoue out of his court, Alexander Neuill Archbishop of Yorke, John Fourde Bishop of Duresme, Frier Thomas Rushoke Bishop of Chichester the kings confessor, with the lord Haringworth, lord Burnell, and Bemond, lord Vere, and diuers other.

The Nobles vp in armes against certaine of the kings Counsellers.

And furthermore, in the Parliament the same yeere following, Robert Trisilian the Iustice was hanged & drawne. Also Nicolas Brembre knight, James Salisburie also, and James Barnese both knights, John Beuchamp the Kings Steward, and John Blake Esquire in like maner. All these by the counsell of the lords being cast in the Parliament against the kings minde, did suffer, which was in the 11. of his raigne.

raigne, he being yet vnder gouernours: but consequently after the same, the king claiming his owne libertie, being come to the age of 20. began to take more vpon him. And this was one thing that stirred vp the kings stomacke against the Nobles. Ex Chron. Alban.

Ex Chron. D. Alban.

The second preparatiue to the kings deposing.

2. Another thing that stirred him vp as much against the Londoners was this, for that he would haue borrowed of them a thousand pound, and they denied him, to their double and triple disaduantage, as after ensued vpon it. Ibidem. Another occasion besides this, betweene the king and the Londoners hapned thus, by reason of one of the bishops of Salisburies seruants, named Roman, and a bakers man: who then carying a basket of horsebread in Fleetstreet, the foresaid Roman tooke a horseloafe out of the basket. The baker asking why he did so, the bishops lustie yeoman turned backe againe and brake his head: whereupon the neighbors came out, and would haue arrested this Roman, but he escaped away vnto the bishops house. Then the Constable would haue had him out, but the bishops men shut fast the gates, that they should not approch. Thus, much people gathered together, threatning to burst open the gates and fire the house, vnlesse they had the foresaid partie to them brought out. Whereby much adoe there was, till at length the Maior and Sheriffes came and quieted the rage of the commons, and sent euery man home to his house, charging them to keepe peace. Here as yet was no great harme done, but if the bishop for his part had been quiet, and had not stirred the coles of debate, which were well slaked already, all had been ended without further perturbation. But the stomacke of the bishop not yet digested (although his man had done the wrong) hauing no great cause so to do, whose name was John Waltam, being then Treasurer of England, went to Thomas Arundel, archbishop the same time of Yorke, and Lord Chancellor of England, to complaine of the Londoners. Where is to be noted, or rather reuealed by the way a priuie mysterie, which although it be not in this storie touched of the writers, yet it touched the hearts of the bishops not a little. For the Londoners at that time were notoriously known to be fauourers of Wickliffes side, as partly before this is to be seene, and in the storie of S. Albones more plainely doth appeare: Where the author of the said history writing vpon the 15. yeere of king Richards raigne, reporteth in these words of the Londoners, that they were Male creduli in deum & traditiones auitas, Lollardorum sustentatores, religiosorum detractores, decimarum detentores, & communis vulgi depauperatores, &c. that is, not right beleeuers in God, nor in the traditions of their forefathers, fosteiners of the Lollards, deprauers of religious men, withholders of tithes, and impouerishers of the common people, &c.

John Waltam bishop of Salisburie maketh debate.

Thomas Arundell archbishop of Yorke.

Londoners fauourers of Wickliffes doctrine.

Ex histor. D. Albani, cuius sic habet initium, An. gratia, &c.

Thus the Londoners being noted and suspected of the bishops, were the more maliced (no doubt therefore) of the said bishops, which were the more ready to finde and take all occasions to worke against them, as by their doing herein may well appeare. For the bishop of Salisburie, and Archbishop of Yorke, hauing no greater matter against them, then was declared: with a grieuous complaint went to the king, complaining of the Maior and Sheriffes of London. What trespasse the Maior and Sheriffes had done, as ye haue heard before, so may you iudge. Now what followed after let vs heare. The king incensed not a little with the complaint of the bishops, conceiued ex-ssones against the Maior and Sheriffes, and against the whole Citie of London, a great stomacke: In so much that the Maior and both the Sheriffes were sent for, and remoued from their office. Sir Edward Darlington then was made warden and gouernor of the citie, who also for his gentlenesse shewed to the citizens, was also deposed, and another named sir Baldwin Radington, placed in that rome. Moreouer, so much grew the kings displeasure against the citie, that he also remoued from London the courts, and termes to be kept at Yorke, that is to say, the Chancerie, the Eschequer, the kings Bench, the Hampet, and the common Pleas: where the same continued from Midsummer till Christmas, to the great decay of the citie of London: which was an. 1393.

Londoners complained of to the king, by the bishops.

Beasi pacifici.

The court remooned from London to Yorke.

3. Another great cause which purchased the king much euill will amongst his subiects, was the secret murthering of his owne vncle named Thomas Woodstocke, duke of Glocester, of whom mention was made before; where was declared, how the said duke, with the earle of Arundell, the earle of Warwicke, and the earle of Darby, with other were vp in armor against certaine wicked counsellors about the king. Whereupon, the king watching afterward his time, came into Chelmesford, and so to the place neere by, where the duke lay: where with his own hands he arrested the said duke his vncle, and sent him downe by water immediatlie to Calice, and there through the kings commandement, by secret meanes was put to death, being strangled vnder a featherbed, the earle marshal being then the keeper of Calis, whereby great indignation rose in many mens hearts against the king.

The tyrannous preparatiue to the kings deposing.

The king arresting his owne Uncle, caused him to be put wrongfully to death.

With the same duke of Glocester also about the same time, was arrested and imprisoned the earle of Warwicke, and the earle of Arundell, who being condemned by Parliament, were then executed, whereby great grudge and great indignation rose in the hearts of many against the king: an. 1397.

Fourthly, to omit here the blanke chartes sent ouer all the land by the king; and how the king was said to let out his realme to farme: Ouer and beside all these aboue premised, fell another matter, which was the principall occasion of this mischiefe: The banishment I meane of Henrie earle of Darby, and made duke of Herford a little before, being sonne of John of Gaunt the duke of Lancaster (who died shortlie after the banishment of his sonne, and lieth buried in the Church of S. Paul in London) and the duke of Northfolke: who was before earle of Nottingham, and after by this king, made duke of Northfolke the yeere before. At which time the king made fiue dukes, a marques, and foure earles, to wit, duke of Herford, which was before earle of Darby: duke of Awmerle, which was before earle of Rutland: duke of Southrey, who was before earle of Kent: duke of Exeter, which was before earle of Huntington; and this duke of Northfolke, being before earle of Nottingham, as is afore-saide, &c. The occasion of banishing these foresaid dukes, was this:

Earle of Nottingham made duke of Northfolke.

About this present time, the duke of Herford did appeach the duke of Northfolke vpon certaine words to bee spoken against the king: whereupon, casting their gloues one against the other, they appointed to fight out the quarrell, a day being for the same appointed at Couentrie. But the king tooke vp the matter in his owne hands, banishing the duke of Northfolke for euer, which after died at Uenice; and the other duke, which was the duke of Herford, for 10. yeeres. Beside these, also was exiled into France, Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canturbury, by Act of Parliament, in the same yeere, for points of treason, as ye haue heard before expressed, pag. 472. col. 1. All which turned to the great inconuenience of this king, as in the euent following may appeare.

The duke of Northfolk, and duke of Herford banished.

Thomas Arundell banished as a traytor, by Parliament.

These causes and preparatiues thus premised, it followed the yeere after, which was an. 1399. and last yeere of this king, that the king vpon certaine affaires to be done, tooke his voiage into Ireland. In which meane time, Henry of Bollingbroke, earle of Darby, and duke of Herford, and with him the foresaid archbishop Thomas Arundell, (which before were both exiled) returning out of France to Calice, came into England, challenging the dukedome of Lancaster, after the death of his father. With them also came the sonne and heire of the earle of Arundell, being yet but young. These together setting out of Calice, arriued at Rauenspur in the North. At the knowledge whereof, much people gathered vnto them.

{Anno 1399}

In this meane time, as the duke was houering on the sea to enter the land, lord Edmund duke of Yorke the kings Uncle, to whom the king committed the custodie of this realme (hauing intelligence thereof) called to him the bishop of Chichester, named Edmund Stafford, Chancellor of the realme, and William Scrope, earle of Wiltshire lord Treasurer, also John Bushey, William Bagot, Henry Greene, and John Rushell, with diuers other, consulting with them what was best in that case to be done. Who then gaue their aduice (whether wilfull, or vnskilfull, it is not knowne, but very vnfruitfull) that hee should leaue London, and goe to Saint Albons, there to wait for more strength, able to encounter with the duke. But as the people out of diuers quarters resorted thither, many of them protested that they would do nothing to the harme and preiudice of the duke of Lancaster, who, they said, was vniustly expulsed. The rest then of the counsell, John Bushey, William Bagot, Henrie Greene, William Scroupe Treasurer, hearing and vnderstanding how the commons were minded to ioyne with the duke of Herford, left the duke of Yorke, and the Lord Chancellor, and fled to the castell of Bristow. Where is to be vnderstood, that these foure were they, to whom the common fame ranne that the king had let out his realme to farme: and were so hated of the people, that it is to be thought, that for the hatred of them more then for the king, this commotion was among the people.

What euill companie doth about a king.

As this broile was in England, the noise thereof sounding to the kings eares, being then in Ireland, for haste speede of returning into England, left in Ireland both his busines, and most of his ordinance also behind him. And so passing the seas, landed at Milford hauen, not daring, as it seemed, to come to London.

King Richard returneth from Ireland, to Milford hauen.

On the contrarie side, vnto Henrie duke of Herford, being landed, as is said, in the North, came the earle of Northumberland, lord Henry Percie, and Henry his sonne the earle of Westmerland, lord Radulph Neuill, and other lords moe to a great number, so that the multitude rose to 60000. able souldiers. Who first making toward the Castle of Bristow, tooke the foresaid Bushey, Greene, Scroupe, and Bagot: of whom, three incontinent were beheaded, Bagot escaped away, and fled away to Ireland.

The king in this meane while, lying about Wales, destitute and desolate without comfort or counsell; who neither durst come to London, neither would any man come to him: and perceiuing moreouer, the commons that were vp in such a great power against him, would rather die, then giue ouer that they had begun, for feare of themselues: seeing therefore no other remedy, called to him lord T. Percy earle of Worcester, and steward of his houshold, willing him with other of his familie, to prouide for themselues in time. Who then openly in the hall brake his white rod before them all, commanding euery man to shift for himselfe. Although Fabian and some other say, that he did this of his owne accord, contrarie to his allegeance. The king compalled on euery side with miseries, shifted from place to place, the duke still following him, till at length being at the castle of Conewey, the king desired to talke with Thomas Arundell archbishop, and the earle of Northumberland: to whom he declared, that he would resigne vp his crowne, in condition that an honorable liuing might be for him prouided, and life promised to eight persons, such as he would name. Which being granted and ratified, but not performed, he came to the castle of Flint, where (after talke had with the duke of Lancaster) he was brought the same night by the duke and his armie to Chester, and from thence was conueyed secretly into the tower, there to be kept till the nert parliament. By the way as he came neere to London, diuers euill disposed men of the citie being warned thereof, gathered themselues, thinking to haue slaine him, for the great cruelties he had vsed before toward the citie; but by the policies of the Maior and rulers of the citie, the madnesse of the people was staied. Not long after followed the duke, and also began the parliament. In which parliament, the earle of Northumberland, with many other earles and lords were sent to the king in the tower, to take of him a full resignation according to his former promise, and so they did. This done, diuers accusations and articles were laid and engrolled against the said king, to the number of thirtie three, some say thirtie eight, which for the matter not greatly materiall in them contained, I ouerpasse. And the nert peare after was had to Pomfret castle, and there famished to death.

King Richard agreed to resigne his crowne.

The king committed to the tower.

¶ King Henrie the fourth.

AND thus king Richard by common assent being deposed from his rightful crowne, the duke of Lancaster was led by Thomas Arundell the archbishop, to the seate royall: who there standing vp, and crossing himselfe on the forehead and the brest, spake in words as followeth.

The words of Henrie duke, claiming the crowne.

¶ In the name of God, Amen. I Henrie of Lancaster, claime the realme of England and the crowne, with all the appurtenances, as I that am descended by right line of the blood comming from that good lord king Henrie the third. And through the right that God of his grace hath sent to me with the help of my kin, and of my friends to recouer the same, which was in point to be vndone for default of good gouernance, and due iustice, &c.

King Henrie the fourth inthroned and crowned.

{Anno 1400}

¶ After which words, the Archbishop asking the assent of the people, being ioyfull of their new king, toke the duke by the hand, and placed him in the kingly throne, which was an. 1399. and shortly after by the foresaid archbishop he was crowned also for king of England: Ex Chron. De Alban.

The next yeare after, followed a parliament holden at Westminster: in which parliament one William Sautre, a good man and a faithfull priest, inflamed with zeale of true religion, required he might be heard for the commodity of the whole realme. But the matter being smelt before by the bishops, they obtained that the matter should be referred to the conuocation; where the said William Sautre being brought before the Bishops and Notaries thereunto appointed, the conuocation was deferred to the Saturday nert ensuing.

William Sautres martyr.

William Sautre brought before the bishops in the conuocation.

When Saturday was come, that is to say, the twelfth day of Februarie, Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canturburie, in the presence of his councel prouincial, being assembled in the said Chapter house, against one sir William Sautre, otherwise called Chatris, chaplaine, personally then and there appearing by the commandement of the foresaid archbishop of Canturburie, obiected; that the said Sir William before the bishop of Norwich, had once renounced and abiured diuers and sundrie conclusions hereticall and erroneous; and that after such abiuration made, he publikely and priuily held, taught and preached the same conclusions, or else such like, disagreeing to the Catholike faith, and to the great perill and pernicious example of others. And after this, he caused such like conclusions holden and preached, as is said, by the said Sir William without renunciation, then and there to be read vnto the said archbishop, by maister Rober Hall, chancellor vnto the said bishop, in a certaine scrole written, in tenor of words as followeth.

Sir William Chatris, otherwise called Sautre, parish Priest of the church Saint Scithe the Virgine in London, publikelie and priuilie doth hold these conclusions vnder written.

The articles of William Sautre.

¶ In primis, he saith, that he will not worship the crosse on which Christ suffered, but only Christ that suffered vpon the crosse.

2 Item, that he would soner worship a temporall king, then the foresaid wodden crosse.

3 Item, that he would rather worship the bodies of the Saints, then the very crosse of Christ, on which he hung, if it were before him.

4. Item, that he would rather worship a man truely contrite, then the crosse of Christ.

5. Item, that he is bound rather to worship a man that is predestinate, then an angell of God.

6. Item, that if any man would visite the monuments of Peter and Paul, or go on Pilgrimage to the Tombe of Saint Thomas, or else any whither else, for the obtaining of any temporall benefit: he is not bound to keepe his vow, but that he may distribute the expences of his vow vpon the almes of the poore.

7. Item, that euery Priest and Deacon is more bound to preach the word of God, then to say the canonicall houres.

8. Item, that after the pronouncing of the Sacramentall words of the bodie of Christ, the bread remaineth of the same nature that it was before, neither doth it cease to be bread.

To which conclusions or articles being thus read, the Archbishop of Canturburie required the same Sir william to answere. And then the said William asked a copie of such articles or conclusions, and a competent space to answere vnto the same. Whereupon the said Archbishop commanded a copie of such articles or conclusions to be deliuered, then and there vnto the said Sir William, assigning the Thursday then nert ensuing to him to deliberate and make answere in. When Thursday the said day of appearance was come, Walter Nicolas Richton, auditor of the causes and businesse belonging to the said Archbishop (then being in the Parliament house at Westminster otherwise let) continued the said conuocation with all matters rising, depending and appertinent thereunto, by commandement of the said bishop, vntill the nert morrow at eight of the clocke. When the morrow came, being Friday, the foresaid sir William Sautre, in the chapter house before the said bishop and his councell prouinciall then and there assembled, making his personall appearance, exhibited a certaine scrole, containing the answeres vnto certaine articles or conclusions giuen vnto him, as is aforesaid, by the said bishop: and said, that vnto the foresaid archbishop he deliuered the same as his answere in that behalfe, vnder the tenor of such words as follow.

The answere of William Sautre giuen vp in writing.

I William Sautre priest vnworthie, say and answere, that I will not, nor intend not to worship the crosse whereon Christ was crucified, but onely Christ that suffered vpon the crosse: so vnderstanding me, that I will not worship the materiall crosse, for the grosse corporall matter: yet notwithstanding I will worship the same as a signe, token, and memoriall of the passion of Christ, Adoratione vicaria. And that I will rather worship a temporall king, then the foresaid wodden crosse, as the materiall substance of the same. And that I will rather worship the bodies of Saints, then the very crosse of Christ whereon he hung: with this addition, that if the very same crosse were afore me, as touching the materiall substance. And also, that I will rather worship a man truely confessed and penitent, then the crosse on which Christ hung, as touching the materiall substance.

The crosse materially not to be worshipped.

And, that also I am bound, and will rather worship him whom I know to be predestinate, truely confessed and contrite, then an angell of God: for that the one is a man of the same nature with the humanitie of Christ, and so is not a blessed angell. Notwithstanding I will worship both of them, according as the will of God is I should.

A man predestinate rather to be worshipped, then an Angell: that is to say, neither can be worshipped without idolatrie.

Also, that if any man hath made a vow to visit the shrines of the Apostles Peter and Paul, or to goe on pilgrimage vnto S. Thomas tombe, or any whither else to obtaine any temporall benefit or commoditie; he is not bound simplie to keepe his vow, vpon the necessitie of saluation: but that he may giue the expences of his vow in almes amongst the poore, by the prudent counsell of his superiour, as I suppose.

And also I say, that euery Deacon and Priest is more bound to preach the word of God, then to say the canonicall houres, according to the primitiue order of the church.

Holy bread remaineth in the Sacrament.

Also, touching the interrogation of the sacrament of the altar; I say, that after the pronouncing of the sacramentall words of the body of Christ, there ceaseth not to be very bread simplie, but remaineth bread, holy, true, & the bread of life: and I beleeue the said sacrament to be the very bodie of Christ, after the pronouncing of the sacramentall words.

When all these answeres were throughlie by Maister Robert Hall, directlie and publikelie there read, the foresaid archbishop of Canturburie inquired of the said sir William, whether he had abiured the foresaid heresies and errors obiected against him, as before is said, before the bishop of Norwich, or not; or else had reuoked and renounced the said or such like conclusions or articles, or not? To which he answered and affirmed, that he had not. And then consequentlie (all other articles, conclusions and answeres aboue written, immediatlie omitted) the said archbishop examined the same sir William Sautre, especiallie vpon the sacrament of the altar.

First, whether in the sacrament of the altar after the pronouncing of the sacramentall words, remaineth very materiall bread or not. Vnto which interrogation, the same sir William somewhat waueringly said, and answered, that he knew not not that. Notwithſtanding he ſaid, that there was very bread, becaule it was the bread of life which came downe from Heauen.

After that the ſaid archbiſhop demanded of him, whether in the Sacrament after the ſacramentall words, rightlie pronounced of the prieſt, the ſame bread remaineth, which did before the words pronounced, or not? And to this queſtion the foreſaid William anſwered in like manner as before, ſaying, that there was bread, holy, true, and the bread of life, &c.

After that, the foreſaid archbiſhop aſked him, whether the ſame materiall bread before conſecration, by the ſacramentall words of the prieſt rightly pronounced, bee tranſubſtantiated from the nature of bread, into the very bodie of Chriſt, or not? Wherunto ſir William ſaid, that he knew not what that matter meant.

The connocation continued. W. Sautre againe examined.

And then the ſaid archbiſhop aſſigned vnto the ſaid ſir William, time to deliberate, and more fullie to make his anſwere till the nert day: and continued this connocation then and there till the morrow. Which morrow, to wit, the 19. day of Februarie being come, the foreſaid archbiſhop of Canturburie, in the ſaid chapter houſe of ſaint Paul in London, before his councell prouinciall, then and there aſſembled, ſpeciallie aſked and examined the ſame ſir William Sautre there perſonallie preſent, vpon the Sacrament of the altar, as before. And the ſame ſir William againe in like manner as before, anſwered.

After this, amongſt other things the ſaid biſhop demanded of the ſame William, if the ſame materiall bread being vpon the altar after the ſacramentall words being of the prieſt rightlie pronounced, is tranſubſtantiated into the verie bodie of Chriſt, or not? And the ſaid ſir William ſaid hee vnderſtood not what he meant.

Then the ſaid archbiſhop demanded, whether that materiall bread being round and white, prepared and diſpoſed for the Sacrament of the bodie of Chriſt vpon the altar, wanting nothing that is meet and requiſit thereunto, by the vertue of the ſacramentall words being of the prieſt rightly pronounced, be altered and changed into the very bodie of Chriſt, and ceaſeth any more to be materiall and very bread, or not? Then the ſaid ſir William deridingly anſwering, ſaid hee could not tell.

Then conſequently the ſaid archbiſhop demanded, whether he would ſtand to the determination of the holy church or not, which affirmeth: that in the Sacrament of the altar, after the words of conſecration, being rightly pronounced of the prieſt, the ſame bread which before in nature was bread, ceaſeth any more to be bread. To this interrogation, the ſaid ſir William ſaid: that hee would ſtand to the determination of the church, where ſuch determination was not contrarie to the will of God.

Determination of the church ſo to be followed as it is ioyned to the will of God.

This done; he demanded of him againe, what his iudgement was concerning the Sacrament of the altar: Who ſaid and affirmed, that after the words of conſecration by the prieſt duly pronounced, remained very bread, and the ſame bread which was before the words ſpoken. And this examination about the Sacrament, laſted from eight of the clocke of the ſame day, vntill eleuen of the clocke, or thereabouts: inſomuch, that during all this time, the foreſaid William would no otherwiſe anſwere: neither yet touching the ſame Sacrament, receiue catholike information, according to the inſtitution of the popes church and his chriſtian faith. Wherefore the ſaid Canturburie, by the counſell and aſſent of his whole couent then and there preſent, did promulgate and giue ſentence by the mouth of Robert Hall, againſt the ſame ſir William Sautre (being perſonallie preſent, and refuſing to reuoke his hereſies, that is to ſay his true doctrine, but conſtantly defending the ſame) vnder the tenour of words as followeth.

The ſentence againſt W. Sautre.

IN the name of God, Amen. Wee Thomas by the grace of God archbiſhop of Canturburie, primat of England and Legate of the ſea Apoſtolicall, by the authoritie of God almightie and bleſſed ſaint Peter and Paul, and of holy church, and by our owne authoritie ſitting for tribunall or chiefe Iudge, hauing God alone before our eies; by the counſell and conſent of the whole Clergie our fellow brethren, and ſuffraganes aſſiſtants vnto vs in this preſent councell prouinciall, by this our ſentence definitiue, do pronounce, decree and declare by theſe preſents, thee William Sautre, otherwiſe called Chawtrey, pariſh prieſt pretenſed, perſonallie appearing before vs, in & vpon the crime of hereſie iudiciallie and lawfullie conuict as an heretike, and as an heretike to be puniſhed.

Which ſentence definitiue being thus read; the foreſaid archbiſhop of Cant. continued in the ſame prouinciall councell till Wedneſday nert, and immediatly enſuing, to wit, the 24. day of the ſame moneth of Februarie: which being erpired, the biſhop of Norwich, according to the commandement of the ſaid archbiſhop of Canturburie, preſented vnto the foreſaid William Sautre by a certaine friend of his, being preſent at the ſame councell, a certaine proceſſe incloſed and ſealed with his ſeale, giuing the names of credible witneſſes ſealed with their ſeales: The tenour whereof followeth in this wiſe.

Memorandum, that vpon the laſt day of Aprill, in the yere of our Lord, 1399. in the 7. indiction, and 10. yere of the papacie of pope Boniface the 2. in a certaine chamber within the manor houſe of the ſaid biſhop of Norwich, at South Helingham (where the regiſter of the ſaid biſhop is kept) before the houre of 9. in a certaine chapell within the ſaid manour ſituate, and the firſt day of May, then nert and immediatlie enſuing, in the foreſaid chamber, ſir William Chawtris, pariſh prieſt of the church of S. Margaret in the towne of Linne, appeared before the biſhop of Norwich, in the preſence of John de Derlington, archdeacon of Norwich, doctor of the decrees, frier Walter Diſſe, and John Kikinghall profeſſors in diuinitie, William Carlton, doctor of both lawes, and William Friſeby, with Hugh Bridham, publike Notaries: and there publikely affirmed and held, the concluſions, as before is ſpecified.

A certaine proceſſe againſt W. Sautre preſented by the biſhop of Norwich.

All and ſinguler the premiſes the foreſaid William affirmed vpon mature deliberation. And afterwards, to wit, the 19. day of May in the yere, indiction, and papacie aforeſaid, in the chapell within the manour houſe of the ſaid Henrie biſhop of Norwich, ſituate at South Helingham; the foreſaid ſir William, reuoked and renounced all and ſinguler the foreſaid his concluſions: abiuring and correcting all ſuch hereſies and errours, taking his oth vpon a booke before the foreſaid Henrie the biſhop of Norwich, that from that time forward he would neuer preach, affirme, nor hold, priuily nor apertly, the foreſaid concluſions: And that he would pronounce according to the appointment of the ſaid biſhop, the foreſaid concluſions to bee erroneous and hereſies, in the pariſh churches of Linne, and Tilney, and in other places at the aſſignement of the ſaid biſhop: and farther ſware, that he would ſtand to the ordinance of the ſaid biſhop, touching the premiſes, in the preſence of the diſcreet and worſhipfull men afore recited with diuers other moe.

As concerning the firſt concluſion, that hee ſaid hee would not worſhip the croſſe, &c. hee confeſſed himſelfe to haue erred, and that the article was erroneous and ſubmitted himſelfe. And as touching the ſecond article, that hee ſaid he would rather worſhip a king, &c. he confeſſed himſelfe to haue erred, and the article to be erroneous, and ſubmitted himſelfe, and ſo forth of all the reſt.

Then nert after this, vpon the 25. day of May in the yere of our Lord aforeſaid, in the Churchyard of the chapell of ſaint James within the towne of Linne; the foreſaid William, in preſence of the foreſaid biſhop and clergie, and the people of the ſaid towne of Linne ſtanding round about; publickly declared in the Engliſh tongue, the foreſaid concluſions to bee erroneous and hereſies, as was contained in a certaine ſcrole. And after this, the 26. day of May in the yeere aboue ſaid, in the church of the hoſpitall of S. Johns in the towne of Linne; the ſaid ſir William, before the ſaid biſhop ſitting as iudge, ſware and toke his oth vpon the holy Euangeliſts, that hee would neuer after that time preach openly and publikely the foreſaid concluſions, nor would heare the confeſſions of any of the ſubiects of his dioces of Norwich, without the ſpeciall licence of the ſaid biſhop, &c. In the preſence of frier John Smermen, M. John Kikinghale, doctor of diuinitie, W. Carlton doctor of both lawes, and Thomas Bolton officer of the liberty of Linne aforeſaid, with diuers others.

The tenour of the ſcrole and recantation.

IN primis, touching the firſt and ſecond, where I ſaid, that I would adore rather a temporall prince, and the liuelie bodies of the ſaints, then the woodden croſſe, whereupon the Lord did hang, I doe reuoke and recant the ſame as being therein deceiued. 1 2

To this I ſay, that the article is falſe and erroneous, and by falſe information I held it; the which I renounce and alke forgiuenelle thereof; and ſay, that it is a precious relique, and that I ſhall hold it while I liue, and that I ſweare here. 3

I know well that I erred wrongfullie, by falſe information: for I wot well, that a deacon or a prieſt is more bound to ſay his Mattins and houres, then to preach; for thereto hee is bounden by right: wherefore I ſubmit me, &c. 4

Touching that article, I know right well that I erred by falſe information. Wherefore I aſke forgiuenelle. 5

As concerning vowes, I ſay, that opinion is falſe and erroneous, and by falſe information I held it: for a man is holden to hold his vow, &c. 6

To the 7. article I ſay, that I did it by authoritie of prieſthood, wherethrough I knowledge well that I haue gilt and treſpaſſed: wherefore I ſubmit me to God and to holy Church, and to you father, ſwearing that I ſhall neuer hold it more. 7

The 8. I ſay, that I held it by falſe and wrong information. But now I know well that it is hereſie, and that bread anon as the word of the ſacrament is ſaid, is no longer bread materiall, but that it is turned into very Chriſts bodie; and that I ſweare here. 8

I ſay, that this is falſe and erroneous, &c. 9

I ſay as I ſaid, &c. 10

This being done, the 22. of Februarie aforeſaid in the yere of our Lord. 1400. in the chapter houſe of Saint Paul in London aforeſaid; the foreſaid archbiſhop of Canturbury, in in the conuocation of his prelats and clergie and such like men there being present, caused the fore recited procesle of the bishop of Norwich to be read openly and publikely to sir William Sautre, otherwise called Chautris. And afterward, he asked the said sir William, whether hee plainely vnderstood and knew such procesle and the contents within the same; and hee said, yea. And further he demanded of him, if he would or could say or obiect any thing against the procesle; and hee said, no. And after that incontinent, the foresaid archbishop of Canturburie demanded and obiected against the said sir William, as diuers others more did: That after hee had before the bishop of Norwich reuoked and abiured iudicially diuers errors and heresies, that among other errors and heresies by him taught, holden, and preached, he affirmed: That in the same Sacrament of the altar after the consecration made by the priest, as he taught, there remained materiall bread: which heresie amongst others as errours also he abiured before the foresaid bishop of Norwich. Hereunto the foresaid William answered smiling or in mocking wise, saying, and denying that he knew of the premisses. Notwithstanding he publikely affirmed, that he held and taught the foresaid things after the date of the said procesle made by the said bishop of Norwich, and that in the same councell also he held the same. Then finallie, it was demanded of the said sir William, why he ought not to be pronounced as a man fallen into heresie, and further to proceed vnto his degradation, according to the canonicall sanctions: whereunto he answered nothing, neither could he alleage any cause to the contrarie.

Ex Regist. Cantuar.

Whereupon the foresaid archbishop of Canturbury by the counsell and consent of the whole councell, and especially by the counsell and assent of the reuerend fathers and bishops, as also priors, deanes, archdeacons, and other worshipfull doctours and clerks then and there present in the councell; fullie determined to proceed to the degradation, and actuall deposing of the said William Sautre, as refallen into heresie, and as incorrigible, according to the sentence definitiue put in writting, the tenour whereof is in words as followeth.

Sentence of relapse.

In the name of God Amen: Wee Thomas by the grace of God archbishop of Canturbury, Legate of the see Apostolical, and Metropolitane of all England: doe finde and declare, that thou William Sautre, otherwise called Chatris priest, by vs with the counsell and assent of all and singuler our fellow brethren and whole clergie, by this our sentence definitiue declared in writing, hast been for heresie conuict and condemned, and art (being againe fallen into heresie) to be deposed and degraded, by these presents.

And from that day being Wednesday, there was in the said councell prouinciall nothing further prosecuted, but was continued with all dependents, till the Friday next insuing. Which Friday approching, master Nicolas Rilhton, by the commandement of the said archbishop of Canturburie, being then busied, as he said, in the parliament house; continued this councell and conuocation with all incidents, dependents, and occasions, growing and annexed thereunto, to the next day, to wit, Saturday next and immediatly after ensuing. Upon Saturday, being the 26. of the said moneth of February, the foresaid archbishop of Canturburie sate in the bishops seate of the foresaid church of S. Paul in London, and solemnely apparelled in his pontifical attire, sitting with him as his assistants, these reuerend fathers and bishops, of Londō, Lincolne, Hereford, Exeter, Meneuensis & Roffensis Episcopi, aboue mentioned; commanded and caused the said sir Wil. Sautry apparelled in priestly vestiments, to bee brought and appeare before him. That done, he declared & expounded in English to al the clergy and people therein a great multitude assembled: that all procesle was finished and ended against the said sir Wil. Sautry. Which thing finished, before the pronouncing of the said sentence of the Relapse against the said sir William, as is premised, hee often then and there recited and read. And for that he saw the said William in that behalfe, nothing abashed; hee proceeded to his degradation and actuall deposition in forme as followeth.

And in token of this thy degradation and actuall deposition, for the causes aforesaid, we take from thée the keies of the Church dooze, and thy surplice, and doe depriue thée of all and singuler manner of commodities of a dooze keeper.

The surplice taken from him.

The church dooze keies taken from him.

And also, by the authoritie of omnipotent God the father, the sonne and holy Gost, and by our authoritie, counsell, and assent of our whose councell prouinciall aboue written, we doe degrade thée, and depose thée, being here personallie present before vs, from orders, benefices, priuiledges and habite in the church; and for thy pertinacie in corrigible wee doe degrade thée, before the secular court of the high constable and marshall of England, being personallie present; and do depose thée from all and singuler clerkly honours and dignities whatsoeuer, by these writings. Also in token of thy degradation and deposition, here actually we haue caused thy crowne and ecclesiasticall tonsure in our presence to bee raced away, and vtterlie to bee abolished, like vnto the forme of a secular lay man: and heere doe put vpon the head of thée the foresaid William, the cap of a lay secular person: beséeching the court aforesaid, that they will receiue fauourably the said William vnto them thus recommitted.

Priuiledge of the clergie taken from him.

The priests cap taken from his head, maketh vp all in all.

Thus William Sawtre the seruant of Christ, being vtterlie thrust out of the popes kingdome, and metamorphosed from a clerke to a secular lay man, was committed (as yee haue heard) vnto the secular power. Which so done, the bishops yet not herewith contented, cease not to call vpon the king, to cause him to bee brought forth to spéedie execution. Whereupon the king, readie inough and too much to gratifie the clergie, and to retaine their fauours, directeth out a terrible decrée against the said William Sawtre, and sent it to the maior and sheriffes of London to be put in execution; the tenour whereof here vnder ensueth.

The decree of the king against William Sawtre.

The cruell decree of the king against Sawtre.

THe decrée of our Soueraigne Lord the king and his counsel in the parliament, against a certain new sprung vp hereticke. To the maior and sheriffes of London, &c. Whereas the reuerend father Thomas archbishop of Canturburie, primat of all England, and Legate of the apostolicke see, by the assent, consent, and counsell of other bishops, and his brethren Suffraganes, and also of all the whole clergie within his prouince or dioces, gathered together in his prouincial councel, the due order of the law being obserued in al points in this behalfes hath had pronounced and declared by his definitiue sentence, William Sautre sometime chaplaine, to bee fallen againe into his most damnable heresie, the which beforetime the said William had abiured, therupon to be a most manifest hereticke, and therfore hath decreed, that he should be degraded, and hath for the same cause really degraded him from all prerogatiue and priuiledge of the clergie, decreeing to leaue him vnto the secular power: and hath really so left him, according to the lawes and canonicall sanctions set forth in this behalfe, and also that our holy mother the Church hath no further to do in the premisses. We therfore being zealous in religion, and reuerent louers of the catholick faith, willing and minding to maintaine and defend the holy Church, and the lawes and liberties of the same, to rote all such errors and heresies out of our kingdome of England, and with condigne punishment to correct and punish all heretikes or such as be conuict: prouided allwaies, that both according to the law of God and man, and the canonicall institutions in this behalfe accustomed, that such hereticks conuict and condemned in forme aforesaid, ought to bee burned with fire: We command you as straitly as we may, or can firmely enioyning you, that you doe cause the said William being in your custodie, in some publick or open place within the liberties of your citie aforesaid (the cause aforesaid being published vnto the people) to be put into the fire, and there in the same fire really to be burned, to the great horror of his offence, and the manifest example of other christians. Faile not in the execution hereof, vpon the perill that will fall thereupon: Teste rege, apud Westmonast. 26. Februar. an. regni sui.

The burning of William Sautre.

Admonition to princes.

Thus it may appeare how kings and princes haue been blinded and abused by the false prelats of the church, in so much, that they haue been their slaues and butchers, to slay Christs poore innocent members. See therefore what danger it is for princes, not to haue knowledge and vnderstanding themselues, but to be led by other mens eies, and speciallie trusting to such guides, who through hypocrisie, both deceiue them, and through crueltie deuoure the people.

King Henrie, the first of English kings that tormented the christians with fire.

As king Henrie the fourth, who was the deposer of king Richard, was the first of all English kings that began the vnmercifull burning of Christs saints, for standing against the pope: so was this William Sautre the true and faithfull martyr of Christ, the first of all them in Wickliffes time, which I find to be burned in the raigne of the foresaid king, which was in the yeere of our Lord, 1400.

After the martyrdome of this godly man, the rest of the same companie began to keepe themselues more closely, for feare of the king, who was altogether bent to hold with the popes prelacy. Such was the raigne of this prince, that to the godly hee was euer terrible, in his actions immeasurable, to few men heartily beloued, but princes neuer lacke flatterers about them. Neither was the time of his raigne very quiet, but full of trouble, of bloud and miserie. Such was their desire of king Richard againe in the raigne of this king, that many yeeres after, he was rumored to be aliue (of them which desired belike that to bee true which they knew to be false) for the which, diuers were executed. For the space of fiue or seuen yeeres together, almost no yeere passed without some conspiracie against the king. Long it were here to recite the bloud of all such Nobles and other, which was spilt in the raigne of this king, as the earle of Kent, earle of Salisbury, earle of Huntington, named John Holland, &c. as writeth the storie of S. Albans. But the English writers differ something in their names, and make mention of foure earles, of Surrey, of Excester, of Salisbury, and lord Spencer earle of Glocester. Ex lib. cui tit. It is to be doubted.

And the next yeere following, Sir John Clarendon knight, with two of his seruants, the prior of Laund, with eight friers, were hanged and quartered. And after these, Henrie Percie the younger, the earle of Worcester, named Thomas Percie his vncle, lord of Kinderton, and Lord Richard de Vernoua. The earle of Northumberland scarce escaped with his pardon, an. 1403. In the which yeere, the prison in Cornehill called the tunne, was turned into the conduit, there now standing.

Anno 1403

To let passe other moe hanged and quartered the same time, as Blunt knight, and Benet Kely knight, and Thomas Winterfell esquire: Also the same yeere was taken and executed, sir Bernard Brokes knight, sir John Shilley knight, sir John Mandelin, and William Frierbie. After all these, lord Henry earle of Northumberland, and lord Bardolfe, conspiring the kings death, were taken in the North and beheaded, which was in the 8. yeere of this king Henrie.

This ciuill rebellion of so many nobles, and other against the king, declared what grudging hearts the people then bare toward this king Henrie. Among whom I cannot pretermit here also the archbishop of Yorke named Richard Scrope, who with the lord Mowbrey, Marshall of England gathered a great companie in the North countrie, against the foresaid king, to whom also was adioyned the helpe of lord Bardolfe, & Henrie Percie earle of Northumberland. Ex Chron. D. Albani. And to stirre vp the people more willingly to take their parts, they collected certaine articles against the said king, to the number of 10. and fastned them vpon the doores of churches and monasteries, to be read of all men in English. Which articles, if any be disposed to vnderstand, for so much as the same also containe a great part of the doings betweene king Henrie and king Richard aforesaid, I thought for the better opening of the matter here vnder to insert the same, in such forme as I found them in the storie of Scala mundi expressed.

Articles set vp on Church doores against king Henry the fourth.

Anno 1401

IN the name of God, Amen. Before the Lord Jesus Christ, iudge of the quicke and dead, &c. We A.B.C.D. &c. not long sithence became bound by oth vpon the sacred Euangelicall booke, vnto our Soueraigne lord Richard, late king of England and France, in the presence of many prelats, potentates and nobilitie of the realme: that we so long as we liued, should beare true allegeance and fidelitie toward him and his heires succeeding him in the kingdome by iust title, right and line, according to the statutes and custome of this Realme of England: By vertue whereof, we are bound to foresee that no vices or hainous offences arising in ỹ common weale, do take effect or wished end. but that wee ought to giue our selues and our goods to withstand the same, without feare of the sword or death whatsoeuer, vpon paine of periurie, which paine is euerlasting damnation. Wherefore we seeing and perceiuing diuers horrible crimes, and great enormities daily without ceasing to bee committed, by the children of the diuell and Satans souldiers against the supremacie of the Church of Rome, the libertie of the church of England, and the lawes of the realme, against the person of king Richard and his heires, against the prelats, noble men, religion and communaltie, and finally against the whole weale publike of the realme of England, to the great offence of the maiestie of almighty God and to the prouocation of his iust wrath and vengeance towards the realme and people of the same: And fearing also the destruction both of the church of Rome and England, and the ruine of our countrie to be at hand, hauing before our eies the iustice and the kingdome of God, calling allwaies on the name of Jesus, hauing an assured confidence in his clemencie, mercie and power: Haue here taken vnto vs certaine articles subscribed in forme following, to be proponed, tried and heard before the iust iudge Jesus Christ, and the whole world, to his honour, the deliuerie of the church, the clergie and communalty, and to the vtilitie and profit of the weale publicke. But if (which God forbid) by force, feare or violence of wicked persons we shall be cast in prison, or by violent death preuented, so as in this world we shall not be able to proue the said articles as we would wish, then do we appeale to the high celestiall Judge, that he may iudge and discerne the same, in the day of his supreme iudgement.

A bill of articles set vp against king Henry 4.

1. First, we depose, say, except, and entend to proue against the Lord Henry Darby, sonne of the lord John of Gaunt late duke of Lancaster, and commonly called king of England (himselfe pretending the same, although without all right and title thereunto) and against his adherents, fautours, and complices: that euer they haue been, are and will be, traitors, inuaders, and destroyers of Gods church in Rome, England, Wales, and Ireland, and of our Soueraigne lord Richard late late king of England, his heires, his kingdome, and common wealth, as shall hereafter manifestly appeare.

2. Secondarily wee depose, &c. against the said lord Henrie, for that he had conceiued, deuised, and conspired certaine hainous crimes and traiterous offences against his said Soueraigne lord Richard his state and dignitie, as manifestlie did appeare in the contention betweene the said lord Henrie, and the lord Thomas duke of Northfolke begun at Couentrie, but not finished throughlie. Afterwards hee was sent into exile, by sentence of the said king Richard, by the agreement of his father the Lord Iohn, duke of Lancaster, by the voice of diuers of the lords temporall, and nobilitie of the realme, and also by his owne consent: there to remaine for a certaine time appointed vnto him by the said Lords, and withall he was bound by oth not to returne into England before hee had obtained fauour and grace of the king. Not long after, when the king was departed into Ireland, for reformation of that countrie appertaining to the crowne of England, but as then rebelling against the same: the said lord Henry in the meane time contrarie to his oth and fidelitie, and long before the time limited vnto him was expired: with all his fautours and inuaders, secretly entred into the Realme, swearing and protesting before the face of the people, that his comming into the realme in the absence of the king, was for none other cause, but that he might in humble sort with the loue and fauour of the king, and all the Lords spirituall and temporall, haue and enioy his lawfull inheritance descending vnto him of right after the death of his father: which thing as it pleased all men, so cried they: Blessed is hee that commeth in the name of the Lord. But how this blessing afterward turned into cursing, shall appeare in that which followeth: and also ye shall vnderstand his horrible and wicked conspiracie against his Soueraigne Lord king Richard, and diuers other Lords as well spirituall as temporall; besides that his manifest periurie shall well bee knowne, and that he remaineth not only forsworne and periured, but also excommunicate, for that hee conspired against his Soueraigne lord our king. Wherefore we pronounce him by these presents, as well periured as excommunicate.

King Henrie periured.

3. Thirdly, we depose, &c. against the lord Henrie, that hee the said lord Henrie, immediatlie after his entrie into England, by craftie and subtile policie, caused to bee proclaimed openly throughout the Realme, that no tenths of the Clergie, fiftenes of the people, sealing vp of cloth, diminution of woll, impost of wine, nor other extortions or exactions whatsoeuer, should hereafter be required or exacted: hoping by this meanes to purchase vnto him the voice and fauour of the prelates spirituall, the Lords temporall, the Merchants, and comminaltie of the whole Realme. After this, hee toke by force the kings castles and fortresses, spoiled and deuoured his goods whersoeuer he found it, crying hauocke, hauocke. The kings maiesties subiects as well spirituall as temporall he spoiled and robbed, some he toke captiue and imprisoned them, and some he slew and put to miserable death, whereof many were bishops, prelates, priests and religious men. Whereby it is manifest, that the said lord Henrie is not onely periured, in promising and swearing that there should bee hereafter no more exactions, paiments, or extortions within the Realme, but also excommunicate for the violence and iniurie done to prelats and priests. Wherfore by these presents we pronounce him, as afore, as well periured as excommunicate.

King Henrie charged with vntruth.

4. Fourthly, we depose, &c. against the said lord Henry, that he hearing of the kings returne from Ireland into Wales, rose vp against his Soueraigne Lord the king with many thousands of armed men, marching forward with all his power towards the castle of Flint in Wales, where he toke the king and held him prisoner, and so led him captiue as a traitor vnto Leicester: from whence hee toke his iourney towards London, misusing the king by the way both he and his, with many iniuries and opprobrious contumelies and scoffes. And in the end committed him to the tower of London, and held a parliament, the king being absent and in prison; wherein for feare of death, hee compelled the king to yeeld and resigne vnto him all his right and title of the kingdome and crowne of England. After which resignation being made; the said Lord Henrie standing vp in the Parliament house, stoutly and proudlie before them all, said and affirmed: that the kingdome of England and crowne of the same, with all thereunto belonging, did pertaine vnto him at that present, as of very right, and to none other: for that the said king Richard by his owne deed, was depriued for euer, of all the right, title and interest that euer he had, hath, or may haue in ỹ same. And thus at length by right and wrong, hee exalted himselfe vnto the throne of the kingdome: since which time, our common weale neuer flourished nor prospered, but altogether hath bin void of vertue, for that the spiritualtie was so oppressed, exercise and warlike practises haue not beene maintained, charitie is waxed cold, and couetousnesse and miserie hath taken place, and finallie mercie is taken away and vengeance supplieth the roome. Whereby it doth appeare (as before is said) that the said Lord Henrie is not onely periured and false by vsurping the kingdome and dominion belonging to another, but also excommunicate for the apprehending, vniust imprisoning, and depriuing his Soueraigne Lord the king of his roiall crowne and dignitie. Wherefore, as in the articles before, we pronounce the said lord Henrie to be excommunicate.

King Henrie charged with murdering of his prince.

5. Fifthly, wee depose, &c. against the said lord Henrie, that he the same lord Henry, with the rest of his fauourers and complices, heaping mischiefe vpon mischiefe, haue committed and brought to passe a most wicked and mischieuous fact, yea, such as hath not been heard of at any time before. For after that they had taken and imprisoned the king, and deposed him by open iniury against all humane nature, yet not content with this; they brought him to Pomfret castle, and there imprisoned him, where xv. daies and nights they vered him with continuall hunger, thirst, and cold, and finallie bereft him of life, with such a kind of death as neuer before that time was known in Englād, but by Gods prouidence it is come to light. Who euer heard of such a deede, or who euer saw the like of him? Wherefore O England arise, stand vp, auenge the cause, the death and iniurie of thy king and prince: which if thou doe not, take this for certaintie, that the righteous God will destroy thee by strange inuasions and forraine power, and auenge himselfe on thee for this so horrible an act. Whereby doth appeare, not only his periury, but also his excommunication most execrable: so that, as before, we pronounce the said Henrie not onely periured, but also excommunicate.

K. Henrie charged with the orders of the Church.

6. Sixtly, wee depose, &c. against the said lord Henrie, that after hee had attained to the crowne and scepter of the kingdome, he caused forthwith to bee apprehended diuers lords spirituall, Bishops, Abbats, Priors and religious men of all orders, whom he arrested, imprisoned and bound, and against all order brought them before the secular iudges to be examined: not sparing the bishops, whose bodies were annointed with sacred oile, nor priests, nor religious men, but commanded them to be condemned, hanged and beheaded by the temporall law and iudgement, notwithstanding the priuiledge of the Church, and holy orders, which hee ought to haue reuerenced and worshipped if he had been a true and lawfull king: for the first and chiefest oth in the coronation of a lawfull king is, to defend and keepe inuiolate the liberties and rights of the church, and not to deliuer any priest or religious man into the hands of the secular power, except for heresie onely, and that after his degradation according to the order of the Church. Contrarie vnto all this hath he done; so that it is manifest by this article as afore in the rest, that he is both periured and excommunicate.

King Henry charged with tyrannie.

7. Seuenthly, we depose, &c. against the said lord Henry, that not onely he caused to be put to death the lords spirituall and other religious men, but also diuers of the lords temporall and nobilitie of the Realme, and chiefly those that studied for the preseruation of the common weale, not ceasing as yet, to continue his mischieuous enterprise, if by Gods prouidence it bee not preuented, and that with speed: Amongst all other of the nobilitie, these first hee put to death: the earle of Salisburie, the earle of Huntington, the earle of Glocester, the lord Roger Clarendon the kings brother, with diuers other knights and esquiers: and afterwards, the Lord Thomas Percie earle of Worcester, and the lord Henrie Percie sonne and heire to the earle of Northumberland; the which lord Henrie hee not onely slew, but to the vttermost of his power againe and againe he caused him to be slaine. For after that he was once put to death, and deliuered to the lord of Furnisuale to be buried (who committed his bodie to holy sepulture, with as much honour as might bee, commending his soule to almightie God, with the suffrages of the blessed masse and other prayers) the said lord Henrie most like a cruell beast still thirsting his blood, caused his bodie to be exhumate and brought forth againe, and to be reposed betweene two millstones in the towne of Shrowsburie, there to be kept with armed men: And afterwards to bee beheaded and quartered, commanding his head and quarters to be carried vnto diuers cities of the kingdome. Wherefore for so detestable a fact neuer heard of in any age before, we pronounce him, as in the former articles, excommunicate.

The king charged with euill gouernment.

8. Eightlily, wee depose, &c. against the said lord Henry, for that after his attaining to the crowne, he willingly ratified, allowed, and approued a most wicked statute set forth and renued in the parliament holden at Winchester. The which statute is directly against the Church of Rome, the power, and principalitie thereof giuen by our lord Jesus Christ and vnto blessed S. Peter and his successors bishops of Rome: vnto whom belongeth by full authoritie the free disposing of all spirituall promotions as well superiour as inferiour: which wicked statute, is the cause of many mischiefes, vid. of simony, periurie, adulterie, incest, misorder, and disobedience, for that many bishops, abbats, priors and prelates (wee will not say by vertue, but rather by errour of this statute) haue bestowed the benefices vacant vpon young men, rude and vnworthie persons, which haue compacted with them for the same, so that scarce no one prelate is found that hath not couenanted with the partie promoted for the halfe yearelie, or at the least, the third part of the said benefice so bestowed. And by this meanes the said statute is the destruction of the right of S. Peter, the Church of Rome and England, the clergie and Vniuersities, ths the maintenance of wars, and the whole common wealth, &c.

9. Ninthly, we say and depose, &c. against the said Lord Henry, that after he had tyrannouslie taken vpon him the gouernment of the Realme: England neuer flourished since, nor prospered, by reason of his continuall exactions of monie and oppressions, yearely of the clergie and comminaltie: neither is it knowne how this mony so extorted is bestowed, when as neither his souldiers, nor his Gentlemen are payed as yet their wages and fees for their charges and wonderful toile and labor, neither yet the poore countrie people are satisfied for the victuall taken of them: And neuertheless, the miserable clergie, and more miserable comminaltie, are forced still to pay, by menaces and sharpe threatnings. Notwithstanding he sware when hee first vsurped the crowne, that hereafter there should be no such exactions nor vexations, neither of the clergie nor laitie. Wherefore, as afore, wee pronounce him periured, &c.
10. In the tenth and last article, wee depose, say, and openlie protest by these presents, for our selues, and all our assistants in the cause of the Church of Rome and England, and in the cause of king Richard his heires, the clergie, and comminaltie of the whole Realme: that neither our intention is, was, nor shall be, in word nor deed to offend any state, either of the prelates spirituall, Lords temporall, nor commons of the realme: but rather foreseeing the perdition and destruction of this realme to approch, wee haue here brought before you certaine articles concerning the destruction of the same, to be circumspectly considered of the whole assemblie, as well of the lords spirituall as temporall, and the faithfull commons of England: beseeching you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ the righteous iudge, and for the merits of our blessed Ladie the mother of God, and of S. George our defender, vnder whose displayed banner we wish to liue and die, and vnder paine of damnation, that yee will be fauourable to vs, and to our causes which are three in number. Whereof the first is, that we exalt vnto the kingdome the true and lawfull heire, and him to crowne in kingly throne with the diademe of England. And secondlie, that we reuoke the Welchmen, the Irishmen, and all other our enemies vnto perpetuall peace and amity. Thirdly and finally, that we deliuer and make free our native countrie from all exactions, extortions, and vniust paiments: Beseeching our Lord Jesus Christ to grant his blessing, the remission of their sinnes, and life euerlasting to all that assist vs to their power in this godly and meritorious worke: and vnto all those that are against vs, we threaten the curse of almightie God by the authoritie committed vnto vs by Christ and his holy Church, and by these presents wee pronounce them excommunicate.

King Henry charged with oppression and periurie.

Three causes declared.

These articles being seene and read, much concourse of people daily resorted more and more to the archbishop. The earle of Westmerland being then not farre off, with John the kings sonne (hearing of this) mustred his souldiers with all the power he was able to make, and bent toward the archbishop: but seeing his part too weake to encounter with him, vseth practise of policie, where strength would not serue. And first comming to him vnder colour of friendship dissembled, laboureth to seeke out the causes of that great stir. To whom the archbishop againe answering, no hurt to bee entended thereby, but profit rather to the king and common wealth, and maintenance of publike peace: but forsomuch as he stood in great feare, and danger of the king, he was therefore compelled so to doe. And withall shewed vnto him the contents of the articles aforesaid, which when the earle had read, setting a faire face vpon it, seemed highly to commend the purpose and doings of the bishop: promising moreouer, that he would helpe also forward in that quarrell, to the vttermost of his power. And required vpon the same, a day to be set, when they with equall number of men, might meete together, in some place appointed to haue further talke of the matter. The archbishop easily perswaded, was content, although much against the counsell of the earle Marshall, and came. Where the articles being openlie published and read, the earle of Westmerland with his companie, pretended well to like vpon the same, and to ioyne their assents together. Which done, he erhorted the archbishop, that forsomuch as his garrison had been now long in armour, and from home, he would therefore discharge the needlesse multitude of his souldiers, and dismisse them home to their worke and businesse, and they would together drinke and ioyne hands in the sight of the whole company. Thus they shaking hands together, the archbishop sendeth away his souldiers in peace, not knowing himselfe to bee circumuented, before he was immediatelie arrested by the hands of the aforesaid earle of Westmerland, and shortly after the king comming with his power to Yorke, was there beheaded the Munday in Whitson weeke, and with him also lord Thomas Moubray Marshall, with diuers other moreouer of the citie of Yorke, which had taken their partes. After whose slaughter, the king proceedeth farther to persecute the earle of Northumberland, and lord Thomas Bardolph: Who then did flie to Barwicke. From thence remoued to Wales. At length within two yeares after, fighting against the kings part, were slaine in the field, an. 1408. In the which yeere, diuers other also in the North parts, for fauouring the foresaid lords, were likewise condemned by the king and put to death. Among whom, the abbat of Hales, for the like treason was hanged.

Abbat of Hales hanged.

The king after the shedding of so much bloud, seeing himselfe so hardly beloued of his subiects, thought to keepe in yet with the clergie, and with the bishop of Rome, seeking alwaies his chiefest stay at their hands. And therefore was compelled in all things, to serue their humour, as did appeare as well in condemning William Sawtre before, as also in other, which consequently we haue now to intreat of. In the number of whom commeth now by the course of time to write of one John Badby a Taylor and a lay man, who by the crueltie of Thomas Arundell Archbishop, and other Prelates, was brought to his condemnation in this kings raigne, an. 1409. according as by their own registers appeareth, and followeth by this narration to be seene.

Anno 1409

John Badby Artificer.

John Badby martyr. Ex Regist. Tho. Arundel.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1409. on Sunday being the first day of March, in the afternoone: The examination following of one John Badby Taylor, being a lay man, was made in a certaine house or hall within the precinct of the preaching friers in London, in an vtter cloister: vpon the crime of heresie and other articles, repugnant to the determination of the erroneous Church of Rome, before Thomas Arundell, archbishop of Canturburie and other his assistants, as the archbishop of Yorke, of London, of Winchester, of Oxford, of Norwich, of Salisburie, of Bath, of Bangor, Et Meneuensis Episcopi, and also Edmond duke of Yorke, Thomas Belwford, the Chancellour of England, lord de Ros, the clerke of the roles, and a great number of other lords, both spirituall and temporall, being then at the selfe same time present: master Morgan read the articles of his opinions to the hearers, according as it is contained in the instrument read by the foresaid master Morgan, the tenor whereof followeth, and in effect is such.

The articles read.

In the name of God, Amen: Be it manifest to all men by this present publike instrument, that in the yeere after the incarnation of our Lord, according to the course and computation of the Church of England, otherwise in the yeere 1409. in the second indiction, in the third yeere of the popedome of the most holy father in Christ and Lord, lord Gregorie xi. by the diuine permission pope, the second day of Januarie, in the chapell Caruariæ of Saint Thomas martyr, nigh vnto the Cathedrall Church of Worcester, being situate in the said dioces, in the presence of me the publike notarie, and of the witnesses vnderwritten: the foresaid John Badby a lay man, of the said dioces of Worcester, appearing personally, before the reuerend father in Christ and Lord, lord Thomas, by the grace of God bishop of Worcester, sitting in the said Chapell for chiefe iudge, was detected of and vpon the crime of heresie, being heretically taught, and openly maintained by the foresaid John Badby. That is, that the sacrament of the bodie of Christ, consecrated by the priest vpon the altar, is not the true bodie of Christ, by the vertue of the words of the Sacrament. But that after the sacramentall words spoken by the priest to make the bodie of Christ: the materiall bread doth remaine vpon the altar as in the beginning, neither is it turned into the very bodie of Christ after the Sacramentall words spoken of the priest. Which John Badby, being examined, and diligently demanded by the foresaid reuerend father concerning the premisses, in the end did answere: that it was impossible that any priest should make the bodie of Christ, and that he beleeued firmely that no priest could make the body of Christ by such words sacramentally spoken in such sort. And also he said expressely that hee would neuer while hee liued, beleeue, that any priest could make the bodie of Christ sacramentally, vnlesse that first hee saw manifestlie the like bodie of Christ to bee handled in the hands of the priest vpon the altar, in his corporall forme. And furthermore he said that John Rakier of Bristol had so much power and authoritie to make the like bodie of Christ, as any priest had. Moreouer he said, that when Christ sat at supper with his disciples; hee had not his body in his hand, to the intent to distribute it to his disciples: and he said expressly, that he did not this thing. And also he spake many other words teaching and fortifying the heresie in the same place, both grieuous, and also out of order, and horrible to the eares of the hearers, sounding against the Catholike faith.

The sacrament of Christs body.

Upon which occasion, the same reuerend father admonished and requested the said John Badby oftentimes, and verie instantly to charitie: forsomuch as he would willingly that hee should haue forsaken such heresie and opinion, holden, taught and maintained by him, in such sort against the Sacrament, to renounce, and vtterlie abiure them, and to beleeue other things which the holy mother the Church doth beleeue. And he informed the said John on that behalfe both gentlie, and also laudably. Yet the said John Badby, although he were admonished and requested both often and instantly by the said reuerend father: said and answered expressly, that he would neuer beleeue otherwise then before he had said, taught, and answered. Whereupon, the foresaid reuerend father bishop of

Worcester

I cannot blame ye that ye are so angry, for it was not for your profit.

Worcester, seeing, vnderstanding, and perceiuing the foresaid John Badby to maintaine and fortifie the said heresie, being stubborne, and proceeding in the same stubbornesse: pronounced the said John to be before this time conuicted of such an heresie, and that he hath bin, and is an heretick, and in the end declared it in these words.

The sentence of the bishop of Worcester against John Badby.

In the name of God, Amen. We Thomas bishop of Worcester, doe accuse thee Iohn Badby, being a lay man of our dioces, of and vpon the crime of heresie before vs, sitting for chiefe iudge, being oftentimes confessed and conuicted of and vpon that, that thou hast taught, and openly affirmed, as hitherto thou dost teach, boldly affirme, & defend, that the sacrament of the bodie of Christ, consecrated vpon the altar by the priest, is not the true body of Christ: But after the sacramentall words to make the body of Christ by vertue of the said sacramentall words pronounced, to haue bin in the crime of heresie: and we doe pronounce thee, both to haue been, and to be an heretike, and doe declare it finally by these writings.

These things were done accordingly as is aboue written and are recited in the yeere, indiction, popedome, moneth, day and place aforesaid, being present the same time, John Malme prior of the Cathedrall Church of Worcester, John Dudle monke, and Haule the supprior of the said Church, Thomas Penings of the order of the Carmelites, Thomas Fetenham of the order of the preaching Friers, William Pomfret of the order of the Minorites, being professors and maisters in diuinitie, William Hailes, Gualter of London, John Swippedew being publike Notaries, and William Beuchampe and Thomas Gerbris being knights, Richard Wish of Tredington, Thomas Wilbe of Hembury, John Weston of Pewley, being parsons of Churches, and Thomas Baleinges, the maister of Saint Wolston in Worcester, and also Henrie Haggely, John Penerell, Thomas Trogmorton and William Wallebone esquires of the dioces of Worcester and Norwich, and many other worshipfull and honest men being witnesses and called specially to the things aforesaid.

A rabble of monkes and friers about the condemnation of John Badby.

Quare fremuerunt gentes? Psalm.2.

Scribes with Pharisies.

And I John Chew Clerke, of the dioces of Bathe and Welles, and by the authoritie apostolicall, publique Notarie of the said bishop: haue in testimonie of the premisses, put my hand and seale to the examination, interrogation, monition, and answere of the same John Badby, and to his obstinacie: and also to the procedings of all and singuler other doings as is aforesaid, which against him before the said bishop were handled and done, in the yeere, indiction, popedome, moneth, day, and place aforesaid, which with the forenamed witnesses was personally present: and the same euen as I heard them and saw them to be done (being occupied with other matters) caused them to bee written and published, and into this publike forme haue compiled the same. I the foresaid Notarie am also priuie, vnto the words and examinations interlined betweene seuen or eight lines of the beginning of this instrument, which lines I also the foresaid notarie doe approue and make good.

The answere of John Badby to the articles.

And I Walter London Clerke, of the dioces of Worcester, and by the authoritie apostolicall, publik Notarie: to all and singuler the foresaid things as afore by the foresaid Notarie is recited, and in the yeere, indiction, popedome, moneth, day, and place aforesaid were handled and done, being with other the fore recited witnesses personally present: and to all and euery of the same (as I saw and heard them to bee done, being thereunto faithfully desired and required:) In testimonie of the premisses, haue signed and subscribed according to the accustomed manner. Hæc ex Reg. Cant.

And when the articles, in the foresaid instrument contained, were by the archbishop of Canturbury publikely and vulgarly read and approoued: he publikely confessed and affirmed, that he had both said and maintained the same. And then the archbishop to conuince the constant purpose of the said John Badby, commanded the same articles againe to bee read, often instructing him both by words and examples, informing and exhorting him that thereby he might be brought the soner to the religion that he was of. And furthermore, the said archbishop said and affirmed there openly to the same John, that he would (if hee would liue according to the doctrine of Christ) gage his soule for him at the iudgement day. And after that againe he caused those articles in the said instrument expressed, to be read by the foresaid Philip Morgan, and the said archbishop himselfe expounded the same in English as before: wherunto John Badby answered. As touching the first article concerning the body of Christ, he expresly said, that after the consecration at the altar, there remaineth materiall bread, and the same bread which was before: notwithstanding (said he) it is a signe or sacrament of the liuing God.

The substance of bread not changed in the Sacrament.

Also, when the second article was expounded vnto him, that it is impossible for any priest, &c. To this article hee answered and said, that it could not sinke into his mind that the words are to be taken as they literally lie, vnlesse hee should denie the incarnation of Christ.

Also being examined of the third article concerning Jacke Raker, he said: that if Jacke Raker were a man of good liuing, and did loue and feare God, that hee hath as much power to do, as hath the priest: and said further, that he hath heard it spoken of some doctors of diuinitie, that if he should receiue any such consecrated bread, he were worthie to be damned, and were damned in so doing.

Furthermore he said that he would beleeue the omnipotent God in trinity: and said moreouer, that if euery host being consecrated at the altar were the Lords body, that then there be 20000. gods in England. But he beleeued (he said) in one God omnipotent, which thing the foresaid archb. of Cant. denied not.

And when the other conclusion was expounded; That Christ sitting with his Disciples at supper, &c. To this he answered and said, that he would greatly maruel that if any man had a loafe of bread, and should breake the same and giue to euery man a mouthfull, that the same loafe should afterwards be whole.

When all these things were thus finished, and that all the said conclusions were often read in the vulgar tongue: the foresaid archb. demanded of him, whether he would renounce and forsake his opinions & such like conclusions or not, and adhere for to the doctrine of Christ and Catholike faith: Hee answered, that according to that he had said before, he would adhere and stand to those words, which before he had made answere vnto. Then the archbi. oftentimes required the said John in the bowels of Jesu Christ that hee would forsake those opinions and conclusions, and that henceforth he would cleaue to the christian faith: which thing to doe in the audience of all the lords and others that were present, he expresly denied and refused.

The constancy of John Badby before the archbishop.

After all this, when the foresaid archbishop of Cant. and the bishop of London had consulted together, to what safe keeping the said John Badby (vntill the Wednesday next) might be committed: it was concluded, that he should be put in a certaine chamber or safe house within the mansion of the friers preachers, and so he was: and then the archbishop of Canturburie said, that he himselfe would keepe the key thereof, in the meane time. And when the foresaid Wednesday was expired, being the 15. day of March, and that the foresaid archbishop of Canturbury, with his fellow brethren and suffragans were assembled in the Church of Saint Paul in London: the archbishop of Canturbury taking the Episcopall seate, called vnto him the archbishop of Yorke, Richard London, Henry Winchester, Robert Chichester, Alexander Norwich, and the noble prince Edmund the duke of Yorke, Rafe earle of Westmerland, Thomas Beaufort knight, Lord Chancellour of England, and the lord Beamond with other noble men as well spirituall as temporall, that stode and sate by, whom to name it would be long: Before whom the said John Badby was called personally to answer vnto the Articles premised in the foresaid instrument. Who when hee came personally before them, the articles were read by the officiall of the court of Canturburie, and by the archbishop (in the vulgar tongue) expounded, publikely and expresly: and the same articles, as he had before spoken and deposed, he still held and defended, and said, that whilest he liued, hee would neuer retract the same. And furthermore, he said specially to be noted, that the lord duke of Yorke personallie there present, as is aforesaid, and euery man else for the time being; is of more estimation and reputation, then the Sacrament of the altar, by the priest in due forme consecrated. And whilest they were thus in his examination, the archb. considering and waighing that he would in no wise be altered, and seeing moreouer his countenance stout and heart confirmed, so that he began to perswade other as it appeared in the same: these things considered, the archprelate when hee saw that by his allurements it was not in his power, neither by exhortations, reasons, nor arguments, to bring the said John Badby from his constant truth to his Catholike faith (executing and doing the office of his great master) proceeded to confirme and ratifie the former sentence giuen before by the bishop of Worcester against the said John Badby, pronouncing him for an open and publike heretick. And thus shifting their hands of him, they deliuered him to the secular power: and desired the said temporall lords, then and there present very instantlie, that they would not put the same John Badby to death for that his offence, nor deliuer him to bee punished or put to death, in the presence of all the lords aboue recited.

Astiterunt reges terræ et principes conuenerunt in vnum aduersus, &c. Psalm.2.

These things thus done and concluded by the bishops in the forenoone: on the afternoone, the kings writ was not farre behind. By the force whereof, John Badby still persseuering in his constancie vnto the death, was brought into Smithfield, and there being put in an emptie barrell, was bound with iron chaines fastened to a stake, hauing drie wood put about him.

The bishops make sure worke. The archbishop both Judge and Jailor.

And as he was thus standing in the pipe or tunne (for as yet Perillus Bull was not in vre among the bishops) it happened that the prince the kings eldest sonne, was there present. Who shewing some part of the good Samaritane, began to endeuour and assay how to saue the life of him, whom the hypocriticall Leuits and Pharisies sought to put to death. Hee admonished and counselled him, that hauing respect vnto himselfe, he should speedily withdraw himselfe out of these dangerous Labyrinths of opinions, adding oftentimes threatnings, the which might haue daunted any mans stomacke.

The sacrament solemnely brought to Smithfield at the burning of Badby.

In this meane season, the Prior of S. Bartlemewes in Smithfield, brought with all solemnity the Sacrament of Gods body, with twelue torches borne before, and so shewed the Sacrament to the poore man being at the stake. And then they demanding of him how he beleeued in it, hee answered: that hee knew well it was hallowed bread, and not Gods bodie. And then was the tunne put ouer him, and fire put vnto him. And when he felt the fire, he cried, mercy (calling belike vpon the Lord) and so the Prince immediately commanded to take away the tunne, and quench the fire. The Prince, his commandement being done, asked him if hee would forsake heresie to take him to the faith of holy Church: which thing if hee would doe, he should haue goods enough, promising also vnto him a yeerely stipend out of the kings treasury, so much as should suffice his contentation.

But this valiant champion of Christ, neglecting the Princes faire words, as also contemning all mens deuices: refused the offer of worldly promises, no doubt, but being more hehemently inflamed with the spirit of God then with any earthly desire. Wherefore, when as yet he continued vnmoueable in his former minde, the prince commanded him straight to bee put againe into the pipe or tunne, and that hee should not afterward looke for any grace or fauour. But as he could be allured by no rewards, euen so was he nothing at all abashed at their torments, but as a valiant champion of Christ, hee perseuered inuincible to the end. Not without a great and most cruell battaile, but with much more greater triumph of victorie: the spirit of Christ hauing alwaies the vpper hand in his members, maugre the furie, rage, and power of the whole world. For the manifestation of which torment, we haue here set forth the picture of his burning, in such manner as it was done.

John Badby constant to the end.

¶ The description of the horrible burning of Iohn Badby, and how he was vsed at his death.

All the power of man set against the Gospell.

This godly martyr Iohn Badby hauing thus consummate his testimony and martyrdome in fire, the persecuting bishops yet not herewith contented, and thinking themselues as yet either not strong enough, or else not sharpe enough against the poore innocent flocke of Christ: to make all things sure and substantiall on their side, in such sort, as this doctrine of the Gospell now springing, should be suppressed for euer: laid their conspiring heads together; and hauing now a king for their owne purpose, ready to serue their turne in all points (during the time of the same parliament aboue recited yet continuing) the foresaid bishops and clergy of the realme, exhibited a bill vnto the kings maiesty: subtilly declaring what quietnesse hath been maintained within this realme by his most noble progenitors, who alwaies defended the ancient rites and customes of the church, & enriched the same with large gifts, to ỹ honor of God and the realme: and contrariwise, what trouble and disquietnesse was now risen by diuers (as they termed them) wicked and peruerse men, teaching and preaching openly and priuily, a certaine new, wicked, and hereticall kind of doctrine, contrary to the catholike faith and determination of holy church. Whereupon the king alwaies oppressed with blinde ignorance, by the craftie meanes and subtill pretences of the clergie, granted in the said parliament (by consent of the nobilitie assembled) a statute to be obserued called Ex officio, as followeth.

The Gospell of Christ counted as wicked and hereticall.

The Statute Ex officio.

The cruell statute, ex officio.

That is to say, that no man within this realme, or other the kings maiesties dominions, presume to take vpō him to preach priuily or apertly, without speciall licence first obtained of the ordinary of the same place (curats in their owne parish churches, and persons heretofore priuiledged, and others admitted by the canon law, only excepted.) Nor that any hereafter doe preach, maintaine, teach, informe openly or in secret, or make or write any booke contrary to the catholike faith, and determination of the holy church. Nor that any hereafter, make any conuenticles or assemblies, or keepe and exercise any manner of schooles touching this sect, wicked doctrine and opinion. And further, that no man hereafter shall by any meanes, fauor any such preacher, any such maker of vnlawfull assemblies, or any such booke maker or writer, and finally any such teacher, informer, or stirrer vp of the people. And that all and singuler persons hauing any the said bookes, writings, or schedules containing the said wicked doctrines and opinions, shall within forty daies after this present proclamation and statute, really and effectually deliuer, or cause to be deliuered, all and singuler the said bookes and writings, vnto the Ordinarie of the same place. And if it shall happen any person or persons, of what kinde, state, or condition soeuer he or they be, to doe or attempt any maner of thing contrary to this present proclamation and statute, or not to deliuer the same bookes in forme aforesaid: That then the Ordinary of the same place in his own dioceſſe by authority of the said proclamation and statute, shall cause to be arrested and detained vnder safe custody, the said person or persons in this case defamed and euidently suspected, or any of them, vntill he or they so offending haue by order of law purged him or themselues as touching the articles laid to his or their charge in this behalfe: or vntill he or they haue denied and recanted (according to the lawes ecclesiasticall) the said wicked sect, preachings, teachings, and hereticall and erroneous opinions. And that the said Ordinarie by himselfe or his Commissaries proceed openly, and iudicially to all the effect of law against the said persons so arrested and remaining vnder safe custodie, and that hee end and determine the matter within three monethes after the said arrest, (all delayes and excuses set apart) according to the order and custome of the Canon law. And if any person, in any cause aboue mentioned, shall be lawfully conuicted before the Ordinarie of the dioces or his commissaries: that then the said Ordinarie, may lawfully cause the said person so conuicted (according to the manner and qualitie of his fact) to be laid in any of his owne prisons, and there to be kept so long as to his discretion shall be thought expedient.

And further, the said Ordinary (except in cases by the which according to the Canon law, the partie offending ought to be deliuered to the secular power) shall charge the said person with such a fine of money to be paid vnto the kings maiestie, as he shall thinke competent for the manner and qualitie of his offence. And the said diocesan shal be bound to giue notice of the said fine, into the kings maiesties Exchequer, by his letters patent vnder his seale: to the intent that the said fine may be leuied to the kings maiesties vse of the goods of the person so conuict.

And further, if any person within this realme and other the kings maiesties dominion, shall be conuicted before the Ordinarie of the place, or his Commissaries, of the said wicked preachings, doctrines, opinions, schooles, and hereticall and erroneous informations or any of them: and will refuse to abiure and recant the said wiked sect, preachings, teachings, opinions, schooles and informations: or if after his abiuration once made, the relapse be pronounced against him by the diocesan of the place, or his Commissaries (for so by the Canon law he ought to be left to the secular power, vpon credit giuen to the Ordinarie or his Commissaries) that then the sheriffe of the same countie, the maior, sheriffes, or sheriffe, or the maior or bayliffes of the same citie, village, or borough of the same countie, and neerest inhabiting to the said Ordinary or his said Cõmissaries, shall personally be present, as oft as they shall be required to confer with the said Ordinarie or his Commissaries in giuing sentence against the said persons offending or any of them. And after the said sentence so pronounced, shall take vnto them the said persons so offending, and any of them, and cause them openly to be burned in the sight of all the people: to the intent that this kind of punishment may be a terror vnto others, that the like wicked doctrines and hereticall opinions, or the authors and fauourers therof be no more maintained within this realme and dominions, to the great hurt (which God forbid) of christian religion, and decrees of holy church. In which all and singuler the premisses, concerning the statute aforesaid: let the sheriffes, maiors, and bayliffes of the said counties, cities, villages and boroughes, be attendant, aiding, and fauouring the said Ordinaries and their Commissaries.

A bloodie statute.

By this bloodie statute so seuerely and sharply enacted against these simple men, here hast thou (gentle Reader) a little to stay with thy selfe: and to consider the nature and condition of this present world, how it hath been set and bent euer from the beginning, by all might, counsell, and waies possible, to striue against the waies of God, and to ouerthrow that which he will haue set vp. And although the world may see by infinite stories and examples, that it is but in vaine to striue against him: yet such is the nature of this world (all set in malignitie) that it will not cease still to be like it selfe.

The law of Maximinus and the statute Ex officio compared.

The like law and statute in the time of Diocletian and Maximinus was attempted, as before appeareth, pag. 70. and for ỹ more strength were written also in tables of brasse, to the intent that the name of Christ should vtterly be extincted for euer. And yet the name of Christ remaineth, where that brasen law remained not three yéeres. The which law written then in brasse, although it differ in manner and forme from this our statute Ex officio, yet to the same end and crueltie, to spill the blod of Saints, there is no difference betweene the one and the other. Neither is there any diuersitie touching ỹ first originall doer and worker of them both. For the same Satan, which then wrought his vttermost against Christ, before he was bound vp: the same also now after his losing out, doth what he can, though not after the same way, yet to the same intent. For then with outward violence as an open enemie, he did what he could: Now by a more couert way, vnder the title of the church he impugneth the church of Christ, vsing a more subtill way to deceiue, vnder gay pretensed titles: but no lesse pernicious in the end, whereto he shooteth, as well appeareth by this bloodie statute Ex officio, the sequell whereof cost afterward many a christian mans life. As in processe of storie remaineth more hereafter (Christ willing) to be declared.

Furthermore, for the more fortification of this statute of the king aforesaid, concurreth also another constitution made much about the same time by the archbishop of Canturburie Thomas Arundell. So that no industrie nor policie of man here did lacke to set the matter forward, but specially on the bishops parts, who left no meanes vnattempted, how to subuert the right waies of the Lord.

First, in most diligent and exquisit execution of the kings statute set forth: the execution whereof they did so exactly applie, that maruell it is to consider, all other lawes of kings (commonly,) (be they neuer so good) to be so coldly kept, and this only among all the rest so neerely followed. But herein is to be seene the diligence of the Romish prelats, which neuer let any thing to fall, that maketh for the dignitie of their estate.

Secondly, beside their vigilant care, in seeing the kings statute to be executed: No lesse industrious also were they in adding thereunto mo constitutions of their owne, as from time to time appeareth as well by other archbishops hereafter, and by pope Martine, as also by this constitution here present made by Thomas Arundell the archbishop.

But before we enter to the relation of these aforesaid constitutions of the clergie men, here commeth in more to be said and noted touching the foresaid statute Ex officio, to proue the same not only to be cruell and impious, but also to be of it selfe of no force and validitie for the burning of anie person for cause of religion: for the dispatch of which statute we haue sufficient authoritie remaining as yet in the parliament rolles to be seene in her Maiesties court of records: which here were to be debated at large, but that vpon speciall occasion we haue deferred the ample discourse thereof to the cruell persecution of the lord Cobham hereafter ensuing, as may appeare in the defence of the lord Cobham against Nicolas Harpesfield vnder the title and name of Alanus Copus. And thus referring them for the examination of this statute to the place aforesaid, let vs now retorne to Thomas Arundell, and his bloodie constitutions aboue mentioned. The stile and tenour whereof, to the intent the rigour of the same may appeare to all men, I thought here vnder to adioyne, in words as followeth.

The constitution of Thomas Arundell against the followers of Gods truth.

A cruell constitution by the archbishop against the Gospellers, with thirteene articles.

Thomas by the permission of God, archbishop of Canturburie, primate of all England, and legat of the see apostolike: To all and singuler our reuerend brethren fellow bishops, and our suffragans: And to Abbats, priors, deanes of cathedrall churches, archdeacons, prouosts and canons: also to all parsons, vicars, chaplaines, and clerkes in parish churches, and to all lay men, whom and whersoeuer, dwelling within our prouince of Canturburie, greeting; and grace to stand firmely in the doctrine of the holy mother church. It is a manifest and plaine case, that he doth wrong and iniurie to the most reuerend councell, who so reuolteth from the things, being in the said councell once discussed and decided. And whosoeuer dare presume to dispute of the supreme or principal iudgement here in earth, in so doing incurreth the paine of sacriledge, according to the authoritie of ciuill wisedome and manifest tradition of humane law. Much more then they who trusting to their owne wits, are so bold to violate and with contrarie doctrine to resist, and in word and déed to contemne the precepts of lawes and canons, rightly made and proceeding from the keybearer and porter of eternall life and death: bearing the rome and person, not of pure man, but of true God here in earth: which also haue béen obserued hitherto, of the holy fathers our predecessors, vnto the glorious effusion of their blod, and voluntarie sprinkling out of their braines: are worthie of greater punishment, deseruing quickly to be cut off, as rotten members, from the bodie of the church militant. For such ought to consider, what is in the old Testament written: Moses and Aaron among his priests, that is, were chiefe heads amongst them. And in the new Testament among the apostles there was a certaine difference: And though they were all apostles, yet was it granted of the Lord to Peter, that he should beare preeminence aboue the other apostles: And also the apostles themselues would the same, that he should be the chiefetain ouer all the rest. And being called Cephas, that is, head, should be as a prince ouer the apostles. Unto whom it was said: Thou being once conuerted, confirme thy brethren: as though he would say, If there happen any doubt among them, or if any of them chance to erre and stray out of the way of faith, of iust liuing, or right conuersation; do thou confirme and reduce him in the right way againe. Which thing no doubt the Lord would neuer haue said vnto him, if he had not so minded, that the rest should be obedient vnto him. And yet all this notwithstanding, we know and daily proue, that we are sorie to speake, how the old Sophister, the enemie of mankind, (foreséeing and fearing left the sound doctrine of the Church determined from ancient times by the holy forefathers; should withstand his malices, if it might kéepe the people of God in vnitie of faith vnder one head of the Church) doth therefore indeuour by all meanes possible, to extirpe the said doctrine, fayning vices to be vertues. And so vnder false pretences of veritie dissimuled, soweth discord in catholike people, to the intent that some going one way, some another; he in the meane time may gather to himselfe a Church of the malignant, differing wickedly from the vniuersall mother holy church. In the which Satan transforming himselfe into an Angell of light, bearing a lying and deceitfull ballance in his hand, pretendeth great righteousnesse, in contrarying the ancient doctrine of the holy mother church, and refusing the traditions of the same determined and appointed by holy fathers: perswading men (by fained forgeries) the same to be naught, and so inducing other new kinds of doctrine, leading to more godnesse, as he by his lying perswasions pretendeth, although he in verie truth truth neither willeth nor mindeth any godnesse, but rather that he may sow schismes, whereby diuers opinions and contrary to themselues being raised in the church, faith thereby may be diminished, & also the reuerend holy mysteries through the same contention of words may be prophaned with Paganes, Iewes, and other infidels, and wicked miscreants. Apoc.6. And so that figure in the Apoc.6. is well verified, speaking of him that sate on the blacke horse, bearing a paire of ballance in his hand, by the which heretickes are vnderstood. Who at the first appearance like to weights or ballance, make as though they would set forth right and iust things, to allure the hearts of the hearers. But afterward appeareth the blacke horse, that is to say, their intention, full of cursed speaking. The figure of the blacke horse in the Apoc. worthily expounded. For they vnder a diuers shew and colour of a iust ballance, with the taile of a blacke horse sprinkling abroad heresies and errours, doe strike. And being poisoned themselues, vnder colour of good, raise vp infinite slanders, and by certaine persons fit to doe mischiefe, doe publish abroad as it were the sugred talk of honie mixt with poison, thereby the sooner to be taken: working and causing through their sleight and subtilties, that error should be taken for veritie, wickednesse for holinesse, and for the true will of Christ: Yea and moreouer the foresaid persons thus picked out, doe preach before they be sent, and presume to sow the seede, before the seede discreetly be separate from the chaffe. Who not pondering the constitutions and decrees of the canons, prouided for the same purpose against such pestilent sowers, doe preferre sacrifice Diabolicall (so to terme it) before obedience be giuen to the holy church militant.

Behold the true image of Wolues vnder sheepes clothing. We therefore considering & waighing, that error which is not resisted, seemeth to be allowed, and that hee openeth his bosome too wide, which resisteth not the viper thinking there to thrust out her venome: And willing moreouer to shake off the dust from our feete, and to see to the honour of our holy mother church, whereby one vniforme holy doctrine may be sowen and planted in the church of God, (namely in this our prouince of Canturburie) so much as in vs doth lie, to the increase of faith & seruice of God, first rooting out the euill weeds and offendicles which by the meanes of peruerse preaching, mad doctrine, haue sprung vp hitherto, and are like more hereafter to grow: purposing by some conuenient way with all diligence possible to withstand them in time, and to prouide for the perill of soules, which we see to rise vnder pretence of the premisses: also to remoue all such obstacles, by which the said our purpose may be stopped, by the aduice and assent of all our Suffraganes and other Prelates, being present in this our conuocation of the clergy, as also of the procuratours of them that be absent: and at the instant petition of the procurators of the whole clergie within this our prouince of Canturburie, for the more fortification of the common law in this part, adding thereunto punishment and penalties condigne as be here vnder written, we will and command, ordaine and decree:

The first constitution. That no maner of person secular or regular, being authorised to preach by the lawes now prescribed, or licensed by speciall priuiledge: shall take vpon him the office of preaching the word of God, or by any meanes preach vnto the clergie or laitie, either within the Church or without, in English, except he first present himselfe, and be examined of the Ordinaris of the place, where hee preacheth: And so being found a fit person, as well in maners as knowledge, hee shall be sent by the said Ordinarie, to some one church or more as shall be thought expedient by the said Ordinary, according to the qualitie of the person. Nor any person aforesaid shall presume to preach, except first he giue faithfull signification in due forme of his sending and authority, that is: That he that is authorised, doe come in forme appointed him in that behalfe: & those that affirme they come by speciall priuiledge, doe shew their priuiledge vnto the Parson or Vicar of the place where they preach. And those that pretend themselues to be sent by the Ordinarie of the place, shall likewise shew the Ordinaries letters made vnto him for that purpose, vnder his great seale. Let vs alwaies vnderstand, the Curat (hauing the perpetuitie) to be sent of right vnto the people of his owne cure. But if any person aforesaid, shall be bidden by the Ordinarie of the place, or any other Superiour to preach, by reason of his errours and heresies which before peraduenture he hath preached and taught: that then and from thencefoorth, be abstaine from preaching within our prouince, vntill hee haue purged himselfe, and be lawfully admitted againe to preach by the iust arbitrement of him that suspended and forbad him. And shall alwaies after that, carie with him to all places whereseuer he shall preach, the letters testimoniall of him that restored him.

No priests to preach, but by limitation of the prelates.

Moreouer, the Parish Priests or Vicars temporall, not hauing perpetuities, nor being sent in forme aforesaid, shall simply preach in the churches where they haue charge, onely those things which are expressly contained in the prouinciall constitution set forth by John our predecessor of good memorie, to helpe the ignorance of the priests, which beginneth, Ignorantia Sacerdotum. Which booke of constitutions, wee would should be had in euery parish Church in our prouince of Canturbury, within three moneths next after the publication of these presents, and (as therein is required) that it be effectually declared by the priests themselues yeerely, and at the times appointed. And lest this wholesome statute might be thought hurtfull of some, by reason of paiment of money, or some other difficultie: we therefore will and ordaine, that the examinations of the persons aforesaid, and the making of their letters by the Ordinarie, be done gratis and freely, without any exaction of money at all by those to whom it shall appertaine. And if any man shall willingly presume to violate this our statute grounded vpon the old law, after the publication of the same hee shall incurre the sentence of greater excommunication ipso facto: whose absolution wee specially reserue by tenour of these presents, to vs and our successors. But if any such Preacher despising this wholsome statute, & not waighing the sentence of greater excommunication, doe the second time take vpon him to preach; saying and alleaging, and stoutly affirming that the sentence of greater excommunication aforesaid, cannot be appointed by the church in the persons of the prelates of the same: That then, the Superiours of the place, doe worthily rebuke him, and forbid him from the Communion of all faithfull Christians.

And that the said person hereupon lawfully conuicted (except he recant and abiure after the maner of the church) be pronounced an heretick by the Ordinarie of the place. And that from thencefoorth hee be reputed and taken for an heretick and schismatick, and that he incurre (ipso facto) the penalties of heresie and schisme, expressed in the law: And chiefly that his goods be adiudged confiscate by the law, and apprehended and kept by them, to whom it shall appertaine. And that his fautours, receiuers, and defenders being conuicted, in all cases be likewise punished, if they cease not ofr within one moneth, being lawfully warned thereof by their superiours. Constit. 2.

Furthermore, no clergy man, or parochians of any parish or place within our prouince of Cant. shall admit any man to preach within their churches, churchyards or other places whatsoeuer, except first there be manifest knowledge had of his authority, priuiledge, or sending thither, according to the order aforesaid: Otherwise the church, churchyard, or what place soeuer, in which it was so preached, shall ipso facto, receiue the ecclesiasticall interdict, and so shall remaine interdicted, vntill they that so admitted and suffered him to preach, haue reformed themselues, and obtained the place so interdicted, to be released in due forme of law, either from the Ordinarie of the place, or else his Superiour.

Constit. 3. Moreouer, like as a good housholder casteth wheat into the ground (well ordered for that purpose) thereby to get the more increase: euen so we will and command, that the preacher of Gods word, comming in forme aforesaid, preaching either vnto the clergy or laitie, according to his matter proponed; shall be of good behauiour, sowing such seed as shall be conuenient for his auditorie. And chiefly preaching to the clergy, he shall touch the vices commonly vsed amongst them, and to the laitie he shall declare the vices commonly vsed among them, and not otherwise: But if he preach contrary to this order, then shall he be sharply punished by the Ordinary of that place, according to the quality of that offence.

what tyrannie is this to binde the preachers mouth what to say?

Constit. 4. Item, for as much as the part is vile, that agreeth not with the whole: we doe decree and ordaine, that no preacher aforesaid, or any other person whatsoeuer, shall otherwise teach or preach concerning the sacrament of the altar, matrimonie, confession of sinnes, or any other sacrament of the church, or article of the faith, then that already is discussed by the holy mother Church, nor shall bring any thing in doubt that is determined by the Church: nor shall to his knowledge priuily or apertly pronounce blasphemous words concerning the same, nor shall teach, preach, or obserue any sect, or kind of heresie whatsoeuer, contrary to the wholesome doctrine of the church. He that shall wittingly and obstinately attempt the contrary, after the publication of these presents, shall incurre the sentence of excommunication ipso facto: From the which (except in point of death) he shall not be absolued, vntill hee hath reformed himselfe by abiuration of his heresie, at the discretion of the Ordinary, in whose territorie hee so offended, and hath receiued wholesome penitence for his offences. But if the second time he shall so offend, being lawfully conuicted, hee shall be pronounced an heretick, and his goods confiscate, and apprehended, and kept by them to whom it shall appertaine. The penance before mentioned, shall be after this maner: If any man contrary to the determination of the Church, that is, in the decrees, decretals, or our constitutions prouinciall, doe openly or priuily teach or preach any kind of heresie or sect, hee shall in the parish Church of the same place, where he so preached, vpon one Sunday, or other solemne day, or more, at the discretion of the Ordinarie, and as his offence is more or lesse, expressely reuoke that hee so preached, taught or affirmed, euen at the time of the solemnity of the masse, when the people are most assembled, and there shall effectually and without fraud preach, and teach the very truth determined by the Church: and further shall be punished after the qualitie of his offence, as shall be thought expedient to the discretion of the Ordinarie.

A barre for the preachers.

A iolly meane to bring the world into such darkenesse.

Constit. 5.

A caueat for schoolemasters.

Item, forasmuch as a new vessell being long vsed, sauoreth after the head, we decrée and ordaine, that no schoolemasters and teachers whatsoeuer, that instruct children in grammar, or others whomsoeuer, in primitiue sciences, shall in teaching them, intermingle any thing concerning the catholicke faith, the sacrament of the altar, or other sacraments of the church, contrary to the determination of the church. Nor shall suffer their scholars to expound the holy Scriptures, (except the text as hath bèen vsed of ancient time) nor shall permit them to dispute openly or priuily concerning the catholicke faith, or sacraments of the church. Contrariwise, the offender herein shall be grieuously punished by the Ordinaris of the place, as a fauourer of errors and schismes.

Constit. 6.

Bookes of Iohn Wickliffe forbidden.

Item, for that a new way doth more frequently leade astray, then an old way: we will and command that no booke or treatise made by Iohn Wickliffe, or other whomsoeuer, about that time or sithence, or hereafter to be made: be from hencefoorth read in schooles, halles, hospitalles, or other places whatsoeuer, within our Prouince of Canturburie, aforesaid, except the same be first examined by the Vniuersitie of Oxford or Cambridge, or at the least by twelue persons, whom the said vniuersities or one of them shall appoint to be chosen at our discretion, or the laudable discretion of our predecessors: and the same being examined, as aforesaid, to be expressedlie approued and allowed by vs or our successors, and in the name and authoritie of the Vniuersitie, to be deliuered vnto the Stationers to be copied out, and the same to bee sold at a reasonable price, the originall thereof alwaies after, to remaine in some chest of the Vniuersitie. But if any man shall reade any such kinde of booke in schooles or otherwise, as aforesaid; he shall be punished as a sower of schisme, and a fauourer of heresie, as the qualitie of the fault shall require.

Constit. 7.

He confesseth that Saint Hierome erred in his translation. And yet the said Archbishop commendeth Queene Anne, for hauing the Scripture in English.

Item, it is a dangerous thing (as witnesseth blessed Saint Hierome) to translate the text of the holy Scripture out of one tongue into another: for in the translation the same sense is not alwaies easily kept, as the same Saint Hierome confesseth, that although he were inspired, yet oftentimes in this he erred. We therefore decrée and ordaine, that no man hereafter by his owne authoritie, translate any text of the Scripture into English, or any other tongue, by way of a booke, libell or treatise; and that no man read any such booke, libell or treatise, now lately set forth in the time of Iohn Wickliffe, or sithence, or hereafter to be set forth, in part or in whole, priuily, or apertly, vpon paine of greater excommunication, vntill the said translation be allowed by the Ordinarie of the place, or (if the case so require) by the Councell prouinciall. He that shall doe contrarie to this, shall likewise be punished as a fauourer of error and heresie.

Constit. 8.

Termes and propositions in disputing to be obserued.

Item, for that almighty God cannot be expressed with any Philosophicall termes, or otherwise inuented of man: And Saint Augustine saith, that he hath oftentimes reuoked such conclusions as haue bèen most true, because they haue bèen offensiue to the eares of the religious: We doe ordaine and specially forbid, that no manner of person, of what state, degrée, condition so euer he be, doe alleage or propone any conclusions or propositions in the catholicke faith, or repugnant to good manners, (except necessary doctrine pertaining to their faculty of teaching or disputing in their schooles or otherwise) although they defend the same with neuer so curious termes and words. For as saith blessed S. Hugh of the Sacraments, that which oftentimes is well spoken, is not well vnderstood. If any man therefore after the publication of these presents, shall be conuict wittingly to haue proponed such conclusions or propositions, except (being monished) he reforme himselfe in one moneth by vertue of this present constitution: he shall incurre the sentence of greater excommunication ipso facto, and shall be openly pronounced an excommunicate, vntill he hath confessed his fault openly in the same place where he offended, and hath preached the true meaning of the said conclusion or proposition in one Church or more, as shall be thought expedient to the Ordinarie.

Constit. 9.

Authoritie of the Popes decretall not to be doubted vnder paine of heresie.

Adoration of the crosse.

* With all abomination.

Item no manner of person shall presume to dispute vpon the articles determined by the Church, as is contained in the decrées, decretals, our constitutions prouinciall, or in the generall Councels. But onely to seeke out the true meaning thereof, and that expressely, whether it be openly or in secret: nor none shall call in doubt the authoritie of the said decretals or constitutions, or the authoritie of him that made them, nor teach any thing contrary to the determination thereof: And chiefely concerning the adoration of the holy crosse, the worshipping of images, of saints, going on pilgrimage to certaine places, or to the reliques of saints, or against the othes, in cases accustomed to be giuen in both common places, that is to say, spirituall and temporall: But of all it shall be commonly taught and preached, that the crosse and image of the Crucifixe, and other images of saints in the honor of them whom they represent, are to be worshipped with procession, bowing of knées, offering of frankencense, killings, oblations, lighting of candels and pilgrimages, * and with all other kinde of ceremonies and manners that haue bèen vsed in the time of our predecessors: And that giuing of othes in cases expressed in the law, and vsed of all men to whom it belongeth in both common places, ought to be done vpon the booke of the gospell of Christ. Contrarie vnto this whosoeuer doth preach, teach, or obstinatlie affirme (except he recant in manner and forme aforesaid) shall forthwith incurre the penaltie of heresie, and shall be pronounced an hereticke, in all effect of law.

Constit. 10.

No priest to celebrate without their letters of orders.

Item, we doe decrée and ordaine, that no chaplaine be admitted to celebrate in any dioces within our prouince of Canturbury, where he was not borne, or not receiued orders: except he bring with him his letters of orders, and letters commendatorie from his Ordinarie, and also from other Bishops in whose dioces of a long time he hath bèen conuersant, whereby his conuersation and manners may appeare: so that it may be knowne, whether he hath bèen defamed with any new opinions touching the catholicke faith, or whether he be free from the same: or otherwise, as well he that celebrateth as he that suffereth him to celebrate, shall be sharpely punished at the discretion of the Ordinarie.

Constit. 11.

Oxford famous for sincere religion.

Finally, because those things which newly and vnaccustomablie creepeth vp, standeth in néed of new and spèdie helpe: and where more danger is, there ought to bee more warie circumspection and stronger resistance, and not without good cause: the lesse noble ought discréetlie to bee cut away that the more noble may the more perfectly bee nourished. Considering therefore, and in lamentable wise shewing vnto you, how the ancient Vniuersitie of Oxford, which as a fruitfull vine was wont to extend forth her fruitfull branches to the honor of God, the great perfection, and defence of the church: now partly being become wilde, bringeth forth bitter grapes, which being vndiscréetly eaten of ancient fathers that thought themselues skilfull in the law of God, hath set on edge the téeth of their children: and our prouince is infected with diuers and vnfruitfull doctrines, and defiled with a new and damnable name of Lollardie, to the great reproch and offence of the said Vniuersitie being knowne in forraine countries: and to the great irksomnesse of the students there, and to the great dammage and losse of the Church of England, which in times past by her vertue as with a strong wall, was wont to be defended, and now like to runne in ruine not to be recouered. At the supplication therefore of the whole clergie of our prouince of Canturburie: and by the consent and assent of all our brethren and Suffraganes, and other the prelates in this conuocation assembled, and the Procters of them that are absent: lest the riuer being clensed, the fountaine should remaine corrupt, and so the water comming from thence should not be pure, intending most wholesomely to prouide for the honor and vtilitie of our holy mother the Church and the Vniuersitie aforesaid: We doe ordaine and decrée, that euery Warden, Prouost, or Master of euery Colledge, or Principall of euery Hall within the Vniuersitie aforesaid shall once euery moneth at the least, diligently inquire in the said Colledge, Hall, or other place where he hath authoritie, whether any scholler or inhabitant in such Colledge, or Hall, &c. haue holden, alleaged, or defended, or by any meanes proponed, any conclusion, proposition or opinion concerning the catholicke faith, or sounding contrarie to good manners, or contrarie to the determination of the Church, otherwise then appertaineth to necessarie doctrine. And if he shall finde any suspected or defamed herein, he shall according to his office admonish him to desist. And if after such monition giuen, the said partie offend againe in the same or such like, hée shall incurre ipso facto (besides the penalties aforesaid) the sentence of greater excommunication. And neuertheless, if it be a scholar that so offendeth the second time, whatsoeuer he shall afterward doe in the said Vniuersitie, shall not stand in effect. And if he be a doctor, a master, or bacheler, he shall forthwith bée suspended from euery scholars act, and in both cases shall lose the right that he hath in the said Colledge or Hall, whereof he is, ipso facto: and by the Warden, Prouost, Master, Principall, or other to whom it appertaineth, he shall be expelled, and a Catholicke, by lawfull meanes forthwith placed in his place. And if the said Wardens, Prouosts, or Masters of Colledges or Principalles of Halles, shall bée negligent concerning the inquisition and execution of such persons suspected and defamed by the space of ten daies, from the time of the true or supposed knowledge of the publication of these presents: that then they shall incurre the sentence of greater excommunication: and neuertheless shall be depriued ipso facto, of all the right which they pretend to haue in the Colledges, Halles, &c. and the said Colledges and Halles, &c. to be effectually vacant: And after lawfull declaration hereof made by them to whom it shall appertaine, new Wardens, Prouosts, Masters, or Principalles, shall bée placed in their places as hath bèen accustomed in Colledges and Halles, being vacant in the said Vniuersitie. But if the Wardens themselues, Prouosts, Masters or Principals aforesaid, be suspected and defamed of and concerning the said conclusions or propositions, or bée fauourers and defenders of such as doe therein offend: and doe not cease, being thereof warned by vs, or by our authoritie, or by the Ordinarie of the place: that then by law they bée depriued, aswell of all such priuiledge scholasticall within the Vniuersitie aforesaid, as also of their right and authoritie in such Colledge, hall,

Inquisition to bee made through Colledges and Halles of Oxford.

I would the like were vsed now for the banishing of papistrie.

hall, &c. Besides other penalties afore mentioned, and that they incurre the said sentence of greater excommunication.

But if any man in any case of this present constitution or any other above expressed, doe rashly and wilfully presume to violate these our statutes in any part thereof (although there be another penalty expressely there limited) yet shall he be made altogether vnable and vnworthy by the space of three yeres after, without hope of pardon to obtain any ecclesiastical benefice within our prouince of Canturburie: and neuertheless according to all his demerits and the qualitie of his excesse, at the discretion of his superiour, he shall be lawfully punished. Constit. 12.

And further, that the maner of proceeding herein be not thought vncertaine: considering with our selues, that although there be a kind of equality in the crime of heresie and offending the Prince, as is auouched in diuers lawes: yet the fault is much vnlike, and to offend the diuine maiestie, requireth greater punishment, then to offend the princes Maiestie. And where it is sufficient, (for feare of danger that might ensue by delaies) to conuince by iudgement the offender of the Princes Maiesties proceeding against him fully and wholly, with a citation sent by messenger, by letters, or edict not admitting proofe by witnesses, and sentence definitiue to be: Wee doe ordaine, will, and declare, for the easier punishment of the offenders in the premisses, and for the better reformation of the Church diuided and hurt, that all such as are defamed, openly knowen, or vehemently suspected in any of the cases aforesaid, or in any article of the catholicke faith sounding contrary to good maners, by the authority of the Ordinary of the place or other superiour, be cited personally to appeare, either by letters, publicke messenger being sworne: or by edict openly set at that place where the said offender commonly remaineth, or in his parish Church, if he hath any certaine dwelling house. Otherwise, in the cathedrall Church of the place where he was borne, and in the parish Church of the same place where he so preached and taught: And afterwards certificate being giuen, that the citation was formally executed against the party cited being absent and neglecting his appearance, it shall be proceeded against him fully and plainly without sound or shew of iudgement, and without admitting proofe by witnesses and other canonicall probations. And also after lawfull information had, the said Ordinarie (all delaies set apart) shall signifie, declare, and punish the said offender, according to the qualitie of his offence, and in forme aforesaid: and further, shall doe according to iustice, the absence of the offender notwithstanding. Constit. 13. Easier to offend against the princes law then against the bishops.

Giuen at Oxford.

Who would haue thought by these lawes and constitutions so substantially founded, so circumspectly prouided, so diligently executed; but that the name and memorie of this persecuted sort, should vtterly haue beene rooted vp, and neuer could haue stood? And yet such be the workes of the Lord, passing all mens admiration, all this notwithstanding so far was it off, that the number and courage of these good men was banquished, that rather they multiplied daily and increased. For so I find in Registers recorded, that these foresaid persons, whom the king and the catholicke fathers did so greatly detest for heretickes, were in diuers countries of this Realme dispersed and increased; especially at London, in Lincolnshire, in Northfolke, in Herefordshire, in Shrewesburie, in Calice, and diuers other quarters mo, with whom the archbishop of Canturbury Thomas Arundell, the same time had much ado, as by his own registers doth appeare. Albeit some there were, that did shrinke, many did reuolt and renounce, for danger of the law. Among whom was John Purney, which recanted at Pauls crosse, of whom more followeth (the Lord willing) to be said in the yeere 1421. Also John Edward Priest of the dioces of Lincolne, who reuoked in the greene yard at Norwich, Richard Herbert, and Emmot Millieof London, also John Becket, who recanted at London. Item, John Seynons of Lincolneshire, who was caused to reuoke at Canturburie. The articles of whom which commonly they did hold, and which they were constrained to abiure, most specially were these as follow. John Purney. John Edward. John Becket. John Seynons abiured.

Their Articles.

First, that the office of the holy crosse (ordained by the whole Church) celebrated, doth containe idolatrie. The articles.

Item, they said and affirmed, that all they which doe reuerence and worship the signe of the crosse, doe commit idolatry, and are reputed as Idolaters.

Item, they said and affirmed, that the true flesh and bloud of our Lord Jesus Christ, is not in the sacrament of the altar, after the words spoken by the priest truly pronounced.

Item, they said and affirmed, the sacrament of the altar to be sacramentall bread, not hauing life, but only instituted for a memoriall of Christs passion.

Item, they said and affirmed, that the body of Christ which is taken on the altar, is a figure of the bodie of Christ as long as we see the bread and wine.

Item, they said and affirmed that the decree of the prelats and clergy in the prouince of Canturburie, in their last conuocation, with the consent of the king and the nobles in the last Parliament against him that was burnt lately in the citie of London: was not sufficient to change the purpose of the said John, when the substance of materiall bread is euen as before in the sacrament of the altar it was, no change being made in the nature of bread.

Item, that any lay man may preach the Gospell in euery place, and may teach it by his owne authority, without the licence of his Ordinary. Their article commonly was thus, that who so taketh vpon him the office of a Priest though he haue no cure of soules, nor licence of his Ordinarie, is bound to preach the gospell.

Item, that it is sinne, to giue any thing to the preaching Friers, to the Minorites, to the Augustines, to the Carmelites.

Item, that we ought not to offer at the funerals of the dead.

Item, that the confession of sinnes to the priest, is vnnecessarie.

Item, that euery good man (though he be vnlearned) is a priest.

Item, that the infant (though hee die vnbaptised) shall be saued.

Item, that neither the pope, nor the prelate, neither any Ordinarie can compell any man to sweare by any creature of God, or by the bible booke.

Item, that as well the bishop, the simple man, the priest, and lay man, be of like authoritie (as long as they liue well.)

Item, that no man is bound to giue bodily reuerence to any prelate.

William Thorpe.

THus much briefely being signified by the way, touching these which haue beene forced in time of this king, to open aburation. Next commeth to our hands the worthy history of maister William Thorpe, a warrior valiant, vnder the triumphant banner of Christ, with the processe of his examinations, before the foresaid Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canturburie written by the said Thorpe, and storied by his owne pen, at the request of his friends, as by his owne words in the proces hereof may appeare. In whose examination (which seemeth first to beginne, anno 1407.) thou shalt haue good reader, both to learne and to maruell. To learne, in that thou shalt heare truth discoursed and discussed, with the contrary reasons of the aduersary dissolued. To maruell, for that thou shalt behold heere in this man, the maruellous force and strength of the Lords might, spirit and grace, working and fighting in his souldiers, and also speaking in their mouthes, according to the word of his promise, Luke xxi. To the text of the story we haue neither added nor diminished: but as we haue receiued it, copied out, and corrected by maister William Tindall (who had his owne handwriting) so wee haue heere sent it, and set it out abroad. Although for the more credite of the matter, I rather wished it in his owne naturall speech, wherein it was first written. Notwithstanding, to put away all doubt and scruple heerein, this I thought before to premonise and testifie to the reader, touching the certainty hereof, that they be yet aliue which haue seene the selfe same copie in his owne old English, resembling the true antiquity both of the speech, and of the time: The name of whom, as for record of the same to auouch, is M. Whithead; who as he hath seene the true ancient copie in the hands of George Constantine, so hath hee giuen credible relation of the same, both to the printer, and to me. Furthermore, the said maister Tindall (albeit hee did somewhat alter and amend the English thereof, and frame it after our maner) yet not fully in all words: but that something doth remaine, sauouring of the old speech of that time. What the causes were why this good man and seruant of Christ, M. Thorp did write it, and pen it out himselfe, it is sufficiently declared in his own preface, set before his booke, which heere is prefixed in maner as followeth. The examination of the constant seruant of God, William Thorpe. This history first set forth and corrected by M. Will. Tindall.

The preface of William Thorpe.

THe Lord God that knoweth all things, woteth well that I am right sorrowful for to write to make knowen this sentence beneath written: whereby of mine euen christian set in high state and dignity, so great blindnesse and malice may be knowen: that they which doe presume of themselues to destroy vices, and to plant in men vertues, neither dread to offend God nor lust to please him as their workes doe shew. For certes the bidding of God and his law, which in the praising of his most holy name hee commandeth to be knowen and kept of all men and women, yong and old, after the cunning and power that hee hath giuen to them: the prelates of this land and their ministers, with the couent of priests chiefely consenting to them, enforce them most busily to withstand and destroy the holy ordinance of God. And therethrough God is greatly wroth and moued to take hard vengeance, not only vpon them that doe the euill, but also on them that consent to these Antichrists limmes: which knowe or might knowe, their malice and falshood, and dresse them not to withstand their malice and their great pride. Nevertheless, foure things moueth me to write this sentence beneath. The preface. Gods lawes must be knowen and followed. Foure causes of setting forth his examination.

The first thing that moueth me heereto is this, that where as it was knowen to certaine friends, that I came from the prison of Shrewesburie, and as it befell indeede that I should to the prison of Canturb. then diuers friends in diuers places, spake to me full heartily and full tenderly: and commanded me then, if it so were that I should be examined before the Archbishop of Canturburie, that if I might in any wise, I should write mine apposing, and mine answering. And I promised to my speciall friends, that if I might I would gladly doe their bidding as I might.

The 2. cause. The second thing that moueth me to write this sentence is this: diuers friends which haue heard that I haue been examined before the Archbishop haue come to me in prison, and counsailed me busily, and coueted greatly that I should doe the same thing. And other brethren haue sent to me, and required on Gods behalfe, that I should write out and make knowne, both mine apposing and mine answering, for the profit that (as they say) vpon my knowledging may come thereof. But this they bad me, that I should be busie in all my wits, to goe as neere the sentence and the words as I could, both that were spoken to me, and that I spake: Vpauenture this writing may come another time, before the Archbishop and his counsaile. And of this counselling I was right glad: for in my conscience I was moued to doe this thing, and to aske hitherto the speciall helpe of God. And so then I considering the great desire of diuers friends of sundrie places, according all in one: I occupied all my minde and my wits so busilie, that through Gods grace I perceiued by their meaning and their charitable desire, some profite might come therethrough. For southfastnesse and trueth hath these conditions: where euer it is impugned, it hath a sweet smell, and thereof commeth a sweet sauour. And the more violently the enemies dresse themselues to oppresse and to withstand the trueth, the greater and the sweeter smell commeth thereof. And therefore, this heauenly smell of Gods word, will not as a smoke passe away with the winde: but it will descend and rest in some cleane soule, that thirsteth thereafter. And thus some deale by this writing may be perceiued through Gods grace, how that the enemies of the trueth (standing boldly in their malice) inforce them to withstand the freedome of Christs Gospell, for which freedome Christ became man and shed his heart blood. And therefore it is great pitie and sorrow, that many men and women doe their owne weyward will, nor bidde them not to know nor to doe the pleasant will of God.

Truth leaueth alwaies a sweet smell behinde it.

Godly counsell giuen, if it may be followed.

The men and women that heare the trueth and southfastnesse, and heare or knowe of this (perceiuing what is now in the Church) ought here through, to be the more moued in all their wits, to able them to grace, and to set lesser price by themselues, that they without tarrying, forsake wilfullie and bodily all the wretchednesse of this life, since they know not how soone, nor when, nor where, nor by whom God will teach them and assay their patience. For no doubt, who that euer will liue pitiously, that is, charitably in Christ Iesu, shall suffer now here in this life persecution, in one wise or another. That is, if we shall be saued, it behoueth vs to imagine full busilie, the vilitie and foulenesse of sinne, and how the Lord God is displeased therefore: and so of this vilitie, of hideousnesse of sinne, it behoueth vs to busie vs in all our wits, for to abhorre and hold in our minde a great shame of sinne euer, and so then we owe to sorrow heartily therefore, and euer fleeing all occasion thereof. And then behoueth vs to take vpon vs sharpe penance, continuing therein, for to obtaine of the Lord forgiuenesse of our foredone sinnes, and grace to abstaine vs hereafter from sinne. And but if we inforce vs to doe this wilfullie, and in conuenient time, the Lord (if he will not vtterly destroy and cast vs away) will in diuers manners moue tyrants against vs: for to constraine vs violently to doe penance, which we would not doe wilfully. And trust that this doing is a speciall grace of the Lord, and a great token of life and mercy. And no doubt, who euer will not apply himselfe (as is said before) to punish himselfe wilfully, neither will suffer patiently, meekely, and gladly the rod of the Lord, howsoeuer that he will punish him: their wayward willes and their impatiencie, are vnto them earnest of euerlasting damnation. But because there are but few in number that doe able them thus faithfully to grace, for to liue here so simplie and purely, and without gall of malice and of grudging: herefore the louers of this world hate and pursue them that they know patient, meeke, chaste, and wilfullie poore, hating and fleeing all worldly vanities and fleshly lusts. For surely, their vertuous conditions are euen contrary to the manners of this world.

Persecution followeth the true church.

The cause why persecution is suffered to come.

The 3. cause. The third thing that moueth me to write this sentence is this, I thought I shall busie me in my selfe to doe faithfullie, that all men and women (occupying all their businesse in knowing and in keeping of Gods commandements) able them so to grace, that they might vnderstand truely the trueth, and haue and vse vertue and prudence, and so deserue to be lightened from aboue with heauenly wisedome: so that all their words and their works may be hereby made pleasant sacrifices vnto the Lord God: and not onely for helpe of their owne soules, but also for edification of holy Church. For I doubt not, but all they that will applie them to haue this forsaid businesse shall profite full meikill both to friends and foes. For some enemies of the trueth, through the grace of God, shall through charitable folkes be made astonied in their conscience, and peraduenture conuerted from vices to vertues: and also, they that labour to know and to keepe faithfully the biddings of God, and to suffer patiently all aduersities, shall hereby comfort many friends.

Edification of other, necessary to be considered.

The 4. cause. And the fourth thing that moueth me to write this sentence is this: I know by my suddaine and vnwarned apposing and answering, that all they that will of good heart without fayning, able themselues wilfully and gladly after their cunning and their power, to follow Christ patiently, trauelling busily, priuily and apertly in worke and in word, to withdraw whomsoeuer that they may from vices, planting in them (if they may) vertues, comforting them and furthering them that stand in grace: so that therewith they be not borne vp in vaine glorie, through presumption of their wisedome, nor inflamed with any worldly prosperitie, but euer meeke and patient: purposing to continue stedfastly in the will of God, suffering wilfully and gladly without any grutthing whatsoeuer rod the Lord will chastise them with: that then this good Lord will not forget to comfort all such men and women in all their tribulations, and at euery point of temptation that any enemie purposed for to doe against them. To such faithfull louers specially, and patient followers of Christ, the Lord sendeth by his wisedome from aboue, them which the aduersaries of the truth, may not know nor vnderstand. But through their olde and new vnthankefull sinnes, those tyrants and enemies of southfastnesse, shall be so blinded and obstinate in euill, that they shall weene themselues to doe pleasant sacrifices vnto the Lord God in their malitious and wrongfull pursuing and destroying of innocent mens and womens bodies: which men and women, for their vertuous liuing, and for their true knowledging of the truth, and their patient, wilfull and glad suffering of persecution for righteousnesse, deserue thorow the grace of God, to be heires of the endlesse blisse of heauen. And for the feruent desire and great loue that these men haue, as to stand in southfastnesse and witnes of it: though they be suddainely and vnwarnedly brought forth to be opposed of their aduersaries: the holy Ghost yet that moueth and ruleth them through his charitie, will in that houre of their answering speake in them and shew his wisedome, that all their enemies shall not againsay, nor againstand, lawfully.

The assistance of God neuer faileth them that are persecuted.

And therefore, all they that are stedfast in the faith of God, yea, which through diligent keeping of his commandements and for their patient suffering of whatsoeuer aduersitie that commeth to them, hope surely in his mercy, purposing to stand continually in perfect charitie: For those men and women, dred not so the aduersities of this life, that they will feare (after their cunning and their power) to knowledge prudently the truth of Gods word, when, where, and to whom they thinke their knowledging may profit. Yea and though therefore persecution come to them in one wise or another, certes they patiently take it, knowing their conuersation to be in heauen. It is an high reward and a speciall grace of God, for to haue and inioy the euerlasting inheritance of heauen, for the suffering of one persecution in so short time as is the terme of this life. For loe, this heauenly heritage and endlesse reward, is the Lord God himselfe, which is the best thing that may be. This sentence witnesseth the Lord God himselfe, whereas he said to Abraham, I am thy méed: And as the Lord said, he was and is the méed of Abraham: so he is of all other his saints. This most blessed and best méed, he grant to vs all for his holy name, that made vs of naught, and sent his only most deare worthy sonne, our Lord Iesu Christ for to redéeme vs with his most precious heart blood. Amen.

The examination of William Thorpe, penned with his owne hand.

Examination of William Thorpe before Thomas Arundell archbishop.

KNowne be it to all men, that reade or heare this writing, that on the sunday next after the feast of S. Peter, that we call Lammasse, in the yéere of our Lord 1407. I William Thorpe being in prison in the castle of Saltwood, was brought before Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canturburie, and Chancellor then of England. And when that I came to him, he stood in a great chamber and much people about him: and when that hée sawe me, hée went fast into a closet, bidding all secular men that followed him to goe forth from him some, so that no man was left then in that closet but the Archbishop himselfe and a physitian that was called Malueren, parson of S. Dunstanes in London, and other two persons vnknowne to me, which were ministers of the law. And I standing before them, by and by the Archbishop said to me. William, I know well that thou hast this twentie winters and more, trauelled about busilie in the North country and in other diuers countries of England, sowing about false doctrine, hauing great businesse if thou might with thine vntrue teaching and shrewde will, for to infect and poison all this land. But through the grace of God thou art now withstanded and brought into my ward, so that I shall now sequester thée from thine euill purpose, and let thée to enuenime the shéepe of my prouince. Neuertheless S. Paul saith: If it may be, as much as in vs is, we ought to haue peace with all men. Therefore William, if thou wilt now meekly and of good heart, without any feining, kneele downe and lay thy hand vpon a booke and kisse it, promising faithfully as I shall here charge thée, that thou wilt submit thée to my correction, and stand to mine ordinance, and fulfill it duely by all

The grace of God and of my lord of Cant. be two things.

Done ordinace, and why not Gods ordinance, if it please your grace?

al thy cunning and power, thou shalt yet find me gratious vnto thee. Then said I to the archbishop: Sir, since yee deem me an heretike, and out of beleeue, will yee giue me here audience to tell my beleeue? And he said: yea, tell on. And I said: I beleeue that there is not but one God almightie, and in this Godhead, and of this Godhead, are three persons, that is; the father, the sonne, and the holyghast holy ghost. And I beleeue, that all these three persons are euen in power and in cunning, and in might, full of grace and of all goodnesse. For what soeuer that the father doth, or can or will, that thing also the sonne doth and can and will: and in all their power cunning and will, the holy Ghost is equall to the father, and to the sonne.

Ouer this I beleeue, that through counsell of this most blessed Trinitie, in most conuenient time before ordained for the saluation of mankind, the second person of this Trinitie was ordained to take the forme of man, that is, the kind of man. And I beleeue, that this second person our Lord Jesu Christ, was conceiued through the holy Ghost, in the wombe of the most blessed virgin Marie, without mans seed. And I beleeue that after nine moneths Christ was borne of this most blessed virgine, without any paine or breaking of the cloister of her wombe, and without filth of her virginitie.

And I beleeue, that Christ our Sauiour was circumcised in the eight day after his birth, in fulfilling of the law, and his name was called Jesus, which was so called of the angell, before that hee was conceiued in the wombe of Marie his mother.

And I beleeue that Christ, as he was about xxx. yeere old, was baptised in the floud of Jordane of John Baptist: and in the likenesse of a Doue the holy Ghost descended there vpon him, and a voice was heard from heauen, saying: Thou art my welbeloued sonne, in thee I am full pleased.

And I beleeue, that Christ was mooued then by the holy Ghost, for to go into the desert, and there he fasted 40. daies and 40. nights without bodily meat and drinke. And I beleeue that by and by after his fasting, when the manhood of Christ hungred, the fiend came to him, and tempted him in gluttonie, in vainegloze, and in couetise: but in all those temptations, Christ concluded the fiend, and withstood him. And then without tarrying, Jesu began to preach, and to say vnto the people: Do ye penance, for the realme of heauen is now at hand.

I beleeue that Christ in all his time here liued most holilie, and taught the will of his father most truely: and I beleeue that he suffered therefore most wrongfully, greatest reproofes and despisings.

And after this, when Christ would make an end here of this temporall life, I beleeue, that in the day next before that hee would suffer passion in the morne: in forme of bread and of wine, hee ordained the Sacrament of his flesh and his bloud, that is, his owne precious bodie, and gaue it to his Apostles for to eate: commanding them, and by them all their after commers, that they should doe it in this forme that hee shewed to them, vse themselues, and teach and common forth to other men and women this most worshipfull and holiest Sacrament, in mindfulnesse of his holiest liuing, and of his most true preaching, and of his wilfull and patient suffering of the most painfull passion.

That is, vnder the creatures of bread and wine.

And I beleeue that this Christ our Sauiour, after that hee had ordained this most worthie Sacrament of his owne precious bodie: hee went forth wilfullie against his enemies, and he suffered them most patiently to lay their hands most violently vpon him, and to bind him, and to lead him forth as a theefe, and to scorne him and buffet him, and all to blow or file him with their spittings. Ouer this, I beleeue, that Christ suffered most meekly and patiently his enemies, for to dying out with sharpe scourges the bloud that was betweene his skinne and his flesh: yea without grudging Christ suffered the cruell Jewes to crowne him with most sharpe thornes, and to strike him with a reed. And after, Christ suffered wicked Jewes to draw him out vpon the crosse, and for to nalle him thereupon hand and foot. And so through his pitifull nailing, Christ shed out wilfullie for mans life, the bloud that was in his vaines. And then Christ gaue wilfully his spirit into the hands or power of his father, and so, as he would, and when hee would, Christ died wilfullie for mans sake vpon the crosse. And notwithstanding that Christ was wilfully, painefully, and most shamefully put to death, as to the world: there was left bloud and water in his heart, as before ordained, that hee would shed out this bloud and this water for mans saluation. And therefore he suffered the Jewes to make a blind knight to thrust him into the heart with a speare, and this the blotid and water that was in his heart, Christ would shed out for mans loue: and after this, I beleeue that Christ was taken down from the crosse and buried. And I beleeue that on the third day by the power of his Godhead, Christ rose againe from death to life. And the fortie day thereafter, I beleeue that Christ ascended vp into heauen, and that he there sitteth on the right hand of the father almightie. And the fiftie day after this vpgoing, he sent to his Apostles the holy Ghost, that he had promised them before: and I beleeue that Christ shall come and iudge all mankind, some to euerlasting peace, and some to euerlasting paines.

And as I beleeue in the father, and in the son, that they are one God almightie, so I beleeue in the holy Ghost that hee is also with them the same God almightie.

What is the holy Church.

And I beleeue an holy Church, that is, all they that haue been, and that now are, and alwaies to the end of the world shall be, a people the which shall endeuoure them to know and to keepe the commandements of God, dreading ouer all thing to offend God, and louing and seeking most to please him: and I beleeue, that all they that haue had, and yet haue, and al they that yet shall haue the foresaid vertues, surely standing in the beleefe of God, hoping stedfastly in his mercifull doings, continuing to their end in perfect charitie, wilfully, patientlie and gladly suffering persecutions, by the example of Christ chiefly and his Apostles, all these haue their names written in the booke of life.

The true notes of the true Church.

Therefore I beleeue, that the gathering together of this people, liuing now here in this life, is the holy Church of God, fighting here on earth against the fiend, the prosperitie of the world, and their fleshly lusts. Wherefore, seeing that all the gathering together of this Church before said, and euery part thereof, neither coueteth, nor willeth, nor loueth, nor seeketh any thing but to eschew the offence of God, and to doe his pleasing will: meekly, gladly, and wilfully, with all mine heart, I submit my selfe vnto this holy Church of Christ, to bee euer burome and obedient to the ordinance of it, and of euery member thereof, after my knowledge and power by the helpe of God. Therefore I knowledge now and euermore shall, if God will, that with all my heart, and with all my might, I will submit me only to the rule and gouernance of them, whom after my knowledge, I may perceiue by the hauing and vsing of the beforesaid vertues, to be members of the holy Church. Wherefore these articles of beleefe and all other (both of the old law, and of the new, which after the commandement of God any man ought to beleeue) I beleeue verilie in my soule, as a vnfull deadly wretch of my cunning and power, ought to beleeue: praying the Lord God for his holy name, for to increase my beleefe, and to helpe my vnbeleefe.

What heresie in this beleefe, I pray you my Lord?

And for because to the praising of Gods name, I desire aboue all things to bee a faithfull member of holy church, I make this protestation before you all foure that are now here present, coueting that all men and women that now be absent knew the same: that is, what thing soeuer before this time I haue said or done, or what thing here I shall do or say, at any time hereafter. I beleeue, that all the old law and new law giuen and ordeined by counsell of the 3. persons of the Trinitie, were giuen and written to the saluation of mankind. And I beleeue, that these lawes are sufficient for mans saluation. And I beleeue euery article of these lawes, to the intent, that these articles ordained and commanded of these three persons of the most blessed Trinitie are to be beleeued.

The old Testament and new.

And therefore to the rule and the ordinance of these, Gods lawes, meekely, gladly and wilfullie, I submit me with all mine heart: that whosoeuer can or will by authoritie of Gods law, or by open reason, tell me that I haue erred or now erre, or any time hereafter shall erre in any article of beleefe (from which inconuenience God keep me for his goodnesse) I submit me to be reconciled, and to be buxum and obedient vnto those lawes of God, and to euery article of them. For by authoritie specially of these lawes, I will through the grace of God, bee vnited charitable vnto these lawes. Yea sir, and ouer this, I beleeue and admit all the sentences, authorities and reasons of the Saints and Doctors, according vnto holy scripture, and declaring it truely.

Doctors so to be followed, as they followed the word.

I submit me willfullie and meekely to bee euer obedient after my cunning and power, to all these saints and doctors, as they are obedient in work and in word to God and to his law, and further not (to my knowledge) not for any earthly power, dignitie or state, through the helpe of God. But sir I pray you tell me, if after your bidding, I shall lay my hand vpon the booke, to what entent: to sweare thereby? And the archbishop said to me, yea, wherefore else? And I said to him: Sir, a booke is nothing else but a thing coupled together of diuers creatures, and to sweare by any creature both Gods law and mans law is against it.

To sweare by a booke, whether it be lawfull.

But sir, this thing I say here to you before these your clerks, with my foresaid protestation, that how, where, when, and to whom, men are bound to sweare or to obey in any wise after Gods law, and saints, and true doctors, according with Gods law: I will through Gods grace bee euer readie thereto, with all my cunning and power. But I pray you sir for the charitie of God, that yee will before that I sweare (as I haue here rehearsed to you) tell me how or whereto, that I shall submit me: and shew me wherefore that yee will correct mee, and what is the ordinance that yee will thus oblige me to fulfill?

How, where and when to sweare.

And the archbishop said vnto me: I will shortly that now thou sweare here to me, that thou shalt forsake al the opinions which the sect of Lollards hold, and is slandered with: so that after this time, neither priuilie nor apertly, thou hold any opinion which I shall (after thou hast sworne) rehearse to thee here. For thou shalt fauour no man nor woman, young nor old, that holdeth any these foresaid opinions: but after thy knowledge and power, thou shalt forbeare thee to withstand all such such disroublers of holy Church in euery dioceſſe, that thou commeſt in: and them that will not leaue their falſe and damnable opinions, thou ſhalt put them vp, publiſhing them and their names, and make them knowne to the biſhop of the dioces that they are in, or to the biſhops miniſters. And ouer this I will that thou preach no more vnto the time that I know by god witneſſe and true, that thy conuerſation be ſuch, that thy heart and thy mouth accord truely in one, contrarying all the leaud learning that thou haſt taught here before.

And I hearing theſe words, thought in my heart, that this was an vnlefull aſking: and deemed my ſelfe curſed of God, if I conſented hereto, and I thought how Sulan ſaid: anguiſh is to mee on euery ſide. And in that I ſtood ſtill and ſpake not, the archbiſhop ſaid to mee: anſwere one wiſe or other: and I ſaid, Sir, if I conſented to you thus as yee haue here before rehearſed to mee, I ſhould become an appealer, or euery biſhops eſpie, ſomoner of all England. For and I ſhould thus put vp, and publiſh the names of men and women, I ſhould herein deceiue full many perſons: Yea ſir, as it is likely by the dome of my conſcience, I ſhould herein bee cauſe of the death both of men and women, yea both bodilie and ghoſtly. For many men and women that ſtand now in the way of ſaluation: if I ſhould for the learning and reading of their beleeue, publiſh them therefore vp to the biſhops or to their vnpiteous miniſters, I know ſome deale by experience that they ſhould bee ſo diſtroubled and diſeaſed with perſecution or otherwiſe, that many of them (I thinke) would rather chuſe to forſake the way of truth then to be trauelled, ſcorned, ſlandered, or puniſhed, as biſhops and their miniſters now vſe for to conſtraine men and women to conſent to them.

Behold the popiſh proceedings whereto they tend.

No marueil why: for Chriſt and antichriſt how can they agree?

But I find in no place in holy Scripture, that this office that yee would now inſeaffe me with, accordeth to any prieſt of Chriſts ſect, nor to any other Chriſtian man: and therfore ſo doe this, were to me a full notous bond to be bounden with and ouer grieuous charge. For I ſuppoſe, that if I thus did, many men and women would, yea ſir, might iuſtly to my confuſion ſay to me, that I were a trayter to God and to them: ſince (as I thinke in mine heart) many men and women truſt ſo mikle in this caſe, that I would not for ſauing of my life, doe thus to them. For if I thus ſhould doe, full many men and women would (as they might full truly) ſay that I had falſly and cowardly forſaken the truth, and ſlandered ſhamefullie the word of God. For if I conſented to you to doe heere, after your will, for boncheſe or miſchiefe that may befall vnto me in this life, I deme in my conſcience, that I were worthie herefore to bee curſed of God and alſo of all his Saints: fro which inconuenience, keep me and all chriſtian people, almightie God now and euer for his holy name. And then the archbiſhop ſaid vnto mee: Oh, thine heart is full hard indurate, as was the heart of Pharao, and the diuell hath ouercomen thee, and peruerted thee, and hee hath ſo blinded thee in all thy wit, that thou haſt no grace to know the truth, nor the meaſure of mercie that I haue profered to thee. Therfore, as I perceiue now by thy foolish anſwere, thou haſt no will to leaue thine old errors.

It is pretie when Pharao iudgeth Moſes hard hearted. Where learned you my lord to call your brother Racha?

But I ſay to thee leaud loſell, other quicklie conſent thou to mine ordinance and ſubmit thee to ſtand to my decrees: or by Saint Thomas thou ſhalt be degraded, and follow thy fellow into Smithfield. And at this ſaying, I ſtood ſtill and ſpake not, but I thought in mine hart that God did to me great grace, if he would of his great mercie bring me to ſuch an end. And in mine heart I was nothing afraid with this manaſing of the archbiſhop. And I conſidered there two things in him. One, that he was not yet ſorowfull for that hee had made William Sautre wrongfully to bee burnt: and as I conſidered, that the archbiſhop thirſted yet after more ſhedding out of innocent bloud. And faſt therefore I was moued in all my wits, for to hold the archbiſhop neither for prelate nor for prieſt of God. And for that mine inward man was thus altogether departed from the archbiſhop, me thought I ſhould not haue any dread of him. But I was right heaute and ſorowfull, for that there was no audience of ſecular men by: but in my heart I prayed the Lord God, for to comfort me and ſtrength me againſt them that there were againſt the ſothfaſtneſſe. And I purpoſed to ſpeake no more to the archbiſhop and his clerks then me néed behoued: and all thus I praide God for his goodneſſe to giue mee then and alway grace to ſpeake, with a méeke and an eaſie ſpirit: and whatſoeuer thing that I ſhould ſpeake, that I might thereto haue true authorities of Scriptures or open reaſon. And for that I ſtood thus ſtill and nothing ſpake, one of the archbiſhops clerkes ſaid vnto me; What thing muſeſt thou? Do thou as my lord hath now commanded to thee here.

He meaneth Gods martyr Wil. Sautrey.

And yet I ſtood ſtill and anſwered him not: and then ſome after, the archbiſhop ſaid to me: Art thou not yet bethought, whether thou wilt do as I haue ſaid to thee? And I ſaid then to him: Sir, my father and my mother, on whoſe ſoules God haue mercie (if it bee his will) ſpent mikle monie in diuers places about my learning, for the intent to haue made mee a prieſt to God. But when I came to yéeres of diſcretion, I had no will to be prieſt, and therefore my friends were right heaule to mee, and then mee thought their grudging againſt me was ſo painefull to mee, that I purpoſed therefore to haue left their companie. And when they perceiued this in me, they ſpake ſometime full faire and pleaſant words to mee: But for that they might not make me to conſent of good heart to bee a prieſt, they ſpake to me full oftentimes very grieuous words, and manaſed mee in diuers manners, ſhewing to mee full heaute chéere. And thus one while in faire manner, another while in grieuous, they were long time (as me thought) full buſie about me, or I conſented to them to be a prieſt.

The order and manner of his bringing vp.

But at the laſt, when in this matter they would no longer ſuffer mine excuſations, but either I ſhould conſent to them, or I ſhould euer beare their indignation, yea, their curſe (as they ſaid:) then I ſeeing this, prayed them that they would giue me licence for to goe to them that were named wiſe prieſts, and of vertuous conuerſation to haue their counſell, and to know of them the office and the charge of prieſthood. And hereto, my father and my mother conſented full gladly, and gaue me their bleſſing and good leaue to goe, and alſo money to ſpend in this iourney. And ſo that I went to thoſe prieſts whom I heard to be of beſt name, and of moſt holy liuing, and beſt learned, and moſt wiſe of heauenly wiſedome: and ſo I communed with them vnto the time, that I perceiued by their vertuous & continuall occupations, that their honeſt and charitable works paſſed their fame which I had heard before of them.

Wherefore ſir, by the example of the doctrine of them: and ſpeciallie for the godly and innocent workes which I perceiued then of them, and in them: after my cunning and power, I haue exerciſed me then and in this time, to know perfectlie Gods law, hauing a will and deſire to liue thereafter, which willeth that all men and women ſhould exerciſe themſelues faithfully thereabout. If then ſir, either for pleaſure of them that are neither ſo wiſe, nor of ſo vertuous conuerſation to my knowledge, nor by common fame to any other mens knowledge in this land, as theſe men were of whom I tooke my counſell and information, I ſhould now forſake thus ſuddenlie and ſhortlie, and vnwarned, all the learning that I haue exerciſed my ſelfe in theſe thirtie Winters and more, my conſcience ſhould euer be herewith out of meaſure vnquieted: and as ſir I know wel, that many men and women ſhould be therthrough greatly troubled and ſlandered. And as I ſaid ſir, to you before for mine vntruth and falſe cowardneſſe, many a one ſhould bee put into full great repreefe; yea ſir, I dread that many one (as they might then iuſtly) would curſe me full bitterlie: and ſir I feare not, but the curſe of God, which I ſhould deſerue herein, would bring me to a full euill end, if I continued thus. And if through remorſe of conſcience I repented me any time, returning into the way, which you do your diligence to conſtraine mee now to forſake: yea ſir, all the biſhops of this land, with full many other prieſts, would defame me, and purſue me as a relapſe: and they that now haue (though I be vnworthy) ſome cõfidence in me, hereafter would neuer truſt to me, though I could teach and liue neuer ſo vertuouſlie, more then I can or may. For if after your counſell I left vtterly all my learning, I ſhould hereby firſt wound and defile mine owne ſoule, and alſo I ſhould herethrough, giue occaſion to many men and women of full ſore hurting: yea ſir as it is likely to mee, if I conſented to your will, I ſhould herein by mine euill example in it, as farre as in mee were, ſlea many ſoules ghoſtly, that I ſhould neuer deſerue for to haue grace of God, to the edifying of his Church, neither of my ſelfe, nor of none other mans life, and vndone both before God and man.

But ſir, by example chiefly of ſome, whoſe names I will not now rehearſe, of H. of I.P. and B. and alſo by the preſent doing of Philip Rampington, that now is become B. of Lincolne: I am now learned (as many moe hereafter through Gods grace ſhall be learned) to hate and to flée all ſuch ſlander that theſe foreſaid men chiefly haue defiled, principallie themſelues with. And in it that in them is, they haue enuenomed al the church of God, for the ſlanderous reuoking at the croſſe of Pauls, of H.P. and of B. and how now Philip Rampington purſueth Chriſts people. And the faining that theſe men diſſemble by worldly prudence, keeping them cowardlie in their preaching and communing within the bonds & termes (which without blame may bee ſpoken and ſhewed out to the moſt worldly liuers) will not bee vnpuniſhed of God. For to the point of truth that theſe men ſhewed out ſometime, they will not now ſtretch forth their liues. But by example, each one of them as their words and their works ſhew, buſie them through their faining, for to ſlander, and to purſue Chriſt in his members, rather then they will be purſued.

Philip Repington made biſhop, and a perſecutor.

And the archbiſhop ſaid to me: Theſe men the which thou ſpeakeſt of now, were fooles and herettkes, when they were counted wiſe men of thée and other ſuch loſels. But now they are wiſe men, though thou and ſuch other deeme them vnwiſe. Neuertheles I will neuer none that right ſaid, that any while were enuenomed with your contagiouſneſſe, that is, contaminated and ſpotted doctrine.

Happy be they that continue to the end.

And I ſaid to the archbiſhop: Sir, I thinke well that theſe men and ſuch other are now wiſe as to this world: But as their words ſounded ſometime, and their works ſhewed out-outwardly, it was like to moue mee that they had earnest of the wisedome of God, and that they should haue deserued mikle grace of God, to haue saued their owne soules and many other mens, if they had continued faithfully in wilfull pouertie, and in other simple vertuous liuing: and speciallie if they had with these forsaid vertues continued in their busie fruitfull sowing of Gods word: as to many mens knowledge they occupied them a season in all their wits, full busily to know the pleasant wil of God, trauelling al their members ful busilie for to do thereafter, purely and chiefly to the praising of the most holy name of God, and for grace of edification and saluation of Christian people. But woe worth false couetise, and euill counsell and tyrannie, by which they and many men and women are led blindly into an euill end.

Woe worth false couetise.

Then the archbishop said vnto mee: Thou, and such other Lolels of thy sect, would haue your beards full nere for to haue a benefice. For by Jesu, I know none more couetous shrewes then ye are, when that ye haue a benefice. For loe, I gaue to John Purue a benefice but a mile out of this castle, and I heard more complaints about his couetoulnes for tithes and other mildoings, then I did of all men that were aduanced within my diocesse.

It is pitie these prelats cannot sweare. Couetoulnesse ioyned with polyphnes.

And I said to the archbishop: Sir, Purue is neither with you now for the benefice that you gaue him, nor he holdeth faithfully with the learning that hee taught and writ before time: and thus hee sheweth himselfe neither to be hot nor cold, and therefore he and his followes, may sore dread, that if they turne not hastily to the way that they haue forsaken, peraduenture they be put out of the number of Christs chosen people.

And the archbishop said: Though Purue bee now a false harlot, I quit mee now to him: But come hee more for such cause before me (or we part) I shall know with whom hee holdeth. But I say to thee: which are these holy men and wise, of whom thou hast taken thine information?

A worthie commendation of master Iohn Wickliffe.

And I said: Sir, master John Wickliffe was holden of full many men, the greatest clerke that they knew then liuing, and therewith hee was named a passing rulie man and an innocent in his liuing: and therefore, great men commuued oft with him, and they loued so his learning, that they writ it, and busilie inforced them to rule themselues thereafter. Therefore sir, this forsaid learning of M. John Wickliffe, is yet holden of full many men and women, the most agreeable learning vnto the liuing and teaching of Christ and of his Apostles, and most openly shewing and declaring how the church of Christ hath been and yet should bee ruled and gouerned. Therefore, so many men and women couet this learning, and purpole, through Gods grace, to conforme their liuing like to this learning of Wickliffe. M. John Ashton taught and writ accordingly, and full busily, where and when, and to whom that he might, and he vsed it himselfe right perfectly vnto his liues end. And also Philip of Rampington, while he was a canon of Leicester. Nicolas Herford, Daute Gotraie of Pakring, monke of Ipland, and a master of Diuinitie, and John Purnay, and many other which were holden right wise men and prudent, taught and writ busilie this forsaid learning, and conformed them thereto. And with all these men I was right homely and communed with them long time and oft: and so before all other men I chose willinglie to be informed of them and by them, and specially of Wickliffe himselfe, as of the most vertuous and godly wise man that I heard of or knew. And therefore of him specialliè, and of these men I take the learning that I haue taught: and purpose to liue thereafter (if God will) to my liues end. For though some of those men be contrarie to the learning that they taught before, I wot well that their learning was true which they taught: and therfore with the helpe of God I purpose to hold and to vse the learning which I heard of them, while they sate on Moses chaire, and specially while that they sat on the chaire of Christ. But after the works that they now do, I wil not do with Gods helpe. For they faine, and hide, and contrary the truth, which before they taught out plainely and truly. For as I know well, when some of those men haue been blamed for their slanderous doing: they grant not that they haue taught amisse or erred before time, but that they were constrained by paine to leaue to tell out the soth, and thus they chuse now rather to blaspheme God, then to suffer a while here persecution bodily, for sothfastnesse that Christ shed out his heart bloud for.

M. John Ashton, Phil. Rampington, Nic Herford, Daute Gotray, Jon Purnay.

The testimonie for Wickliffe, but of the mouth of his owne aduersarie.

And the archbishop said: That learning that thou callest truth and sothfastnesse, is open slander to holy Church, as it is proued of holy Church. For albeit, that Wickliffe your author was a great clerke, and though that many men held him a perfect liuer: yet his doctrine is not approued of holy Church, but many sentences of his learning are damned as they well worthie are. But as touching Philip of Rampington, that was first Canon, and after abbat of Leicester, which is now bishop of Lincolne: I tell thee, that the day is commen, for which he fasted the euen. For neither hee holdeth now, nor will hold, the learning that hee taught, when hee was a Canon of Leicester. For no bishop of this land pursueth now more sharpely them that hold thy way, then he doth.

Many such bigils haue our popish kalenders. Repington became a persecuter, after he was made bishop.

And I said: Sir, full many men and women wondereth vpon him, and speaketh him mikle shame, and holdeth him for a curled enemie of the truth.

And the archbishop said to me: Wherfore tarriest thou me thus here with such fables, wilt thou shortly (as I haue said to thee) submit thee to me or no?

And I said: Sir, I tell you at one word; I dare not for the dread of God submit me to you, after the tenor and sentence that yee haue aboue rehearsed to me.

And thus as if hee had been wroth, hee said to one of his clerks: Fetch hither quickly, the certification that came to me from Shrewesburie vnder the bailiffes seale, witnessing the errors and heresies, which this lolell hath ventinously sowne there.

Then hastilie the clerke tooke out and laid forth on a cupboord, diuers roles and writings, among which there was a little one, which the clerke deliuered to the archbishop. And by and by the archbishop read this roll containing this sentence.

The Sacrament after consecration materiall bread. Articles obiected against William Thorpe.

The third Sunday after Easter, the yeere of our Lord 1407. William Thorpe came vnto the towne of Shrewelburie, and through leaue granted vnto him to preach: hee said openly in S. Chads church in his sermon, that the sacrament of the altar, after the consecration, was materiall bread. And that images, should in no wise be worshipped. And that men should not goe on pilgrimages. And that prielts haue no title to tithes. And that it is not lawfull for to sweare in any wise.

And when the archbishop had read thus this roll, he rolled it vp againe, and said to me. Is this wholsome learning to be among the people?

Hollsome enough for mans soule, though not for your kitchin.

And I said to him: Sir, I am both ashamed on their behalfe, and right sorowfull for them that haue certified you these things thus vntruely: for I preached neuer, nor taught thus priuily nor apertly.

O Shrewelbury, thou hast a cause to repent thee, in that thou wouldst not receiue the truth when it was offered thee.

And the archbishop said to me, I will giue credence to these worshipfull men which haue written to me, and witnessed vnder their seales there among them. Though now thou denielt this, weenest thou that I will giue credence to thee? Thou Lolell, hast troubled the worshipfull communaltie of Shrewelburie, so that the bailiffes and comminaltie of that towne haue written to me, praying me that am archbishop of Canturbury primat and chancellor of England, that I will vouchsafe to grant them, that if thou shalt be made (as thou art worthie) to suffer open iouresse for thine heresies, that thou may haue thy iouresse openly there among them: So that all they whom thou and such other lolels haue there peruerted, may through feare of thy deed be reconciled againe to the vnitie of holie Church. And also they that stand in true faith of holy church, may through thy deed be more established therein. And as if this asking well pleased the archbishop, he said; By my thrift this heartie prayer, and feruent request shall be thought on.

The Romish Church must be stablished, by persecuting of true preachers.

But certainlie, nother the prayer of the men of Shrewelburie, nor the manasing of the archbishop made mee any thing afraid. But in rehearsing of this malice, and in the hearing of it, my heart greatly reioyced, and yet doth. I thanke God for the grace that I then thought, and yet thinke shall come to all the church of God here thorow, by the speciall mercifull doing of the Lord. And as hauing no dread of the malice of tyrants, by trusting stedfastlie in the helpe of the Lord, with full purpose for to knowledge the sothfastnesse, and to stand thereby after my cunning and power: I said to the archbishop, Sir, If the truth of Gods word might now be accepted as it should be, I doubt not to proue by likelie euidence, that they that are famed to be out of the faith of holy church in Shrewelbury, and in other places also, are in the true faith of holy church. For as their words sound, and their works shew to mans iudgement (dreading and louing faithfullie God) their will, their desire, their loue and their busines are most set to dread to offend God, and to loue for to please him in true and faithfull keeping of his commandements. And again, they that are said to be in the faith of holy church in Shrewelburie and in other places, by open euidence of their proud, enuious, malicious, couetous, lecherous, and other foule words and workes: neither know nor haue will to know, nor to occupie their wits truelie and effectuoullie in the right faith of holie church. Wherefore all these, nor none that follow their manners, shall any time come verily in the faith of holy church, except they inforce them more truely to come in the way which now they despise. For these men and women that are now called faithfull and holden iust, nother know, nor will exercise themselfe to know (of faithfulnesse) one commandement of God.

A sure trust in Gods truth, confoundeth the malice of tyrants.

If the touchstone might try his truth should be knowne. The description of the right Christians in Shrewelbury. The Catholikes of Shrewelbury. Shrewelbury, except thou turne from thy wicked waies, thou canst not receiue the truth.

And thus full many men and women now, and speciallie men that are named to bee principall lims of holie church, stir God to great wrath, and deserue his curse for that they call or hold them iust men, which are ful vniust, as their vitious words, their great customable swearing, and their slanderous shamefull works shew openly and witnesse. And therefore such vitious men and vniust in their owne confusion, call them vniust men and women, which after their power and cunning busie themselues to liue iustly after the commandement of God. And where sir ye say, that I haue disturbled the communaltie of Shrewelburie, and many other men and women with my teaching: If it thus bee, it is not to bee wondred of wise men, sines since all the communaltie of the Citie of Jerusalem was disstroubled of Christs owne person, that was very God and man, and the most prudent preacher that euer was or shall be. And also all the synagogue of Nazareth was moued against Christ, and so full filled with ire towards him for his preaching, that the men of the synagogue rose vp and cast Christ out of their citie, and led him vp to the top of a mountaine for to cast him downe there headlong: also accordingly hereto, the Lord witnesseth by Moses, that he shall put dissension betwixt his people, and the people that contrarieth and pursueth his people. Who sir is he, that shall preach the truth of Gods word to the vnfaithfull people, and shall let the sothfastnesse of the Gospell, and the prophecie of God almightie to be fulfilled?

Jerusalem troubled by the preaching of Christ.

And the archbishop said to me: It followeth of these thy words, that thou and such other thinkest, that yée doe right wel for to preach and teach as yée doe, without authoritie of any bishop. For you presume, that the lord hath chosen you only for to preach, as faithfull disciples and speciall followers of Christ.

The word of God ought truly to be preached.

And I said: Sir by authoritie of Gods law, and also of saints and doctors I am learned to déeme, that it is euery priests office and dutie for to preach busily, frely and truely the word of God. For no doubt euery priest should purpose first in his soule, and couet to take the order of priesthood chiefly for to make knowne to the people the word of God, after his cunning and power; approuing his words euer to be true by his vertuous workes: and for this intent we suppose that bishops and other prelats of holy Church, should chiefly take and vse their prelacie, and for the same cause bishops should giue to priests their orders. For bishops should accept no man to priesthood, except that he had good wil and full purpose, and were wel disposed, and well learned to preach. Wherfore sir, by the bidding of Christ, and by the example of his most holy liuing, and also by the witnessing of his holie Apostles and Prophets, wee are bound vnder full great paine, to exercise vs after our cunning and power (as euery Priest is likewise charged of God) to fulfill duly the office of priesthood. We presume not here of our selues for to be estéemed (neither in our owne reputation nor in none other mans) faithfull disciples, and speciall followers of Christ. But sir, as I said to you before, wee deeme this by authoritie chiefly of Gods word, that it is the chiefe dutie of euery priest, to busie him faithfullie to make the law of God knowne to his people, and so to commune the commandement of God charitablie, how that we may best, where, when, and to whom that euer we may, is our very dutie: and for the wil and businesse that wee owe of due debt to doe iustlie our office through the stirring and speciall helpe (as we trust) of God, hoping stedfastlie in his mercie: wee desire to be the faithfull disciples of Christ, and we pray this gratious Lord for his holie name, that he make vs able to please him with deuout prayers, and charitable priestly workes, that we may obtaine of him to follow him thankefully.

If this lesson had been well followed, the world had not been brought to such darkenes by blind and dumb priests.

An effectuous prayer, God grant in all ministers.

And the archbishop said to me: Leaud lozel, whereto makest thou such vaine reasons to me? Asketh not Saint Paul, how should priests preach, except they be sent? But I sent thée neuer to preach. For thy venomous doctrin is so known through out England, that no bishop will admit thee to preach by witnessing of their letters. Why then leaud idiot, wilt thou presume to preach, since thou art not sent nor licenced of thy soueraigne to preach? Saith not Saint Paul, that subiects ought to obey their Soueraignes, and not onely good and vertuous, but also tyrants that are vitious?

Why he preached without the bishops licence.

And I said to the archbishop: Sir, as touching your letter of licence or other bishops, which, yée say, wee should haue to witnesse that we were able to bee sent for to preach: wée know well that neither you sir, nor any other bishop of this land, will grant to vs any such letters of licence, but if we should oblige vs to you, and to other bishops by vnlefull othes, for to passe not the bounds and termes which ye sir, or other bishops, will limit to vs. And since in this matter your termes bee some too large, and some too strait: wee dare not oblige vs thus to be bounden to you for to kéepe the termes, which you will limit to vs, as you doe to friers and such other preachers: and therefore, though we haue not your letter sir, nor letters of any other bishops written with inke vpon parchment: wee dare not therefore leaue the office of preaching (to which preaching, all priests after their cunning and power are bound, by diuers testimonies of Gods law, and great doctors) without any mention making of bishops letters. For as mikle as wee haue taken vpon vs the office of priesthood (though we are vnworthie thereto) we came and purpose to fulfill it with the help of God, by authoritie of his owne law, and by witnesse of great doctors and saints, accordingly hereto trusting stedfastly in the mercie of God. For that hee commandeth vs to doe the office of priesthood, he will be our sufficient letters and witnesse, if we by example of his holy liuing and teaching, specially occupie vs faithfullie to doe our office iustlie: yea the people to whom we preach (be they faithfull or vnfaithfull) shall be our letters, that is, our witnes-bearers: for the truth where it is sowne, may not be vnwitnessed. For all that are conuerted and saued by learning of Gods word, and by working thereafter, are witnesse-bearers; that the truth and sothfastnes which they heard and did after, is cause of their saluation. And again, all vnfaithfull men and women which heard the truth told out to them, and would not doe thereafter: also all they that might haue heard the truth, and would not heare it, because that they would not doe thereafter: all these shall beare witnes against themselues, and the truth which they would not heare, or else heard it, and despised to doe thereafter, through their vnfaithfulnesse, is and shall be cause of their damnation. Therefore sir, since this aforesaid witnessing of God, and of diuers Saints and Doctors, and of all the people good and euill, sufficeth to all true preachers: we think that we do not the office of priesthood, if that we leaue our preaching, because that wee haue not, or may not haue duly bishops letters, to witnesse that wee are sent of them to preach. This sentence approueth Saint Paul, where he speaketh of himself and of faithfull Apostles and disciples, saying thus: We néed no letters of commendations as some preachers doe, which preach for couetousnesse of temporall goods, and for mens praysing. And where ye say sir, that Paul biddeth subiects obey their soueraignes, that is soth, and may not be denied. But there is two manner of soueraigns, vertuous soueraignes and vitious tyrants. Therefore, to these last soueraignes, neither men nor women that be subiect, owe to obey in two maners. To vertuous soueraigns and charitable, subiects owe to obey wilfully and gladlie, in hearing of their good counsell, in consenting to their charitable biddings, and in working after their fruitfull workes.

Two manner of soueraignes.

He meaneth prelates that be vnvertuous.

This sentence Paul approueth, where hee saith to subiects: Be yée mindfull of your soueraignes, that speake to you the word of God, and follow you the faith of them, whose conuersation you know to be vertuous. For as Paul saith after, these soueraignes, to whom subiects owe to obey in following of their maners; worke busilie in holy studying, how they may withstand and destroy vices, first in themselues, and after in all their subiects, and how they may best plant in them vertues. Also these soueraignes make deuout and feruent prayers, for to purchase grace of God, that they and their subiects may ouer all thing dread to offend him, and to loue for to please him. Also these soueraignes to whom Paul biddeth vs obey, as it is said before, liue so vertuoulie, that all they that will liue well, may take of them good example, to know and to kéepe the commandements of God. But in this foresaid wise, subiects ought not to obey nor to be obedient to tyrants, while they are vitious tyrants, since their will, their counsell, their biddings, and their works are so vitious, that they ought to be hated and left. And though such tyrants be masterfull and cruell in boasting and menacing, in oppressions & diuers punishings; Saint Peter biddeth the seruants of such tyrants, to obey mékely such tyrants, suffering patiently their malitious cruelnesse. But Peter counselleth not any seruant or subiect, to obey to any lord or prince, or soueraigne in any thing that is not pleasing to God.

Two maner of obeying: 1. In following their doings and examples. 2. In suffering their wrongs.

Wicked rulers are not to be followed in euill.

And the archbishop said vnto me: If a soueraigne bid his subiect doe that thing that is vitious, this soueraigne herein is to blame: but the subiect for his obedience, deserueth méed of God. For obedience pleaseth more to God, then any sacrifice.

Well reasoned my lord and like a clerke.

And I said, Samuel the Prophet said to Saul the wicked king, that God was more pleased with the obedience of his commandement, then with any sacrifice of beasts. But Dauid saith, and S. Paul, and S. Gregorie accordinglie together, that not only they that doe euill, are worthie of death and damnation: but also they that consent to euill doers. And sir, the law of holy church teacheth in the decrées, that no seruant to his lord, nor child to the father or mother, nor wife to her husband, nor monke to his abbat, ought to obey, except in lefull things, and lawfull.

Obedience not to be giuen, but in things lefull and lawfull.

And the archbishop said to mee: All these alleagings that thou bringest forth, are not else but proud presumptuousnesse. For hereby thou inforcest thee to prowue, that thou and such other are so iust, that ye ought not to obey to prelates. And thus against the learning of Saint Paul that teacheth you not to preach, but if yée were sent; of your owne authoritie, ye will goe forth and preach, and doe what yée list.

All is presumption that standeth against your masterfull ambition.

And I said: Sir, presenteth not euery priest the office of the Apostles, or the office of the disciples of Christ? And the archbi. said, yea. And I said; Sir, as the 1. chapter of Matth, and the last chapter of Marke witnesseth; Christ sent his Apostles for to preach. And the 1. chapter of Luke witnesseth, that Christ sent his two and seuentie disciples for to preach, in euery place that Christ was to come to: and S. Gregorie in the common law saith, that euery man that goeth to priesthood, taketh vpon him the office of preaching: For as hee saith, that priest stirreth God to great wrath, of whose mouth is not heard the voice of preaching. And as other more glosses vpon Ezechiel, witnesse: that the priest that preacheth not busilie to the people, shall be partaker of their damnation that perish through his default. And though the people be saued by other speciall grace of God, then by the priests preaching, yet the priests, in that they are ordained to preach, and preach not, as before God, they are manslayers. For as farre as in them is, such priests as preach not busilie and truely, slay all the people ghostly: in that they withhold from them the word of God, that is, the life and substance of mens soules. And S. Isidore said, Priests shall bee damned, for wickednesse of the people.

Priests in that they take priesthood, they are sent to preach. Matth. 10. Mark. vlt. Luk. 10.

The office of priesthood, is the office of preaching.

Priests that preach not, be slayers of the people. Isidorus.

if

Doctrine of faith. Discipline of workes.

if they teach not them that are ignorant, or blame not them that are sinners. For all the worke or businesse of priests, standeth in preaching and teaching, that they edifie all men, as well by cunning of faith, as by discipline of workes, that is vertuous teaching. And as the Gospel witnesseth: Christ said in his teaching; I am borne and comen into this world, to beare witnesse to the truth, and he that is of the truth, heareth my voice.

Priests not only sent to preach, but commanded to preach. Gregorius. Lincolniensis. Whatsoeuer a man doth, leauing that vndone which hee is chiefly bound to doe, is sin.

Then sir, since by the word of Christ specially, that is, his voice, priests are commanded to preach: whatsoeuer priest that it be, that hath not good will and full purpose to doe thus, and ableth not himselfe after his cunning and power to doe his office by the example of Christ and of his Apostles; whatsoeuer other thing that he doth, displeaseth God. For lo, Saint Gregorie saith, that thing left, that a man is bound chiefly to doe, whatsoeuer other thing that a man doth, it is vnthankfull to the holy Ghost, and therefore saith Lincolne: The priest that preacheth not the word of God, though he be seene to haue none other default, he is Antichrist and Sathanas, a night theef, and a day theefe, a sleyer of soules, and an angell of light turned into darknesse. Wherefore sir, these authorities and other well considered, I deeme my selfe damnable, if I either for pleasure or displeasure of any creature, apply mee not diligently to preach the word of God. And in the same damnation I deeme all those priests, which of good purpose and will, enforce them not busily to doe thus, and also all them that haue purpose or will to let any priest of this businesse.

Yet this bishop plucketh him not by the beard, nor burneth not off his hand, as Boner did.

And the archbishop said to those threeclerks that stood before him: Loe sirs, this is the maner and businesse of this lesell and such other, to picke out such sharpe sentences of holy scripture and doctors, to maintaine their sect and lore against the ordinance of holy Church. And therefore Lolell, it is thou that coueteth to haue againe the Psalter that I made to bee taken from thee at Canturbury, to record sharpe verses against vs. But thou shalt neuer haue that Psalter, nor none other booke, till that I know that thy heart and thy mouth accord fully, to be gouerned by holy Church.

Holy church.

And I said: sir, all my will and power is, and euer shall be (I truste to God) to be gouerned by holy Church.

And the archb. asked me, what was holy Church?

And I said: sir, I told you before, what was holy Church. But since ye aske me this demand: I call Christ and his saints holy Church.

And the archbishop said vnto me: I wot well that Christ and his Saints are holy Church in heauen, but what is holy church in earth?

2. Parts of the Church.

And I said: Sir, though holy church be euery one in charitie, yet it hath two parts. The first and principall part, hath ouercomen perfectly all the wretchednesse of this life, and raigneth ioyfully in heauen with Christ. And the other part is here yet in earth, busily and continually fighting day and night against temptations of the fiend: forsaking and hating the prosperity of this world, despising and withstanding their fleshly lusts, which onely are the pilgrims of Christ, wanding toward heauen by stedfast faith and grounded hope, and by perfect charitie. For these heauenly pilgrimes, may not, nor will not, be letted of their good purpose, by the reason of any doctors discording from holy Scripture, nor by the floods of any tribulation temporall, nor by the wind of any pride, of boast, or of manassing of any creature: For they are all fast grounded vpon the sure stone Christ, hearing his word and loving it, exercising them faithfully and continually in all their wits to doe thereafter.

And the archbishop said to his clerks: See yee not how his heart is indurate, and how he is trauelled with the diuell occupying him thus busily to alleage such sentences to maintaine his errors and heresies? Certaine, thus he would occupie vs here all day, if we would suffer him.

Well helpt forward M. clerk.

One of the clerks answered: Sir, hee said right now, that this certification that came to you from Shrewesbury, is vntruly forged against him. Therefore sir, appose you him now here in all the points which are certified against him, and so we shall heare of his owne mouth his answers, and witnes them.

And the archbishop tooke the certification in his hand, and looked thereon a while, and then he said to me.

The foresaid articles rehearsed against Thorp.

Loe here it is certified against thee by worthy men and faithfull of Shrewesburie, that thou preachedst there openly in S. Chads Church: that the sacrament of the altar was materiall bread after the consecration; what saist thou? Was this truly preached?

The vertue of the Sacrament standeth in the beleefe, more then in the outward signe.

And I said: Sir, I tell you truely that I touched nothing there of the sacrament of the altar, but in this wise, as I will with Gods grace tell you here. As I stood there in the pulpit, busying me to teach the commandement of God; there knilled a sacring bell, and therefore mickle people turned away hastily, and with noise ran fro towards me. And I seeing this, said to them thus: Good men yee were better to stand here still and to heare Gods word. For certes the vertue and the meede of the most holy sacrament of the altar standeth mikle more in the beleefe thereof that yee ought to haue in your soule, then it doth in the outward sight thereof. And therefore, yee were better to stand still quietly to heare Gods word, because that through the hearing thereof, men come to very true beleefe. And otherwise sir, I am certaine I spake not there of the worthy sacrament of the altar.

And the archbishop said to me: I beleeue thee not whatsoeuer thou saist, since so worshipfull men haue witnessed thus against thee. But since thou denyest that thou saidest thus there, what saist thou now? Resteth there after the consecration in the host, materiall bread or no?

Materiall bread.

And I said: Sir, I know in no place in holy scripture where this terme materiall bread is written: and therefore sir, when I speake of this matter, I vse not to speake of materiall bread.

Then the archbishop said to me: How teachest thou men to beleeue in this sacrament?

And I said: Sir, as I beleeue my self, so I teach other men.

He said: Tell out plainely thy beleefe thereof.

And I said with my protestation: Sir, I beleeue that the night before that Christ Jesu would suffer (willfully) passion for mankind on the morne after: hee tooke bread in his holy and most worshipfull hands, lifting vp his eies, and gitting thanks to God his father, blessed this bread and brake it, and gaue it to his disciples, saying to them: Take and eate of this all you, this is my bodie. And that this is and ought to bee all mens beleefe, Matthew, Marke, Luke and Paul witnesseth. Other beleefe sir I haue none, nor will haue, nor teach: for I beleeue, that this sufficeth in this matter. For in this beleefe with Gods grace I purpose to liue and die, knowledging as I beleeue and teach other men to beleeue, that the worshipfull sacrament of the altar, is the sacrament of Christs flesh and his bloud, in forme of bread and wine.

And the archbishop said to mee: It is sooth that this sacrament is very Christs bodie in forme of bread. But thou and thy sect teachest it to be substance of bread. Thinke you this true teaching?

And I said: Neither I, nor any other of the sect that yee damne, teach any otherwise then I haue told you, nor beleeue otherwise to my knowing. Neuertheless sir, I aske of you for charitie, that ye will tell me here plainely, how yee shall vnderstand the text of Saint Paul, where he saith thus: This thing feele you in your selfe that is in Christ Jesu, while he was in the forme of God. Sir, calleth not Paul here the forme of God, the substance or kind of God? Also sir, saith not the Church in the houres of the most blessed virgine accordinglie hereto, where it is written thus? Thou author of health remember, that sometime thou tokest of the vndefiled virgin, the forme of our bodie. Tell me for charitie therefore, whether the forme of our bodie, be called here the kind of our bodie or no?

The papists haue none other defence for them but only the Church.

And the archbishop said to me: Wouldest thou make mee to declare this text after thy purpose, since the Church now hath determined; that there abideth no substance of bread after the consecration, in the sacrament of the altar? Beleeuest thou not this ordinance of the Church?

Query ordinance of church men bindeth not our faith.

And I said: Sir, whatsoeuer prelates haue ordained in the Church, our beleefe standeth euer whole. I haue not heard, that the ordinance of men vnder beleefe, should bee put into beleefe.

And the archbishop said to me: If thou hast not learned this before, learne now to know that thou art out of beleefe: If in this matter and other, thou beleeuest not as the holy Church beleeueth. What say doctors treating of this sacrament?

The greatest doctors of the church be Apostles. S. Paul calleth it bread. The canon of the masse calleth it bread. S. Austen calleth it bread.

And I said: Sir, Saint Paul that was a great doctor of holie Church, speaking to the people, and teaching them in the right beleefe of this most holy sacrament, calleth it bread that we breake. And also in the canon of the masse after the consecration, this most worthy Sacrament is called holie bread. And euery priest in this land, after that he hath received this sacrament, saith in this wise: That thing that wee haue taken with our mouth, we pray God that we may take it with a pure and cleane mind. That is as I vnderstand, wee pray God that we may receiue through very beleefe, this holy sacrament worthily. And sir, Saint Augustine saith: That thing that is seene, is bread; but that mens faith asketh to be informed of, is very Christs bodie. And also, Fulgence an ententife doctor saith: As it were an error to say that Christ was but a substance, that is, very man, and not very God: or to say that Christ was very God, and not very man: so is it (this doctor saith) an errour to say, that the sacrament of the altar is but a substance: and also sir, accordingly hereto, in the secret of the mid masse on Christmasse day, it is written thus: Idem refulsit Deus, sic terrena substantia nobis conferat quod diuinum est; which sentence sir, with the secret of the fourth ferie, quatuor temporum Septembris: I pray you sir declare here openly in English.

The secret of the masse on Christmas day, nameth it a terrene substance.

And the archbishop said to me, I perceiue well enough where about thou art, and how the diuell blindeth thee, that thou may not vnderstand the ordinance of holy Church, nor consent thereto. But I command thee now, answere me shortlie: Beleeuest thou that after the consecration of this foresaid sacrament, there abideth substance of bread, or not?

My lord can resolue a pace, he can declare but a little. Choke him vp my lord.

And I said; Sir, as I vnderstand, it is all one to grant or beleeue, that there dwelleth substance of bread, & to grant and to beleeue, that this holie worthie sacrament of Christs owne body

To grant the reall being of the body without bread, is as much as to grant the accident to be without the subiect.

bodie is accident without subiect. But sir, for as mikle as your asking palleth my vnderstanding, I dare neither denie it nor grant it, for it is schole matter, about which I busied mee neuer for to know: and therefore I commit this terme accidens sine subiecto, to those clerkes which delight them so in curious and subtle sophistry, because they determine oft so difficult and strange matters, and wade and wander so in them from argument to argument, with pro & contra, till that they wot not where they are, and vnderstand not themselues. But the shame that these proud Sophisters haue to yéld them to men, and before men, maketh them oft fooles, and to be concluded shamefully before God.

Against proud Sophisters. Templum domini, Templum domini.

And the archbishop said to me: I purpose not to oblige thée to the subtle arguments of clerks, since thou art vnable thereto: but I purpose to make thée obey to the determination of holy Church.

The Church stood sound till the fiend broke loose.

And I said: sir, by open euidence and great witnesse, a M. yéere after the incarnation of Christ, the determination which I haue here before you rehearsed, was accept of holy Church as sufficient to the saluation of all them that would beléeue it faithfully, and worke thereafter charitablie. But sir, the determination of this matter which was brought in since the fiend was loosed by frier Thomas againe, specially calling the most worshipfull Sacrament of Christs owne bodie an accident without subiect: which terme since I know not that Gods law approueth it in this matter, I dare not grant, but vtterlie I denie to make this friers sentence, or any such other, my beléefe; doe with me God what thou wilt.

Transubstantiation brought in by frier Thomas Aquin.

It is happie he did not flie in his face as Bonner did.

And the archbishop said to me: Well, well, thou shalt say otherwise or that I leaue thée. But what saiest thou to this second point that is recorded against thée by worthie men of Shrewesburie, saying, that thou preachedst there, that Images ought not to be worshipped in any wise?

The second point touching images. Those charged with an vntruth.

And I said: Sir, I preached neuer thus, nor through Gods grace I will not at any time consent to think nor to say thus, neither priuilie nor apertly. For loe, the Lord witnesseth by Moses, that the things which hee made were right good, and so then they were, and yet they are and shall be good and worshipfull in their kind. And therefore, to the end that God made them to, they are all praisable and worshipfull, and specially man that was made after the image and likenesse of God, is full worshipfull in his kind, yea, this holy image that is man, God worshippeth. And herefore euery man should worship other, in kind, and also for heauenly vertues that men vse charitably. And also I say, wood, tin, gold, siluer, or any other matter that images are made of: all these creatures are worshipfull in their kind, and to the end that God made them for. But the caruing, casting, and painting of an imagery, made within mans hand, albeit ỳ this doing be accept of mã of highest state and dignitie, and ordained of them to bee a calender to leaud men, that neither can, nor will be learned to know God in his word, neither by his creatures, nor by his wonderfull and diuers workings: yet this imagerie ought not to be worshipped in forme, nor in the likenesse of mans craft. Neuertheless, that euery matter the painters paint with, since it is Gods creature, ought to be worshipped in the kind, and to the end that God made and ordained it to serue man.

Wan a worshipfull image of God.

Though man accept the painting or caruing of images, yet is it not the right way to learne to know God.

Then the archbishop said to me, I grant well that no body ought to doe worship to any such images for themselues. But a crucifix ought to be worshipped for the passion of Christ that is painted therein, and so brought therethrough to mans mind: and thus the images of the blessed Trinitie, and of the Virgine Marie Christs mother, and other images of saints, ought to be worshipped. For loe, earthly kings and lords which vse to send their letters ensealed with their armes, or with their priuie signet to them that are with them, are worshipped of these men. For when these men receiue their lords letters, in which they see and know the wils and biddings of the lords, in worship of their lords they doe off their caps to these letters. Why not then, since in images made with mans hand, wee may read and know many diuers things of God, and of his Saints, shall we not worship their images?

The image of the Trinitie.

A similitude of the kings seale or letters to proue the worship of images.

No similitude to be made between earthly things and spirituall, namely, when Gods word doth expresse to the contrary.

And I said, within my foresaid protestation I say, that these worldly vsages of temporall lawes that yée speake now of, may be done in case without sinne. But this is no similitude to worship images, made by mans hand, since that Moses, Dauid, Salomon, Baruch and other saints in the bible forbid so plainely the worshipping of such images.

So you say my lord, but God saith contrarie in his commandements.

Then the archbishop said to mee: Leaud losell, in the old law before that Christ tooke mankind, was no likenesse of any person of the Trinitie, neither shewed to man, nor knowne of man: But now since Christ became man, it is lefull to haue images to shew his manhood, yea, though many men which are right great clerks and other also, held it an error to paint the Trinitie: I say it is wel done to make and to paint the Trinity in images. For it is great moouing of deuotion to men, to haue and to behold the Trinitie and other images of saints, carued, cast and painted. For beyond the sea, are the best painters that euer I saw. And sirs I tell you, this is their manner, and it is a good manner: When that an image maker shall carue, cast in mold, or paint any images, he shall goe to a priest, and shriue him as cleane, as if he should then die: and take penance, Painters deuotion and the popes diuinitie doe well agree.

Preparation of the painters to make a faire and a deuout image.

and make some certaine vow of fasting or of praying or pilgrimages doing, praying the priest speciallie to pray for him, that he may haue grace to make a faire and a deuout image.

And I said: Sir, I doubt not if these painters that ye speak of, or any other painters vnderstood truly the text of Moses, of Dauid, of the wise man, of Baruch, and of other saints and doctors: these painters should be moued to shriue them to God with full inward sorrow of heart, taking vpon them to doe right sharpe penance for the sinfull and vaine craft of painting, caruing, or casting they had vsed: promising God faithfully, neuer to doe so after: knowledging openly before all men their reprooueable learning. And also sir, these priests that shriue (as you doe say) painters, and enioyne them to doe penance, and pray for their spéed, promising to them helpe of their prayers for to be curious in their sinfull crafts: sinne herein more grieuously, then the painters. For these priests doe comfort and giue them counsell to doe that thing, which of great paine, yea vnder the paine of Gods curse, they should vtterly forbid them. For certes sir, if the wonderfull working of God, and the holy liuing and teaching of Christ, and of his Apostles and Prophets, were made knowne to the people by holy liuing and true, and busie teaching of priests: these things (sir) were sufficient bookes and kalenders to know God by, and his saints, without any images made with mans hand. But certes, the vitious liuing of priests and their couetousnesse, are chiefe cause of this error, and all other vitiousnesse that raigneth among the people.

The true bookes and kalenders to know God.

Then the archbishop said vnto me, I hold thee a vitious priest and accurst, and all them that are of thy sect; for all priests of holy Church, and all images that moue men to deuotion, thou and such other goe about to destroy. Losell, were it a faire thing to come into the Church and sée therein none image?

A better sight my lord then to see blind stocks there to be worshipped.

And I said: sir, they that come to the church for to pray deuoutly to the Lord God, may in their inward wits bee the more feruent, that all their outward wits bee close from all outward séeing and hearing, and from all disturbance and lettings. And since Christ blessed them that saw him not bodily, and haue beléeued faithfully in him: it sufficeth then to all men (through hearing and knowing of Gods word, and to doe thereafter) for to beléeue in God, though they neuer sée images made with mans hand after any person of the Trinitie, or of any other Saint.

The right seruice of a Christian.

And the archb. said to mee, with a feruent spirit: I say to thée losell, that it is right well done to make and to haue an image of the Trinitie: Yea, what saist thou? is it not a stirring thing to behold such an image?

My lord, your yea, will not answer Gods nay.

And I said: Sir, yee said right now that in the old law or Christ tooke mankind, no likenesse of any person of the Trinitie was shewed to men: therefore sir, yée said it was not then lefull to haue images, but now ye say, since Christ is becomen man, it is lefull to make and to haue an image of the Trinitie, and also of other saints. But sir, this thing would I learne of you: since the father of heauen, yea and euery person of the Trinitie was without beginning God almighty, and many holy prophets that were deadly men, were martyred violently in the old law, and also many men and women then died confessors: Why was it not then as lefull and necessarie as now to haue made an image of the father of heauen, and to haue made and had other images of martyrs, prophets, and holy confessors, to haue bin kalenders to aduise men and moue them to deuotion, as ye say that images now doe?

Note this ye worshippers and maintainers of Images.

The synagogue of antichrist wil haue authoritie.

And the archbishop said: The synagogue of the Iewes had not authoritie to approoue those things as the Church of Christ hath now.

And I said: Sir, saint Gregorie was a great man in the new law, and of great dignitie, and as the common law witnesseth, he commended greatly a bishop, in that he forbad vtterly the images made with mans hand should bee worshipped.

And the archbishop said: Vngracious losell, thou sauourest no more truth then an hound. Since at the rood at the Northdoore at London, at our ladie at Walsingham, and many other diuers places in England, are many great and praisable miracles done: should not the images of such holy saints and places, at the reuerence of God and our ladie and other saints be more worshipped then other places and images, where no miracles are done?

Great miracles done by images, but my lord doth not tell by whose power.

And I said: Sir, there is no such vertue in any imagerie, that any images should herefore bee worshipped; wherefore I am certaine that there is no miracle done of God in any place in earth, because that any images made with mans hand should be worshipped. And herefore sir, as I preached openly at Shrewesburie and other places, I say now here before you: That no bodie should trust that there were any vertue in imagery made with mans hand, and therefore no bodie should bow to them nor séeke them, nor kneele to them, nor bow to them, nor pray to them, nor offer any thing to them, nor kisse them, nor encense them. For loe the most worthie of such images, the brasen Serpent (by Moises made, at Gods bidding) the good king Ezechias destroyed worthily and thankfully, and all because it was encensed. Therfore sir, if men take good heed

Miracles importing worship to be done to Images may well be suspected not to come of God.

A Christian man ought not to bow, seek, nor bow, nor pray, nor offer, nor kisse an image.

to

to the writting and to the learning of S. Augustine, of S. Gregorie, and of saint John Chrysostome, and of other saints and Doctors, how they spake and wrote of miracles, that shall bee done now in the last end of the world: It is to dread, that for the vnfaithfulnes of men and women, the feend hath great power for to worke many of the miracles that now are done in such places. For both men and women delight now more to heare and know miracles, then they doe to know Gods word, or to heare it effectuously. Wherefore, to the great confusion of all them that thus do; Christ saith: the generation of adulterers requireth tokens, miracles, and wonders. Neuertheless as diuers saints say, now when the faith of God is published in Christendome, the word of God sufficeth to mans saluation, without such miracles: and thus also the word of God sufficeth to all faithfull men and women, without any such images. But good sir, since the father of heauen, that is God in his godhead, is the most vnknowne thing that may bee, and the most wonderfull spirit, hauing in it no shape nor likenesse, and members of any deadly creature: in what likenesse or what image may God the father be shewed or painted?

For the vnfaithfulnes of men, the diuell may worke miracles.

The word of God sufficeth vs to saluation, without miracles.

That which is of nature vnknowne, cannot be resembled by any visible creature knowne.

And the archbishop said: as holy church hath suffered the images of the Trinitie, and all other images to be painted and shewed; it sufficeth to them that are members of holy church. But since thou art a rotten member, cut away from holy church; thou fauourest not the ordinance thereof. But since the day passeth, leaue we this matter.

Holy church of your owne building.

The 3. article.

Pilgrimage.

AND then he said to me: What saiest thou to the third point that is certified against thee, preaching openly in Shrewsburie, that pilgrimage is not lefull: and ouer this thou saidest that those men and women that go on pilgrimages to Canturburie, to Beuerley, to Karlington, to Walsingam, and to any such other places, are accursed and made foolish, spending their goods in waste.

And I said: Sir, by this certification I am accused to you that I should teach, that no pilgrimage is lefull. But I said neuer thus. For I know that there be true pilgrimages and lefull, and full pleasant to God; and therefore sir, howsoeuer mine enemies haue certified you of me, I told at Shrewsburie of two maner of pilgrimages.

Two maner of pilgrimages.

And the archbishop said to me: whom callest thou true pilgrimes?

The true pilgrimage is to trauell in heauenly things.

And I said: sir, with my protestation I call them true pilgrimes trauelling toward the blisse of heauen, which in the state, degree, or order that God calleth them to, doe busie them faithfully for to occupie all their wits bodily and ghostly, to know truely, and to keepe faithfully the biddings of God, hating and fleeing all the seuen deadly sins, and euery branch of them: Ruling them vertuously (as it is said before) with all their wits, doing discreetly, wilfully, and gladly, all the works of mercy, bodily and ghostly, after their cunning and power, abling them to the gifts of the holy Ghost, disposing them to receiue them in their soules, and to hold therin, the right blessings of Christ: busying them to know and to keepe the seuen principall vertues, and so then they shall obtaine here through grace, for to vse thankfully to God, all the conditions of charitie. And then they shall be moued with the good spirit of God, for to examine oft and diligently their conscience, that neither wilfully nor wittingly they erre in any article of beleefe, hauing continually (as frailtie will suffer) all their businesse, to dread and to flie the offence of God, and to loue ouer all, and to seeke euer to doe his pleasant will. Of these pilgrimes I said, what soeuer good thought that they any time thinke, what vertuous word that they speake, and what fruitfull worke that they worke: Euery such thought, word, & worke is a step numbred of God, toward him into heauen. These foresaid pilgrimes of God, delight sore when they heare of saints or of vertuous men and women, how they forsoke wilfully the prosperitie of this life, how they withstood the suggestion of the feend, how they restrained their fleshlie lusts, how discreete they were in their penance doing, how patient they were in all their aduersities, how prudent they were in counselling of men and women, mouing them to hate all sinne, and to flie them, and to shame euer greatly therof, and to loue all vertues, and to draw to them, imagining how Christ and his followers by example of him, suffered scornes and slanders, and how patiently they abode and tooke the wrongfull manacing of tyrants: How homely they were and seruiceable to poore men to releeue and comfort them bodily and ghostly, after their power and cunning, and how deuout they were in prayers, how feruent they were in heauenly desires, and how they absented them from spectacles of vaine sayings and hearings, and how stable they were to let and destroy all vices, and how laborious and ioyfull they were, to sow and to plant vertues: These heauenly conditions and such other, haue pilgrimes, or endeuor them for to haue: whose pilgrimage God accepteth.

Euery good worke, is a good step to heauen.

The maner and examples of saints.

And againe, I said, as their workes shew, the most part of men and women that goe now on pilgrimages, haue not these foresaid conditions, nor loueth to busie them faithfullie for to haue. For as I well know, since I haue full oft assaid, examine whosoeuer will ye. of these pilgrimes, and hee shall no find three men or women, that know surely a commandement of God, nor can say their Pater noster, and Aue Maria, nor their Creed readilie in any maner of language. And as I haue learned and also know somewhat by experience of these same pilgrimes, telling the cause, why that many men and women goe hither and thither now on pilgrimage: it is more for the health of their bodies, then of their soules: more for to haue riches and prosperitie of this world, then for to bee enriched with vertues in their soules: more to haue here worldly and fleshly friendship, then for to haue friendship of God, and of his saints in heauen, for whatsoeuer thing man or woman doth, the friendship of God, nor of any other saint cannot bee had, without keeping of Gods commandements. Further with my protestation, I say now as I said in Shrewsburie, though they that haue fleshly wils, trauell farre their bodies and spend mikle money, to seeke and to visit the bones or images (as they say they do) of this saint or of that: such pilgrimage going is neither praiseable nor thankfull to God nor to any saint of God, since in effect, all such pilgrimes despise God and all his commandements and saints. For the commandements of God they will nother know nor keepe, nor conforme them to liue vertuously by example of Christ and of his saints. Therfore sir, I haue preached and taught openly, and so I purpose all my life time to do with Gods helpe, saying that such fond people wast blamefully Gods goods in their vaine pilgrimages, spending their goods vpon vitious hostelars which are oft vncleane women of their bodies: and at the least, those goods with the which they should doe workes of mercie after Gods bidding, to poore needie men and women.

Pilgrimage displeasant to God.

Goods euill destowed in pilgrimage.

These poore mens goods and their liuelode, these runners about, offer to rich priests which haue mikle more liuelode then they neede. And thus those goods they waste wilfully, and spend them vniustly against Gods bidding vpon strangers, with which they should helpe and releue, after Gods will their poore needie neighbours at home: yea and ouer this follie, oftentimes diuers men and women, of these runners thus madly hither and thither into pilgrimage; borrow hereto other mens goods, yea and sometime they steale mens goods hereto, and they pay them neuer againe. Also sir, I know well that when diuers men and women will goe thus after their owne wils, and finding out one pilgrimage; they will ordaine with them before, to haue with them both men and women, that can well sing wanton songs, and some other pilgrimes, will haue with them bagpipes: so that etherie towne that they come through, what with the noise of their singing, and with the sound of their piping, and with the iangling of their Canturburie bels, and with the barking out of dogs after them, that they make more noise, then if the king came there away, with all his clarions, and many other minstrels. And if these men and women be a moneth out in their pilgrimage, many of them shall be an halfe yeare after, great ianglers, taletellers, and liars.

The inconuenience that commeth by pilgrimage.

And the archbishop said to me: Leud losell, thou seest not far enough in this matter, for thou considerest not the great trauell of pilgrims, therfore thou blamest that thing that is praiseable. I say to thee, that it is right well done, that pilgrims haue with them both singers and also pipers: that when one of them that goeth barefote, striketh his toe vpon a stone, and hurteth him sore, and maketh him to bleed: it is well done that he or his fellow begin then a song, or else take out of his bosome a bagpipe, for to driue away with such mirth, the hurt of his fellow. For with such solace, the trauell and wearinesse of pilgrimes, is lightly and merely borne out.

Well spoken my lord for Lincolneshire bagpipes. And why then blamed Boner Philpot for singing in the stockes?

And I said: sir, S. Paul teacheth men to weepe with them that weepe.

And the archbishop said, what iangles thou against mens deuotion? What soeuer thou or such other say, I say that the pilgrimage that now is vsed, is to them that doe it, a praiseable and a good meane to come the rather to grace. But I hold thee vnable to know this grace, for thou enforcest thee to let the deuotion of the people: since by authoritie of holy Scripture, men may lefully haue and vse such solace as thou reprouest. For Dauid in his last psalme, teacheth men to haue diuers instruments of musicke for to praise therewith God.

A new found way to grace of the bishops making.

And I said: sir, by the sentence of diuers Doctors expounding the psalmes of Dauid, that musicke and minstrelsie that Dauid and other saints of the old law spake of, ought now nother to be taken nor vsed by the letter, but these instruments with their musicke ought to bee interpreted ghostly: For all those figures are called vertues and grace, with which vertues men should please God, and praise his name. For saint Paul saith all such things befell to them in figure. Therfore sir, I vnderstand, that the letter of this psalme of Dauid and of such other psalmes and sentences doth slay them that take them now litterally: This sentence as I vnderstand sir, Christ approueth himselfe, putting out the minstrels, or that he would quicken the dead damsell.

Instruments and musicke of the old testament, how they are to be applied and vsed in the new testament.

And the archbishop said to me: Leud losel, is it not lefull to vs to haue Organs in the church for to worship therewithall God? And I said, yea sir, by mans ordinance; but by the ordinance of God, a good sermon to the peoples vnderstanding were mikle more pleasant to God.

Organs in the church.

A fit comparison my lord, for like ponstick.

Digitized by Google

And the archbishop said, that Organs and good delectable songs, quickned and sharpened more mens wits then should any sermon.

But I said: sir, lustie men and worldly louers, delight and couet and trauell to haue all their wits quickned and sharpened with diuers sensible solace: But all the faithfull louers and followers of Christ, haue all their delight to heare Gods word, and to vnderstand it truely, and to worke thereafter faithfully and continually. For no doubt, to dread to offend God, and to loue to please him in all things quickneth and sharpeneth all the wits of Christs chosen people; and able them so to grace, that they ioy greatly to withdraw their eares and all their wits and members, from all worldly delight, and from all fleshly solace. For saint Hierome (as I thinke) saith: No body may ioy with this world and reigne with Christ.

The saying of Ieroime.

And the archbishop (as if he had beene displeased with mine answere) said to his clerks: What gesse ye that this idiot will speake there, where he hath no dred: since he speaketh thus now here in my presence? Well, well, by God thou shalt bee ordained for. And then he spake to me all angerly.

You sweare my fo[r].

The fourth article concerning priests tithes.

WHat saiest thou to this fourth point, that is certified against thee, preaching openly and boldly in Shrewsbury, that priests haue no title to tithes?

And I said: sir, I named there no word of tithes in my preaching. But more then a moneth after that I was arested: there in prison, a man came to me into the prison, asking me what I said of tithes. And I said to him: Sir, in this towne are many clerks and priests, of which some are called religious men, though many of them be seculars: Therefore aske ye of them this question. And this man said to me: Sir, our prelats say, that we also are obliged to pay our tithes of all things that renue to vs: and that they are accursed that withdraw any part wittingly fro them of their tithes. And I said (sir) to that man, as with my protestation I say now before you: that I wonder that any priest dare say, men to bee accursed, without the ground of Gods word. And the man said: Sir, our priests say, that they curse men thus by the authoritie of Gods law. And I said: Sir, I know not where this sentence of cursing is authorised now in the Bible. And therefore sir, I pray you that yee will aske the most cunning clerke of this towne, that yee may know where this sentence of cursing them that tithe not, is now written in Gods law: for if it were written there, I would right gladly be learned where. But shortly this man would not goe from mee to aske this question, of an other body: But required mee there, as I would answere before God, if in this case, that cursing of priests were lawfull and approued of God? And shortly herewith came to my mind the learning of saint Peter, teaching priests speciallie to hallow the Lord Christ in their hearts: being euermore readie (as far as in them is) to answere through faith and hope to them that aske of them a reason. And this lesson Peter teacheth men to vse with a meeke spirit and with dread of the Lord. Therefore sir, I said to this man in this wise: In the old law, which ended not fully, till the time that Christ rose vp againe from death to life, God commanded tithes to be giuen to the Leuites, for the great busines and dailie trauell that pertained to their office. But priests, because their trauell was mikle more easie and light, then was the office of the Leuits: God ordained the priests should take for their liuelode to doe their office, the tenth part of those tithes that were giuen to the Leuites. But now (I said) in the new law, neither Christ nor any of his apostles toke tithes of the people nor commanded the people to pay tithes, neither to priests nor to deacons. But Christ taught the people to doe almes, that is, workes of mercie, to pore needie men (of surplus, that is, superfluous of their temporall goods) which they had, more then them needed reasonablie to their necessarie liuelode. And thus (I said) not of tithes, but of pure almes of the people, Christ liued and his apostles, when they were so busie in preaching of the word of God to the people, that they might not trauell otherwise for to get their liuelode. But after Christs ascension, and when the apostles had receiued the holy Ghost, they trauelled with their hands, for to get their liuelode, when that they might thus doe for busie preaching. Therfore by example of himselfe, S. paul teacheth al the priests of Christ for to trauell with their hand, when for busie teaching of the people they might thus doe. And thus, all these priests whose priesthood God accepteth now, or will accept, or did in the apostles time, and after their decease; will doe to the worlds end. But (as Cisterciensis telleth) in the thousand yeare of our Lord Iesus Christ 211. yeare, one pope Gregorie the tenth ordained new tithes first to bee giuen to priests now in the new law. But saint Paul in his time, whose trace or example all Priests of God enforce them to follow, seeing the couetousnesse that was among the people, desiring to destroy the foule sinne through the grace of God and true vertuous liuing and example of himselfe: wrought and taught all priests for to follow him as he followed Christ, patiently, willingly, and gladlie in high pouertie; Therefore Paul saith thus: The Lord hath ordained that they that preach the Gospell, shall liue of the Gospell. But we (saith Paul) that couet and busie vs to be faithfull followers of Christ, vse not this power. For lo (as Paul witnesseth afterward) when he was full pore and needie, preaching among the people: he was not chargeous vnto them, but with his hands he trauelled not onely to get his owne liuing, but also the liuing of other pore and needie creatures. And since the people was neuer so couetous, nor so auarous (I gesse) as they are now; it were good counsell that all priests toke good heed to this heauenlie learning of Paul, following him here in willfull pouertie, nothing charging the people for their bodilie liuelode. But because that many priests do contrarie to Paul in this foresaid doctrine, Paul biddeth the people take heed to those priests that follow him as he had giuen them example. As if Paul would say thus to the people: Accept yee none other Priests then they, that liue after the forme that I haue taught you. For certaine, in what soeuer dignitie or order that any priest is in, if hee conforme him not to follow Christ and his apostles in willfull pouertie, and in other heauenly vertues, and specially in true preaching of Gods word: though such a one be named a priest, yet he is no more but a priest in name, for the worke of a verie priest, in such a one wanteth. This sentence approueth Augustine, Gregorie, Chrysostome, and Lincolne plainely.

Paul would not be chargeous.

If priests were couetous then, what be they now?

This rule, with the rule of begging frers, cannot stand together.

And the archbishop said to me: Thinkest thou this wholesome learning for to sow openly, or yet priuilie among the people? Certaine, this doctrine contrarieth plainely the ordinance of holie fathers, which haue ordained, granted, and licenced priests to be in diuers degrées, and to liue by tithes and offrings of the people, and by other duties.

Wholesome enough my lord if your tast were good to sauor it.

But it contrarieth not the ordinance neither of God nor of his word.

And I said: sir, if priests were now in measurable measure and number, and liued vertuouslie, and taught busilie and truelie the word of God, by example of Christ and of his apostles, without tithes, offerings, and other duties that priests now challenge and take: the people would giue them freely sufficient liuelode.

If priests would not slacke in their dutie, they should not lacke in hauing sufficient.

And a clerke said to me: How wilt thou make this good, that the people will giue freelie to priests their liuelode; since that now by the law euerie priest can scarcelie constraine the people to giue them their liuelode?

Fallax argumentum secundum causam vt causam.

And I said: sir, it is now no wonder though the people grudge to giue priests the liuelode that they aske: Mekil people know now, how that priests should liue, and how that they liue contrarie to Christ & to his apostles. And therfore the people is full heauie to pay (as they do) their temporall goods to parsons and and to other vicars and priests, which should be faithfull dispensators of the parishes goods: taking to themselues no more, but a scarce liuing of tithes, nor of offrings, by the ordinance of the common law. For whatsoeuer priests take of the people (be it tithe or offring, or any other dutie or seruice) the priests ought not to haue therof no more, but a bare liuing; and to depart the residue to the pore men and women specially of the parish of whom they take this temporall liuing. But the most deale of priests now wasteth their parishes goods, and spendeth them at their owne will after the world, in their vaine lusts: So that in few places pore men haue duely (as they should haue) their owne sustenance, nother of tithes nor of offrings, nor of other large wages and foundations that priests take of the people in diuers maners aboue that they neede for needefull sustenance of meate and clothing: But the pore needie people are forsaken & left of priests to be sustained of the parishioners, as if the priests tok nothing of the parishioners to help the people with.

The cruell dome[s] of the priests, is the cause why the people be so slacke in their tithes.

Priests being content with sufficiencie, and a bare liuing, ought to part the residue to the poore.

Priests did so then, but our priests do not so now.

And thus sir, into ouer great charges of the parishioners they pay their temporall goods twice, where once might suffice, if priests were true dispensators. Also sir, the parishioners that pay their temporall goods (be they tithes or offerings) to priests that do not their office among them iustly, are partners of euerie sinne of those priests: because that they sustaine those priests follie in their sin, with their temporall goods. If these things bee well considered: what wonder is it then sir, if the parishioners grudge against these dispensators?

Whether tithes are to be paid to priests doing not their duty.

Then the archbishop said to me: Thou that shouldest bee iudged and ruled by holy church, presumptuouslie thou deemest holie church to haue erred in the ordinance of tithes and other duties to be payed to priests. It shall be long or thou thriue Losell, that thou despisest thy ghostly mother. How darest thou speake this (Losel) among the people? Are not tithes giuen to priests for to liue by?

Ghostly mother & nay anythostly stepdame, to all Gods children.

And I said: sir, saint Paul saith, that tithes were giuen in the old law to Leuites and to priests, that came of the linage of Leui. But our priests he saith, came not of the linage of Leuy, but of the linage of Juda, to which Juda no tithes were promised to be giuen. And therefore Paul saith, since the priesthood is changed from the generation of Leuy to the generation of Juda: it is necessarie that changing also bee made of the law. So that priests liue now without tithes and other dutie that they claime, following Christ and his apostles in willful pouerty, as they haue giuen them example. For since Christ liued (all the time of his preaching) by pure almes of the people: and by example of him, his apostles liued in the same wise, or else by the trauel of their hands, as it is said aboue: euerie priest, whose priesthood Christ approueth, knoweth well, and confesseth in word and in worke, that a disciple ought not to be aboue his master, but it sufficeth to a disciple to bee as his master, simple, and pure, meeke and patient: and by example specially

By the law none could challenge tithes, but onely the seede of Leuy. Our priests be not of the seede of Leuy: Ergo by the law our priests cannot challenge tithes.

As the priesthood is changed, so is the law changed.

A paradox without Gods word.

Tithes by whom and when they were first commanded in the new law.

A difference to be put betwixt the old law and the new.

Priests had the x. part of the tithes giuen to the Leuites.

Christ commandeth almes, not tithes, except tithes be almes.

Paul hauing power to take, yet vsed it not.

specially of his master Christ, euery priest should rule him in al his liuing; & so after his cunning and power, a priest should busie him to enforme and to rule, whomsoeuer he might charitablie.

Wesse but curse not, saith saint Paul.

And the archbishop said to me with a great spirit, Gods curse haue thou and mine for this teaching: for thou wouldest hereby, make the old law more free & perfect then the new law. For thou saiest that it is lefull to Leuites and to priests to take tithes in the old law, and so to enioy their priuiledges: but to vs priests in the new law, thou saist it is not lawfull to take tithes: and thus thou giuest to Leuites of the old law, more freedome then to priests of the new law.

He goeth neere you my lord, when he toucheth your tithes.

And I said: sir, I marueil that yee vnderstand this plaine text of Paul thus. We wot well, that the Leuites and priests in the old law that toke tithes, were not so free nor so perfect, as Christ and his apostles that toke no tithes. And sir, there is a Doctor (I thinke that it is saint Hierome) that saith thus: The priests that challenge now in the new law, tithes; say in effect, that Christ is not become man, nor that he hath yet suffered death for mans loue. Wherefore this Doctor saith this sentence: Since tithes were the hires and wages limited to Leuites and to priests of the old law for bearing about of the tabernacle, and for slaying and fleing of beasts, and for burning of sacrifice, and for keeping of the temple, and for tromping of battell before the host of Israel, and other diuers obseruances that pertained to their office: those priests that will challenge or take tithes, denie that Christ is come in the flesh, and doe the priests office of the old law, for whom tithes were granted: for else (as this Doctor saith) priests take now tithes wrongfully.

The difference of the freedoms betweene the old and new lawes.

For what cause tithes were giuen in the old law.

And the archbishop said to his clerkes: Heard you euer Losel speake thus? Certaine this is the learning of them all, that wheresoeuer they come, and they may be suffered, they enforce them to expugne the freedome of holy church.

If you take away tithes you bridge the church.

And I said: sir, why call yee the taking of tithes, and of such other duties that priests challenge now (wrongfully) the freedome of holy church: since neither Christ nor his apostles, challenged nor toke such duties? Herefore these takings of priests now are not called iustly the freedome of holy church, but all such giuing and taking ought to be called and holden, the slanderous couetousnesse of men of the holy church.

And the archbishop said to me: Why Losell, wilt not thou and other that are confederat with thee, seeke out of holy Scripture and of the sense of Doctors, all sharpe authorities against lords, knights, and squires, and against other secular men, as thou doest against priests?

Choose, preach against whom thou wilt, so that touch not this scab.

And I said: sir, whatsoeuer men or women, lords or ladies, or any other that are present in our preaching specially, or in our commoning, after our cunning, we tell out to them their office and their charges: But sir, since Chrysostome saith, that priests are the stomacke of the people, it is needfull in preaching, and also in commoning, to be most busie about this priesthood: Since by the vitiousnesse of priests both lords and commons are most sinfully infected and led into the worst. And because that the couetousnesse of priests and pride, and the boast that they haue and make of their dignitie and power; destroyeth not onely the vertues of priesthood in priests themselues, but also ouer this, it stirreth God to take great vengeance both vpon the lords, and vpon the commons, which suffer these priests charitablie.

The vitiousnes and pride of priests infecteth all the world.

A spitefull mockenelle that is in scarlet gownes.

And the archbishop said to me: Thou iudgest euery priest proud that will not goe arraied as thou doest: by God I deeme him to be more meeke that goeth euery day in a scarlet gowne, then thou in thy thred-bare blew gowne. Whereby knowest thou a proud man?

The signes and markes of proud priests.

And I said: sir, a proud priest may be knowne, when he denieth to follow Christ and his apostles, in willful pouertie and other vertues: and coueteth worldly worship, and taketh it gladly, and gathereth together with pleading, manassing, or with flattering, or with simonie any worldly goods: And most, if a priest busie him not chiefly in himselfe, and after in all other men and women after his cunning & power to withstand sin.

Paul saieth God shal iudge all fornicators. what say you my lord?

And the archb. said to me: Though thou knewest a priest to haue all these vices, and though thou sawest a priest lowely lie now by a woman knowing her fleshly: wouldest thou therfore demme this priest damnable? I say to thee that in the turning about of thy hand, such a sinner may be verily repented.

Priests ought to be examples of good liuing.

And I said: sir, I will not damne any man for any sinne that I know done or may bee done, so that the sinner leaueth his sinne. But by authoritie of holy Scripture, he that sinneth thus openly as ye shew here, is damnable for doing of such a sin: and most specially, a priest that should be example to all other for to hate and flie sinne. And in how short time that euer ye say that such a sinner may be repented: he ought not of him that knoweth his sinning, to be iudged verily repentant, without open euidence of great shame and heartie sorie for sinne. For whosoeuer (and specially a priest) that vseth pride, enuie, couetousnesse, lecherie, simonie, or any other vices; sheweth not as open euidence of repentance as hee hath giuen euill example and occasion of sinning, if he continue in any such sinne as long as he may: it is likely that sinne leaueth him, and he not sinne. And as I vnderstand, such a one sinneth vnto death, for whom no body oweth to pray, as saint John saith.

Clerkly spoken and like a paralite.

And a clerke said then to the archbishop: sir, the lenger that ye appose him, the worse he is: and the more ye busie you to amend him, the waywarder he is. For he is of so shrewd a kind that he shameth not onely to be himselfe a foule nesk, but without shame he busieth him to make his nesk fouler.

Forget nothing I pray you my lord.

And then the archbishop said to his clerke: Suffer a while, for I am at an end with him, for there is another point certified against him, and I will heare what he saith thereto.

And so then he said to me: Loe it is here certified against thee that thou preachedst openly at Shrewsburie, that it is not lawfull to sweare in any case.

Not lawful to sweare by any creature. When ought not to sweare; when without an oth he may excuse himself that is compelled to sweare.

And I said: sir, I preached neuer so openly, nor I haue taught in this wise in any place. But sir, as I preached in Shrewsburie, with my protestation I say to you now here: that by the authoritie of the Gospel of saint James, and by witnes of diuers saints and doctors: I haue preached openly in one place or other, that it is not lefull in any case to sweare by any creature. And ouer this sir, I haue also preached and taught by the foresaid authorities: that no body should sweare in any case, if that without oth in any wise hee that is charged to sweare might excuse him to them that haue power to compell him to sweare, in lefull thing and lawfull. But if a man may not excuse him without oth, to them that haue power to compel him to sweare, then he ought to sweare onely by God, taking him only, that is, sothfastnesse, for to witnesse to sothfastnes.

Well said sir John of you, your holy mother stroke your head.

And then a clerke asked me if it were not lefull to a subiect at the bidding of his prelate, for to kneele downe and touch the holy Gospell booke, and kisse it, saying; So helpe me God and this holy dome: for he should after his cunning and power do all things that his prelate commandeth him.

And I said to them: sirs, ye speake here full generally or largely. What if a prelate commanded his subiect to doe an vnlawfull thing: should he obey thereto?

These prelats would bee thought to be good, be they neuer so bad.

And the archbishop said to me: A subiect ought not to suppose, that his prelate will bid him doe an vnlawfull thing. For a subiect ought to thinke that his prelate will bid him doe nothing but that hee will answere for before God, that it is lefull: And then, though the bidding of the prelate be vnlafull, the subiect hath no perill to fulfill it, since that he thinketh and iudgeth, that whatsoeuer thing his prelate biddeth him doe, that it is lefull to him for to do it.

And I said: sir I truste not thereto. But to our purpose: Sir, I tell you, that I was once in a gentlemans house, and there were then two clerkes there, a master of diuinitie, and a man of law, which man of law was also communing in diuinitie. And among other things, these men spake of others, and the man of law said: at the bidding of his soueraigne, which had power to charge him to sweare, hee would lay his hand vpon a booke, and heare his charge: and if his charge to his vnderstanding were vnlefull hee would hastily withdraw his hand vpon the booke, taking there onely God to witnesse, that hee would fulfill that lefull charge, after his power. And the master of diuinitie said then to him thus: Certaine, hee that layeth his hand vpon a booke in this wise, and maketh there a promise to do that thing that he is commanded; is obliged thereby by booke oth, then to fulfill his charge. For no doubt, he that chargeth him to lay his hand thus vpon a booke (touching the booke, and swearing by it, and kissing it, promising in this forme to doe this thing or that) will say and witnesse, that hee that toucheth thus a booke, and kisseth it, hath sworne vpon that booke. And all other men that see that man thus doe, and also all those that heare hereof, in the same wise will say and witnesse, that this man hath sworne vpon a booke. Wherefore, the master of diuinitie said, it was not lefull neither to giue nor to take any such charge vpon a booke: for euery booke is nothing else, but diuers creatures, of which it is made of. Therefore to sweare vpon a booke, is to sweare by creatures, and this swearing is euer vnlefull. This sentence witnesseth Chrysostome plainely, blaming them greatly that bring forth a booke for to sweare vpon, charging clerkes that in no wise they constraine any body to sweare, whether they thinke a man to sweare true or false.

A communication betwixt a lawyer and a diuine.

To sweare by a booke is to sweare by creatures. Chrysostome blameth booke oth.

And the archbishop and his clerkes scorned me, and blamed me greatly for this saying. And the archbishop manassed mee with great punishment and sharpe, except I left this opinion of swearing.

Here now saieth ed Boner, to scratch him by the face.

And I said: sir, this is not mine opinion, but it is the opinion of Christ our Sauiour, and of saint James, and of Chrysostome, and of other diuers saints and doctors.

Then the archbishop bad a clerke reade this homilie of Chrysostome: which homilie, this clerke held in his hand written in a roll: which roll the archbishop caused to be taken from my fellow at Canturburie. And so then this clerke read this roll, till he came to a clause where Chrysostome saith, that it is sin to sweare well.

Either Maluren, or else sir Brian Blowcole.

And then a clerke (Maluren, as I gesse) said to the archbishop: sir, I pray you wete of him, how he vnderstandeth Chrysostome here, saying it to be sin to sweare well.

And so the archbishop asked mee, how I vnderstood here Chrysostome.

And certaine, I was somewhat afraid to answere hereto:

Christ promiseth and giueth truely and verrance.

For I had busied me to studie about the sense thereof, but lifting vp my mind to God, I prayed him of grace. And as fast as I thought how Christ said to his apostles: When for my name ye shall be brought before iudges, I shall giue into your mouth, wisedome that your aduersaries shall not againstsay. And trusting faithfully in the word of God, I said: sir, I know well that many men and women, haue now swearing so in custome, that they know not, nor will not know, that they do euill to sweare as they doe: But they thinke and say, that they doe well for to sweare as they do, though they know well that they swear vntruely. For they say, they may by their swearing (though it be false) voide blame or temporall harme, which they should haue if they sweare not thus. And sir, many men and women maintaine strongly that they sweare well, when that thing is soth that they sweare for. Also full many men and women say now, that it is well done to sweare by creatures, when they may not (as they say) otherwise be beleeued. And also, full many men and women now say, that it is well done to sweare by God, and by our Ladie, and by other saints, for to haue them in minde. But since al these sayings are but excusations, and sinne: me thinketh sir, that this sense of Chrysostome may be alleaged well against all such swearers: witnessing that all these sinne grieuously, though they thinke themselues for to sweare in this foresaid wise, well: For it is euill done, and great sin for to sweare truth, when in any maner a man may excuse himselfe without oth.

The place of Chrysostome expounded, how it is sinne to sweare well. What it is to sweare well.

And the archbishop said, that Chrysostome might bee thus vnderstood.

And then a clerke said to me: wilt thou tarrie my lord no lenger, but submit thee here meekely to the ordinance of holy church, and lay thy hand vpon a booke, touching the holy Gospel of God, promising not onely with thy mouth, but also with thine heart to stand to my lords ordinance?

Pope holy church.

And I said: sir, haue I not told you here, how that I heard a master of Diuinitie say: that in such case it is all one to touch a booke, and to sweare by a booke?

To touch a booke is to sweare by a booke.

And the archbishop said: There is no master of Diuinity in England so great, that if he hold this opinion before me, but I shall punish him as I shall doe thee, except thou sweare as I shall charge thee.

It is happie that he called not for a cattle, and made a Sceuola of him as Boner did of Tomkins.

And I said: sir, is not Chrysostome an ententife Doctor?

And the archbishop said, yea.

And I said: if Chrysostome proueth him worthie great blame, that bringeth forth a booke to sweare vpon: it must needs follow, that hee is more to blame that sweateth on that booke.

And the archbishop said: if Chrysostome meant accordingly to the ordinance of holy church, we will accept him.

It is happie that Chrysostome was not here, or else he would haue had him by the backe.

And then said a clerke to me: Is not the word of God and God himselfe equipollent, that is, of one authoritie?

But that word cannot be touched. Thorp refuseth not to sweare.

And I said, yea.

Then he said to me, why wilt thou not sweare then by the Gospell of God, that is, Gods word, since it is al one to sweare by the word of God and by God himselfe?

And I said: sir, since I may not now otherwise be beleeued, but by swearing: I perceiue (as Austine saith) that it is not spedefull that ye that should be my brethren should not beleeue me; therefore I am readie by the word of God (as the Lord commanded me by his word) to sweare.

Then the clerke said to mee: Lay then thine hand vpon the booke, touching the holie Gospell of God and take thy charge.

And I said: sir, I vnderstand that the holy Gospell of God may not be touched with mans hand.

And the clerke said I fonded, and that I said not truth.

And I asked this clerke, whether it were more to reade the Gospell then to touch the Gospell.

And he said, it was more to reade the Gospell.

Whether the booke be the Gospell. Hierome saith the Gospell is not the Gospell for reading, but for beleeuing. The Gospell is not the leaues of the booke but the roote of reason. Saint Paul.

Then I said: sir, by authoritie of saint Hierome, the Gospell is not the Gospel for reading of the letter, but for the beleefe that men haue in the word of God. That it is the Gospell that we beleeue, and not the letter that we reade: for because the letter that is touched with mans hand, is not the Gospell, but the sentence that is verily beleeued in mans heart, is the Gospell. For so Hierome saith: The Gospell, that is the vertue of Gods word, is not in the leaues of the booke, but it is in the roote of reason. Neither the Gospell (he saith) is in the writing aboue of the letters, but the Gospell is in the marking of the sentence of Scriptures. This sentence approueth S. Paul, saying thus; The kingdome of God is not in word, but in vertue. And Dauid saith: The voice of the Lord, that is, his word, is in vertue. And after Dauid saith: Through the word of God the heauens were formed, and in the spirit of his mouth is all the vertue of them. And I pray you sir, vnderstand yee well how Dauid saith; then in the spirit of the mouth of the Lord, is all the vertue of angels and of men.

Dauid.

This clerke was well seene in the Masse booke.

And the clerke said to me: Thou wouldest make vs too fond with thee. Say we not that the Gospell is written in the Masse booke?

And I said: sir, though men vse to say thus, yet it is an vnperfect speech. For the principall part of a thing is properly the whole thing. For loe, mans soule that may not now bee seene here nor touched with any sensible thing, is properly man. And all the vertue of a tree is in the root therof that may not be seene, for doe away the roote, and the tree is destroyed. And sir, as ye said to mee right now, God and his word are of one authoritie: And sir, saint Hierome witnesseth, that Christ (very God and very man) is hid in the letter of the law: thus also sir, the Gospell is hid in the letter. For sir, as it is full likely many diuers men and women here in the earth, touched Christ and saw him, and knew his bodily person, which neither touched, nor saw, nor knew ghostly his godhead: right thus sir, many men now touch and see, and write, and reade the Scriptures of Gods law, which neither see, touch, nor reade effectually the Gospell. For as the godhead of Christ (that is, the vertue of God) is knowne by the vertue of beleefe, so is the Gospell, that is Christs word.

The Gospell is not the letter but hid in the letter.

And a clerke said to me: These be full miskie matters and vnlauore that thou shewest here to vs.

Miskie matters for your blind eyes.

And I said: sir, if ye that are masters, know not plainely this sentence, ye may sore dread that the kingdome of heauen be taken from you, as it was from the princes of priests and from the elders of the Iewes.

And then a clerke (as I gesse, Malucren) said to me: Thou knowest not thine equiuocations: for the kingdome of heauen hath diuers vnderstandings. What callest thou the kingdome of heauen in this sentence, that thou shewest here?

And I said: sir, by good reason and sentence of Doctors the realm of heauen is called here, ỹ vnderstanding of Gods word.

The kingdome of God taken for the vnderstanding of Gods word.

And a clerk said to me: From whom thinkest thou that this vnderstanding is taken away?

And I said: sir, (by authoritie of Christ himselfe) the effectuall vnderstanding of Christs word is taken away from all them chiefly, which are great lettered men, and presume to vnderstand high things, and will be holden wise men, and desire mastership and high state and dignitie: but they will not conforme them to the liuing & teaching of Christ & of his apostles.

This sait was somewhat too sharpe for their rotten sleeues abide.

Then the archbishop said: Well, well, thou wilt iudge thy soueraignes. By God, the king doth not his dutie, but he suffer thee to be condemned.

And then another clerke said to me: Why (on friday that last was) counselledst thou a man of my lords that hee should not shriue him to no man but onely to God?

Helpe downe with him sir Iohn.

And with this asking I was abashed: And then by and by I knew that I was subtillie betraied of a man that came to me in prison on the friday before, communing with me in this matter of confession. And certaine, by his words I thought, that this man came then to me of full feruent and charitable will: But now I know he came to tempt me and to accuse me; God forgiue him if it be his will. And withall my heart when I had thought thus, I said to this clerke: Sir, I pray you that ye would fetch this man hither: and all the words as neare as I can repeate them, which that I spake to him, on friday in the prison, I will rehearse now here before you al, and before him.

Note here the crattie practise of this holy church.

And (as I gesse) the archb. said then to me: They that are now here, suffice to repeat them. How saidst thou to him?

And I said: sir, that man came and asked me in diuers things, and after his asking, I answered him (as I vnderstood) that good was: And as he shewed to me by his words, he was sorie of his liuing in court, and right heauie for his owne vicious liuing, and also for the viciousnes of other men, and specially of priests euill liuing: and therefore he said to mee with a sorowfull heart (as I gessed) that hee purposed fully within short time for to leaue the court, and to busy him to know Gods law, and to conforme all his life thereafter. And when hee had said to me these words and moe other which I would rehearse and he were present, he prayed me to heare his confession. And I said to him: sir, wherefore come ye to me, to bee confessed of me? ye wote well that the archbishop putteth and holdeth mee here, as one vnworthy either to giue or to take any Sacrament of holy church.

A false brother. Auricular confession.

And he said to me: Brother I wote well, and so wote many other moe, that you and such other are wrongfully vered, and therefore I commune with you the more gladly. And I said to him: Certaine I wote well that many men of this court, and specially the priests of this household would be full euill apaid both with you and me, if they wist that ye were confessed of me. And he said, that he cared not therefore, for he had full little affection in them: And as me thought, hee spake these words and many other, of so good will and of so high desire, for to haue knowne and done the pleasant will of God. And I said to him, as with my foresaid protestation I say to you now here: sir, I counsell you, for to absent you from al euil companie, & to draw you to them that loue and busie them to know and to keepe the precepts of God: And then the good spirit of God will moue you for to occupie busily all your wits in gathering together of all your sins, as far as ye can bethinke you, shaming greatly of them and sorrowing heartily for them: Yea sir, the holy Ghost wil then put in your heart a good wil and a feruent desire for to take and to hold a good purpose, to hate euer & to flie, (after your cunning and power) all occasion of sinne: and so then, wisedome shall come to you from aboue, lightening (with diuers beames of grace and of heauenly desire) all your wits, enforming you how ye shall trust stedfastly in the mercy of the Lord knowe knowledging to him onely all your vicious liuing, praying to him euer deuoutly of charitable counsell and continuance, hoping without doubt, that if yee continue thus, busying you faithfully to know and to keepe his biddings, that he will (for he onely may) forgiue you all your sins. And this man said to me: Though God forgiue men their sinnes, yet it behoueth men to be assoiled of priests, and to doe the penance that they enioyne them.

A crafftie traine of a popish dissembler.

God onely forgiueth sinne, man only can counsell to leaue sin.

And I said to him: sir, it is all one to assoile men of their sinnes, and to forgiue men their sinnes. Wherefore since it pertaineth onely to God to forgiue sinne: it sufficeth in this case, to counsell men and women for to leaue their sinne, and to comfort them that busie them thus to do, for to hope stedfastly in the mercy of God. And againeward, priests ought to tell sharpely to customable sinners, that if they will not make an end of their sinne, but continue in diuers sinnes while that they may sinne, all such deserue paine without any end. And therefore, priests should euer busie them to liue well and holily, and to teach the people busily and truely the word of God, shewing to all folke in open preaching and in priuie counselling, that the Lord God onely forgiueth sinne. And therfore, those priests that take vpon them to assoile men of their sinnes, blaspheme God: since that it pertaineth onely to the Lord, to assoile men of all their sinnes. For no doubt a thousand yeare after that Christ was man, no priest of Christ durst take vpon him to teach the people, neither priuily nor apertly, that they behoued needs to come to be assoiled of them, as priests now doe. But by authoritie of Christs word, priests bound indurate customable sinners to euerlasting paines, which in no time of their liuing would busie them faithfully to know the biddings of God, nor to keepe them. And againe, all they that would occupy all their wits to hate and to flie all occasion of sin, dreading euer all things to offend God, and louing for to please him continually: to these men and women priests shewed how the Lord assoiled them of all their sinnes; and thus Christ promised to confirme in heauen, all the binding and loosing that priests by authority of his word, bind men in sin that are indurate therein, or loose them out of sin here vpon earth, that are verily repentant. And this man hearing these words said, that he might well in conscience consent to this sentence. But hee said: Is it not needefull to the lay people that cannot thus doe, to goe shrieue them to priests? And I said, If a man feele himselfe so distroubled with any sinne, that he cannot by his owne wit auoide this sin without counsell of them that are herein wiser then he; in such a case, the counsell of a good priest is full necessarie. And if a good priest faile, as they do now commonly, in such a case, saint Augustine saith, that a man may lawfully commune and take counsell of a vertuous secular man. But certaine, that man or woman is ouerladen and too beastly, which cannot bring their owne sinnes into their mind, busying them night and day for to hate and to forsake all their sins, doing a sigh for them after their cunning and power. And sir, full accordinglie to this sentence vpon Midlent Sunday (two yeare as I gesse now agone) I heard a monke of Feuersam, that men called Worden, preach at Canturburie at the crosse within Christ church abbey, saying thus of confession: That as through the suggestion of the feend without counsell of any other body, of themselues many men and women, can imagine and find meanes and waies enough to come to pride, to theft, to lecherie, and other diuers vices: in contrariwise this monke said, Since the Lord God is more readie to forgiue sinne then the feend is or may be of power, to moue any body to sinne: then whosoeuer will shame and sorrow heartily for their sins, knowledging them faithfully to God, amending them after their power and cunning, without counsell of any other body then of God and of himselfe (through the grace of God) all such men and women may find sufficient meanes to come to Gods mercy, and so to be cleane assoiled of all their sinnes. This sentence I said sir to this man of yours, and the selfe words as neere as I can gesse.

Christ and confession to priests.

Worden monk of Feuersam preaching of confession.

Hearty repentance to God needeth no confession to a priest.

And the archbishop said: Holy Church approueth not this learning.

No nor nothing else that is good.

And I said, sir, holy church of which Christ is head in heauen and in earth, must needs approue this sentence. For loe, hereby all men and women may, if they will, be sufficiently taught to know and keepe the commandements of God, and to hate and to flie continually all occasion of sinne, and to loue and to seeke vertues busilie, and to beléeue in God stablie, and to trust in his mercie stedfastly, and so to come to perfect charity and continue therin perseuerantly. And more ỳ Lord asketh not of any man here now in this life. And certaine, since Jesu Christ died vpon the crosse, wilfully to make men free; men of the church are too bold and too busie, to make men thrall, binding them vnder the paine of endles curse (as they say) to doe many obseruances and ordinances, which neither the liuing nor teaching of Christ nor of his apostles approueth.

Christ giueth freedome, the pope giueth thraldome.

And a clerke said then to me: Thou shewest plainely here thy deceit, which thou hast learned of them that trauell to sow the popple among the wheat. But I counsell thee to goe away cleane from this learning, and submit thee lowly to my Lord, and thou shalt find him yet to be gratious to thee.

And as fast then, an other clerke said to me: How wast thou so bold at Pauls Crosse in London, to stand there hard with thy tippet bounden about thine heade, and to reproue in his sermon the worthie clerke Alkerton, drawing away all that thou mightest: yea, and the same day at after noone, thou meeting the worthie Doctor in Watlingstreet, calledst him false flatterer and hypocrite.

And I said: sir, I thinke certainely that there was no man nor woman that hated verily sinne, and loued vertues (hearing the sermon of the clerke at Orford, and also Alkertons sermon) but they said or might iustly say, that Alkerton reproued that clerke vntruly, and slandered him wrongfully and vncharitablie. For no doubt: if the liuing and teaching of Christ chiefly and of his apostles bee true, no body that loueth God and his law, will blame any sentence that the clerke then preached there: since by authority of Gods word, & by approued Saints and Doctors, and by open reason, this clerke approued all things cleerely that he preached there.

And a clerke of the archbishops said to me: his sermon was false, and that hee sheweth openly, since hee dare not stand forth and defend his preaching that he then preached there.

And I said: sir, I thinke that he purposeth to stand stedfastly thereby, or else he slandereth foully himselfe, and also many other that haue great trust that hee will stand by the truth of the Gospell. For I wote well, this sermon is written both in Latine and English, and many men haue it and they set great price thereby. And sir: If yee were present with the archbishop at Lambeth when this clerke appeared and was at his answer before the archbishop, ye wote well that this clerke denied not there his sermon, but two daies hee maintained it before the archbishop and his clerks.

And then the archbishop or one of his clerks said (I wote not which of them) that harlot shall bee met with, for that sermon. For no man but he and thou, and such other false harlots, prailseth any such preaching.

And then the archbishop said: Your cursed sect is busie, and it loueth right greatly to contrary and to destroy the priuiledge and freedome of holy church.

The true freedome of holy church not destroyed but increased by true preachers.

And I said: sir, I know no men that trauell so busilie as this sect doth (which you reproue) to make rest and peace in holy church. For pride, couetousnesse, and simonie, which distrouble most holy church; this sect hateth and fleeth, and trauelleth busilie to moue all other men in like mauer, vnto meekenesse and wilfull pouertie, and charitie, and free ministring of the Sacraments: this sect loueth and vseth, and is full busie to moue all other folks thus to doe. For these vertues, owe all members of holy church, to their head Christ.

Then a clerke said to the archbishop: sir, it is farre daies, and ye haue farre to ride to night; therefore make an end with him, for he will none make: but the more sir, that ye busie you for to draw him toward you, the more contumare he is made and the further fro you.

A good secular man may be counseller, where a priest faileth, by S. Augustine.

And then Malueren said to me: William, kneele downe, and pray my lord of grace, and leaue all thy fantasies, and become a child of holy church.

Take my lords blessing and stand vp.

And I said: sir, I haue prayed the archbishop oft, and yet I pray him for the loue of Christ, that hee will leaue his indignation that he hath against me: and that he will suffer me after my cunning and power, for to doe mine office of priesthood, as I am charged of God to doe it. For I couet nought else but to serue my God to his pleasing in the state that I stand in, and haue taken me to.

And the archbishop said to me: If of good heart thou wilt submit thee now here meekely, to be ruled from this time forth by my counsell, obeying meekely and wilfully to my ordinance, thou shalt find it most profitable and best to thee for to do thus. Therefore tarrie thou me no longer, grant to doe this that I haue said to thee now here shortly, or deny it vtterly.

My lord hath hast, for being benighted.

And I said to the archbishop: sir, owe wee to beleeue that Jesu Christ was and is, very God and very man?

And the archbishop said, yea.

And I said: sir, owe we to beleeue that all Christs liuing and his teaching is true in euery point?

And he said, yea.

And I said: sir, owe we to beléeue that the liuing of the apostles, and the teaching of Christ, and all the prophets, are true which are written in the Bible, for the health and saluation of good people?

And he said, yea.

And I said: sir, owe all christian men and women after their cunning and power, for to conforme all their liuing, to the teaching specially of Christ, and also to the teaching and liuing of his apostles and of prophets, in things that are pleasant to God, and edification of his church?

And he said, yea.

And I said: sir, ought the doctrine, the bidding, or the counsell of any body, to be accepted or obeyed vnto; except this doctrine, these biddings or this counsell, may be granted and affirmed by Christs liuing and his teaching specially, or by the liuing and teaching of his apostles and prophets?

And why compell you this man to the contrarie?

And the archbishop said to me: Other doctrine ought not to bee accepted, nor wee owe not to obey to any mans bidding or counsell, except we can perceiue that his bidding or counsell, according with the life and teaching of Christ, and of his apostles and prophets.

Thorpe consent to submit himselfe to the ordinance of councels.

And I said: sir, is not all the learning, and biddings and counsels of holy church, meanes and healefull remedies, to know and to withstand the priuie suggestions, and the apert temptations of the fiend: and also waies and healefull remedies, to slay pride and all other deadly sinnes, and the branches of them, and soueraigne meanes to purchase grace for to withstand and ouercome all the fleshly lusts and mouings.

And the archbishop said, yea.

And I said: sir, whatsoeuer thing ye or any other body bid or counsell me to doe, accordingly to this foresaid learning, after my cunning and power, through the helpe of God, I will meekely with all my heart obey thereto.

And the archbishop said to me: Submit thee then now here meekely and wilfully, to the ordinance of holy church, which I shall shew to thee.

And I said: sir, accordingly as I haue here now before you rehearsed, I will now be readie to obey full gladly to Christ the head of the holy church, and to the learning and biddings and counsels of euery pleasing member of him.

If Boner had beene here, he would not haue stricken the cupbord.

Then the archbishop striking with his hand fiercely vpon a cupbord, spake to me with a great spirit saying: By Jesu, but if thou leaue not such additions, obliging thee now here without any exception to mine ordinance (or that I goe out of this place) I shall make thee as sure, as any theefe that is in the prison of Lanterne: aduise thee now what thou wilt doe. And then as if he had beene angred, hee went fro the cupbord where hee stood, to a windowe.

The multitude is not to be followed in euill.

And then Malueren and an other clerke came neerer mee, and they spake to me many words full pleasantly: and an other while they manassed mee, and counselled full busilie to submit me, or else they said I should not escape punishing ouer measure: for they said, I should be degraded, cursed, and burned, and so then damned. But now they said, thou maiest eschew all these mischieses, if thou wilt submit thee wilfully and meekly to this worthie prelate, that hath cure of thy soule. And for the pitie of Christ (said they) bethinke thee, how great clerks the bishop of Lincolne, Yerford, and Purney were, and yet are, and also B. that is a well vnderstanding man. Which also haue forsaken and reuoked, all the learning and opinions, that thou and such other hold. Therefore, since each of them is mikle wiser then thou art, we counsell thee for the best: that by the example of these foure clerks, thou follow them, submitting thee as they did.

See what man is, God giuing him vp to himselfe.

And one of the bishops clerks said then there, that he heard Nicol. Yerford say: that since he forsooke and reuoked all the learning and Lollards opinions, he hath had mikle greater fauour and more delight to hold against them, then euer hee had to hold with them, while he held with them.

As cleane from christ as from sinne.

And therfore Malueren said to me: I vnderstand and thou wilt take thee to a priest, and shriue thee cleane, forsake all such opinions, and take thee penance of my lord here, for the holding and teaching of them: within short time, thou shalt bee greatly comforted in this doing.

And I said to the clerks, that thus busilie counselled mee to fellow these foresaid men: Sirs, if these men of whom ye counsell me to take example, had forsaken benefices of temporall profit, and of worldly worship, so that they had absented them, and eschewed from all occasions of couetousnesse and of fleshly lust, and had taken vpon them simple liuing, and wilfull pouertie: they had herein giuen good example to me and to many other, to haue followed them. But now, since all these foure men, haue slanderously and shamefully done the contrarie, consenting to receiue and to haue and to hold temporall benefices, liuing now more worldly, and more fleshly then they did before, conforming them to the maners of this world: I forsake them herein, and in all their foresaid slanderous doing.

Other mens examples are so to be followed, as they be the followers of Christ.

For I purpose with the helpe of God (into remission of my sinnes, and of my foule cursed liuing) to hate and to flee priuily and apertly, to follow these men, teaching and counselling whomsoeuer that I may, for to flee and to eschew the way that they haue chosen to goe in, which will leade them to the worst end, (if in conuenient time they repent them not) verily forsaking and reuoking openly the slander that they haue put, and euery day yet put, to Christs church. For certaine, so open blasphemy and slander as they haue spoken and done, in their reuoking and forsaking of the truth, ought not nor may not priuily be amended, duly. Therefore sirs, I pray you that you busie not for to moue me to follow these men, in reuoking and forsaking the truth, and soothfastnes as they haue done, and yet do: wherein by open euidence they stirre God to great wroth, and not onely against themselues, but also against all them that fauor them, or consent to them herein, or that communeth with them, except it be for their amendment. For whereas these men first were pursued of enemies, now they haue obliged them by oth for to slander and pursue Christ in his members. Wherefore (as I trust stedfastly in the goodnesse of God) the worldly couetousnesse, and the lustie liuing and the sliding from the truth of these runagates; shall be to me and to many other men and women, an example and an euidence, to stand more stiffie by the truth of Christ.

Promotions commonly and great liuings, choke truth.

For certaine, right many men and women do marke and abhor the soulenesse and cowardnesse of these foresaid vntrue men, how they are ouercome and stopped with benefices, and withdrawne from the truth of Gods word, forsaking vtterly to suffer therefore bodily persecution. For by this vnfaithfull doing and apostasie of them (specially that are great lettered men) and haue knowledged openly the truth: and now, either for pleasure or displeasure of tyrants, haue taken hire and temporall wages to forsake the truth, and to hold against it, slandering and pursuing them that couet to follow Christ in the way of righteousnes, many men and women therefore are now moued. But many moe through the grace of God, shall be moued herby for to learne the truth of God, to doe thereafter, and to stand boldly thereby.

Men following the waies of Balaam.

Then the archbishop said to his clerks: Busie you no longer about him, for he and other such as he is, are confedered together that they will not sweare to be obedient, and to submit them to prelats of holy church. For now since I stood here, his fellow also sent me word that he will not sweare, and that this fellow counselled him that he should not sweare to me. And loselL, in that thing that in thee is, thou hast busied thee to lose this yong man, but blessed bee God, thou shalt not haue thy purpose of him. For he hath forsaken all thy learning, submitting him to bee buxum and obedient to the ordinance of holy church, and weepeth full bitterly, and curseth thee full heartily for the venemous teaching which thou had shewed to him, counselling him to do thereafter.

Thorpes fellow refuseth to sweare to the prelats.

And for thy false counselling of many other and him, thou hast great cause to be right sorie. For long time thou hast busied thee to peruert whomsoeuer thou mightest. Therefore, as many deathes thou art worthie of, as thou hast giuen euill counsels. And therefore by Jesu, thou shalt goe thither, where Nicol. Herford and Thomas Purney were harbored. And I vndertake, or this day wip.daies, thou shalt be right glad for to do what thing that euer I bid thee to do. And loselL, I shall alsay, if I can make thee there as sorrowfull (as it was told mee) thou wast glad of my last going out of England. By S Thomas, I shall turne thy ioy into sorrow.

Vide supra, pag. 472.

And I said: sir, there can no body proue lawfully that I ioyed euer, of the maner of your going out of this land.

Arundell the Archb. going out of England.

But sir, to say the sooth, I was ioyfull when ye were gone: for the bishop of London in whose prison yee left me, found in mee no cause for to hold mee longer in his prison, but at the request of my friends, he deliuered me to them, asking of me no maner of submitting.

The gentlenes of the bishop of London to Thorpe.

Then the archbishop said to me: Wherfore that I yede out of England, is vnknowne to thee: But bee this thing well knowne to thee, that God (as I wote well) hath called me againe, and brought me into this land, for to destroy thee and the false sect that thou art of: as by God, I shall pursue you so narrowly, that I shall not leaue a slip of you in this land.

So promised Winchester in queene Maries time, but that passed his power to performe.

And I said to the archbishop: sir, the holy prophet Jeremy said to the false prophet Anany: When the word, that is, the prophecie of a prophet is knowne or fulfilled: then it shall bee knowne, that the Lord sent the prophet in truth.

A notable answer of Thorpe to the bishop, promising to destroy all the Gospellers. Such pearles would better beseeme my L. your golden hoores.

And the archbishop (as if he had not beene pleased with my saying) turned him awayward hither and thither, and said: By God, I shall set vpon thy shinnes a paire of pearles, that thou shalt be glad to change thy voice.

These and many moe wondrous and contuicious words, were spoken to mee, manassing mee and all other of the same sect, for to be punished and destroyed vnto the vttermost.

At illi clamabant dicentes, tolle tolle, crucifige eum. Luke 23.

And the archbishop called then to him a clerke, and rowned with him: and that clerke went forth, and sone he brought in the Constable of Saltwood castle, and the archbishop rowned a good while with him: and then the constable went forth, and then came in diuers seculars, and they scorned mee on euery side, and manassed me greatly. And some counselled the archbishop to burne me by and by, and some other counselled him to drowne me in the sea, for it is neare hand there.

And a clerke standing beside me, there kneeled downe to the archbishop, praying him that hee would deliuer me to him for to say Mattens with him: and hee would vndertake, that within three daies I should not resist any thing that were commanded me to do of my prelate.

And the archb. said, that he would ordaine for me himselfe.

And then after, came againe the Constable and spake priuilie to the archbishop: and the archbishop commanded the constable to lead me forth thence with him, and so he did. And when we were gone forth thence, wee were sent after againe. And when I came in againe before the archbishop: a clerke bad me kneele downe and aske grace, and submit me lowly, and I I should find it for the best.

Obedience to God and to his law would not serue.

And I said then to the archbishop: Sir, as I haue said to you diuers times to day, I will wilfully and lowly obey and submit me to bee ordained euer after my cunning and power, to God and to his law, and to euerie member of holy church, as far forth as I can perceiue that these members accord with their head Christ, and will teach me, rule me, or chastise me by authoritie, specially of Gods law.

And the archbishop said: I wist well he would not without such additions submit him.

And

And then I was rebuked, scorned, and manassed on euery side: and yet after this, diuers persons cried vpon me to kneele downe and submit me; but I stood still, and spake no word. And then there was spoken of me, and to me, many great words, and I stood and heard them manasse, curse, and scorne me: but I said nothing.

In patience and silence possesse your soules.

Then a while after, the archbishop said to me: Wilt thou not submit thee to the ordinance of holy Church?

And I said: Sir, I will full gladly submit me, as I haue shewed you before.

And then the archbishop bad the Constable to haue me forth thence in haste.

And so then I was led forth, and brought into a foule vnhonest prison, where I came neuer before. But thanked be God, when all men were gone forth then from me, and had spatred fast the prison doore after them; by and by after, I therein by my selfe, busied me to thinke on God, and to thanke him for his goodnesse. And I was then greatly comforted in all my wits, not onely for that I was then deliuered for a time from the sight, from the hearing, from the presence, from the scorning, and from the manassing of mine enemies: but much more I reioiced in the Lord, because that through his grace he kept me so, both among the flattering specially, among the manassing of mine aduersaries, that without heauinesse and anguish of my conscience, I passed away from them. For as a tree laid vpon another tree, ouerthwart or crosse wise, so was the archbishop and his three clerks alwaies contrary to me, and I to them.

Thorp cast into prison.

Thorp comforted and strengthened of the Lord, after his conflict with the bishop.

Now good God for thine holy name, and to the praising of thy most blessed name, make vs one together, if it be thy will, (by authority of thy word, that is true perfit charity) and else not. And that it may thus be, all that this writing reade or heare, pray heartily to the Lord God, that hee for his great goodnesse that cannot bee with tongue expressed, grant to vs, and to all other which in the same wise, and for the same cause specially, or for any other cause be at distance, to be knit and made one in true faith, in stedfast hope, and in perfit charitie. Amen.

Besides this examination here aboue described, came an other treatise also to our hands of the same William Thorpe, vnder the name and title of his testament: which rather by the matter and handling thereof, might seeme to be counted a complaint of vicious priests: which treatise or testament, in this place we thought not meet to be left out.

MAtthew an Apostle of Christ, and his Gospeller, witnesseth truly in the holy Gospell, the most holy liuing and the most wholsome teaching of Christ. He rehearseth how that Christ likeneth them that heare his words and keep them, to a wise man that buildeth his house vpon a stone, that is, a stable and a sure ground. This house is mans soule, in whom Christ delighteth to dwell, if it be grounded, that is, stablished faithfully in his liuing and in his true teaching, adorned or made faire with diuers vertues, which Christ vsed and taught without any medling of any error, as are chiefly the conditions of charitie.

Christ dwelleth in a faithfull soule.

This foresaid stone is Christ, vpon which euery faithfull soule must be builded, since vpon none other ground, then vpon Christs liuing and his teaching, no body may make any building or housing, wherein Christ will come and dwell. This sentence witnesseth Saint Paul to the Corinthians, shewing to them that no body may set any other ground then is set, that is, Christs liuing and teaching. And because that all men and women should giue all their businesse here in this life, to build them vertuously vpon this sure foundation; Saint Paul knowledging the feruent desire, and the good will of the people of Ephesie, wrote to them comfortably, saying: Now ye are not strangers, guests, nor yet comelings, but ye are the citizens and of the household of God, builded aboue vpon the foundement of the Apostles and Prophets. In which foundement, euerie building that is builded or made through the grace of God, it increaseth or groweth into an holy temple: that is, euery bodie that is grounded or builded faithfully in the teaching and liuing of Christ, is there-through made the holy temple of God.

Christ is the stone whereon we must build.

How we are made the temple of God.

This is the stable ground and stedfast stone Christ, which is the sure corner stone, fast ioyning and holding mightily together two walles. For through Christ Iesu, meane or middle person of the Trinitie, the Father of heauen is pitious or mercifully ioyned and made one together to mankind. And through dread to offend God, and feruent loue to please him, men bee vnseparably made one to God, and defended surely vnder his protection. Also, this foresaid stone Christ, was figured by the square stones of which the temple of God was made. For as a square stone, wheresoeuer it is cast or laid, it abideth and lieth stably; so Christ, and euery faithfull member of his church by example of him, abideth and dwelleth stably in true faith, and in all other heauenly vertues in all aduersities that they suffer in this valley of teares.

Marke what we haue by Christ.

The property of a square stone.

For loe, when these foresaid square stones were hewen and wrought for to be laid in the walles or pillers of Gods temple, no noise or stroke of the workman was heard. Certaine, this silence in working of this stone, figureth Christ chiefly and his faithfull members, which by example of him haue been, and yet are, and euer to the worlds end shall be so meeke and patient in euery aduersity, that no sound, nor yet any grudging shall any time be perceiued in them.

Neuertheless, this chiefe and most worshipfull corner stone, which only is the ground of all vertues, proud beggers reproued: but this despight & reproofe Christ suffered most meekly in his own person, for to giue example of all meeknes and patience to all his faithfull followers. Certaine, this world is now so full of proud beggers, which are named priests: but the very office of working of priesthood which Christ approueth true, and accepteth, is far from the multitude of priests that now raigne in this world.

Christ is an example of all perfect meekues.

For from the highest priest to the lowest, all (as who say) study, that is, they imagine and trauell busily, how they may please this world and their flesh. This sentence and many such other dependeth vpon them, if it be well considered, either God the Father of heauen hath deceiued all mankind by the liuing specially and teaching of Iesu Christ, and by the liuing and teaching of his Apostles and prophets: or else all the popes that haue been since I had any knowledge or discretion, with all the colledge of cardinals, archbishops, and bishops, monks, canons, and friers, with all the contagious flocke of the comminalty of priesthood, which haue (all my life time, and mikle lenger) reigned and yet raigne, and increase damnably from sinne into sin, haue been, and yet bee proud obstinate heretikes, couetous simoners, and defouled adulterers in the ministring of the sacraments, and specially in the ministring of the sacrament of the altar. For as their works sheweth, whereto Christ biddeth vs take heed; the highest priests and prelats of this priesthood, challenge and occupy vnlefull temporall lordships. And for temporall fauor and meed, they sell and giue benefices to vnworthy and vnable persons; yea, these simoners sell sinne, suffering men and women in euery degree and estate, to lie & continue from yeare to yeare, in diuers vices slanderously. And thus by euill example of high priests in the church, lower priests vnder them are not onely suffered, but they are maintained to sell full deare (to the people for temporall meed) all the sacraments.

Priests seek the pleasure of this world.

Great odds betwixt the life of the popis, and Christ and his Apostles.

When priests forget Gods truth, ye see whither they run headlong. The great infect the small.

And thus all this foresaid priesthood is blowne so high, and borne vp in pride and vaine glory of their estate and dignity, and so blinded with worldly couetousnesse, that they disdaine to follow Christ in very meeknesse and wilfull pouerty, liuing holily, and preaching Gods word truly, freely, and continually, taking their liuelihood at the free will of the people of their pure almes, where and when they suffice not for their true and busie preaching to get their sustenance with their hands. To this true sentence grounded on Christs owne liuing and teaching of his Apostles, these foresaid worldly and fleshly priests will not consent effectually. But as their works, and also their words shew, boldly and vnshamefastly these forenamed priests and prelats, couet and inforce them mightily and busily, that all holy Scripture were expounded and drawne accordingly to their manners, and to their vngrounded vsages and findings. For they will not (since they hold it but folly and madnesse) conforme their manners to the pure and simple liuing of Christ and his Apostles, nor they will not follow freely their learning. Wherefore all the emperors and kings, and all other lords and ladies, and all the common people in euery degree and state, which haue before time knowne, or might haue knowne, and also all they that now yet know, or might know this foresaid witnesse of priesthood, and would not, nor yet will inforce them after their cunning and power, to withstand charitably, the foresaid enemies and traitors of Christ, and of his church: All these striue with antichrist against Iesu, and they shall heare the indignation of God almighty without end, if in conuenient time they amend them not, and repent them verily, doing therefore due mourning and sorrow, after their cunning and power. For through presumptuousnesse and negligence of priests and prelats (not of the church of Christ, but occupying their prelacie vnduly in the church) and also flattering and false couetousnesse of other diuers named priests: Lousengers and lounderers, are wrongfully made and named Heremites, and haue leaue to defraud poore and needy creatures of their liuelode, and to liue by their false winning and begging, in sloth and in other diuers vices. And also of these prelats, these coker noses, are suffered to liue in pride and hypocrisie, and to defoule themselues both bodily and ghostly. Also by the suffering and counsell of these foresaid prelats and other priests, are made both vaine brotherhoods and sisterhoods, full of pride and enuie, which are full contrary to the brotherhood of Christ, since they are cause of mickle dissention, and they multiply and sustaine it vncharitably: for in lusty eating and drinking vnmeasurably and out of time, they exercise themselues. Also this vaine confederacy of brotherhoods, is permitted to be of one clothing, and to hold together.

Fleshly priests cannot away with those things.

They hunt after this with tooth and naile.

An exhortation to all degrees, to see priesthood amended.

Prelats and priests negligent in their duties.

And in all these vngrounded and vnlefull doings, priests are partners, and great medlers and counsellers: and ouer this viciousnesse, heremites and pardoners, ankerers, and strange beggers, are licensed and admitted of prelats and priests, for

to

to beguile the people with flatterings and leasings slanderously against all good reason and true beliefe; and so to increase diuers vices in themselues, and also among all them that accept them, or consent to them.

And thus, the viciousnesse of these foresaid named priests and prelats, hath been long time, and yet is, and shall be cause of wars both within the realme and without. And in the same wise these vnable priests haue been, and yet are, and shall bee chiefe cause of pestilence of men, and murren of beasts, and of barrennesse of the earth, and of all other mischiefes, to the time that lords and commons able them through grace, for to know and to keep the commandements of God, inforcing them then faithfully and charitably by one assent, for to redresse and make one this foresaid priesthood, to the wilfull, poore, meeke, and innocent liuing and teaching, specially of Christ and his Apostles.

Therefore all they that know, or might know the viciousnesse that raigneth now cursedly in these priests, and in their learning, if they suffice not to vnderstand this contagious viciousnesse: let them pray to the Lord heartily for the health of his church, abstaining them prudently from these indurat enemies of Christ and of his people, and from all their sacraments, since to them, all that know them, or may know them, they are but fleshly deeds and false: as S. Cyprian witnesseth in the first question of decrees, and in the first cause, Ca. Si quis inquit. For as this Saint and great Doctor witnesseth there, that not onely vicious priests, but also all they that fauour them, or consent to them in their viciousnesse, shall together perish with them, if they amend them not duly, as all they perished that consented to Dathan and Abiron. For nothing were more confusion to these foresaid vicious priests, then to eschew them prudently in all their vnlawfull sacraments, while they continue in their sinfull liuing slanderously, as they haue long time done, and yet doe. And no body need to be afraid (though death did follow by one wise or other) for to die out of this world without taking of any Sacrament of these foresaid Christs enemies, since Christ will not faile for to minister himselfe all lesull and healefull Sacraments, and necessary at all time (and specially at the end) to al them that are in true faith, in stedfast hope, and in perfect charitie.

Cypr. 1. q. 1. cap. Si quis inquis.

But yet some mad fooles say (for to eschew slander) they will be shriuen once in the yeere, and communed of their proper priests, though they know them defouled with slanderous vices. No doubt, but all they that thus doe or consent priuily or apertly to such doing, are culpable of great sinne: Since Saint Paul witnesseth, that not only they that doe euill, are worthy of death and damnation, but also they that consent to euill doers. Also (as their slanderous works witnesse) these aforesaid vicious priests, despise and cast from them heauenly cunning, that is giuen of the holy Ghost. Wherefore the Lord throweth all such despisers from him, that they vse nor doe any priesthood to him.

No doubt then, all they that wittingly or wilfully take or consent that any other body should take any sacrament of any such named priest, sinneth openly and damnably against all the Trinitie, and are vnable to any sacrament of health.

And that this foresaid sentence is altogether true, into remission of all my sinfull liuing, trusting stedfastly in the mercie of God, I offer to him my soule.

And to proue also the foresaid sentence true, with the help of God, I purpose fully for to suffer meekly and gladly my most wretched body to be tormented, where God will, of whom he will, and when he will, and as long as he will, and what temporall paine and death he will, to the praising of his name, and to the edification of his church.

And I that am a most vnworthy and wretched caitiffe, shal now through the speciall grace of God, make to him pleasant sacrifice with my most sinfull and vnworthy body. Beseeching heartily all folke that reade or heare this end of my purposed testament, that through the grace of God, they dispose verily and vertuously all their wits, and able in like manner all their members for to vnderstand truly, and to keepe faithfully, charitably, and continually all the commandements of God, and so then to pray deuoutly to all the blessed Trinity, that I may haue grace with wisdome and prudence from aboue, to end my life here in this foresaid truth, and for this cause, in true faith and stedfast hope, and perfect charitie. Amen.

The end of M. Thorpe vncertaine.

What was the end of this good man and blessed seruant of God William Thorp, I finde as yet in no story specified. By all coniectures it is to be thought, that the archbishop Thomas Arundel, being so hard an aduersary against those men, would not let him goe. Much lesse it is to be supposed, that he would euer retract his sentence and opinion, which hee so valiantly maintained before the bishop; neither doth it seeme that he had any such recanting spirit. Againe, neither is it found that he was burned. Wherefore it remaineth most like to be true, that hee being committed to some strait prison (according as the archbishop in his examination before did threaten him) there (as Thorp confesseth himselfe) was so straitly kept, that either he was secretly made away, or else there hee died by sicknesse.

The like end also I finde to happen to John Aylton, another good follower of Wickliffe, who for the same doctrine of the sacrament was condemned by the bishops, and because he would not recant, he was committed to perpetuall prison, wherein the good man continued till his death: An. 1382.

Iohn Purucy.

John Purucy.

FVrthermore, in the said examination of William Thorpe, mention was made (as ye heard) of John Purucy, of whom also something we touched before: promising of the said John Purucy, more particularly to intreat in order and processe of time. Of this Purucy, Tho. Walden writeth thus in his second tome: John Purucy, saith he, was the library of Lollards, and gloser vpon Wickliffe. He said, that the worshipping of Abraham was but a salutation. And in his third tome hee saith: This John Purucy, with Herford a doctor of Diuinity, were greeuously tormented and punished in the prison of Saltwood, and at the length recanted at Pauls crosse at London (Thomas Arundel being then archbishop of Canturbury.) Afterward againe, he was imprisoned vnder Henry Chicheley archbishop of Canturbury, in the yeere of our Lord 1421. Thus much writeth Walden. The workes of this man which hee wrote, were gathered by Richard Lauinghame his aduersarie, which I thinke worthy to be remembred. First, as touching the sacrament of the last supper, the sacrament of penance, the sacrament of orders, the power of the keies, the preaching of the Gospel, of marriages, of vowes, of possessions, of the punishing and correcting of the clergy, of the lawes and decrees of the church, of the state and condition of the pope and the clergie: of all these generally, he left diuers monuments granely and eracly written, part whereof, here in the end of his story we thought to exhibit, being translated out of Latine into English.

John Purucy imprisoned after his recantation.

The articles which he taught, and afterward was forced to recant at Pauls crosse, were these hereafter following:

Articles of John Purucy recanted.

1. That in the sacrament of the altar, after the consecration, there is not, neither can be any accident without the subiect: but there verily remaineth the same substance and the verie visible and corruptible bread, and likewise the verie same wine the which before the consecration were set vpon the altar to bee consecrat of the priest: likewise as when a Pagan or Infidell is baptised, he is spiritually conuerted into a member of Christ through grace, and yet remaineth the very same man which he before was in his proper nature and substance.

2. Auricular confession or priuat penance, is a certaine whispering, destroying the liberty of the Gospel, and newly brought in by the pope and the clergy, to entangle the consciences of men in sinne, and to draw their soules into hell.

He speaketh of priests here, and not of publike ministers appointed in the church.

3. Euery lay man being holy, and predestinate vnto euerlasting life (albeit he be a lay man) yet is he a true priest before God.

4. That diuers prelats and other of the clergy doe liue wickedly, contrary to the doctrine and example of Christ and his Apostles. Therefore they which so liue, haue not the keies neither of the kingdome of heauen, neither yet of hell: neither ought any christian to esteeme his censure any more then as a thing of no force. Yea, albeit the pope should peraduenture interdict the realme, yet could he not hurt, but rather profit vs, forsomuch as thereby we should be dismissed from the obseruation of his lawes, and from saying of seruice, according to the custome of the church.

Vowes.

5. If any man doe make an oth or vow, to keepe perpetuall chastitie, or doe any thing else whereunto God hath not appointed him, giuing him grace to performe his purpose: the same vow or oth is vnreasonable and vndiscreet, neither can any prelat compell him to keepe the same, except he will doe contrary vnto Gods ordinance. But he ought to commit him vnto the gouernance of the holy Ghost and of his owne conscience: forsomuch as euery man which will not fulfill his vow or oth, cannot doe it for that cause.

The charge of priests.

6. Whosoeuer taketh vpō him the office of priesthood, although he haue not the charge of soules committed vnto him, according to the custome of the church: not onely they may, but ought to preach the gospel freely vnto the people; otherwise he is a theefe, excommunicated of God, and of the holy Church.

Against transubstantiation.

7. That Innocentius the third pope, and six hundred bishops, and a thousand other prelats, with all the rest of the clergie, which together with the same pope agreed and determined: that in the sacrament of the altar, after the conuersion of the bread and wine into the body and bloud of Christ, that the accidents of the said bread and wine doe remaine there, without any proper subiect of the same: the which also ordained, that all christians ought to confesse their sinnes once a yeere vnto a proper priest, and to receiue the reuerent sacrament at Easter, and made certaine other lawes at the same time: All they, saith he, in so doing were fooles and blockheads, heretikes, blasphemers, and seducers of christian people. Wherefore we ought not to beleeue their determinations, or of their successors, neither ought we to obey their lawes or ordinances, except they bee plainly grounded vpon the holy Scripture, or vpon some reason which cannot be impugned.

Other

Other Articles drawne out of Purveyes bookes more at large by Ri. Lavingham.

Articles out of Purveyes bookes, collected by R. Lavingham.

AS touching the sacrament of thankſ-giuing, he saith: That that chapter of repentance and remission: Omnis vtriusque sexus: wherein it is ordained that euery faithfull man ought once euery yeere at the least, that is to say, at Easter, to receiue the sacrament of the Eucharist; is a beastly thing, hereticall and blasphemous.

Item, that Innocentius the third pope, was the head of antichrist, who after the letting lose of Satan, inuented a new article of our faith, and a certaine fained verity touching the sacrament of the altar: That is to say, that the sacrament of the altar is an accident without a substance, or else an heape of accidences without a substance. But Christ and his Apostles doe teach manifestly, that the sacrament of the altar is bread and the body of Christ together, after the maner that he spake. And in that he calleth it bread, he would haue the people to vnderstand as they ought with reason, that it is very and substantiall bread, and no false nor fained bread.

The sacrament of the popish altar.

Pope Innocentius head of antichrist.

And although Innocentius that antichrist doth alledge, that in the councell at Lions, where this matter was decided, were six hundred bishops with him, and one thousand prelats, which were in one opinion of this determination: All those notwithstanding he calleth fooles, according to that saying of Eccles. 1. Of fooles there are an infinit number. And so in like maner he calleth them false Christs, and false Prophets, of whom Christ speaketh in the 24. of Matthew: Many false Christs and false Prophets shall arise and deceiue many. And therefore euery christian man ought to beleeue firmely, that the sacrament of the altar is very bread indeed, and no false nor fained bread. And although it be very bread indeed, yet notwithstanding it is the very body of Christ in that sort hee spake and called it his body; and so it is very bread, and the very body of Christ. And as Christ concerning his humanitie, was both visible and passible, and by his Diuinitie was inuisible and impassible: so likewise, this sacrament in that it is very bread, may be seene with the corporall eye, and may also abide corruption. But although a man may see that sacrament, yet notwithstanding cannot the body of Christ in that sacrament be seene with the corporall eye, although it be the body of Christ in that manner hee spake it: for that notwithstanding, the body of Christ is now incorruptible in heauen. So the sacrament of the cup is very wine, and the very blood of Christ, according as his manner of speaking was. Also Innocentius the third, with a great multitude of his secular clerkes, made a certaine new determination, that the sacrament of the altar is an accidence without a substance, whereas neither Jesus Christ, nor any of his Apostles taught this faith (but openly and manifestly to the contrary) neither yet the holy doctors for the space of a thousand yeeres and more, taught this faith openly.

The sacrament in substance bread, in signification the body of Christ.

Transubstantiation not openly taught 1000. yeeres after Christ.

Therefore, when antichrist or any of his shauelings doth aske of thee that art a simple christian, whether that this sacrament be the very body of Christ or not: affirme thou it manifestly so to bee. And if hee aske of thee whether it be materiall bread, or what other bread else: say thou, that it is such bread as Christ vnderstood and meant by his proper word: and such bread as the holy Ghost meant in Saint Paul, when he called that to be very bread which he brake; and wade thou no further herein. If hee aske thee how this bread is the body of Christ: say thou, as Christ vnderstood the same to be his body, which is both omnipotent and true, and in whom is no vntruth; say thou also, as the holy doctors doe say, that the terrestriall matter or substance, may bee conuerted into Christ, as the Pagan or infidell may bee baptised: and hereby spiritually to bee conuerted and to be a member of Christ, and so after a certaine manner to become Christ, and yet the same man to remaine still in his proper nature. For so doth Saint Augustine grant, that a sinner forsaking his sinne, and being made one spirit with God by faith, grace, and charity, may be conuerted into God, and to bee after a manner God: as both Dauid and Saint John doe testifie, and yet to be the same person in substance and nature, and in soule and vertue to be altered and changed. But yet, men of more knowledge and reason, may more plainly conuince the falsity of antichrist both in this matter and in others, by the gift of the holy Ghost working in them. Notwithstanding, if those that be simple men will humbly hold and keepe the manifest and apparant words of the holie Scripture, and the plaine sense and meaning of the holy Ghost, and proceed no further, but humbly to commit that vnto the spirit of God, which passeth their vnderstanding: then may they safely offer themselues to death, as true martyrs of Jesus Christ.

The sacrament both bread, and the body in diuers respects.

Auricular confession and penance.

As touching the sacrament of penance; that chapter Omnis vtriusque sexus, by which a certaine new found auricular confession was ordained is full of hypocrisie, heresie, couetousnesse, pride, and blasphemy, he saith, and reproueth the same chapter verbatim, and that by the sentences of the same processe. Also that the penance and paines limitted by the canons, be vnreasonable and vniust, for the austerity and rigorousnesse which they containe, more then are tared by Gods law. He also doth exemplifie, of the solemne and publike denial of penitents to be receiued into orders, according to the decree of the generall councell, Distinctione 50. cap. Expœnitentibus. Also of the seuen-fold penitence of a priest committing fornication, according to the chapter, Presbyter Distinct. 82. And farther sheweth another example of the penitence of priests, according to that chapter, Qui presbyterum &c. Whereas the Decretall of the generall councell saith, that such a one ought to remaine continuing his life in the warres, and not to marry.

And how Innocentius the third, brought in a new found confession, whereby the priests doe oppresse the simple lay men. And that many other things they doe, compelling them to confesse themselues to blinde and ignorant priests, in whom is nothing else then pride and couetousnesse, hauing such in contempt as are learned and wise. Also, that the Decretall of Innocentius the third, touching the foresaid auricular or vocall confession, was brought in and inuented, to intricate and intangle mens consciences with sinne, and to draw them downe to hell. And furthermore, that such manner of confession destroieth the Euangelicall liberty, and doth let men to inquire after, and to retaine the wise counsell and doctrine of such as be good priests, which know faithfully how to obserue his precepts and commandements, and which would willingly teach the people the right way to heauen. For which abuse, al christian men, and specially all Englishmen, ought to exclaime against such wicked lawes.

The order of priesthood.

As touching the sacrament of order, hee saith: That all good christians are predestinate and bee ordained of God, and made true priests to offer Christ in themselues, and to Christ themselues: as also to teach and preach the Gospell to their neighbours, as well in word, as in example of liuing. But the worldly shauelings doe more magnifie the naked and bare signes of priesthood (inuented by sinfull men) then the true and perfect priesthood of God, grounded by a true and liuely faith, annexed with good works. Also, if it were needfull to haue such shauelings, God knoweth how, and can make when it pleaseth him, priests (without mans working and sinfull signes: that is to say, without either sacraments or characters) to bee knowne and discerned of the people, by their vertuous life and example, and by their true preaching of the law of God. For so made hee the first made priests and elders before the law of Moyses: and so made he Moyses a priest before Aaron, and before the ceremonies of the law, without mans operation at all: and euen so hath God made all such as are predestinate, to be his priests. But such as be true christians, receiue none such as priests, but vnlesse they follow Christ and his Apostles; neither doe they beleeue that they make the sacrament of the altar (which they affirme to bee Gods body) when it pleaseth them, lest happily God bee not with them, forasmuch as that they doe this thing for couetousnesse sake, or else to brag of their owne power. And therefore such as be simple men, will worship that sacrament in this doubtfulnesse, with a silent condition; that is, if it be made by Gods authority, and to haue their deuotion to the body of Christ in heauen. Also, that such as bee elders, if they be Gods priests, be bishoppes, prelats, and curats of their christian brethren, whom they may leade to heauen by the example of their holy conuersation, and by preaching of the Gospell, although they make no sacrifice to that antichrist of Rome for their confirmation: neither bee they dedicated to the world by secular diuine things, and by consuming the liuings of the poore, as be those secular bishops, prelats, and curats. Also, that although there were no pope, according as the custome of the church is, yet Christ which is the head of his church, doth ordaine such a pope as pleaseth him: and that is, whosoeuer is most humble and lowly, and best doth the office of a true priest, although hee be vnknowne to the world: and although there were no such proud bishoppe aboue all the rest, as the church doth vse; yet all the priests might well gouerne the church by common assent, as once they did, before such worldly pride crept in amongst the bishoppes, &c. And admit that no such priests were according to the accustomed vse now of receiuing of order and tonsure, by such a mitred bishop and his tonsure: yet Christ knoweth both how to make and chuse such as shall well please him, both in conuersation of life, and sincere preaching of the Gospell, in ministring to his people all necessary sacraments. And euery holy man which is a minister of Christ, although hee be not shauen, is a true priest ordained of God, although no mitred bishop euer lay his character vpon him. So that the pope and prelats doe make more estimation of their characters (as tonsures and crownes by them inuented) then of the true and perfect priesthood ordained of God: whereas all those that are predestinate, are true priests made of him.

He meaneth of priuat preaching to their neighbours. True ministers may be made without shauing.

Priests here haue a priuat, not a publike vnderstanding.

What if there were no pope knowne vnto the church could stand.

Tonsure maketh not a priest.

As touching the authority of the keies and censures, no christian man ought to esteeme Satan (whom men call the pope) and his vniust censures, more then the hissing of a serpent, or the blast of Lucifer. Also, that no man ought to trust or put confidence in the false indulgences of couetous priests; which indulgences doe draw away the hope which men ought to repose in God, to a sort of sinfull men, and doe rob the poore of such almes as is giuen to them. Such priests be manifest betrayers betrayers of Christ and of the whole church, and by Satans owne stewards to beguile christen soules by their hypocrisie and fained pardons. Also, forasmuch as those prelats and clergy men liue so execrable a life, contrary to the Gospell of Christ, and examples of his Apostles, and teach not truly the gospel, but only lies & the traditios of sinful wicked men: it appeareth most manifestly, that they haue not the keies of the kingdome of heauen, but rather the keies of hell. And they may be right well assured, that God neuer gaue vnto them authority to make and establish so many ceremonies and traditions, which be contrarie to the libertie of the Gospel, and are blocks in christen mens waies, that they can neither know nor obserue the same his Gospell, in liberty of consticence, and so attaine a ready way to heauen.

The popes censures like the blast of Lucifer.

Popish priests haue not the keies of heauen, but rather of hell.

Also, that all manner of religious men, notwithstanding the chapter Religiosi, touching the priuiledges in the Clementines, may lawfully minister all sacraments to them that are worthy the same: forasmuch as the same is a worke of charity, which only the will and ordinance of the pope in his fautors in this case is to hinder and let. Item, if the pope shall interdict this our realme; that cannot hurt vs, but much profit vs, because that thereby hee should separate vs from all his wicked lawes, and from the charges of sustaining of so many thousand shauelings, which with small deuotion, or none at all, patter and chatter a new found song, secundum vsum Sarum. So that not whatsoeuer the pope in his generall councell bindeth on earth, is bound of God in heauen, either for that hee bindeth vnreasonably, and contradictorily doth against himselfe, or else for that hee hath forsaken the iudgement of God.

The popes curse hurteth not, but profiteth.

As touching the preaching of the Gospell: Whosoeuer receiueth or taketh vpon him the office of a priest, or of a bishop, and discharged not the same by the example of his good conuersation and faithfull preaching of the Gospell, is a theefe, excommunicat of God, and of holy church. And further, if the curats preach not the word of God, they shall be damned; and if they know not how to preach, they ought to resigne their benefices. So that those prelats which preach not the Gospell of Christ (although they could excuse themselues from the doing of any other euill) are dead in themselues, are antichrists, and Satans, transfigured into Angels of light, night theeues, manquellers by day light, and betrayers of Christ his people.

Gossipre not sufficient cause to restraine matrimony.

Concerning the sacrament of Matrimony: Notwithstanding any spirituall kinred or gossipre, a man and woman may lawfully matry together by the law of God, without any dispensation papisticall. And in the same place hee saith; that if our realme doe admit one not borne in matrimony or illegitimate to the imperiall crowne, so that he doth well discharge the office of a king, God maketh him a king, and by consequence doth reiect another king or heire of the kingdome, being borne in matrimony and legitimate: So, for such spirituall kinred there ought no diuorce to be made. Also notwithstanding the Cap. Si inter desponsalibus: If any man shall make any contract with any woman by the words of the future tence, by an oth taken, and afterwards shall with another woman make the like contract by the words of the present tence; that then the second contract standeth. Also, if a man make any contract with a woman by the words of the future tence, vpon his oth taken, and maketh afterwards the like contract with another not altering the words, and hath carnall copulation vpon the same, the first contract maketh the matrimony good, and not the second. Also, if a man before witnesse, assure himselfe to a woman by a contract made in the present tence, and hath children by the same woman, and afterward the same man marrieth another woman, with the like words in the present tence, before witnesse; although the first witnesses be dead, or else by bribes corrupt, and the second bring his witnesses before the Iudge to proue the second contract, the first contract yet standeth in force, although the pope (allowing the second contract) doth compell them to liue in adulterie against the commandement of God. Also, hee condemneth the Decretall of the restitution of things stollen, Cap. Literas tuas: which willeth, that a man and woman hauing carnall copulation in the degree of consanguinity forbidden, and hath no witnesse hereof: if the woman will depart from the man, she shall be compelled by the censures to remaine with him, and to yeeld her debt. Also, in case where a man hath made contract with two women, with one secretly hauing no witnesse, and with the other openly hauing witnesse, then were it better to acknowledge the insufficiencie of the law, and to suffer men to bee ruled by their owne consciences, then by the censures to compell them to commit and liue in adultery.

The first marriage lawfully before witnesse made, standeth.

Keeping and making vowes.

As touching the keeping and making of vowes: That vow or oth is beastly, and is without all discretion made, which to performe and keepe, a man hath no power but by grace giuen him of God: because that some such there be, whom God doth not accept to perseuere in the state of chastitie and perpetuall virginity; and such a one cannot keepe his vow, although hee make the same. Also, that euery one making a vow of continencie or chastitie, when making the same, hee shall not be accepted of God, doth verie vndiscreetly, and as one without all reason maketh the same, when he is not able of himself without the gift of God to fulfill his promise, according to that saying of the wise man, cap. 8. No man hath the gift of continencie, vnlesse that God giue it vnto him. For otherwise, if God helpe not such a one to performe the vow or oth which he hath made and taken, no prelat can compell him, vnlesse he do contrary to Gods ordinance; but he ought to commit himselfe to the gouernment of Gods holy spirit, and his owne consticence.

Possessions of the church.

For the possessions of the church: In another treatise it is declared, how the king, the lords and commons may without any charge at all, keep fifteen garrisons, and finde 15000. souldiers (hauing sufficient lands and reuenewes to liue vpon) out of the temporalties gotten into the hands of the clergy and fained religious men, which neuer do that, which pertaineth to the office of curats to doe, nor yet to secular lords. And moreouer, the king may haue euery yeere 20000. pound to come freely into his coffers, and aboue. Also may finde or sustaine fifteen colledges more, and 15000. priests and clerks, with sufficient liuing, and an hundred hospitals for the sick, and euery house to haue one hundred marks in lands. And all this may they take of the foresaid temporalties, without any charge to the realme: whereunto the king, the lords, and the commons are to be inuited. For otherwise, there seemeth to hang ouer our heads a great and maruellous alteration of this realme, vnlesse the same be put in execution. Also, if the secular priests and fained religious, which bee Simoniacks and heretikes, which faine themselues to say masse, and yet say none at all, according to the canons, which to their purpose they bring and alledge, 1.q. 3. Audiuimus, & cap. Pudenda, & cap. Schisma; by which chap. such priests and religious doe not make the sacrament of the altar; that then all christians, especially all the founders of such abbies, and indowers of bishoprickes, priories, and chanteries, ought to amend this fault and treason committed against their predecessors, by taking from them such secular dominions, which are the maintenance of all their sinnes. And also, that christian lords and princes are bound to take away from the clergy, such secular dominion as nourisheth and nourisheth them in heresies, and ought to reduce them vnto the simple and poore life of Christ Iesus and his Apostles.

1.q.3.14.q.1. Cap. Pudenda.

Welly cherre of ill disposed prelats, and of monasteries, not to be nourished with temporalties and appropriations.

And further, that all christian princes (if they will amend the malediction and blasphemy of the name of God) ought to take away their temporalties from that shauen generation, which most of all doth nourish them in such malediction. And so in likewise, the fat tithes from churches appropriat to rich monks and other religious fained by manifest lying, and other vnlawfull meanes, likewise ought to debarre their gold to the proud priest of Rome, which doth poison all Christendome with simony and heresie. Further, that it is a great abomination that bishoppes, monks, and other prelats, be so great lords in this world, whereas Christ with his Apostles and Disciples, neuer tooke vpon them secular dominion, neither did they appropriate vnto them churches, as these men doe, but led a poore life, and gaue a good testimony of their priesthood. And therefore, all christians ought to the vttermost of their power and strength to sweare that they will reduce such shauelings, to the humilitie and pouerty of Christ and his Apostles: and whosoeuer thus doth not, consenteth to their heresie. Also, that these two chapters of the immunitie of churches, are to be condemned, that is, cap. Non minus, and cap. Aduersus. Because they doe decree, that temporall lords may neither require tallages nor tenths of any ecclesiasticall persons.

Correction of the clergy.

Now to the correction of the clergy. By the law of God and by reason, the king and all other christians may take reuenge of Italy, and of all the false priests and clerks within the same, and to reduce them vnto the humble ordinance of Iesus Christ. Also, that the law of Siluester the pope, which is declared in 2.q.5. cap. Præsul, and cap. Nullam, is contrary to the law of Christ and either testament. And that proud and ambitious Siluester by his law, so defended two cardinals which were not to be defended by the law of Christ, that by no means they might be conuinced, although they were both vicious and euil. And although Christ sustained and suffered the iudgement of vniust temporall Iudges; our mitred prelats in these dates, so magnifie themselues beyond Christ and his Apostles, that they refuse and will none of such iudgements. Also, that those Decretals of accusations, cap. Quando & Qualiter: which doe prohibit that any clerks should be brought before a secular Iudge to receiue iudgement, doe containe both heresie, blasphemie, and error, and bringeth great gaine and commodity to antichrists coffers.

2.q.5. Præsul. Ibid. Nullam.

Punishing of adultery belongeth to secular magistrates rather then to prelats.

Furthermore, that all christian kings and lords, ought to exclaime against the pope and those that bee his fautors, and banish them out of their lands, till such time as they will obey God and his Gospell, kings and other ministers of Gods iustice. Also, that bishops and their fauorers, that say it appertaineth not to kings and secular lords (but vnto them and their Officials) to punish adultery and fornication, doe fall into manifest treason against the king, and heresie against the Scripture. Also, that it appertaineth to the king, to haue the order both of prieſts and biſhops, as theſe kings, Salomon and Joſaphat had.

Furthermore, that chapter Nullus iudicium de foro competenti, by the which ſecular iudges, are forbidden without the biſhops commandement, to condemne any clerke to death, is manifeſtly againſt the holy Scripture, declaring that kings haue power ouer clerks and prieſts, to punith them for their deſerued crimes. Alſo, that the decree of Boniface de pœnis in 6. cap. fœlicis, made againſt the proſecutors, ſtrikers, and impriſoners of cardinals, is contrary both to the holy Scripture, and to all reaſon. Alſo, that by the law of God and reaſon, a ſecular lord may lawfully take a cardinall, and put him in priſon for committing the crime of open ſimony, adultery, and manifeſt blaſpheme. Alſo that the chapter Si Papa diſt. 40. which ſaith, that the pope ought to be iudged of none, vnleſſe he be deuius à fide, is contrary to the Goſpell, which ſaith; If thy brother ſinne againſt thee, correct him. Alſo, whereas S. Gregory and S. Auguſtine called themſelues the ſeruants of Gods ſeruants, this proud biſhop of Rome, which will not be iudged by his ſubiects (which be in very deed his lords, if they be iuſt and good men) doth deſtroy the order of Gods law, and all humility, and doth extoll himſelfe aboue God and his Apoſtles. Alſo, that chriſtian kings ought not onely to iudge this proud biſhop of Rome, but alſo to depoſe him by the example that Ceſtrenſis, lib. 6. cap. 8. declareth of Otho the emperor, which depoſed John the twelfth, and did inſtitute Leo in his place. And further, hee maketh an exhortation to the princes to iudge the church of Rome, which hee calleth the great and curſed ſtrumpet, of whom S. John writeth in the Apocalyps, chap. 17.

Good kings ought to depoſe wicked popes.

Laſtly, touching the laws and determinations of the church; chriſtians haue reaſonable excuſes and cauſes to repell the ſtatutes of the pope and of his ſhauelings, which be not expreſſly grounded on the holy Scriptures, or elſe vpon reaſon inuitable. Alſo he ſaith, that that law which is ſet forth of conſecration diſtinctione 2. cap. Seculares, & cap. Omnis homo, & cap. Et ſi non frequentius, & cap. In cœna domini: That ſuch ſecular men as do not receiue the ſacrament of the altar at Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Whitſontide, are not to be counted amongſt the number of chriſtians, nor are to be eſteemed as chriſtians: whereby it followeth, that all clerks and lay men that obſerue not the ſame, it ſeemeth they goe ſtraight to hell. But if this law be of no force, for that the cuſtome and vſe in receiuing is contrary to the ſame: then may we bleſſe ſuch rebellion and diſobedience to the pope and his law: for otherwiſe we ſhould ſee to hel without any ſtay or let. Whereby we may conclude, that all chriſtians ought well to practiſe this ſchole of diſobedience againſt the pope and all his lawes (not founded vpon the holy Scripture) which doe let men to climbe to heauen by the keeping of charity, and the libertie of the Goſpell. Alſo, that chriſtian men haue great cauſe to refuſe the lawes & ſtatutes of theſe worldly clerks, which the people call the papall lawes and biſhoplike ſtatutes, for the couetouſnes and voluptuouſnes of them; without the which, the church and congregation of God might ſafely run towards heauen by the ſweet yoke of the Lord, as it did 1000. yeeres before the ſaid lawes were preſcribed and ſent to the Vniuerſities, and withdrew men from ſtudying of the holy Scripture, for the deſire of benefices and worldly goods. Alſo, that ſimple men doe reuerently receiue the ſentences of the doctors and other lawes, ſo far forth as they be expreſſly grounded vpon the holy Scripture or good reaſon. Alſo, that whereas the popes lawes, and lawes of his miniſters and clerks, be both contrary to themſelues, and haue not their foundation neither vpon the Scripture, nor yet vpon reaſon, ſimple men ought to bid them farewell. Alſo, that when all the Apoſtles faith failed them in the time of the Lords paſſion, faith then reſted in the bleſſed virgin: much more might that proud prieſt of Rome with all his rabble, eaſily erre in the faith; and yet is the chriſtian faith preſerued whole and ſafe, in the faithfull members of Chriſt which are his true church: but the pope and all his rabblement cannot proue that they be any part of his church. Alſo, that the pope with all his fautors, may as well be deceiued by a lying ſpirit, as was Achab and all his prophets: and that one true prophet, as was Micheas, may haue the verity ſhewed vnto him contra concilium. Alſo, that all good chriſtians ought to caſt from them the popes lawes, ſaying: Let vs breake their bands in ſunder, and let vs caſt from our neckes thoſe heauy yokes of theirs. Alſo, that where theſe prelats doe burne one good booke, for one error perhaps contained in the ſame, they ought to burne all the bookes of the canon law, for the manifold hereſies contained in them.

De conſecratione, id eſt 2. cap. Seculares.

The popes lawes contrary to themſelues.

The pope and his cardinals no part of the true church.

The canon law full of hereſie.

¶ And thus much out of a certaine old written book in parchment, borowed once of I. B. which booke containing diuers ancient records of the Vniuerſity, ſeemeth to belong ſometimes to the library of the Vniuerſity, bearing the yeere of the compiling thereof, 1396. Which computation if it be true, then was it written of him, or that he recanted before Thomas Arundel archbiſhop at Saltwood, where he was impriſoned. Whereunto I thought alſo to anner a certain godly and moſt fruitfull ſermon of like antiquity, preached at Pauls croſſe much about the ſame time, which was in the yeere of our Lord 1388. by a certaine learned clerke, as I finde in an old monument, named R. Wimbeldon. Albeit, among the ancient regiſters and records belonging to the archbiſhop of Canturbury, I haue an old worne copy of the ſaid ſermon, written in very old Engliſh, and almoſt halfe conſumed with age, purporting the ſaid author hereof, being alſo the foreſaid name. The true copy of which ſermon, in his owne ſpeech wherein it was firſt ſpoken, and preached at the croſſe on the Sunday of Quinquageſima, and after exhibited to the archbiſhop of Canturbury (being then as it ſeemeth William Courthey) here followeth.

¶ A Sermon no leſſe godly then learned, preached at Pauls croſſe on the Sunday of Quinquageſima, an. 1389. by R. Wimbeldon.

Redde rationem villicationis tuæ. Luce xvi.

My dere frends, ye ſhullen vnderſtond, that Chriſt author and doctor of truth, in his boke of the Goſpel (likening the kingdome of heauen to an houſholder) ſaith on this manner: Like is the kingdome of heauen to an houſholding man, that went out firſt on the morrow to hire workmen into his vine. Also, about the third, firth, ninth and eleuenth houres he went out, and found men ſtonding idle: and ſaid to them: Go ye into mine vineyard, and that right is, I will giue you. When the day was agon, he clepid his ſtuward, and bigh to giue ech man a penie. Matth. 20. The ſermon of R. Wimbeldo.

The ſpirituall vnderſtonding of this houſholder, is our Lord Ieſu Chriſt, that is head of the houſhold of holy church. And thus clepith men in diuerce houres of the day, that is in diuerce agees of the werld. As in time of law of kind, he cleped by enſpiring, Abel, Ennok, Noe, and Abraham. In time of the old law, Moſes, Dauid, Iſay, and Ieremy: and in time of grace, Apoſtles, martyrs, and confeſſors and virgins. Alſo he cleped men in diuers agees, ſome on childhode, as Iohn Baptiſt; ſome on ſtate of wexing, as Iohn the Euangeliſt; ſome in ſtate of manhode, as Peter and Andrew; and ſome in old agee, as Gamaliel, and Ioſeph of Arimathie. And all theſe he clepeth to trauaile in his vine, that is the church, and that in diuers maner. For right as yee ſeeth, that in tilling of the materiall vine, there ben diuers labours, for ſome kutten awey the void branches, ſome maken forkis and railes to beren vp the vine, and ſome diggen away the old earth fro the rote, and leyn there fatter. And all this offices ben ſo neceſſary to the vine, that if any of them faile, it ſhall harme greatly, other deſtroy the vine. For but if the vine be kut, he ſhall wax wilde; but if ſhe be railed, ſhe ſhall be ouergo with netles and wedis: but if the rote be fatted with dong, ſhe for feblenes ſhuld wax barraine. The calling of God is diuers.

Right ſo in the Church beth nedefull theſe three offices, prieſthode, knythode, and laborers. To prieſts it falleth, to kut away the void braunches of ſins with the ſwerd of her tong. To knighthode it falleth to letten wrongs and theſts to ben done, and to maintaine Goddis law, and them that ben teachers therof, and alſo to kepe the lond from enemies of other londs. And to labourers it falleth, to trauail bodelich, and with their ſore ſwete, geten out of the earth bodilech lifelode for hem, and other parties. And theſe ſtates beth alſo nedefull to the church, that none may well ben without other: for if prieſthod lacked, the people for default of knowing of Gods law, ſhould waxe wilde in vices, and deyen goſtely: and if the knithod laked, and men to rulin the puple by law and hardineſſe, theeues and enemies ſhulden ſo encres, that no man ſhuld liue in peace. And if the labourers were nought, both knights and prieſts muſt become acre men and herdis, and elſe they ſhuld for defaut of bodily ſuſtenance dey. And therefore ſaith clerke Auicenne, that euery vereaſonable beaſt, if he haue that that kind hath ordained for him, as kind hath ordained it, he is ſuffiſance to liue by himſelfe without any helpe of other of the ſame kind. As if there were but one horſe other one ſhepe in the world, yet if he had graſſe and corne, as kind hath ordained for ſuch beaſts, he ſhuld liue well inow. But if there ne were but O man in the world, though he had all that good that is therein, yet for defaut he ſhuld dey, or his life ſhuld be wors then if he were naught; and the cauſe is this, for that thing that kind ordaineth for a mans ſuſtenance, without other arraieng then it hath of kind, accordeth nought to him. As though a man haue corne as it commeth from the earth, yet it is no meat according to him, vnto it be by mans craft, changed into bread: and though he haue fleſh other fiſh, yet while it is raw, as kind ordained it, till it be by mans trauaile ſodden, roſted, or baken, it corded not to mans lifelode. And right ſo, wolle that the ſheepe beareth, not by mannis diuers craftis and trauailes be chaunged or it be able to cloth any man: and certis O man by himſelfe ſhuld neuer doe all theſe labours. And therefore, ſaith this clerke, it is need that ſome be acre men, ſome bakers, ſome makers of cloth, and ſome marchaunts to fetch that, that one lond fetcheth from another there it is plenty.

And certis this ſhuld be a cauſe why euery ſtate ſhuld loue other. And men of o craft ſhuld not deſpiſe ne hate men of none other craft, ſith they beſo nedefull euerich to other. And oft thelke crafts that ben moſt vnhoneſt, might worſt ben forbore: and o thing I dare well ſay, that he that is neither trauailing in this world, on ſtudying, on praiers, on preaching, for helpe of the people as it falleth to prieſts, neither ruling the people, people, maintaining ne defending fro enemies, as it falleth to knights, neither trauelling on the earth, in diuers crafts, as it falleth to labourers: Whan the day of rekening commeth, that is, the end of this life, right as he liued here withouten trauaile, so he shall there lack the reward of the pennie, that is, the endlesse ioy of heauen. And as he was here liuing after none state ne order, so he shall be put than in that place that no order is in, but euerlasting horror and sorrow, that is, in hell. Herfore, euerich man see to what state God hath cleped him, and dwel he therein by trauaile, according to his degree. Thou that art a laborer or a craftie man, doe this truly. If thou art a seruant or a bondman, besuget and low in drede of displeasing of thy Lord. If thou art a marchaunt, disceiue nought thy brother in chaffering. If thou art a knight or a lord, defend the poore mā & needy fro hands that will harme thē. If thou art a Iustice or a Iudge, goe not on the right hand by fauor, neither on the left hand, to punish any man for hate. If thou art a priest, vndernime, pray, and repreue, in all manner patience and doctrine. Vndernime thilke that ben negligent, pray for thilke that ben obedient, reproue tho that ben vnobedient to God. So euery man trauaile in his degree. For whan the euen is come, that is, the end of this world, than euery man shall take reward, good or euill, after that he hath trauailed here.

Iob 10. 2. Cor. 7. 1. Pet. 2. 1. Thess. 4. Prou. 8. 2. Tim. 4.

The words that I haue taken to make of my sermon, be thus much to say; Yeld rekoning of thy baily. Christ, autor of pitie and louer of the saluation of his people, in the processe of this gospell, enformeth euery man what is his baily, by maner of a parable of a baily that he speaketh of, to array him to answer of the goods that God hath taken him, when the day of strait reconing shall be come, that is, the day of dome. And so I at this time, through the helpe of God, following him that is so great a master of autority, because that I know nothing that should more draw away mans vnreasonable loue fro the passing ioy of this world, then the mind of the dreadfull reconing: As much as suffice, I shall shew you how yee shall dispose you to auoid the vengeance of God, when there shall be time of so straight doome, that we shall geue reconing of euery idle word that we haue ispoken. For than it shal be said to vs, and we shall not flee it: Yeld reconing of thy baily.

Nota.

But for forther processe of this first party of this sermon, ye shall wete; that there shall be three bailiffes that shall be cleped to this strait reconing. Twaine to answer for themselfe and for other, that ben priests that haue cure of mens soules, and temporall men that haue gouernaile of people: and the third bailiffe shall account onely for himselfe, and that is euery christen man, of that he hath receiued of God. And euery of these shull answere to three questions. To the first question, how hast thou entred? The second, how hast thou ruled? And to the third, how hast thou liued? And if thou canst well assoile these three questions, was there neuer none earthly lord that euer so well rewarded his seruant without comparison, as thy Lord God shall reward thee, that is, with blisse, and ioy, and life that euer shall last. But on that other side, and thou wilt now be recheles of thine owne welfare, and take none heed of this reconing: If that day take thee sodainly, so that thou passe hence in deadly sinne (as thou wotst neuer what shall fall thee) all the tongues that euer were, or euer shall be, mow not tell the sorrow and wo that thou shalt euer be in, and suffer. Therefore the desire of so great ioy, and the dread of so great paine, though loue ne dread of God were not in thine heart, yet should that make thee afeard to sinne, for to thinke that thou shalt giue reconing of thy baily. Therefore as I say to thee, the first question that shall be proposed to the first baily, that is a prelat other a curat of mens soules, is this: How hast thou entred? Matth. 22. Friend, how entredst thou hether? Who brought thee into this office? Truth or Simony? God or the Diuell? Grace or mony? The flesh or the spirit? Giue thou thy reconing if thou canst. If thou canst not, I rede that thou tary for to learne. For vp hap ere night thou shalt be cleped. And if thou stand dombe for vnkunning, or else for confusion of thy conscience, thou fall into the sentence that anon followeth: Binde his hands and his feet, and cast him into the vtter ward of darkenesse, there shall be weeping and grenning of teeth. Therefore I rede thee, that thou aduise thee how thou shalt answer to this question: How hast thou entred? whether by cleping, or by thine owne procuring: for that thou wouldest trauaile in Gods gospell, other for thou wouldest be richly arraied? Answer now to thy owne conscience as thou shalt answere to God, thou that hast take now the order of priest, whether thou be curat or none: who stirred thee to take vpon thee so high an estate? Whether for thou wouldest liue as a priest ought to doe, studying of Gods law to preach, and most heartily to pray for the people: or for to liue a delicious life vpon other mens trauaile, and thy selfe trauaile nought. Why also setten men their sonnes, either their cousins to schoole? Whereto, but for to get them great aduancements, or to make them the better to know how they shulden serue God? This men may see openly by the sciences that they set them to. Why I pray you put men their sonnes to the law ciuill, or to the kings court to write letters and writs, rather then to Philosophie or Diuinitie, but for the hope that these occupations should be euer meanes to make them great in the world? I hope that there will no man say, that they ne should better learne the rule of good liuing in the booke of Gods law, then in any bookes of mans worldly wisdome. But certes now it is sothe, that Iohn Chrysostom saith: Mothers be louing to the bodies of their children, but the soule they despise; they desire them to welfare in this world, but they take none heed what they shall suffer in the tother: some ordeinen fees for their children, but none ordeine them to Godward: the lust of their bodies they wol deere by, but the health of their soule they reke nought of. If they see them poore or sicke, they sorrow and sigheth, but though they see them sinne they sorrow not. And in this they shew that they brought forth the bodies, but not the soules. And if we take heed truly, what abominations be scattered and spread abroad in holy church now adaies among priests, we shul wel wit, that they come not all to the fold of Christ by Christs cleping for to profit, but by other waies to get them worldly welth, and this is the cause of lesing of soules, that Christ bought so deare, & of many errors among the people: and therefore it is iwrit in the booke of mourning, where ỳ Prophet speaketh thus to God, Thre. 1. The enemy hath put his hand to all things desireable to him: for he hath let lawlesse folke enter into the sanctuary, of the which thou hadst cōmanded, that they should not enter into the church. This enemie is Sathanas, as his name sowneth, that hath put his hand to all that him liketh. What sinne I pray you will the fiend haue sow on men, that nis now yvsed? In what plenty is now pride, enuy, wrath, and couetise? whan were they so great as they be now? and so of all other sinnes. And why trowest thou? But for there be a lawlesse people entred into thy sactuary, that neither keepe in themselfe the law of God, ne konne teachen other: and to euery such, saith God by the Prophet Ose 4. For that thou hast put away cunning, I shall put thee away, that thou shall vse no priesthood to me. Lo that God expresly here in holy writ, forbiddeth men to take the state of priesthood on them, but they haue cunning, that needeth them. Thou than that canst neither rule thy selfe, ne other, after the law of God, beware how thou wilt answere to God, at his dreadfull dome, when he shall say to thee, that which I tooke to my theame:

The rash making of ministers.

Ose. 4.

Yeld the reckening of thy baily, how thou hast entred.

Three questiōs. The first. Second. Third.

The second question that euery curat and prelat of holy church shall answer to, is this: How hast thou ruled? That is to say, the soules of thy suggets, & the goods of poore men: Geue now thine account. First, how thou hast gouerned Gods folke that were take thee to keepe? Whether art thou an herd or an hired man, that doost all for loue of bodelich hire? As a father, or as a wolfe that eaten his sheepe, and keepeth them nought? Say, whom hast thou turned from his cursed liuing, by thy deuout preaching? Whom hast thou taught the law of God that was earst vncunning? There shall ben heard a grieuous accusing of fatherlesse children, and a hard alledging, that priests haue liueden by their wages, and not done away their sins. Yeld also reconing how thou hast ruled, and spended the goods of poore men. Harke what S. Bernard saith: Dread clerks, dread the ministers of the church, the which ben in the place of Saints, that they doe so wickedly, nought holding them apaid with such wages that were sufficient to them: That ouerplus that needy men should be sustained by, they be not ashamed to waste in the house of their pride and lechery, and withholden to themselfe wickedly and cursedly that which should be the lifeloode of poore men. With double wickednesse truly they sinne. First, for they reeuen other mens goods, and saith they misuse holy things in their vanities and in their filths. Euery such baily therfore beware, for anon, to the last farthing he shall recken with Christ. Trowest thou not then, that thou ne shalt be disallowed of God, of that thou hast mispended in feeding of fat palfreys, of hounds, of hawkes, and if it so be, that is worst of all, on lecherous women? Heare what is said of such: They had led their daies in wealths: And in a point they ben gone downe into hel. Think therefore I rede thee, that thou shalt yeeld reckening of thy baily.

Question.

Solution.

Question.

The third question that this baily shall answere to, is this: How hast thou liued? What light of holinesse hast thou shewed in thy liuing to the people, or what mirror hast thou ben of holinesse to them? Geue now thy reconing how thou hast liued, as a priest, or as a leude man, as a man, or as a beast. That is to wonder truly how the life of priests is chaunged. They be clothen as knights, they speaken as vnhonestly as carles; other of winning as Marchaunts; they riden as princes, and all that is thus spended, is of the goods of poore men, and of Christs heritage. Therefore saith an holy doctor: The clay of Egypt was tough and stinking, and medled with bloud. The slates were hard to be vndone, for they were baked with fire of couetise, and with the light of lust. In this trauaileth rich men, in this they wake, awaiting poore men. In these trauaileth prelats, that ben too much blent with too much shining of riches, that make them houses like churches in greatnesse, that with diuers poyntries, coloren their chambers, that with diuers clothings of colours, make images gay: but the poore man for default of clothes, beggeth, and with an empty wombe crieth at the doore. And if I shall the sooth say, saith this doctor, oft time poore men be robbed for to clothe the trees and stones. Of such speaketh the Prophet: How art thou heere? or as who art thou? Here thou art occupying the place of Peter and of Poule, or of Thomas or of Martine: But how, as Iudas among the apostles, as Symon Magus among the disciples, as a candle new queint that stincheth all the house in steed of a light lanterne, as a smoke that blindeth mens eien, in place of cleane fire? If thou contrary thus the forme of liuing that Christ and his disciples left to priests: Loe what saith the prophet Ieremy. They haue entred, and they haue had and nought ben obedient. They hauen with false title or with their false and corrupt intention, had poore mens goods to their misusing, and they haue not be obedient to the law of God in their owne liuing.

Sap.6.

Therefore it is writ, that the hardest dome shall fall on such. An hard dome, for they haue misentred. An harder dome, for they haue misruled: and the hardest dome, for they haue so cursedly liued. Thinke therefore I rede, how thou wilt giue reckning of thy baily.

Kings, princes and magistrats admonished.

The second bailiffe, that accounteth at this dome for himselfe and also for other, is hee: that keeping hath of any communite, as kings, princes, maiers, and shireues, and iustices.

How thou hast entred.

And these shull also answere to the same three questions. The first question, how hast thou hentred, that is to say, into thine office? Other for helpe of the people to destroy falshed and fortheren truth? Other for desire of winning of worldly worship? If thou take such an office, more for thine owne worldly profit, than for helpe of the communite, thou art a tyrant as the philosopher seith. For it is to feare lest there ben too many that desiren such states, that they may the rather oppresse thilke that they hateth, and take gifts to spare to punish thilke, that hauen trespassed, and so maketh them partners of their sinnes. And many such, when they ben so high, they recke nought that they beth poore mens brethren, but they were to passe them in kind, as they passeth in worldly worthippe, that is but winde: of which God saith by the prophet, they hauen raigned, but nought of me, they haue bene princes but I know nought. So we read of Roboam, that was the son of king Salomon, what time he was first king, the people of Israel comen to him, and said: Thy father in his last daies, put on vs great charge. Wee pray thee some deale make it lighter, and we willen serue thee. And the king tooke counsell of the old wise men, & they counsailden to answere them faire, and that should bee for the best. But he left these old wise mennis counsaile, and did after the counsaile of children that were his playferen, and saide to the people when they came againe. My left finger is greater than my fathers riegge. My father grieued you somewhat, but I will echen more thereto. And the people heard this, and rebeleden to him, and tooke them another king: and sith, the kingdome came neuer whole againe: and therefore it is good, that euery ruler of comminalties, that they be not lad by follies, ne by none other eare rowner, that he ne haue an eygh of loue to the comonty that he hath to rule. For weteye well, bee he neuer so high, that he shall come afore his higher, to yeeld reconing of his baily.

How hast thou ruled.

The second question is, How hast thou ruled the people, & the office that thou haddest to gouerne? Thou that hast bene a iudge in causes of poore men, how hast thou kept this hest of Deut.9.

God? Thou shalt not take heede to the person of a poore man, to be to him the harder for his pouerty, ne thou shalt not behold a rech mans semblance, to spare or to fauour him in his wrong for his riches. O Lord, what abusion is there among officers of both lawes now a daies: If a great man pleadeth with a poore man, to haue ought that he holdeth, euery officer shall be ready to hie all that hee may, that the rich man might haue such an end as he desired. But if a poore man plead with a rich man, then there shall be so many delaies, that though the poore mans right be open to all the countrie, for pure fault of spending, he shall be glad to cease. How hast thou liued.

The third question is, How hast thou liued, thou that deemest and punishest other men for their trespas? A great doctor saith: thee behoueth to flee the wickednesse of other men that thou chastiest them for their trespas. For if thy selfe do vnlawfullich in deming other men, thou damnest thy selfe, syth thou doest that thou damnest. And Poule saith, why teachest thou Sain Gregory saith: He shall not take gouernaile of other, that cannot goe before them in good liuing. Socrates.

So it happeth oft, they that were more worthie to be hanged, damneth them that be lesse worthie, as a clerke telleth of Socrates the Philosopher, saith he, vpon a day a man asked of him why he laughed. And he said, for I see great theeues leaden a little theefe to hanging. I pray thee, whether is hee a greater theefe that benimmeth a man his house and his land from him and from his heires for euermore, other he that for making of great need, stealeth a sheepe or a calfe? Whether trowe we nought, that it happeth such extortioners to bee otherwhile iudges, and demeth men thus: but I read thee that thus deemest other, thinke on that dome thou shalt come to, to yelde the rekening of thine baily.

Valerius Maximus libro.7.

The third Bailiffe that shall be cleped to this dreadfull account shall be euery christian man, that shall geue rekening to to his Lord God, for goods that he hath had of his. And heere I will speake but of the first question, that is this: How entrest thou? And here by the way, yee that haue gotte any worldly good, other take by extortion, by rauine, by vsurie, other by disceit: Wo shall be to him at this dreadfull day as sainct Austen sayth. If he be cast into the fire that hath nought giuen of his owne good: where trowest thou shall he be cast in, that hath reued other mens from them? And he shulle bren with the fend that hath nought clothed the naked, where trowest shall hee bren that hath made him naked that was earst clothed? But as S. Gregory saith, two things maketh men to liue thus by rauaine of other neighbors, that they desire heynes and dread pouerty, and what vengeance falleth of this sinne of couetise, I may see by figure in holy writ, when the angell said to prophet Zacharie. Reare vp thine eien, and see what is that goeth out. And the prophet said what is it? Then the angell said, this is the potte going out, this is the eize of hem on all the earth, and there was a waight of leade I bore, and there was a woman sitting in the middle of this pot. And the angell said, this is impiety: and he tooke her and cast her into the middle of this pot, and he tooke the gobbette of leade and cast it into the pots mouth. And the prophet lift vp his eie, and hee saw two women comming out, and spirits in her wingis like two kytes other gledes, and they arerid vp this pot betweene heauen and the earth, and than the prophet spake to the angell, whider wol these beare this pot? And hee said, into the lond of Sennaar: This pot is couetise. For right as a pot hath a wide open mouth, so couetise gapeth after worldly good: and right as the licour in the pot, profiteth nought to the pot, but to men that draweth and drinketh therof: so worldly good oft profiteth not to churles, but to other that commeth after, as it is written. He that hath money shall haue no fruit of it: and this couetise is the eie of couetous men, for they ben blind to see how they should see to goe to heauen, but to winning of worldly thinges they see many waies, like to owles and night crowes, that seene better by night than by day. The gobbet of leade, is the sinne of obstination. The woman that sat in the pot, is vnpittie, as the angell said, that followeth vnrighteousnesse and auarice. For through auarice, a man leeseth the pity that he should haue of the mischiefe of his soule. For oft time, men leese the life of their soule, by deadly sin that they do to haue the worldly winning, and also they leese the pitie that they should haue of their body, putting themselfes to many great bodilie trauayls and perils both by sea and land, and all maketh couetise. This pot is stopped with the gobbet of lead, when vnpitie is thus by sinne of obstination closed in couetise, that hee may not goe out of the chinches hart by penance. For as Iob saith: when he is fulfilled, he shall be stopped. The two women that bare vp this pot, are pride and lust of flesh, that bee cleped in holy writ the twe daughtren of the water Lethe, crying, bring, bring. And they had wings: the first wing is grace spirituall, as cunning, wisedome, and counsell, with such other many. For which gifts many men wexe proud. The second wing is bodily grace, as strength, fairehood, gentrie, and many other such, whereof men wexe proud. The wings of the second woman, that is, fleshly desire, beth gluttony and sloth. Of gluttony speaketh saint Gregorie: when the wamb is fulfilled, the prickes of lecherie beth meued. And of sloth saint Austine saith: Lot the while he dweled in businesse among shrewes in Sodome, hee was a good man. But when he was in the hill slowe, for sykkernes, he in his drunkennes lay by his daughtren. And these women had wings like kytes, that with a crying voice seecheth their meate, as Bartholomeus saith. And thus fareth couetise of men: Witnessing saint Austine, what is the greedines of fleshlie desire. Inasmuch as the rauenous fyshes haue sometime measure, yet when they hunger, they rapine, and when they fulfill, they spare: But onely couetise of men may not be fulfilled. For euer he taketh, and neuer hath inough. Neither hee dreadeth God, neither shame of men. He ne spareth his father, ne knoweth his mother, ne accordeth with his brethren, neyther keepeth truth with his friend. He ouerpresseth widowes and fatherlesse children. Free men he maketh bond, and bringeth forth false witnes, and occupieth dead mens things, as he shulden neuer die. What manhode is this, saith this Doctour, thus to leese life and grace, and get death of soule? Win gold, and leese heauen? And herefore saith the prophet, haue trauaile in the midst, and leaue vnrighteousnesse. Also innocent speaking of the harmes that come of couetoise, saith thus; O how manie men haue couetise deceiued and spilt! When couetise Balaam would for gifts that the king profered him, haue cursed Gods people, his owne asse reproued him, and hurt his foote against a wall. Achor was stoned to death: for couetise made him steale gold and clothes, against the commandement of God. Giesy was smit with mesilrie, for he sold Naamans heal, that came of Gods grace. Iudas for couetise sold Christ, and afterward hoong himselfe. Anany and Zaphira his wife were dead sodainely, for they forsoken to giue Peter their money that they had. And couetise maketh also that rich men eate the poore, as beastes done their lesous holding them low. This may we see all day, in deed I dread. For if a ritch man haue a field, and a poore man haue in the middest or in the side thereof one acre, and a rich man haue all a street saueth O house, that some poore brother of his oweth, he ceaseth neuer till hee get it out of the poore mans hand, either by praier, or by bying, or by pursuing of deceit. Thus fared it by king Achab, that through his false queenes ginne, slowe the poore man Naboth, for that he would not sell him his vineyard that was nigh to the kings palace. Vppon which proces, thus saith saint Ambrose: How farre will yee rich men stretch your couetise? Will yee dwell alone vpon the earth, and haue no poore man with you? Why put ye out your fellow by kind, and challenge to your selfe the possession comen by kind? In commune to all rich and poore the earth was made. Why will ye rich chalenge proper right herein? Kind knoweth no riches, that bringeth forth all men poore. For we be not got with rich clothes, ne borne with gold ne with siluer. Naked hee bringeth them to this world, needie of meate and of drinke and clothing. Naked the earth taketh vs, and she naked brought vs hither. Shee cannot close with vs our possession in the sepulchre, for kinde maketh no difference betweene poore and rich, in comming hither, ne in going hence. All in o manner she bringeth forth, all in o maner she closeth in graue. Who so wil make difference of poore and rich, abyde till they haue a little while leyne in the graue. Than open and looke among dead bones who was rich, and who was poore, but if it be thus that mo clothes rotteth with the rich then with the poore, and that harmeth to them that beth on liue, and profit not to them that beene deade: Thus saith the doctour of such extortion as it is writ. Other mens fields they repeth, and fro the vine of him that the harme oppressed, they plucke away the grapes: they leueth men naked, and taketh away her clothes that hath nought wherewith to helle them in cold, and liften vp this pot bytwene heauen and earth. For couetous men nother haueth charity to their brethren vpon earth, neyther to God in heauen: and they bare this pot into the lond of Sennaar, that is to say, into the lond of Stenche, that is hell, for there shall be stench, in steed of sweet smelling as Isay saith. Beware I reade, that yee nought haue to doe with this pot, ne with the woman therein: and on all maner that ye be nought weddid to hir, for than ye must be both one. This is thilke foule lecherous woman: the kings and marchauntis of the earth haue done lecherie, and of her vertue they haueth be made rich, whose damnation is written in the booke of priuities in these words. In o day, shall come all this vengeances of her death, weping and hunger and fire shall brenne her, for strong is God that shall venge him on her, and than shulleth weepe and howle vppe on her; the kings of the earth, that haueth done lecherie with her, and haueth liued in delices when they shull see the smoke of her brenning, stonding aferre weeping and weyling and saying. Alas, alas, thilke great city that was clothed with bis and purpre, and brasile, and ouerguilt with gold and pretious stones and pearle. For in one houre all these great riches shall be destroyed, then shall they sey that shall be damned with her. Wee haue erred fro the way of trouth and right wisnes, light haue not shined to vs, and the sonne of vnderstonding haue not risen to vs: we haue be made weery in euerich way of wickednes and of lust, and haue gone hard waies, but the waies of God we knew nought: what hath pride profited to vs, or the boast of riches what hath it brought to vs? All this is as a shadow of death, and we mow now shew no token of holinesse, in our wickednes we be wasted away. Thinke therefore I read, that thou shalt yelde rekening of thy bayly. Here endeth the first part of this sermon, and beginneth the second part.

Ambrosius de ffim libello de Naboth.

Iob 14.

IN which second part with the helpe of God I will shew first, who shall clepe vs to this reckening. Afterward, tofore what iudge we shall reckyn: and last what punishing shall be do to them that ben found false seruants and wicked, and what reward shall be giue to them that be found good and true. For the first ye shall wetoen that there shall be twey domes. The first dome anone after the departing of body and of soule, and this shall bee speciall. And of this rekening or dome speaketh the Gospell of Luke. The second reckening or dome shall be anone after the generall resurrection, and shall be vniuersall. And of this is to speken in the Gospell. To the firste euery man shall bee cleped after other, as the world passeth. To the secunde shall come togedre in the stroke of an eye all mankind. To the first, men shall bee cleped with three sumners, other sergeauntes: the first is sickneſſe, the second is age, and the third is death: the first warneth, the second threateneth, and the third taketh. This is a kindly order, but otherwise it faileth, for sume wee seeth dieth that neuer wist what was sickneſſe ne age, as children that ben suddenly slaine.

3. Sumners. Sickneſſe. Age. Death.

And summe, ye the most part that deyeth now a daies, deyeth byfore her kind agee of deeth: therefore I say, that the first that clepeth to this speciall reckning is sickneſſe, that foloweth all mankind, so that euery man hath it: and summe is sickneſſe that sume men haueth but nought all. Yet the first sickneſſe is double, for sume is within in the mightes of the soule, and sume is without in feeblenesse of the body that needis mo bee stroyed, whan time by hemselfe is cause of corruption as philosophie saith, that thereby feeblenesse and sicknes. And so may we see hereby, though that a man shut out of the house of his heart all manner of worldly and fleshlie thoughts, yet vneth shall a man for ought that he can doo, thinke on God only, the space of o Pater noster, but that some other thing that is passing, entreth into the soule, and draweth her from contemplation. But O Lorde God, what seekenesse is this, an heauie burden on the sonnes of Adam, that on foule moocke and scn of the world we may thinke long ynow. But on that the soule shoulde most delectation haue by kinde mow wee nought thinke so little a space, but if the cokle enter among the wheate. Of this seekenes speaketh Poul, where hee saith: I see a law in my limmes fighting agenes the law of my spirit, and taking me into the law of sinne. So that it fares by vs, as by a man that would looke ageyns the sunne, and may nought do it long for nothing. And forsooth that is for no default that is in the sunne, for shee is most cleere in her selfe, and so by reason best should bee seyn, but it is for feeblenes of mans eye. Ryght so, syth Adam our first fader was put out of Paradise, all his offspring haue ben thus sicke, as the prophet seyth. Our faders haue eate a bytter grape, and the teeth of the children be wexe an edge. The second sickneſſe, that is commune to all mankind, commith of feeblenes of the body, as hunger and thorst, colde and heate, sorrowe and wearines, and many other as Iob 18. saith, A man that is ybore of a woman, lyuing a little while, is fulfilled with many miseases. Yet there is other sickneſſe that commeth to some men, but not to all, as Lepyr, Palsey, Feuer, Dropsie, Blindneſſe, and many other, as it was seyden to the people of Israell, in holy writ. But thou keepe the commandements that be writ in this booke, God shall achen the sickneſſe of thee and of thy seede, great sickneſſe and long abiding. Yet yee shall vnderstond, that God sendeth otherwhile, such sickneſſe to good menne, and other while to shrewes. To good men God dooth it for two causes, and that is sooth. Of sickneſſe I wol to be vnderstond also, of all maner of tribulations. The first cause, for they shoulde alway euer know, that they haue none perfection of themselfe, but of God only, and to echen their meekenes. And thus saieth Poule, least the greatnesse of reuelations rere mee yp into pride, is giuen a pricke of my flesh, the angell of Sathanas to smite me on the necke, wherefore I haue thrice prayed God, that he should go fro me, and he answered met: My grace is suffisant to thee, for vertue is fulfilled in sicknes, where on thus sayn the glose. The fend axing Iob to bee tempted, was heard of God, and nought the apostle axing his temptation to bee remoued. God heard him that should be damned, and he heard nought him, that he should saue. For oft the sicke man axit many things of the leche, that hee wol not geue him, and that is for to make him whole of sicknes. Also God sendeth saincts oft sickneſſe and persecution, to giue vs sinnefull wretches example of patience: For if he suffer his saincts to haue such tribulation in this world, and they thankin him thereof, much more wretchis that God sendeth not the hundred apartie of their sorrowe, shoulden beare it meekely, sith we haue deserued a thousand so much as they haueth. Whereof, Tobie that one day when he was wearie of burying of poore men, the which shulden haue ley vnburied, and haue be etene of houndis, and soules, as carynes, of other vnreasonable beasts, when for wearinesse he had leyde him to rest, through Goddis sufferance the swallowes that bredden aboue on his hous, maden ordure into his eyen, and he wexet blind. Thus it is writ of this temptation for soth: Therefore God suffered to come to him, that to them that comen after, should be giuen ensample of patyence, as by the temptation of holy Iob. For sith from his childhod, euermore hee dreade God, and euer kept his hestes: Hee was not agreeued ayenst God that the mischiefe of blindnesse fell to him: but vnmoueable dwelled in the dread of GOD, thanking him all the daies of his life. Loe that holy writ sayth expressely, that God suffered this holy man to haue that sickneſſe, to giue them that should come after him ensample of patience. Also otherwhile, God sendeth sickneſſe and tribulation to wicked men, and for two causes. First, for that they shoulde the rather dread God, and leaue their sinne. As it is writ: their sickneſſe hath beene multiplied, and after, they haue hyed to Godward. For we see oft men in sickneſſe know their God, that neuer would haue turned to him while they hadde beene whole. Also God sendeth them sickneſſe oft to agast other men, least they followe their sinne. As the sickneſſe of king Antioche, whom God smote with such a sickness, that wormes fell out of his body while he liued, in so far forth, that he stanke so fowle, that his friends were so weary of it, that they might not suffer it. And at the last, when he himselfe might not suffer his owne stinch, then he began to know himselfe, and said: It is rightfull to be subiect to God, and a deadly manne not to hold hold himselfe only euen with God, and the storie saith he asked mercie of God, and made a vow to God, that he would make the citie of Ierusalem free, and the Iewes to make them as free as the men of Athens: and that he would honour Gods temple with pretious ary, and multiplie the holy vessels, and finde of his owne rent and spences perteining to the sacrifice. And he would become a Iewe, and goe ouer all the lond to preach Gods might. And yet God gafe him not such mercie as he desired. And I trow certein that it was for good. In as much as God knew he would not afterward hold his couenant, or els for he axket it too late. What meede was it for him to forsake his wickednes? when he was vnmightie to do good or euill. Neuertheless, I trow he was not damned, in asmuch as he had such repentance, for repentance in this life come neuer too late if it be true. But by this vegeance that GOD tooke on this king, should men see, what it is to be vnobedient to God. And also it is to take heede, that when euer sickneſse commeth, euer it sheweth, that he that suffereth this deadlie, shall nedes die. For though he may skape of his sicknes, yet he may not skape death. And so thou must needes come giue reckening of thy bayly. The second somnour that shall clepe thee to this particular dome, is elde or age. And the condition of him is this, thogh that he tarie with thee, he will not leaue thee, till he bring thee to the third, that is death. But there be many that though they haue this somnor with them, they take none hede, though they see ther heare hore, her backe crooke, her breth stynke, her teeth faile, her yen derk, her visage riuely, her crene wexit heuy to her. What meaneth all this, but that age sumneth to the dome?

The second sumner. Properties of death.

But what more madhead may be than a man to bee cleped, and drawe to so dreadfull a reckening there, where but he answere well he forfeteth both body and soule to damnation for euer? If seing a litle worldly mirth on the way, he thinketh so mekill thereon, that he forgetteth who draweth him, or whether he draweth: So doth he that is smitten with age & liketh so on the false world is wealth, that he forgetteth whether hee is away: Herefore saith an holy Doctour, that among all abusions of the world most is of an olde man that is obstinate: for he thinketh not on his out going of this world, ne of passing into the lyfe that is to come: he beareth messengers of death, and he leueth hem not, and the cause is this, for the threefolde cord that such an old man is bounden with, is hard to breke. This cord is custome, that is of three plightes, that is, of ydle thought, vnhoneſt speach, and wicked deed: the which if they groweth in a man from the childhoode into mans age, they maketh a treble cord to binde the old man on, custome of sin. Herefore sayth Esay, breake the bondes of sin. Thinke herfore whosoeuer that thou be that art thus sumned, that thou might not scape, that thou ne shalt yeld the rekening of thy baily.

Esay.

The third somner to this reckening, is death. And the condition of him is, that whan euer he come, first, other the second, other the last houre he ne spareth, neyther power, ne yough, ne he dreadeth no thretning, ne he ne taketh hede of no prayer, ne of no gift, ne he graunteth no respit, but withouten delay he bringeth forth to the dome. Herefore seyth saint Austen: Well ought euery man drede the day of his death. For in what state a mans last day findeth him, when he dyeth out of this world, in the same state he bringeth him to his dome. Herefore seyth the wiseman: Sonne thinke on thy last daye, and thou shalt neuer sinne. Therefore I rede that thou thinke, that thou shalt geue reconing of thy bayly. I said also, that there shall be another doome, to the which all men shall come together, and this shall be vniuersall. And right as to the other dome, euery man shall bee cleped with these three sumnours: so to this dome all this world shall be cleped with three generall clepers. And right as the other three messengers tell a mans end, so these tell the end of the world. The first cleper is the worldlie sickneſse, the second cleper is feebleneſse, and the thirde is the end. The sickneſse of the world thou shalt know by charity a cooling. His elde and feblenes thou shalt knowe by tokens fulfilling, and his end thou shalt know by Antichristes pursuing. First I said, thou shalt know the worldes sicknes by charitie a cooling. Clerkes that treate of kinde sayne: that a bodie is sicke, when his bodilie heate is too lite, or when his vnkindelie heate is too much. Sythe then all mankind is one bodie, whose kindlie heate is charity (that is loue to God and to our neighbors) vnkindly heate is lustfull loue to other creatures. VVhen therefore thou seest that the loue of men to Godwarde and to their neighbour is little and faint, and the loue of worldlie things and lustes of the flesh is great and feruent: then wit thou well, that vnkindly heate is too great, and kindly heate is too little. That this be acknowlich of this sickneſse, I may prooue by autoritie of Christ. For he himselfe gaue them as a signe of the drawing to the ende of the worlde: For that wickedneſse shall be in plentie, charitie shall a coole. Therefore when thou seest charitie this little in the worlde, and wickednes encreaſe, know well that this worlde passeth and his wealth, and that this sumner is come. And thus seyth seynt Poule, VVit ye well, that in the last daies shall come perillous times, and there shall be men louing themselfe, that is to say, their bodies, couetous by pride, vnobedient to father and mother, vnkynde fellons, withouten affection; withouten peace, blamers, incontinent, vnmilde withouten benignitie, traytors, rebels, swelling, louers of lustes, more than of God, hauing a likeneſse of pictie, and denying the vertue thereof. And these flee thou. If thou seest the people busied with such conditions, wit thou well that the first sumnour warneth all the world, that the day of reconing draweth toward.

The third somner to this reckening, is death. And the condition of him is, that whan euer he come, first, other the second, other the last houre he ne spareth, neyther power, ne yough, ne he dreadeth no thretning, ne he ne taketh hede of no prayer, ne of no gift, ne he graunteth no respit, but withouten delay he bringeth forth to the dome. Vppon which text, thus argueth a Doctour in a booke that hee maketh of the end of the world. If the wordes of Danyel hauen authoritie (as God sayth that they hauen) it sufficeth of the number of the yeares of the ende of the world, that Danyel hath written. Now Danyel in the twelfth chapter, speaking of this abhomination, putteth betweene the ceasing of the busie sacrifice of the Iewes, the which fell, when by Titus and Vespasianus, Ierusalem was destroyed, and the people of the Iewes were disparkled into all the world. And this abhomination that doctours sayne, shall be in the great Antichristes daies, 1290. Now prooueth this doctour, that a day must be taken for a yeare, both by autoritie of holy writ in the same place and in other, and also by reason: So it seemeth to this clerke, that the great Antichrist should come in the 1400. yeare fro the birth of Christ, the which number of yeares is nowe fulfilled, not fully twelue yeates and a halfe lacking. And this reason put not I as to shew any certaine time of his comming, sith I haue not that knowledge: but to shew that he is nye, but how nygh I wot neuer. But take wee heede to the fourth part of the second vision of saint Iohn, put in the booke of Reuelations, in the which vnder the opening of the seauen seales, is declared the state of the Church, from the time of Christ into the ende of the worlde. The opening of the foure first seales, shew the state of the Church, fro the time of Christ, to the time of Antichrist and his foregoers, the which is shewed in the opening of the other three seales. The opening of the first seale, telleth the state of the Church in the time of the preaching of Christ and of his Apostles. For the first, that is, the Lyon, gaue his voice, that betokeneth the preachers of Christes resurrection and his ascension. For then yede out a white horse, and he that sate vpon him had a bowe in his hande, and hee yede out ouercomming to ouercome. By this white horse we vnderstande, the cleane life and conuersation that these preachers haden: and by the bow, their true teaching, pricking sorrowe in mennes heartes for their sinnes withouten flattering. And they wenten out of Iewry that they comen of, ouercomming some of the Iewes, and maken them to leaue the trust that they hadden in the olde lawe, and to beleeue in Iesus Christ, and shewen his teaching. And they wenten out to ouercome the Paynemes, shewing to them that their Images were no Gods, but mens workes, vnmightie to saue themselue or any other, drawing them to the beliefe of Iesus Christ God and man. In the opening of the second seale, there cried the second beast, that is, a calfe, that was a beast wonted to be slaine, and offered to God in the olde law. This sheweth the state of the Church in the time of Martyrs, that for their stedfast preaching of Gods true lawe, shed their bloud, that is signified by the redde horse that went out at this seale opening; and this estate began at Nero the cursed Emperour, and dured vnto the time of Constantine the great, that endowed the Church. For in this time many of Christes seruantes, and namely the leaders of Gods flocke were slaine. For of two and twenty bishops of Rome that were betweene Peter and Siluester the first, I reade but of foure, but that they weren Martyrs for the law of Christ. And also in the time of Diocleſian the Emperour, the persecution of the Christen men was so great, that in thirtie daies weren slaine 22. thousande men and women in diuers countreyes, for the lawe of God.

The 3. seale. The opening of the third seale, telleth the state of the Church in time of heretikes that beth figured by the blacke horse, for false vnderstonding of holy write: for than cryed the thirde beast that is a man, for at that time was it need to preache the mysterie of Christes incarnation, and his passion ayenst these erretikis that feliden mis of these pointis: howe Christ tooke verreyly mans kinde of our Lady, him being God as he was bifore, and his moder being mayden byfore and after. The opening of the fourth seale, telleth the state of the Church in the time of ypocritis, that beth signified by the pale horse, that beth signes of penaunce with outfoorth to blinde the people. And he that sate vpon this horse his name was death, for they shulle slee gostly them that they leden, and teacheth to trust vpon other thing than God: and helle followeth him, for helle receiued thilke that these disteineth. At that time shall it need, that the fourth beast that is the Egle make his cry, that flyeth highest of foules to reare vp Gods Gospell, and to praise that lawe aboue other, least mens witte, and their traditions ouergone and treden downe the lawe of God, by enforming of these ypocrites, and this is the last state, that is, other shall be in the Church, byfore the comming of the great Antichrist. The opening of the fift seale, telleth the state of the Church that than God shall followe, and desire that louers of Goddis law shulleth haue after the ende of this world to be deliuered of this woe. The opening of the sixt seale telleth the state of the Church in time of Antichristis time, the which state yee may know to be in the Church whan ye seth fulfilled, that saint Iohn prophesieth to fall in the opening of this, where he saith thus: After this I sawe foure Angelles stonding vpon foure corners of the earth, holding the foure windes of the earth that they blowen nought vpon the earth, ne vpon the sea, ne vpon eny tree. These foure Angels beth the number of all the Deuils ministers, that on that time shulleth in the pleasaunce of their Lord Antichrist, stoppe the foure windis that beth the foure Gospelles to be preached, and so let the breth of the grace of the holy Ghost to fall vpon men morning for sinne, & calling them to amendement, and to other that wolden encrease in vertues, other vpon perfit men? VVhat is there after this to fall, but that the mysterie of the seauenth seale bee shewed, that he come in his owne person. That Iesu Christ shall slee with the spirite of his mouthe, when the fiend shall shewe the vtmost persecution, that he and his seruantis may doo to Christis limmes, and that shall be the third warning that the world shall haue to come to this dreadfull dome.

In all this matter haue I nought seid of my selfe, but of other doctors that beth prooued, I seyd also in my second principall part, that it were to wete tofore what Iudge we shall reken. VVherefore we shulleth wite that God himselfe shall heere this rekening, he that seeth all our dedis, and all our thoughts fro the beginning of our life to the ende, and he shall shew there the hid thingis of our hert, opening to all the world the rightfulnes of his dome. So that with the might of God, euery mans dedis to all the world shall be shewed, and so it seemeth by the wordes of seint Iohn, in the booke of preuities, Apoca. there he seith thus: I sawe dede men litel and great, stonding in the sight of the throne, and bookes weren opened: and an other booke was opened that was of life, and dede men weren iudged after the thinges that weren written in the bookes after their worchings. These bookes beth mens consciences that now beth closed. But than they shulleth bee opened to all the world to reden therein both dedis and thoughtes. But the booke of life, is Christs liuing and doctrine, that is nowe hidde to men that shulleth be damned through their owne malice, that deemeth men to serue the world, rather than God: In the first booke shall be writ all that we haueth doe, in that other booke, shall bee write that wee shulden haue doo, and than shulle dede men bee demyd of thilke thingis that ben written in the bokis: For if the dedis that wee hauen doe, the which ben written in the bookis of our conscience, be according to the booke of Christes teaching and his liuing, the which is the booke of life, we shulle be saued, and else wee shulle bee damned, for the dome shall be giuen after our workis. Looke therefore now what thing is written in the booke of thy conscience, while thou art here: and if thou findest ought contrarie to Christis life, other to his teaching, with the knife of penaunce and repentance, scrape it away and write it better, euermore hertly thinking that thou shalt yelde rekening of thy bayly.

Also I saide principallie that it were to witen, what reward shall be geue on that doome, to wise seruantes and good, and what to false seruantes and wicked. For the which it is to wite, that our Lorde Iesu Christ, shall come to the dome here into this world, in the same body that hee tooke of our Ladye, hauing thereon the woundis that he suffred for our againe bieng. And all that euer shullen bee saued, taking againe their bodies clyuing to their head Christ, shull be rauished metyng him in the ayre as Paule saith: They that shall be damned lyen vpon the earth, as in a tonne of wine the dreggis dwellen byneth and the cliere wine houeth aboue. Than shall Christ axe rekening of the deedes of mercy, reprouing false christen men for the leuyng of them, rehearsing the deedes of the same, and other truthis by the which his true seruantes than followed him: than shulle thilke false seruauntes goe with the deuill, whom they haue serued in the earth, then swallowing into the endlesse fire. And rightfull men shullen goe into euerlasting life, then shall be fulfilled that is written in the booke of priuities: Woe, woe, woe, to hem that dwellen in the earth. Woe to the paynym that gaf that worship to dead Images wroght of mans handes, and to other creatures that hee shoulde haue goue to God that him wrought: Woe to the Iewe that trusteth so muchil in the olde Lawe, than shall he see Maries son deming the world whom he despised and set on the crosse: Woe to the false christen man that knew the will of his Lorde and fulfilled it nought.

Also woe for sinne of thinking to thee, that thou hast shyt out the meine of God, that is minde of his passion, holy contemplation, of his goodnesse and memorie of his benefites, fro the chaumber of thine hert; and hast made it an house of swyn and a denne of theeues, by vncleane thoughtes and delightes. As thou here hast sperd God out of thine hert, so he shal spere thee out of heauen: Thou hast herberwid the meine of the fiend, and with them in hell thou shalt euer abide: woe also for sinne of speach, for thou might nought open thy foule and stinking mouth with the which thou hast spoken vnhonestly, cursing, fraud, deceit, leasinges, forswearing, scorning, and bacbiting, to praise God in the fellowship of saints. For louing is nought comynlych in mouthes of sinners. For in the which gif thou haddest kept thy mouth cleane, thou shouldest haue songen in fellowship of Angelles this blessed song: Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus, Dominus Deus omnipotens: Holie, holy, holy, Lorde God almightie. Then yelling and weeping thou shalt cry in company of deuils. Uæ, uæ, uæ, quantæ sunt tenebræ: Woe, woe, woe, how great beth these darknes: woe also for sinne of deede. Thou hast bene proud, thy pride shall be drawne to hell, as Esay sayth, or thou hast bene brent with enuie of the deuill. Enuy entred into the world, and they shoulden folowen him that ben on his side, as Salomon sayth: Or thou hast be stirred with wrath, and euerich man that beareth wrath to his brethren, is gilty in dome, as Christ in the gospell sayth of Matthew. Or thou hast be slow to good deedes, mysfawe shall come to thee as a wayfaring man: and thy pouertie as a man armed, as the booke of Prouerbes sayth. Or thou hast haunted lecherie, glotonie, or couetise. That forsooth wete ye, that euerych auouterer, or vncleane man, that is a glutton, other chynch, shall neuer haue heritage in the realme of Christ and of God, as Poule saith. But fire, brimstone, and the spirit of tempestes, that is the fiend of hell, shulen bee a partie of their paine, as it is written in the Psaulter when these damned men bee in this woe, they shullen sing this reuful song that is ywritten in the booke of mourning. The ioy of our hart is ago, our quiet is turned into woe, the crowne of our heade

Conclusion.

And thus much concerning this worthie & fruitfull sermõ, which as by the ancientnesse of the phrase seemeth to be preached much about the time of John Wickliffe: so I thought here, by the occasion of William Thorpes examination, best to place the same: for the apt coherence both of the spirit, and of the matter. Especially hauing before our eyes, the publike vtilitie of the Reader, to whom by the studious reading thereof, might rise plentifull matter of true christian information, both of the wholesome fearing of God, and of the right guiding of euery christian mans life.

Whereunto I thought good to annere further in our story, after the examination of William Thorpe, and the martyrdome of William Sawtrey, and of John Badby thus described (as ye haue heard) which was about the yeare 1409. By the way here is to be considered, at least to bee admonished, that all this while the schisme in the church of Rome did yet continue, and so indured till the councell of Constance, which was in whole, the space of twentie and nine yeares. The origine whereof (as was said pag. 399.) first began at Urbanus the fifth; which Urbanus being dead, An. 1389. next followed pope Boniface the ninth, who sate fourteene yeares. Hee in selling his pardons was so impudent and so past shame, that he brought the keyes of Peter (as saith Platina) in contempt. After him succeeded Innocentius the seuenth, and sate two yeares: who being dead, the cardinals consulting together, and seeing the foule enormitie and inconuenience growing vpon this contentious schisme in their church of Rome (minding to prouide some remedie for the same, after the best deuice they could) in their conclaue where they were assembled for a new election of the pope, tooke this order, promising among themselues with solemne vow made to God, to Marie the blessed virgin, to Peter and Paul, and to all the blessed companie of saints: That if any of them within the colledge or without the colledge, should be called to that high place of apostolicall preeminence; he should effectuouslie renounce the iurisdiction and title of his popedome, if or whensoeuer the contrarie pope for the time being, would in like maner renounce his place and title, and his cardinals in like maner to condescend to the other cardinals of Rome. So that both these two colledges of cardinals agreeing together, one chiefe bishop might be chosen and taken out of them both, to bee made the true pope. Prouided moreouer, that none should seeke any releasement or absolution from the said promise, vow, and bond, once passed among them: Vnto all which things furthermore euery one subscribed with his hand. These things thus prefixed and ratified vpon the same, they proceeded to the election. In which was chosen Gregorius the twelfth, who the same day of his election, in the presence of all the cardinals, confirmed the vow, sacrament, and promise made, subscribing the same with his hand in forme as followeth. And I Gregorie, this day being the last of November, in the yeare of our Lord, 1407. chosen and elected for bishop of Rome: doe sweare, vow, and promise, and confirme all the premises aboue contained, &c. This being done, shortly after he was crowned, being of the age of 80. yeares. As the time thus passed, the people and cardinals were in great expectation, waiting when the pope according to his oth would giue ouer, with the other pope also. And not long after, the matter began indeed betweene the two popes to be attempted, by letters from one to another: assigning both day and place, where and when they should meet together; but yet no effect did follow.

This so passing on, great murmuring was among the cardinals, to see their holy periured father, so to neglect his oth, and vow aforenamed. Insomuch, that at length, diuers of them did forsake the pope, as being periured (as no lesse hee was) sending moreouer to kings and princes of other lands, for their counsell and assistance therein, to appease the schisme. Amongst the rest, cardinall Bituriensis was sent to the king of England: who publishing diuers propositions and conclusions (remaining in the registers of Thomas Arundell) disputeth, that the pope ought to be subiect to lawes and councels. Then king Henry (moued to write to Gregorie the pope) directeth his letter here vnder ensuing, which was the yeare of our Lord, 1409. The contents of the letter be these.

The letter of king Henrie the fourth, to pope Gregorie the twelfth.

King Henry 4. to pope Gregory the 12.

MOst blessed father, if the discreet prouidence of the Apostolike see, would call to mind with what great perils the vniuersall world hath been damnified hitherto vnder pretence of this present schisme: and especially would consider, what slaughter of christian people to the number of two hundred thousand (as they say) hath beene through the occasion of war raised vp in diuers quarters of the world, and now of late, to the number of thirtie thousand souldiers, which haue beene slaine through the dissension moued about the bishopricke of Leodium, betweene two set vp, one by the authority of one pope, the other by the authoritie of the other pope, fighting in campe for the title of that bishopricke: Certes ye would lament in spirit and bee sore grieued in mind for the same. So that with good conscience yee would relinquish rather the honor of the see apostolike, then to suffer such horrible bloodshed hereafter to ensue, vnder the cloke of dissimulation, following herein the example of the true mother in the booke of kings: who pleading before Salomon for the right of her child, rather would depart from the child, then the child should bee parted by the sword. And although it may be vehemently suspected by the new creation of nine cardinals, by you last made, contrarie to your oth (as other men doe say) that you doe but little heede or care for ceasing the schisme: Yet farre be it from the hearing and noting of the world, that your circumspect seate should euer be noted and distained with such an inconstancie of mind: whereby the last errour may be worse then the first. Ex Chron. D. Albani: part the second.

Two hundred thousand slaine by schisme of Rome.

AND to the cardinals likewise, the said king directeth another letter with these contents here following: Wee desiting to shew what zeale wee haue had and haue, to the reformation of peace of the church; by the consent of the states of the realme, haue directed to the bishop of Rome our letters after the tenour of the copie herewith in these presents enclosed to be executed effectually: wherefore wee seriously beseech your reuerend colledge, that if it chance the said Gregorie to bee present at the councell of Pise, and to render vp his popedome, according to your desire, and his owne oth; you then so ordaine for his state totally, that chieflie God may be pleased thereby, and that both the said Gregory and also wee which intirely loue his honour and commoditie, may haue cause to giue you worthily condigne thankes for the same: Ibid.

This being done in the yeare of our Lord 1409. afterward in the yeare next following, An. 1410. the cardinals of both the popes, to wit of Gregorius, and Benedictus; by common aduice assembled together at the citie of Pise, for the reformation of vnity and peace in the church. To the which assemblie, a great multitude of prelats and bishops being conuented, a new pope was chosen, named Alexander the fifth. But to this election, neither Gregorius, nor Benedictus did fully agree. Whereby there were 3. popes together in the Romaine church (that is to vnderstand) not three crownes vpon one popes head, but three heads in one popish church together. This Alexander being newly made pope, scarcely had well warmed his triple crowne; but straight giueth out full remission, not of a few, but of all maner of sinnes whatsoeuer: to all them that conferred any thing to the monasterie of saint Bartlemew by Smithfield, resorting to the said church any of these daies following: to wit, on Maundie thursday, good friday, Easter euen, the feast of the Annunciation, from the first euensong to the latter. But this pope which was so liberall in giuing remission of many yeares to other, was not able to giue one yeare of life to himselfe, for within the same yeare he died. In whose stead stept vp pope John 23.

In the time of this Alexander, great stirre began in the countrie of Bohemia, by the occasion of the bookes of John Wickliffe, which then comming to the hands of John Hulle, and of other both men and women, especially of the lay sort, and artificers, began there to doe much good. Insomuch, that diuers of them not onely men, but women also, partly by the reading of those bookes translated into their tongue, partly by the setting forward of John Hulle, a notable learned man, and a singular preacher at that time in the Vniuersitie of Prage; were in short time so ripe in iudgement, and prompt in the Scriptures, that they began to moue questions, yea and to reason with the priests, touching matters of the holy Scriptures.

By reason whereof, complaint was brought to the said pope Alexander the fifth, who caused eftsoones the forenamed John Hulle to be cited vp to Rome. But when hee came not at the popes citation, then the said pope Alexander addressed his letters to the archbishop of Suinco. Wherein hee straitly charged him to prohibit and forbid, by the authority apostolicall, all matter of preachings or sermons to bee made to the people, but onely in cathedrall churches or colledges, or parish churches, or in monasteries, or else in their churchyards. And that the articles of Wickliffe, should in no case of any person of what state, condition or degree soeuer, bee suffered to bee holden, taught, or defended, either priuily or apertly. contrary ſhould be accounted an hereticke, & vnleſſe he ſhall reuoke ſolemnly & publikely the ſaid articles, and ſhall forthwith abiure the bookes wherein the foreſaid articles be contained, ſo that they may be vtterly abolished out frō the eyes of the faithfull: the ſame to be apprehended and impriſoned, all appellation ſet apart, the helpe alſo of the ſecular arme being called thereunto, if need ſhall require, &c. Theſe were the contents of this mightie and fierce bull of pope Alexander.

Iohn Huſſe obiecteth againſt the popes cruell bull.

Againſt the which bull on the other ſide Iohn Huſſe iuſtly complaining, excepteth againe and obiecteth many things, as appeareth in his booke intituled De eccleſia cap. 18. Where he declareth this mandate of the pope to ſtand directly againſt the doings and ſayings both of Chriſt and of his apoſtles: conſidering, how Chriſt himſelfe preached to the people, both in the ſea, in the deſert, in fields, in houſes, in ſynagogues, in villages: and the apoſtles alſo in all places did the ſame, the Lord mightily working with them. He declared moreouer, the ſaid mandate or bull of the pope to redound vnto the great detriment of the church, in binding the word of God, that it might not haue his free paſſage. Alſo, the ſame to bee preiudiciall vnto chapels newly erected for the word of God to bee preached in them. Wherefore (ſaith hee) from this commandement or mandate of pope Alexander, I did appeale vnto the ſaid Alexander being better informed and adviſed. And as I was proſecuting my appeale, the lord pope (ſaith Iohn Huſſe) immediately died.

The popes bull contrarie to Chriſt.

The notable iudgement of God in striking the aduerſaries of the Goſpell.

Then the archbiſhop of Suinco aforeſaid, to whom this preſent bull was directed, when he ſaw the proces, buls and mandates of the biſhop of Rome, to bee thus contemned of Iohn Huſſe and his fellowes, neither hauing any hope of redreſſe in Wincelaus the king, which ſeemed to neglect the matter; went out of his countrie into Hungarie, to complaine vnto Sigiſmond king of Hungarie, and brother to the ſaid Wincelaus. But this quarrelling archbiſhoppe, whether before (as the Bohemians ſay) or after (as Siluius ſaith) that he had ſpoken with Sigiſmond: immediately there (by the iuſt iudgement of God) died in Hungarie, as the ſtory ſaith for ſorrow. Whereby a little more libertie and quiet was giuen by the Lord vnto his Goſpell, newly beginning to take roote among the Bohemians. Albeit, this tranquillitie there, did not long continue without trouble and perſecution, neither could it in thoſe furious daies and reigne of Antichriſt. For after this Alexander aforeſaid ſucceeded pope Iohn 23. Who likewiſe playing his part in this tragedie, bent all his might and maine to diſturbe the Bohemians, as more hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared in further proceſſe of our hiſtorie, comming to the yeare of our Lord, 1413.

The Goſpell ſeldome times long quiet.

Iohn 23.

Thus the poore chriſtians (as ye ſee) like to the ſillie Iſraelites vnder the tyranny of Pharao, were inſeſted and oppreſſed in euery place, but eſpecially here in England: and that ſo much the more here, becauſe that the king, not like to Wincelaus, went full and whole with the pope and his prelats againſt the Goſpellers.

The pride and glory of the clergie of England in thoſe daies.

By reaſon wherof, the kingdome of the pope and his members here in this realme began to be ſo ſtrong, that none durſt ſtirre or once mute againſt them. The biſhops hauing the king ſo full on their ſide, armed moreouer with lawes, ſtatutes, puniſhments, impriſonments, ſword, fire, and fagot: reigned and ruled as they liſted, as kings and princes within themſelues. So ſtrong were they of power, that no humane force was able to ſtand againſt them: ſo exalted in pride and puft vp in glorie, that they thought all things to be ſubiect to their reuerend maieſties. Whatſoeuer they ſet forth or decreed, it muſt of all men be receiued and obeyed.

And ſuch was their ſuperſtitious blindneſſe and curious vanitie, that whatſoeuer toy came once in their fantaſie; it was ſtraightwaies determined and eſtabliſhed for a law of all men to be obſerued, were it neuer ſo friuolous or ſuperſtitious; as well appeareth by Thomas Arundell archbiſhop of Canturbury and other, who hauing now a little leiſure from ſlaying and killing the innocent people, Martyrs and Confeſſours of the Lord, and hauing now brought their enemies (as they thought) vnder feet; began to ſet vp themſelues, and to inuent new cuſtomes, as the guiſe is of the popes church, euer to intrude into the church of God, ſome ceremony or cuſtome of their owne making, whereby the church of Chriſt hath beene hitherto exceedingly peſtred: So likewiſe this Thomas Arundel, thinking the church yet not ſufficiently ſtuffed with ceremonies and vaine traditions of men; bringeth in a new found gaud, commonly called the tolling of Aues, in honor of our ladie, with certaine Aues to be ſaid, and daies of pardon to be giuen for the ſame. For the ratification wherof, vnder ỹ pretence of the kings requeſt, he directed his mandate to the biſhop of London, well ſtuffed with words of Idolatrie, as by the reading therof may appeare, in forme of termes as followeth.

THomas, &c. To the right reuerend our brother, the lord Robert, by the grace of God biſhop of London, greeting, &c. While wee lift our eyes round about vs, and behold attentiuely with circumſpect conſideration, how the moſt high word that was in the beginning with God choſe to him an holy and immaculate virgin of the kingly ſtocke: in whoſe wombe he tooke true fleſh by inſpirall inſpiration, that the mercifull goodneſſe of the ſonne of God that was vncreate, might aboliſh the ſentence of condemnation, which all the poſteritie of mankind that was created, had by ſinne incurred. Amongſt other labours in the vine of the Lord of Sabbaoth, we ſung to God our ſauiour with greate ioy in him: carefully thinking, that though all the people of the chriſtian religion did extoll with woices of praiſes ſo worthy a virgine, by whom we receiued the beginnings of our redemption, by whom the holy day firſt ſhined to vs, which gaue vs hope of ſaluation. And although all the ſame people were drawen to reuerence her, which being a happie virgin, conceiued the ſonne of God, the king of heauen, the redeemer and ſauiour of all nations, miniſtring light to the people that were miſerablie drowned in the darkeneſſe of death: Wee truely as the ſeruants of her owne inheritance, and ſuch as are written of, to bee of her peculiar dower, as we are by euery mans confeſſion acknowledged to be: we I ſay ought more watchfully then any other, to ſhew the endeauours of our deuotion in praiſing her. Who being hitherto mercifull to vs, yea being euen cowards, would that our power, being as it were ſpred abrode euery where through all the coaſts of the world, ſhould with a victorious arme, feare all forren nations: That our power being on all ſides ſo defended with the buckler of her protection, did ſubdue vnto our victorious ſtandards, and made ſubiect vnto vs, nations both neare at hand and farre off.

Ringing of Curphew.

* If this be not blaſphemous and derogatory to Chriſt, let the reader iudge.

Likewiſe our happie eſtate (all the time that we haue paſſed ſince the beginning of our liues) may be well attributed onely to the helpe of her medicine: to whom alſo wee may worthilie aſcribe now of late in theſe our times vnder the mighty gouernment of our moſt chriſtian king, our deliuerance from the rauening wolues, and the mouthes of cruell beaſts: which had prepared againſt our bankets, a meſſe of meate mingled full of gall, and hated vs vniuſtly, ſecretly lying in waite for vs, in recompence of the good will that we ſhewed to them. Wherefore, that ſhe being on high ſitting before the throne of the heauenly maieſtie, the defendreſſe and patroneſſe of vs all, being magnified with all mens praiſes; may more plentifully exhibite to vs the ſonnes of adoption the teates of her grace, in all thoſe things that we ſhall haue to doe: At the requeſt of the ſpeciall deuotion of our Lord the king himſelfe, wee command your brotherhood, ſtraitly enioyning you, that you command the ſubiects of your citie and dioceſſe, and of all other ſuffragans, to worſhip our lady Mary the mother of God and our patroneſſe and protectreſſe, euermore in al aduerſity: with ſuch like kind of praier and accuſtomed maner of ringing, as the deuotion of Chriſts faithfull people is wont to worſhip her at the ringing of Coure le feu. And when before day in the morning yee ſhall cauſe them to ring, that with like maner of praier and ringing, ſhe be euery where honoured deuoutly by the aforelaid our and your ſuffragans, and their ſubiects as well religious as ſecular, in your and their monaſteries and collegiate churches: That we ſo humblie calling vpon the mercy of the heauenly father, the right hand of the heauenly piety, may mercifully come to the helpe, the protection, and defence of the ſame our lord the king, who for the happie remedie of quietneſſe, and for our ſuccour from tempeſtuous flouds, is ready to applie his hands to worke, and his eyes with all his whole deſire to watching. We therfore coueting more earneſtly to ſtirre vp the minds of all faithfull people to ſo deuout an exerciſe of God, &c. We grant by theſe preſents, to all and euery man, &c: that ſhall ſay the Lords praier and the ſalutation of the angell fiue times at the morning peale with a deuout mind, totiens quotiens, (how oft ſoeuer) 40. daies of pardon by theſe preſents. c Will ye ſtand to this doctrine ye catholikes & Popiſh blaſphemy fighting againſt the grace of Chriſt.

Ringing of Curphew.

Fortie daies pardon, for 5 Aues.

By this friuolous and barbarous conſtitution with many other of like ſort heaped into the church by the papiſts: appeareth the proper nature and condition of this catholike generation. Who being themſelues not greatly exerciſed nor experienced in any ſerious cogitation of ſpirituall matter (as ſeemeth) take vpon them to gouerne the ſpirituall church of Chriſt, whereof indeed they haue no ſkill or very little. And therefore according to their vnſkilfull handling, they leade and rule the church after ſuch outward ſights and ceremonies, ſeemely perhaps to their owne groſſe affection: but not agreeing (nay rather cleane contrarie) to the right nature and condition of the ſpirituall houſe and kingdome of the Lord. And like as in their inuentions they ſwarue vtterly from the right handling of all ſpirituall gouernment: ſo in their maners and forme of life likewiſe, they do reſemble little or no part almoſt, of ſuch as are and ought to be true paſtors and miniſters of the myſticall body of Chriſt.

Heaping vp ceremonies in the church.

Examples hereof are plentie and plaine, in theſe Romane prelats to be noted: who ſo well conſidering the humble ſtate and lowly ſpirit which ought to bee in paſtorall leaders of the the church, will compare the same with the vsuall pomp of these glorious potestates.

The pomp of the popes church noted.

As for example; what can be more conuenient for a true pastor ecclesiasticall, then humilitie of heart and spirit, according to the example of the head bishoppe himselfe? So what greater shew of arrogancie and pride could there bee, then in this, whom I haue oft named before, Thomas Arundel archbishop of Canturbury: who passing by the high street of London, did not only looke and wait for the ringing of the bels, for a triumph of his comming, but toke great snuffe, and did suspend all such churches in London (not only with the steeple and bels, but also with the organs) so many as did not receiue his comming with the noise of bels: according as out of his owne registers may appeare: the words whereof written to his owne Somner, I haue hereto annexed in his owne forme, as followeth.

A Commission directed to the Somner, to suspend certaine churches of London, because they rung not their bels at the presence of my lord the Archbishop of Canturbury.

Churches of London suspended for not ringing at the comming of the archbishop.

THomas by the permission of God, &c. To our welbeloued Thomas Wilton, our Somner sworne, health, grace, and blessing. The comelinesse of our holy church of Canturbury, ouer which we beare rule, deserueth and requireth, that while we passe through the prouince of the same our church (hauing our crosse carried before vs) euery parish church in their turnes, ought and are bounden in token of speciall reuerence that they beare to vs, to ring their bels. Which notwithstanding, yea on tuesday last past, when we betwixt eight and nine of the clocke before dinner, passed openly on foote as it were, through the midst of the citie of London, with our crosse carried before vs: Diuers churches, whose names are here beneath noted, shewed towards vs willingly (though they certainly knew of our comming) vnreuerence rather then reuerence, and the dutie that they owe to our church of Canturbury, ringing not at all at our comming. Wherefore we being willing to reuenge this iniury, a for the honour of our spouse as we are bounden: command you, that by our authoritie, you put all those churches vnder our interditement, suspending Gods holy organs and instruments in the same. Which wee also suspend by the tenor of these presents, till the ministers of the aforesaid churches be able hereafter to attaine of vs the benefit of more plentifull grace. Giuen, &c.

a Oh infinitous enemies to Christ his humility.

What great reason was in this, why this archbishoppe either should thus looke for the ringing of the bels, or why hee should be thus displeased with not ringing, I doe not see. Belike his mind in the meane time was greatly occupied with some great muse, as feeling of Gods feare, with repentance and remembrance of his sinnes, with zealous care and solicitude for his flocke, with the earnest meditation of the passion and life of our Sauiour, who in this world was so despised: or else was set vpon some graue study, while he so waited for the ringing of the bels, which were wont to be so noisome to all students. And why were not the trumpetters also shent as well, because they did not sound before his person? But and though the bels did not clatter in the steeples, and therefore his thunderbolt should haue fallen vpon the steeples which had deserued: why should the bodie of the church therefore be suspended? At least, the poore organs (me thinketh) had some part of wrong to be put to silence in the quier, because the bels rang not in the tower.

Organs suspended in the church because the bels did not ring.

Of the like matter also we read in the said registers, falling betweene the bishop of Worcester, and the prior of the same towne, for not ringing at the bishops comming into the church. Whereupon much sute and contention was betweene them, till at length the archbishop of Canturbury toke vp the matter, moderating it, as in the said registers, fol. 441. appeareth to be seene as followeth.

In Registro Tho. Arundell. Variance between the bishop and prior of Worcester, for not ringing at the bishops comming.

VNiuersis, &c. Thomas, &c. Whereas there happened variance lately between our reuerend brother the lord bishop of Worcester on the one party, and the religious and discreete men the Prior and Couent of the same church on the other partie, for not ringing of belles at the comming of our said brother to his foresaid church, at length the parties (considering the great inconuenience that might come thereof) at our instance and request did agree on this manner: that as often as it shall happen our reuerend brother to goe to his aforesaid church, either to celebrate orders, or to visit his church in the head or in the inferiours, or to make creame and oyle in the same church: Also in the feast of the assumption of the blessed virgin Mary, which is the chiefest feast in the abby aforesaid: then the Prior and the Couent, and their successours for the time being, shall ring solemnly against his comming, or shall cause to be rung solemnly without all contradiction, or any reclaiming hereafter to bee made against the same. Which agreement that it may be more firmely kept, we let you all vnderstand by these presents, sealed with our seale. Giuen at our palace of Canturbury 12. July, the 10. yeer of our gouernment.

The like stir for belringing and for processions, had almost hapned betweene the archbishop of Canturbury, successor to this Thomas Arundel, named Henry Chichley on the one party, and the abby of S. Albons on the other party, had not the abbat in time submitting himselfe to the archbishop, so prouided, that the ringing of their bels at his comming, might not redound to any derogation of their liberties. Whereunto the archbishop granted by these his letters as followeth.

Ringing in the archbishop at S. Albons.

HEnry, &c. to the religious men, the abbat and couent of the monastery of Saint Albons in the diocesse of Lincolne, health, &c. When as of late there happened a matter of variance betweene vs, and you the abbat and couent, by reason of not giuing reuerence to vs, being due to our prouince of Canturbury, that is, for not ringing the bels, and meeting vs with processions when we passed by diuers places of our prouince as well due of common custome as of old vse, and for the prerogatiue of the church of Canturbury, as also being due of euery one being within the compasse of this our said prouince, when and as often as we shall passe by their places: at length your lord abbat (comming personally to vs) did grant both for you and the couent aforesaid, to doe and to giue of your gentlenesse all reuerence and honour, with such reuerence both to vs and our church of Canturbury, as often as we passe by your monastery, or the places nigh or adioyning thereto, or shall hereafter goe by: so that it might not be preiudiciall to your exemption, and nothing be attempted to the violating of your priuiledge: and that it might not be challenged for dutie hereafter. Wherefore we desiring to keepe you from damage, let you vnderstand by these presents, that it is not our intent to derogate your exemptions or priuiledge whatsoeuer herein: nor by any meanes to be preiudiciall to you by these your reuerences or other duties, whatsoeuer you haue or shall grant to vs of your deuotion and liberality, both by you, and in places vnder your dominion. In witnesse whereof, &c. Dated the 28. day of Ianuary, 1425. at S. Albons, the 12. yeer of our gouernment.

Ex Regist. Hen. Chicheley fol. 365.

To expresse moreouer and describe the glorious pompe of these princelike prelats in these blinde daies of popish religion raigning then in the church, I thought to adioyne hereunto another example not much vnlike, neither differing much in time, concerning certaine poore men cited vp, and inioyned strait penance by William Courtney, predecessor of the said Thomas Arundel, for bringing litter to his horse, not in waines as they should doe, but in priuie sacks, in a secret manner vnder their clokes or cotes. For the which so hainous and horrible trespasse, the said archbishop sitting in his tribunall seat, did call and cite before him the said persons (pro litera, i. for litter, after his owne Latine) and after their submission, inioyned them penance. Which penance what it was, and what were the names of the foresaid parties, here followeth out of the said archbishops registers, both by his owne words, and by picture of the persons in the same registers annexed and painted, in all resemblance, as there standeth, and here is also to be seene.

Ex Regiſt. W. Courtney archbiſh. Cant.

In English:

IGnorance the mother of error, ſo much had blinded and deceiued certaine perſons, to wit, Hugh Pennie, John Forſtall, John Boy, John Wanderton, William Hayward, and John White, tenants of the lord of Wengham: that againſt the comming of the aforeſaid archbiſhop to his palace of Canturbury on Palmes ſunday euen, the yeere of our Lord 1390, where they being warned by the baliffe, to conuey and carry hay, ſtraw, and other littor to the aforeſaid palace, as they were bound by the tenor of their lands, which they hold of the ſee of Canturbury: refuſing and diſdaining to doe their due ſeruice, as they were accuſtomed, brought their ſtraw and other littour, not in carts and waines openly and ſufficiently, but by peece meale; and cloſely in bags or ſacks, in contempt of their lord, and derogation of the right and title of the ſee of Canturbury. Whereupon they being aſcited and preſented before the archbiſhop, ſitting in iudgement at his manor of Statewod, yeelded and ſubmitted themſelues to his lordſhips pleaſure, humbly crauing pardon of their treſpaſſe. Then the aforeſaid archbiſhop abſolued the aboue named Hugh Pennie, &c. they ſwearing to obey the lawes and ordinances of holy church, and to doe the puniſhment that ſhould be appointed them for their deſerts: that is, that they going leaſurely before the proceſſion, euery one of them ſhould carry openly on his ſhoulder, his bagge ſtuffed with hay and ſtraw; ſo that the ſaid hay and ſtraw ſhould appeare hanging out, the mouthes of the ſacks being open.

Penance inioined for bringing ſtraw to my lords houſe.

Excommunication and abſolution abuſed.

Notes of certaine parliament matters paſſed in this kings daies.

TO proceed now further in the raigne of this king, and to intreat alſo ſomething of his parliaments, as we haue done of other before. Firſt, we will begin with the parliament holden in the firſt yeere of his comming in.

Notes of this kings parliaments.

Moreouer, forſomuch as our catholike papiſts will not beleeue yet the contrary, but that the iuriſdiction of their father the pope, hath euer extended throughout all the world, as well here in England, as in other places: Here therefore ſpeaking of the parliaments holden in this kings daies concerning this matter, I refer them to the parliament of the ſaid king Henry in his firſt yeere holden, and to the 27. article of the ſame. Where they may reade in the tenth obiection laid againſt king Richard in plaine words: how that, foraſmuch as the crowne of this realme of England, and the iuriſdiction belonging to the ſame, as alſo the whole realme it ſelfe, at all times lately paſt, hath been at ſuch liberty, and inioied ſuch prerogatiue, that neither the pope, nor any other out of the ſame kingdome ought to intrude himſelfe, nor intermeddle therein: it was therefore obiected vnto the forenamed king Richard the ſecond, for procuring the letters Apoſtolicall from the pope, to the confirming and corroborating of certaine ſtatutes of his, and that his cenſures might be proſecuted againſt the breakers thereof. Which ſeemed then to the parliament, to tend againſt the crowne and regall dignity, as alſo againſt the ſtatutes and liberties of this the ſaid our realm of England. Act. parl. An. 1. Reg. Henrici 4. Act. 27.

The popes iuriſdiction excluded out of this realme.

Ex ann. 1. Reg. Henrici, Act. 27.

Furthermore, in the ſecond yeere of the ſaid king, this was in the parliament required, that all ſuch perſons as ſhall be arreſted by force of the ſtatute made againſt the Lollards in the ſecond yeer of Henry the fourth, may be bailed, and freely make their purgation: that they be arreſted by none other then by the Sheriffes or ſuch like officers, neither that any hanocke be made of their goods. The king granted to take aduice therein.

Anno 2. Reg. Henr. 4. Act. 29.

In the eighth yeere moreouer of this kings raigne, it was likewiſe propounded in the parliament, that all ſuch perſons as ſhal procure, or ſue in the court of Rome, any proceſſe touching any benefice, collation, or preſentation of the ſame, ſhall incur the paine of the ſtatute of prouiſors, made in the thirteenth yeere of Richard 2. whereunto the king granted, that the ſtatutes herefore prouided, ſhould be obſerued.

An. 8. Reg. Henr. 4. Act. 6.

Item, in the ſaid parliament, there it was put vp by petition, that the king might inioy halfe the profits of euery parſons benefice, who is not reſident thereon. Thereunto the king anſwered; that the Ordinaries ſhould doe their duties therein, or elſe hee would prouide further remedie to ſtay their pluralities.

An. 8 Reg. Hen. 4. Act. 114.

Item, in the ſaid parliament it was required, that none doe ſue to the court of Rome for any benefice, but onely in the kings Courts.

Ibidem act. 37.

¶ In the next yeere following, which was the ninth of this king, another petition of the commons was put vp in parliament againſt the court of Rome, which I thought good here to expreſſe, as followeth.

Ex Rotulo Parliamenti, an. 9. Henrici 4.

The Commons doe beſeech, that foraſmuch as diuers prouiſors of the benefices of holy church, dwelling in the court of Rome, through their ſingular couetouſneſſe now newly imagined to deſtroy thoſe that haue been long time incumbents in diuers their benefices of holy church peaceably, ſome of them by the title of the king, ſome by title ordinary, and by the title of other true patrons thereof, by colour of prouiſions, collations, and other grants made to the ſame prouiſors by the Apoſtoll of the ſaid benefices, doe purſue proceſſes in the ſaid court by citation made beyond the ſea, without any citations made within the realme in deed againſt the ſame incumbents, whereby many of the ſaid incumbents, through ſuch priuie and craftie proceſſes and ſentences of priuation and inhabilitation, haue loſt their benefices, and others put in the places of the ſaid incumbents before the publication of the ſame ſentences, they not knowing any thing; and many are in great hazard to loſe their benefices through ſuch proceſſes, to their perpetuall deſtruction and miſchiefe. And foraſmuch as this miſchiefe cannot be holpen without an eſpeciall remedy bee had by parliament: Pleaſeth it the king to conſider the great miſchiefe and danger that may ſo come vnto diuers his ſubiects without their knowledge, through ſuch citations out of the realme, and thereupon to ordaine by the aduice of the lords of this preſent parliament, that none preſented, bee receiued by any Ordinary vnto any benefice of any ſuch incumbent for any cauſe of priuation or inhabilitation, whereof the proceſſe is not founded vpon citation made within the realme, and alſo that ſuch incumbents may remaine in all their benefices, vntill it be proued by due inqueſt in the court of the king, that the citations whereupon ſuch priuations and inhabilitations are granted, were made within the realme: and that if ſuch Ordinaries, or ſuch preſented, or others, doe purſue the contrary, that then they and their procurators, fautors and counſellers, doe incurre the paines contained in the ſtatute made againſt prouiſors in the thirteenth yeere of the raigne of the late Richard king of England the ſecond, by proceſſes to be made, as is declared in the ſtatute made againſt ſuch prouiſors in the 27. yeere of the raigne of king Edward, predeceſſor to our lord the king that now is, any roiall licences or grants in any maner to the contrary notwithſtanding; and that all other ſtatutes made againſt prouiſors, and not repealed before this preſent parliament, be in their full force, and be firmely kept in all points.

The wickednes of popes prouiſors in citing and depriuing benificed men in England, their citation being not knowen in the realme.

That the kings counſell haue power by authority of parliament, in caſe that any man finde himſelfe greeued in particular, that he may purſue: and that the ſaid counſell by the aduice of the Iuſtices, doe right vnto the parties. This to indure vntill the next parliament, reſeruing alwaies vnto the king his prerogatiue and liberty.

Item, that no popes collector thenceforth ſhould leuy any mony within the realme, for firſt fruits of any eccleſiaſticall dignity, vnder paine of incurring the ſtatute of prouiſions.

Anno 9. Regis Hen. 4. act. 43.

Beſides, in the ſaid parliament holden the eleuenth yeere of this king, is to be noted; how the commons of the land put vp a bill vnto the king, to take the temporall lands out from ſpirituall mens hands or poſſeſſion. The effect of which bill was, that the temporalities, diſorderately walked by men of the church, might ſuffice to finde to the king fifteene earles, fifteene hundred knights, ſix thouſand two hundred eſquires, and a hundred houſes of almoſe, to the reliefe of poore people, more then at thoſe daies were within England. And ouer all theſe foreſaid charges, the king might put yeerly in his cofers 20000. pound.

Ex Chronic. D. Alban. Fabiano, & alijs.

Prouided, that euery earle ſhould haue of yeerely rent three thouſand marke, euery knight a hundred marke, foure plough lands: euery eſquire forty marke by yeer, with two plough lands, and euery houſe of almoſe a hundred marke, with ouerſight of two true ſeculars vnto euery houſe: and alſo with prouiſo, that euery townſhip ſhould keep all poore people of their own dwellers, which might not labour for their liuing; with condition, that that if not fell in a towne then the towne might maintaine, then the said almes houses to releeue such townships.

A computation of church goods, to how much they doe mount.

And for to beare these charges, they alledged by their said bill, that the temporalties, being in the possession of spirituall men, amounted to iii. C. and xvii. M. marke by yeere. Whereof they affirmed to be in the see of Canterbury, with the abbies of Christs church, of S. Augustines, Shrewsbury, Coggelhale, and S. Olus, xx. M. marke by yeere. In the see of Yorke and abbies there, xx. M. marke. In the see of Winchester, and abbies there, xx. M. marke. In the see of London, with abbies and other houses there, xx. M. marke. In the see of Lincolne, with the abbies of Peterborow, Ramsey and other, xx. M. marke. In the see of Norwich, with the abbies of Bury and other, xx. M. marke. In the see of Ely, Spalding and other, xx. M. marke. In the see of Bathe, with the abby of Okinborne and other, xx. M. marke. In the see of Worcester, with the abbies of Euisham, Abingdon and other, xx. M. marke. In the see of Chester, with the precinct of the same, with the sees of S. David, of Salisbury, and Exeter, with their precincts, xx. M. marke. The abbies of Rauens or Reuans, of Fountaines, of Gernons, and diuers other to the number of fiue mo, xx. M. marke. The abbies of Leicester, Waltham, Gosborne, Merton, Ticetir, Osney and other, vnto the number of six mo, xx. M. marke. The abbies of Douers, Batil, Lewys, Couentry, Dauentre, and Tourney, xx. M. marke. The abbies of Northampton, Thorton, Bristow, Killingworth, Winchcombe, Hailes, Parchillor, Frideswide, Notly, and Grimmisby, xx. M. marke.

The which forsaid summes amount to the full of iii. c. M. marke. And for the odde of xvii. M. mark, they appointed Hartford, Rochester, Huntingdon, Swinthed, Crowland, Malmesbury, Burton, Teukesbury, Dunstable, Shirborn, Taunton, and Biland.

And duer this, they alledged by the said bill, that ouer and aboue the said sum of iii. C. and xvii. M. marke, diuers houses of religion in England, possessed as many temporalties as might suffice to finde yeerly xv. M. priests and clerks, euery priest to be allowed for his stipend vii. marke by the yeere.

To the which bill no answer was made, but that the king of this matter would take deliberation and aduisement, and with that answer ended, so that no further labor was made.

Anno 1413

These things thus hitherto discoursed, touching such acts and matters as haue been incident in the life time of this king, followeth next the 13. yeere of his raigne. In the which yeere the said king Henry the 4. after that he had sent a little before a certaine company of captaines & souldiers to aid the duke of Burgundy in France (among whom was the lord Cobham) keeping his Christmas at Eltham, fell greeuously sicke. From thence he was conueied to London, where he began to call a parliament, but taried not the end. In the meane time, the infirmity of the king more and more increasing, he was taken and brought into a bed in a faire chamber at Westminster. And as he lay in his bed, he asked how they called the same chamber: and they answered and said, Jerusalem. And then he said it was his prophecie, that he should make his end in Jerusalem. And so disposing himselfe toward his end, in the foresaid chamber he died: vpon what sickenesse, whether of leprosie, or of some other sharpe disease, I haue not to affirme. Ex vetust. Chron. Anglico, cuius initium: That all men called. The like prophecy wee reade of pope Siluester 2. pag. 151. to whom being inquisitiue for the time and place where he should die, it was answered that he should die in Jerusalem. Who then saying masse in a chapell (called likewise Jerusalem) perceiued his end there to be neere, and died. And thus king Henry the 4. successor to the lawfull king Richard 2. finished his life at Westminster, and was buried at Canturbury by the tombe of Thomas Becket, &c. An. 1413.

The king had a prophecy that he should die in Jerusalem. Prophecies detestable.

Ex vetust. Chron. Anglico, cui initium est. That all men called. The prophecy of pope Siluester 2.

King Henry the fifth.

King Henry 5.

After this Henry the fourth, raigned Henry the fifth his sonne, which was borne at Monmouth in Wales, of whose other vertues and great victories gotten in France, I haue not greatly to intermeddle; especially seeing the memory of his worthy prowesse, being sufficiently described in other writers in this our time, may both content the reader, and vnburden my labor herein; especially seeing these latter troubles and perturbations of the church offer me so much, that vneth any vacant leasure shal be left, to intermeddle with matters prophane.

Great tempest at the coronation of the new king.
